CALL FOR PAPERS

Intellectuals today frequently suggest that the problems besetting us stem from the abandoning of ethical principles and degeneration of morality. Although, science and technology getting forward in lightning pace, but humanity is being forgotten and the fundamental principles of human values are being ignored. Consumerism is grasping people in such a way that people live only to acquire more and more, but the spiritual and moral needs of human ontology are being overlooked. Their homes are growing larger, but families are getting smaller or even dispersed. They journey to the depth of space, but they stray from the paths leading to their creator. Mass communications are all-encompassing, but relations with family and neighbours are minimal. Likewise, News channels have multiplied, but truth and reliability have diminished and disappeared. Information technology has developed to an astonishing degree, but psychological problems, social injustices, global crises, and ecological disasters have also increased.

What are the chief causes of these complications? Science should have brought greater understanding of the human being, nature, and the purpose of creation, and assisted in their fulfilment. Is it that science is misunderstood or misused? Is it utilized solely in serving particular interests and material needs? Can it be that the source of these problems is the absence of faith and spirituality, which prevent humankind from committing extremes and inspire them to perform good deeds? Is it the lack of spirituality that causes loneliness, unhappiness, insensitiveness and belligerence that currently people are suffering from? These questions require intensive study, only then, the answers may be found and human being will be able to live with the dignity they deserve. It is evident that numerous civil and social organizations work to resolve these problems, but very often they disregard the core spiritual aspects, consequently the partial solutions they offer hinder the positive development rather than support it. As the world grows smaller, these problems grow larger. They are now obviously a great threat for both the temporal and spiritual future of humanity.

The Risale-i Nur, a contemporary commentary on the Quranic message written by a famous Muslim theologian and thinker Bediuzzaman Said Nursi, offers various solutions to these problems through a method. This method is based on acquiring factual knowledge and pointing out its precise utilization; that is, as a means of attaining “the belief by investigation,” and constructing an ethical understanding derived from these principles.

You will be delighted to know that this international conference is going to be organized jointly by The Istanbul Foundation for Science and Culture and the University of Dhaka on 5-6 February 2018 to get a clear understanding of the objectives mentioned above. Distinguished academics, specialists, intellectuals and writers of different persuasions from all over the world will attend the conference to present their research paper on the given theme in the light of Risale-i Nur.
