The lofty pine tree was not hewn from mountains where it stood,
In seeking strange and foreign lands, to rove upon the flood.
Men knew none other countries yet than where themselves did keep;
There was no town enclosed yet, with walls and ditches deep.
No horn nor trumpet was in use, no sword nor helmet worn;
The world was such that soldiers' help might eas'ly be forborne.
The fertile earth as yet was free, untouched of spade or plow,
And yet it yielded of itself of every things enow;³
And men themselves, contented well with plain and simple food
That on the earth of nature's gift without their travail stood,
Did live by raspis, hips, and haws, by cornels,⁴ plums, and cherries,
By sloes and apples, nuts and pears, and loathsome brambleberries,⁴
And by the acorns dropped on ground from Jove's broad tree⁵ in field.
The springtime lasted all the year, and Zephyr with his mild
And gentle blast did cherish things that grew of own accord;
The ground untilled all kind of fruits did plenteously afford.
No muck nor tillage was bestowed on lean and barren land,
To make the corn of better head and ranker for to stand.
Then streams ran milk, then streams ran wine, and yellow honey flowed
From each green tree whereon the rays of fiery Phoebus⁷ glowed.
But when that into Limbo once Saturnus⁸ being thrust,
The rule and charge of all the world was under Jove unjust,
And that the silver age came in, more somewhat base than gold
(More precious yet than freckled brass), immediately the old
And ancient Spring did Jove abridge, and made thereof, anon,⁹
Four seasons: Winter, Summer, Spring, and Autumn off and on.¹⁰
Then first of all began the air with fervent heat to swelt,
Then icicles hung roping down; then, for the cold was felt,
Men gan to shroud themselves in house: their houses were the thicks,¹¹
And bushy queaches, hollow caves, or hardies¹ made of sticks.
Then first of all were furrows drawn, and corn was cast in ground;
The simple ox with sorry sighs to heavy yoke was bound.

Next after this succeeded straight,² the third and brazen age:

1. Our selection is drawn from Book 1.
2. Done without.
3. Raspberries, hips of wild roses, hawthorn buds, fruit of the cornelian cherry tree.
4. Blackberries. "Loathsome" is either a mistranslation or an injection of Golding's personal opinion. Ovid acknowledges that bramble-bushes are prickly, but doesn't fault their berries. "Sloes": fruit of the blackthorn bush.
5. Oak (sometimes called arbor Jovis in Latin).
6. God of the west wind.
7. The sun god.
8. Saturn, father of Jove, by whom he was deposed. "Limbo": the Underworld.
10. Alternately.
11. Hurdles—walls of woven branches.

EDMUND SPENSER

1552-1599

Edmund Spenser set out, consciously and deliberately, to become the great English poet of his age. In a culture in which most accomplished poetry was written by those who were, or at least professed to be, principally interested in something else—advancement at court, diplomacy, statecraft, or the church—Spenser’s ambition was altogether remarkable, and it is still more remarkable that he succeeded in reaching his goal. Unlike such poets as Wyatt, Surrey, and Sidney, born to privilege and social distinction, Spenser was born to parents of modest means and station, in London, probably in 1552. He nonetheless received an impressive education, first at the Merchant Taylors’ School, under its demanding humanist headmaster, Richard Mulcaster, then at Pembroke College, Cambridge, where he was enrolled as a ‘sizar’ or poor (meaning impoverished) scholar. At Cambridge, which harbored many Puritans, Spenser started as a poet by translating some poems for a volume of anti-Catholic propaganda. He also began his friendship with Gabriel Harvey, an eccentric Cambridge don, humanist, and pamphleteer. Their correspondence shows that they shared a passionate and patriotic interest in the reformation of English verse. In a 1580 letter to Harvey, Spenser demanded, “Why a God’s name may not we, as else the Greeks, have the kingdom of our own language?”

After receiving the B.A. degree in 1573 and the M.A. in 1576, Spenser served as personal secretary and aide to several prominent men, including the earl of Leicester, the queen’s principal favorite. During his employment in Leicester’s household he came to know Sir Philip Sidney and his friend Sir Edward Dyer, courtiers who sought to promote a new English poetry. Spenser’s contribution to the movement was The Shepheardes Calender, published in 1579 and dedicated to Sidney.

In The Shepheardes Calender Spenser used a deliberately archaic language, partly in homage to Chaucer, whose work he praised as a “well of English undefiled,” and partly to achieve a rustic effect, in keeping with the feigned simplicity of pastoral poetry’s shepherd singers. Sidney did not entirely approve, and another contemporary, Ben Jonson, growled that Spenser “writ no language.” In the eighteenth century, Samuel Johnson described the language of The Shepheardes Calender as “studied barbarity.” Johnson’s characterization is, in a way, quite accurate, for Spenser was attempting to conjure up a native English style to which he could wed the classical mode of the pastoral. Moreover, since pastoral was traditionally viewed as the prelude in a great national poet’s career to more ambitious undertakings, Spenser was also in effect announcing his extravagant ambition.

Spenser was a prolific and daring experimenter: the poems of The Shepheardes Calender use no fewer than thirteen different metrical schemes. In his later poems, he went on to make further innovations: the special rhyme scheme of the Spenserian sonnet; the remarkably beautiful adaptation of the Italian canzone forms for the Epithalamion and Prothalamion; and the nine-line or “Spenserian” stanza of The Faerie Queene, with its hexameter (six-stress) line at the end, are the best-known. Spenser is sometimes called the ‘poet’s poet’ because so many later English poets learned the art of versification from him. In the nineteenth century alone his influence may be seen in Shelley’s Revolt of Islam, Byron’s Childe Harold’s Pilgrimage, Keats’s Eve of St. Agnes, and Tennyson’s “The Lotos-Eaters.”

The year after the publication of The Shepheardes Calender, Spenser went to Ireland as secretary and aide to Lord Grey of Wilton, lord deputy of Ireland. Although he tried continually to obtain appointments in England and to secure the patronage of the queen, he spent the rest of his career in Ireland, holding various minor government posts and hence participating actively in the English struggle against those who resisted colonial domination. The grim realities of that struggle—massacre, the burning of miserable hovels and of crops with the deliberate intention of starving the inhabitants, the forced relocation of whole communities, the manipulation of treason charges so as to facilitate the seizure of lands, the endless repetition of acts of military “justice” calculated to intimidate and break the spirit—may be glimpsed in distorted and on occasion direct form throughout Spenser’s writings, along with dreamlike depictions of the beauty of the Irish landscape. Those writings include an anonymously published political tract, A View of the Present State of Ireland, which was unusual in its time both for its genuine fascination with Irish culture and for the ruthlessness of the policies it prescribed.

Spenser’s attitudes toward Ireland and his conduct there raise difficult questions concerning the relationship between literature and colonialism. Are the harsh policies of the View echoed, allegorically, in The Faerie Queene? What does it mean to admire a poet who might, by modern standards, be judged a war criminal (as his master, Lord Grey, was judged to be, even by notoriously brutal Elizabethan standards)? Does Spenser use his Irish vantage point to launch daring criticisms of Queen Elizabeth and the English form of government? In addition to sharpening racial chauvinism, the experience of Ireland seems to have given English settlers a new perspective on events back home. As one of Spenser's contemporaries remarked, words that would be considered treasonous in England were common table talk among the Irish settlers.

Spenser was rewarded for his efforts in Ireland with a castle and 3,028 acres of expropriated land at Kilcolman in the province of Munster. There he was visited by another colonist and poet, the powerful and well-connected Sir Walter Ralegh, to whom Spenser showed the great chivalric epic on which he was at work. With Ralegh's influential backing, Spenser traveled to England and published, in 1590, the first three books of The Faerie Queene, which made a strong bid for the queen's favor and patronage. He was rewarded with a handsome pension of fifty pounds a year, though the queen's principal councilor, Lord Burghley, is said to have complained that it was a lot for a song. Soon after, Spenser published a volume of poems called Complaints; a pastoral called Colin Clouts Come Home Again (1595), commenting on the courtiers and ladies at the center of English court life at the time of his 1590 visit; his sonnet cycle, Amoretti; and two wedding poems, Epithalamion and Prothalamion. The six-book Faerie Queene was published in 1596, with some revisions in the first part and a changed ending to Book 3 to provide a bridge to the added books; the two so-called Mutability Cantos and two stanzas of a third—perhaps part of an intended seventh book—appeared posthumously in the edition of 1609.

In 1598 there was an uprising in Munster, and rebels burned down the house in which Spenser lived. The poet fled with his wife; their newborn baby is said to have died in the flames. Spenser was sent to England with messages from the besieged English garrison. He died in Westminster on January 13, 1599, and was buried near his beloved Chaucer in what is now called the Poets' Corner of Westminster Abbey.

Spenser cannot be put into neatly labeled categories. His work is steeped in Renaissance Neoplatonism but is also earthy and practical. He is a lover and celebrator of physical beauty yet also a profound analyst of good and evil in all their perplexing shapes and complexities. Strongly influenced by Puritanism in his early days, he remained a thoroughgoing Protestant all his life, and portrayed the Roman Catholic church as a demonic villain in The Faerie Queene; yet his understanding of faith and of sin owes much to Catholic thinkers. He is a poet of sensuous images yet also something of an iconoclast, deeply suspicious of the power of images (material and verbal) to turn into idols. He is an idealist, drawn to courtesy, gentleness, and exquisite moral refinement, yet also a celebrant of English nationalism, empire, and martial power. He is the author of the most memorable literary idealization of Elizabeth I, yet he fills his poem with coded criticisms of the queen. He is in some ways a backward-looking poet who paid homage to Chaucer, used archaic language, and compared his own age unfavorably with the feudal past. Yet as a British epic poet and poet-prophet, he points forward to the poetry of the Romantics and especially Milton—who himself paid homage to the 'sage and serious' Spenser as 'a better teacher than Scotus or Aquinas.'

Because it was a deliberate choice on Spenser's part that his language should seem antique, his poetry is always printed in the original spelling and punctuation; a few of the most confusing punctuation marks have, however, been altered in the present text. Spenser also spells words variably in such a way as to suggest rhymes to the eye or to suggest etymologies (often incorrect ones). This inconsistency in his spelling is typical of his time; in the sixteenth century people varied even the spelling of their own names.*

The Shepheardes Calender

Pastoral poetry—with its odd idea of shepherds among their flocks piping on their flutes and singing beautiful songs of love, sadness, and complaint—was an influential classical form whose most famous practitioners were the Alexandrian poet Theocritus (third century B.C.E.) and the Roman poet Virgil (first century B.C.E.). The singers of the pastoral, or eclogue, were depicted as simple rustics who inhabited a world in which human beings and nature lived in harmony, but the form was always essentially urban, and Spenser, a Londoner, was self-consciously assuming a highly conventional literary role. That role enabled him at once to lay claim to the prestige of classical poetry and to insist upon his native Englishness, an insistence that is signaled by the deliberately archaic, pseudo-Chaucerian language. The rustic mask also allowed Spenser, in certain of the eclogues, to make sharply satirical comments on controversial religious and political issues of his day, such as Elizabeth’s suppression of Puritan clergy in the Church of England, and to reflect on his own marginal position.

The twelve eclogues of The Shepheardes Calendar are titled for the months of the year. Each is prefaced by an illustrative woodcut representing the characters and theme of the poem and picturing, in the clouds above, the sign of the zodiac for that month, and each is accompanied by a commentary ascribed to “E. K.,” who also wrote an introductory epistle to the work as a whole. “E. K.,” who has not been identified but must have been someone close to Spenser (or, in the opinion of some, Spenser himself), trumpets the arrival of a “new poet” whose skills are conspicuously displayed in the sequence of poems. “October” deals with the place of poetry and the responsibility of the poet in the world, an important theme throughout the Calendar and in much of Spenser’s work.

From The Shepheardes Calender

To His Booke

Goe little booke: 1 thy selfe present,
As child whose parent is unkent:2
To him that is the president 3
Of noblesse and of chevalree,

And if that Envie barke at thee,
As sure it will, for succoure 4 flee
Under the shadow of his wing,5
And asked, who thee forth did bring,
A shepheards swaine 6 saye did thee sing,

All as his straying flocke he fedde:
And when his honor has thee redde,7
Crave pardon for my hardyhedde.8

But if that any aske thy name,
Say thou wert base 9 begot with blame:

For thy thereof thou takest shame.
And when thou art past jeopardee,
Come tell me, what was sayd of mee:
And I will send more after thee.

IMMERITO.9

1. A deliberate echo of Chaucer’s line, “Go linel bok, go linel myn tragedye” (Troilus and Criseyde 5.1786).

2. I.e., the protective sponsorship of Sir Philip Sidney, to whom this poem dedicates the book.
ARGUMENT

In Cuddie is set out the perfecte patern of a Poete, which finding no maintenaunce of his state and studies, complayneth of the comtempte of Poetrie, and the causes thereof: Specially having bene in all ages, and even amongst the most barbarous alwayes of singular account and honor, and being indee so worthy and commendable an arte: or rather no arte, but a divine gift and heavenly instinct not to bee gotten by labour and learning, but adorned with both: and poured into the witte by a certaine enthousiasmos and celestiall inspiration, as the Author hereof els where at large discourses, in his booke called the English Poete, which booke being lately come to my hands, I mynde also by Gods grace upon further advisement to publish.

PIERCE

Cuddie, for shame hold up thy heavye head,
And let us cast with what delight to chace,

3. When The Shepheardes Calendar was published in 1579, each of the twelve eclogues was followed by a "Glosse," which contained explications of difficult or archaic words, together with learned discussions of—and disagreements with—Spenser's ideas, imagery, and poetics. These glosses by "E. K." are made to look authoritative, but in fact serve to complicate the process of interpretation. We have included several of the glosses, to give the reader some sense of them. The original spelling is retained.

4. Tenth Eclogue. An eclogue ("aeglogue") is a short pastoral poem in the form of a dialogue or soliloquy. Spenser's spelling is based on a false etymology ("goat" + logos, "speech"), signifying, according to E. K., "Shepheardes tale." For this eclogue, E. K. identifies as sources Theocritus's Idyll 16, which reproves the tyrant Hiero of Syracuse for his neglect of poets, and also Baptista Spagnuoli (1448-1516), called Mantuan (the fifth eclogue). The illustration portrays Cuddie (left) holding a pipe and crowned with a laurel wreath (emblems of a poet). He talks with his fellow shepherd, Piers, in a pastoral landscape, with the court in the background. The astrological sign for October, Scorpio, is at the top of the picture.

5. E. K. queries "whether by Cuddie be specified the authour selfe, or some other," noting that in "August" he was introduced as singing a song "of Colins making. So that some doubt, that the persons be different." It may be that Cuddie and Piers present different aspects of Spenser the poet.

6. E. K. states "Enthousiasmos": inspiration. The Greek word originally meant "possessed by a god."

7. The English Poete is evidently a lost work by Spenser. "Enthousiasmos": inspiration. The Greek word originally meant "possessed by a god."

8. Intend.
And weary thys long lingring Phoebus race.
Whilome thou wont the shepheard's laddes to leade,
Now they in thee, and thou in sleepe art dead.

PIERS

Cuddie, I have pyped erst° so long with payne,°
That all mine Oten reedes° bene rent and wore:
Yet little good hath got, and much lesse gayne.
Such pleasuance makes the Grashopper so poore,
And ligge so layd, when Winter doth her straine.°

And my poore Muse hath spent her spared store,
Up to now / care such dapp’re ditties, that I wont devise,
To feede youthes fancie, and the flocking fry,
Delighten much: what I the bett for thy?°

I han° the pleasure, I a sclender prise.
I beate the bush, the byrds to them doe flye:
What good thereof to Cuddie can arise?

PIERS

The glory eke° much greater then the gayne:
O what an honor is it, to restraine
The lust° of lawlesse youth with good advice:°
Or pricke° them forth with pleasuance of thy vaine°
Whereeto thou list° their trayned° willes entice.

Soone as thou gynst to sette thy notes in frame,
O how the rurall routes° to thee doe cleave:
Seemeth thou dost their soule of sence bereave,
His musicks might the hellish hound did tame.°

CUDDIE

So praysen babes the Peacoks spotted traine,
And wondren at bright Argus blazing eye:°

9. I.e., let us see how we may pass this long day pleasantly.
1. Formerly you were accustomed.
2. A popular game; here, perhaps a poetry contest.
3. The shepherd's pipe, symbol of pastoral poetry.
4. I.e., lie so subdued. The reference is to the fable of the industrious ant who laid up supplies for winter, and the carefree grasshopper who did not.
5. "A bold Metaphore, forced from the spawning fishes. For the multitude of young fish be called thefrye" [E. K.].
6. I.e., how am I the better for that?
7. E. K. compares these lines with "The Laws" I, in which Plato declares "that the first invention of Poetry was of very vertuous intent."
8. I.e., hypnotize them. E. K. cites Plato and Pythagoras for the theory that the mind is made of "a certaine harmonie and musicall numbers," and gives several examples of music's irresistible power over the emotions.
9. In classical mythology, the three-headed dog Cerberus guards the entrance to Hades. But he let pass Orpheus, "of whom is sayd, that by his excellent skil in Musick and Poetry, he recovered his wife Eurydice from hell" [E. K.]; that is, from "Plutoes balefull bowre."
10. E. K. recounts the myth of Argus of the hundred eyes, who, set by Juno to guard Io, Jupiter's current paramour, was lulled asleep by Mercury's music and then killed. Juno placed his eyes in the tail of her bird, the peacock, whose splendor elicits the praises even of "babes."
But who rewards him ere the more for thy? or feeds him once the fuller by a graine? 1/2
Sike prayse is smoke, that reddeth in the skye, Sike words bene wynd, and wasten soone in vayne.

PIERS
Abandon then the base and viler clowne,
Lyft up thy selfe out of the lowly dust:
And sing of bloody Mars, of wars, of giusts.

Turne thee to those, that weld the awful crowne,
To doubted Knights, whose woundlesse armour rusts,
And helmes unbruized waxen daily browne.

There may thy Muse display her fluttreyng wing,
And stretch her selfe at large from East to West:

Whither thou list in fayre Elisa rest,
Or if thee please in bigger notes to sing,
Advaunce the worthy whom she loveth best,
That first the white beare to the stake did bring.

And when the stubborne stroke of stronger stounds,
Has somewhat slackt the tenor of thy string:
Of love and Iustihead thou mayst to sing,
And carrol Iowde, and Ieade the Myllers rownde,
All were Elisa one of thilke same ring.

So mought our Cuddies name to Heaven sownde.

CUDDIE
Indeede the Romish Tityrus, I heare,
Through his Mecaenas left his Oaten reede,
Whereon he earst had taught his flocks to feede,
And laboured lands to yield the timely eare,
And eft did sing of warres and deadly drede,
So as the Heavens did quake his verse to here.

Rut ah Mecaenas is yclad in claye,
And great Augustus long ygoe is dead:
And all the worthies liggen wrapt in iead,
That matter made for Poets on to play:

2. "Unwounded in warre, doe rust through long peace" [E. K.].
3. E. K. explains this "poetical metaphore" as indicating the heroic subjects available to Cuddie if he wishes to "showe his skill in matter of more dignitie, then is the homely Aeglogue." These include "our most gratious sovereign, whom (as before) he calleth Elisa" and also the "noble and vaillant men" who deserve his praise and have been his patrons.
4. "He meaneth (as I guesse) the most honorable and renowned the Erie of Leycester" [E. K.]. Leicester's device was the bear and ragged staff.
5. "That is when thou chaungest thy verse from stately discourse, to matter of more pleasuance and delight" [E. K.].
7. A "company of dauncers" [E. K.].
8. Wel "known to be Virgile, who by Mecaenas means was brought into the favoure of the Emperor Augustus, and by him moved to write in loftier kinde, then he erst had done" [E. K.]. Mecaenas ("Mecaenas") was Virgil's patron.
9. "In these three verses are the three severall workes of Virgile intended. For in teaching his flocks to feede, is meant his Aeglogues. In labouring of lands, is hys Georgiques. In singing of warres and deadly drede, is his divine Aeneis figured" [E. K.] The Georgics ("Georgiques") is Virgil's idealizing poem about farm life.
For ever, who in derring doe were drede, held in awe
The loftie verse of hem° was loved aye.

But after vertue gan for age to stoupe,
And mighty manhode brought a bedde of ease:
The vaunting Poets found nought worth a pease,
To put in preace among the learned troupe.
Tho° gan the streames of flowing writtes to cease,
And sonnebright honour pend in shamefull cove.

And if that any buddes of Poesie,
Yet of the old stocke gan to shoote agayne:

Or° it mens follies mote° be forst to fayne, either / must /feign
And rolle with rest in rymes of rybaudrye:
Or as it sprong, it wither must agayne:
Tom Piper makes us better melodie.

O pierlesse Poesye, where is then thy place?
If nor in Princes pallace thou doe sitt:
(And yet is Princes pallace the most fitt)
Ne brest of baser birth doth thee embrace.
Then make thee winges of thine aspyring wit,
And, whence thou camst, flye backe to heaven apace.

Ah Percy it is all to° weake and wanne,
So high to sore, and make so large a flight:
Her peeced pyneons bene not so in plight,
For Colin fittes such famous flight to scanne:
He, were he not with love so ill bedight,
Would mount as high, and sing as soote as Swanne.

Ah fon,° for love does teach him climbe so hie,
And lyftes him up out of the loathsome myre:
Such immortall mirrhor, as he doth admire,
Would rayse ones mynd above the starry skie.
And cause a caytive corage to aspire,
For lofty love doth loath a lowly eye.

1. "He shewth the cause, why Poetes were wont be had in such honor of noble men; that is, that by them their worthines and valor shold through theyr famous Posies be commended to al posterities" [E. K.]. In "derring doe": 'In manhoode and chevalrie' [E. K.].
2. "He sheweth the cause of contempt of Poetry to be idlenesse and basenesse of mynd" [E. K.].
3. Coop, cage. I.e., poets found nothing worthy to write of, and the spirit of heroic achievement (sun-bright honor) found expression neither in deeds nor in song.
4. "An Ironicall Sarcasmus, spoken in derision of these rude wite, whych make more account of a ryming rybaud, then of skill grounded upon learning and judgment" [E. K.].
6. Cuddie explains that the imperfect, patched wings ("peeced pyneons") of his own poetic powers are not in condition, but that it is proper for ("fittes") Colin to attempt ("scanne") such a high poetic flight.
7. "It is sayd of the learned that the swan a little before hir death, singeth most pleasantly" [E. K.].
8. "Beauty, which is an excellent object of Poetical spirites" [E. K.].
CUDDIE

All otherwise the state of Poet stands,
For lordly love is such a Tyranne fell: 8 fierce
That where he rules, all power he doth expell.

The vaunted verse a vacant head demaundes,
Ne wont with crabbed care the Muses dwell:
Unwisely weaves, that takes two webbes in hand.1

Who ever casts8 to compasse8 weightye prise,
And thinks to throwe out thondring words of threate:

Let powre in lavish cups and thriftie bitts of meate,
For Bacchus fruite is frend to Phoebus wise.2
And when with Wine the braine begins to sweate,
The nombers flowe as fast as spring doth ryse.

Thou kenst° not Percie howe the ryme should rage.
O if my temples were distaind6 with wine,
And girt in girondes of wild Yvie3 twine,
How I could reare the Muse on stately stage,
And teache her tread aloft in buskin fine,
With queint Bellona4 in her equipage.6

But ah my corage cooles ere it be warme,
For thy,° content us in thys humble shade:
Where no such troublous tydes5 han us essayde,4
Here we our slender pipes may safely charme.

PIERS

And when my Gates shall han their bellies layd:4
Cuddie shall have a Kidde to store his farme.

Cuddies Embleme

Agitante calscimus illo &c.7

1. I.e., the Muses are not accustomed ("wont") to dwell with those afflicted by love ("crabbed care"); he is an unwise weaver who takes two pieces of cloth ("webbes") in hand at once.
2. I.e., let him pour lavish drink but take only a little food, for wine ("Bacchus fruite") promotes poetry ("Phoebus"—Apollo—is god of poetry).
3. Worn by followers of Bacchus. "He seemeth here to be ravished with a Poetical furie. For (if one rightly mark) the numbers rise so ful, and the verse growth so big, that it seemeth he hath forgot the meanenesse of shepheards state and stile" [E. K.].
4. "Strange Bellona; the goddesso of battaile, that is Pallas" [E. K.]. "Buskin": a boot worn by the actors in classical tragedies—hence, a symbol for tragedy.
5. "Temper and order" [E. K.].
6. I.e., when my goats bear their young.
7. The Latin line, of which Spenser gives the first three words, is from Ovid's Fasti 6.5: "There is a god within us; it is from his stirring that we feel warm." E. K. comments, "Hereby is meant, as also in the whole course of this Aeglogue, that Poetry is a divine instinct and unnatural rage passing the reache of comen reason."
In a letter to Sir Walter Ralegh, appended to the first, 1590, edition of The Faerie Queene, Spenser describes his exuberant, multifaceted poem as an allegory—an extended metaphor or "dark conceit"—and invites us to interpret the characters and adventures in the several books in terms of the particular virtues and vices they enact or come to embody. Thus the Redcrosse Knight in Book I is the knight of Holiness (and also St. George, the patron saint of England); Sir Guyon in Book 2 is the knight of Temperance; the female knight Britomart in Book 3 is the knight of Chastity (chastity here meaning chaste love leading to marriage). The heroes of Books 4, 5, and 6 represent Friendship, justice, and Courtesy. The poem's general end, Spenser writes, is "to fashion a gentleman or noble person in vertuous and gentle discipline," and the individual moral qualities, taken together, constitute the ideal human being.

However, Spenser's allegory is not as simple as the letter to Ralegh might suggest, and the fashioning of identity proves to be anything but straightforward. Far from being the static embodiments of abstract moral precepts, the knights have a surprisingly complex, altogether human relation to their allegorical identities, identities into which they grow only through painful trial and error in the course of their adventures. These adventures repeatedly take the form of mortal combat with sworn enemies—hence the Redcrosse Knight of Holiness smites the "Saracen" (that is, Muslim) Sansfoy (literally, "without faith")—but the enemies are revealed more often than not to be weirdly dissociated aspects of the knights themselves: when he encounters Sansfoy, Redcrosse has just been faithless to his lady Una, and his most dangerous enemy ultimately proves to be his own despair. Accordingly, the meaning of the various characters, episodes, and places is richly complex, revealed to us (and to the characters themselves) only by degrees.

The complexity is heightened by the inclusion, in addition to the moral allegory, of a historical allegory to which Spenser calls attention, in the letter to Ralegh, by observing that both the Faerie Queene and Belphoebe are personifications of Queen Elizabeth. (In fact, they are only two among many oblique representations of Queen Elizabeth in the poem, some of them far from complimentary.) Throughout the poem there is a dense network of allusions to events, issues, and particular persons in England and Ireland—for example, the queen, her rival Mary, Queen of Scots, the Spanish Armada, the English Reformation, the controversies over religious images, and the bitter colonial struggles against Irish rebellion. Some of Spenser's characters are identified by conventional symbols and attributes that would have been obvious to readers of his time. For example, they would know immediately that a woman who wears a miter and scarlet clothes and dwells near the river Tiber represents (in one sense at least) the Roman Catholic Church, which had often been identified by Protestant preachers with the Whore of Babylon in the Book of Revelation. Marginal notes jotted in early copies of The Faerie Queene suggest, however, that there was no consensus among Spenser's contemporaries about the precise historical referents of others of the poem's myriad figures. (Sir Walter Ralegh's wife BeSs, for example, seems to have identified many of the virtuous female characters as allegorical representations of herself.) Spenser's poem may be enjoyed as a fascinating story with multiple meanings, a story that works on several levels at once and continually eludes the full and definitive allegorical explanation it constantly promised to deliver.

The poem is also an epic. In moving from The Shepheardes Calender to The Faerie Queene Spenser deliberately fashioned himself after the great Roman poet Virgil, who began his poetic career with pastoral poetry and moved on to his epic poem, the Aeneid. Spenser was acutely conscious that poets elsewhere in Europe, such as Ariosto and Tasso in Italy, and Camoens in Portugal, had already produced works modeled on Virgil's, in celebration of their respective nations. In weaving together classical and medieval sources, drawing on pictorial traditions, and adapting whole episodes from Ariosto and Tasso, he was providing his country with the epic it had hitherto lacked. Like Virgil, Spenser is deeply concerned with the dangerous struggles and painful renunciations required to achieve the highest values of human civilization. The heroic deeds of Spenser's brave knights are the achievements of individual aristocratic men and women, not the triumphs of armies or communities united in serving a common purpose, not even the triumph of the virtually invisible; royal court of Gloriana, the Faerie Queene. Yet, taken together, the disjointed adventures of these solitary warriors constitute in Spenser's fervent vision the glory of Britain, the collective memory of its heroic past and the promise of a still more glorious future. And if the Faerie Queene herself is consigned to the margins of the poem that bears her name, she nonetheless is the symbolic embodiment of a shared national destiny, a destiny that reaches beyond mere political success to participate in the ultimate, millennial triumph of good over evil.

If The Faerie Queene is thus an epic celebration of Queen Elizabeth, the Protestant faith, and the English nation, it is also a chivalric romance, full of jousting knights and damsels in distress, dragons, witches, enchanted trees, wicked magicians, giants, dark caves, shining castles, and "payriims" (with French names). A clear, pleasant stream may be dangerous to drink from because to do so produces loss of strength. A pious hermit may prove to be a cunningly disguised villain. Houses, castles, and gardens are often places of education and challenge or of especially dense allegorical significance, as if they possess special, half-hidden keys to the meaning of the books in which they appear. As a romance, Spenser's poem is designed to produce wonder, to enthrall its readers with sprawling plots, marvelous adventures, heroic characters, ravishing descriptions, and esoteric mysteries.

In addition to enthralling readers, the poem habitually entraps, misleads, and deludes them. Like Spenser's protagonists, readers are constantly in danger of mistaking hypocritical evil for good, or cunningly disguised foulness for true beauty. The Faerie Queene demands vigilance from readers, and many passages must be reread in light of what follows after. In some sections, such as the dialogue between Redcrosse and Despair (Book I, canto 9), the repeated use of pronouns instead of proper names can lead to confusion as to who is speaking; the effect is intentional, for the promptings of evil are not always easy to disentangle from the voice of conscience.

The whole of The Faerie Queene is written in a remarkable nine-line stanza of closely interlocking rhymes (ababbcbe), the first eight lines with five stresses each (iambic pentameter) and the final line with six stresses (iambic hexameter or alexandrine). The stanza gives the work a certain formal regularity, but the various books are composed on quite different structural principles. Book 1 is almost entirely self-contained; it has been called a miniature epic in itself, centering on the adventures of one principal hero, Redcrosse, who at length achieves the quest he undertakes at Una's behest: killing the dragon who has imprisoned her parents and thereby winning her as his bride. The spiritual allegory is similarly self-contained; it presents the Christian struggling heroically against many evils and temptations—doctrinal error, hypocrisy, the Seven Deadly Sins, and despair—to some of which he succumbs before finally emerging triumphant. It shows him separated from the one true faith and, aided by interventions of divine grace, at length reunited with it. Then it treats his purgation from sin, his education in the House of Holiness, and his final salvation. By contrast the structure of Book 3 is more romaricelike, with its multiplicity of principal characters (who present, allegorically, several varieties of chaste and unchaste love), its interwoven stories, its heightened attention to women, and its conspicuous lack of closure.

To some degree a lack of closure characterizes all of The Faerie Queene, including the more self-contained of the six finished books, and it is fitting that there survives the fragment of another book, the cantos of Mutability, in which Spenser broods on the tension in nature between systematic order and ceaseless change. The poem as a whole is built around principles that pull tautly against one another: a commitment to a life of constant struggle and a profound longing for rest; a celebration of human heroism and a perception of ineradicable human sinfulness; a vision of evil as a terrifyingly potent force and a vision of evil as mere emptiness and filth; a faith in the supreme value of visionary art and a recurrent suspicion that art is dangerously allied to graven images and deception. That Spenser’s knights never quite reach the havens they seek may reflect irresolvable tensions to which we owe much of the power and beauty of this great, unfinished work.

FROM THE FAERIE QUEENE

A Letter of the Authors

EXPONDING HIS WHOLE INTENTION IN THE COURSE OF THIS WORKE: WHICH FOR THAT IT GIVETH GREAT LIGHT TO THE READEFT, FOR THE BETTER UNDERSTANDING IS HEREUNTO ANNEXED

To the Right noble, and Valorous, Sir Walter Raleigh knight, Lo. Wardein of the Stanneryes, and her Majesties liefetenaunt of the County of Cornewayll

Sir knowing how doubtfully all Allegories may be construed, and this booke of mine, which I have entituled the Faery Queene, being a Continued Allegory, or darke conceit, I have thought good as well for avoyding of gealous opinions and misconstructions, as also for your better light in reading thereof, (being so by you commanded,) to discover Unto you the general intention and meaning, which in the whole course thereof I have fashioned, without expressing of any particular purposes or by-accidents therein occasioned. The generall end therefore of all the booke is to fashion a gentleman or noble person in vertuous and gentle discipline: Which for that I conceived shoulde be most plausible and pleasing, being coloured with an historicall fiction, the which the most part of men delight to read, rather for variety of matter, then for profite of the ensample. I chose the historye of King Arthure, as most fitte for the excellency of his person, being made famous by many mens former workes, and also furthest from the daunger of envy, and suspition of present time. In which I have followed all the antique Poets historicall, first Homere, who in the Persons of Agamemnon and Ulysses hath ensampled a good governour and a vertuous man, the one in his Ilias, the other in his Odysseys: then Virgil, whose like intention was to doe in the person of Aeneas: after him Ariosto comprised them both in his Orlando: and lately Tasso dissevered them againe, and formed both parts in two persons, namely that part which they in Philosophy call Ethice, or vertues of a private man, coloured in his Rinaldo: The other named Politice in his Godfredo. By ensample of which excellente Poets, I labour to pourtraict in Arthure, before he was king, the image of a brave knight, perfected in the twelve private moral virtues, as Aristotle hath devised, the which is the purpose of these first twelve bookes: which if I finde to be well accepted, I may be perhaps encouraged, to frame the other part of politicke vertues in his person, after that hee came to be king. To some I know this Methode will seeme displeasaunt, which had rather have good discipline delivered plainly in way of precepts, or sermoned at large, as they use, then thus cloudily enwrapped in Allegoricall devises. But such, me seeme, should be satsisfie with the use of these dayes, seeing all things accounted by their showes, and nothing esteemed of, that is not delightfull and pleasing to commune sence. For this cause is Xenophon preferred before Plato, for that the one in the exquisite depth of his judgment, formed a Commune welth such as it should be, but the other in the person of Cyrus and the Persians fashioned a governement such as might best be: So much more profitable and gracios is doctrine by ensample, then by rule. So have I laboured to doe in the person of Arthure: whome I conceive after his long education by Timon, to whom he was by Merlin delivered to be brought up, so soone as he was borne of the Lady Igrayne, to have seene in a dream or vision the Faery Queen, with whose excellent beauty ravished, he awaking resolved to seeke her out, and so being by Merlin armed, and by Timon throughly instructed, he went to seeke her forth in Faerye land. In that Faery Queene I meane glory in my generall intension, but in my particular I conceive the most excellent and glorious person of our soveraine the Queene, and her kingdome in Faery land. And yet in some places els, I doe otherwise shadow her. For considering she beareth two persons, the one of a most royall Queene or Empresse, the other of a most verituous and beautifull Lady, this latter part in some places I doe express in Belpheobe, fashioning her name according to your owne excellent conceipt of Cynthia, (Phoebe and Cynthia being both names of Diana.) So in the person of Prince Arthure I sette forth magnificence in particular, which vertue for that (according to Aristotle and the rest) it is the perfection of all the rest, and conteineth in it them all, therefore in the whole course I mention the deedes of Arthure applyable to that vertue, which I write of in that booke. But of the xii. other vertues, I make xii. other knights the patrones, for the more variety of the history. Of which these three bookes contayn three, The first of the knight of the Redcrosse, in whom I expresse Holynes: The seconde of Sir Guyon, in whom I sette forth Temperaunce: The third of Britomartis a Lady knight, in whom I picture Chastity. But because the beginning of the whole worke seemeth abrupte and as depending upon other antecedents, it needs that ye know the occasion of these three knights severall adventures. For the Methode of a Poet historical is not such, as of an Historiographer. For an Historiographer discourseth of affayres orderly as they were done, accounting as well the times as the actions, but a Poet thrusteth into the middest, even where it most concerneth him, and there recoursing to the things forepast, and divining of things to come, maketh a pleasing Analysis of all. The beginning therefore of my history, if it were to be told by an Historiographer, should be the twelfth booke, which is the last, where I devise that the Faery Queene kept her Annual feast xii. dayes, upon which xii. several dayes, the occasions of the xii. several adventures hapned, which being undertaken by xii. several knights, are in these xii books severally handled and discoursed. The first was this. In the beginning of the feast, there presented himselfe a tall clownish yeong man, who falling before the Queen of Faeries desired a boone (as the manner then was) which during that feast she might not refuse: which was that hee might have the atchievement of any adventure, which during that feast should happen; that being graunted, he rested him on the floore, unfitte through his rusticity for a better place. Soone after entred a faire Ladie in mourning weedes, riding on a white Asse, with a dwarfe behind her leading a warlike steed, that bore the Armes of a knight, and his speare in the dwarfes hand. Shee falling before the Queene of Faeries, complayned that her father and mother an ancient King and Queene, had bene by an huge dragon many years shut up in a brasen Castle who thence suffred them not to yssew: and therefore besought the Faery Queene to assygne her some one of her knights to take on him that exployt. Presently that clownish person upstarting, desired that adventure: whereat the Queene much wondering, and the Lady much gainesaying, yet he earnestly importuned his desire. In the end the Lady told him that unless that armour which she brought, would serve him (that is the armour of a Christian man specified by Saint Paul v. Ephes. 1.) that he could not succeed in that enterprise, which being forthwith put upon him with dewe furnitures thereunto, he seemed the goodliest man in al that company, and was well liked of the Lady. And eftesoones taking on him knighthood, and mounting on that straunge Courser, he went forth with her on that adventure: where beginneth the first booke, vz.

1. Though Aristotle distinguished between private and public virtues, he did not devise lists of twelve of each. Spenser was in fact relying on more modern philosophers—his friend Lodowick Bryskett and the Italian Piccolomini. That Spenser contemplated (as he proceeds to indicate) a poem four times as long as the six books we now have rather staggersthe imagination.

A gentle knight was pricking on the playne. &c.

The second day ther came in a Palmer bearing an Infant with bloody hands, whose Parents he complained to have bene slayn by an Enchaunteresse called Acrasia: and therefore craved of the Faery Queene, to appoint him some knight, to performe that adventure, which being assigned to Sir Guyon, he presently went forth with that same Palmer: which is the beginning of the second booke and the whole subject thereof. The third day there came in, a Groome who complained before the Faery Queene, that a vile Enchaunter called Busirane had in hand a most faire Lady called Amoretta, whom he kept in most grievous torment, because she would not yield him the pleasure of her body. Whereupon Sir Scudamour the lover of that Lady presently tooke on him that adventure. But being unable to performe it by reason of the hard Enchaunt-

The First Booke of The Faerie Queene

Contayning
The Legende of the Knight of the Red Crosse, or
Of Holinesse

Lo I the man, whose Muse whilome did maske,
As time her taught, in lowly Shepheards weeds:
Am now enforst a far unfitter taske,
For trumpets sterne to chaunge mine Oaten reeds;
And sing of Knights and Ladies gentle deeds;
Whose prayses having slept in silence long,
Me, all too rheane, the sacred Muse areeds
to blazon broad amongst her learned throng:
Fierce warres and faithfull loves shall moralize my song.

Helpe then, O holy Virgin chiefe of nine,
Thy weaker Novice to performe thy will,
Lay forth out of thine everlasting scryne
a chest for papers
The antique rolles, which there lye hidden still,
Of Faerie knights and fairest Tanaquill,
i.e., Gloriana

3. The date is actually 1590, because until England adopted the Gregorian calendar in 1752, the new year began on March 25.
1. Garb. The poet appeared before ("whilome") as a writer of humble pastoral. (i.e., The Shepheardes Calendar). These lines are imitated from the verses prefixed to Renaissance editions of Virgil's Aeneid.
2. To write heroic poetry, of which the trumpet is a symbol, instead of pastoral poetry symbolized by the humble shepherd's pipe ("Oaten reeds").
3. Lines 5 and 6 are imitated from the opening of Ariosto's Orlando Furioso.
5. Scholars have debated whether the reference is to Clio, the Muse of history, or to Calliope, the Muse of epic.
Whom that most noble Briton Prince
Sought through the world, and suffered so much ill,
That I must rue his undeserved wrong:
O helpe thou my weake wit, and sharpen my dull tong.

And thou most dreaded impe° of highest Jove,

That glorious fire it kindled in his hart,

And with thy mother tnilde come to mine aye:

Come both, and with you bring triumphant Mart,7
In loves and gentle jollities arrayd,
After his murdrous spoiles and bloudy rage allayd.

And with them eke,° O Goddesse heavenly bright,
Mirrour of grace and Majestie divine,
Great Lady of the greatest Isle, whose light
Like Phoebus Iampe throughout the world doth shine,
Shed thy faire beames into my feeble eyne,
And raise my thoughts too humble and too vile,
To thinke of that true glorious type of thine,
The argument° of mine afflicted stile:
The which to heare, vouchsafe, O dearest dred° a-while.

Canto I

The Patron of true Holitriese,
Foule Error doth defeat,
Hypocrisie him to entrappe,
Doth to his home entreate.

A Gentle Knight was pricking° on the plaine,
Ycladd in mighty armes and silver shielde,
Wherein old dints of deepe wounds did remaine,
The cruell markes of many a bloudy fiedle;
Yet armes till that time did he never wield:
His angry steede did chide his foming bitt,
As much disdayning to the curbe to yield:
Full jolly° knight he seemd, and faire did sitt,
As one for knightly giusts° and fierce encounters fitt.

But on his brest a bloudie Crosse he bore,
The deare remembrance of his dying Lord,
For whose sweete sake that glorious badge he wore,
And dead as living ever him adored:

8. Le., Gloriana is the "type" (prefiguration) of Queen Elizabeth.
9. A compressed reference to Revelation 1.18: "I am he that liveth, and was dead; and, behold, I am alive for evermore."
Upon his shield the like was also scored,\(^2\)
For soveraine\(^1\) hope, which in his helpe he had:
Right faithfull true\(^2\) he was in deede and word,
But of his cheere\(^3\) did seeme too solemne sad;\(^5\)
Yet nothing did he dread, but ever was ydred.\(^7\)

Upon a great adventure he was bond,
That greatest Gloriana to him gave,
That greatest Glorious Queene of Faerie Lond,
To winne him worship,\(^9\) and her grace to have,
Which of all earthly things he most did crave;
And ever as he rode, his hart did earne\(^9\)
To prove his puissance\(^9\) in battell brave
Upon his foe, and his new force to learne;
Upon his foe, a Dragon horrible and steerne.

A lovely Ladie rode him faire beside,
Upon a lowly Asse more white then snow,
Yet she much whiter, but the same did hide
Under a vele, that wimpled\(^0\) was full low,
And over all a blacke stole she did throw,
As one that inly mournd: so was she sad,
And heavie sat upon her palfrey slow:
Seemed in heart some hidden care she had,
And by her in a line\(^0\) a milke white lambe she lad.

So pure an innocent, as that same lambe,
She was in life and every vertuous lore,
And by descent from Royall lynage came
Of ancient Kings and Queenes, that had of yore
Their scepters stretcht from East to Westerne shore,
And all the world in their subjection held;
Till that infernall feend with foule uprore
Forwasted\(^0\) all their land, and them expeld:
Whom to avenge, she had this Knight from far compeld.\(^2\)

Behind her farre away a Dwarfe did lag,
That lasie seemd in being ever last,
Or weared with bearing of her bag
Of needments at his backe. Thus as they past,
The day with cloudes was suddeine overcast,
And angry Jove an hideous storme of raine
Did poure into his Lemans\(^4\) lap so fast,
That every wight\(^0\) to shrowd\(^0\) it did constrain,
And this faire couple eke\(^0\) to shroud themselves were fain.\(^9\)

And turning fierce, her speckled taile advaunst,
Threatning her angry sting, him to dismay:

Add faith unto your force, and be not faint:
Strangle her, else she sure will strangle thee."
That when he heard, in great perplexitie,
His gall did grate for griefe and high disdaine,
And knitting all his force got one hand free,
Wherewith he grypt her gorge with so great paine,
That soone to loose her wicked bands did her constraine.

Therewith she spewd out of her filthy maw
A floud of poyson horrible and blacke,
Full of great lumps of flesh and gobbets raw,
Which stunck so vildly, that it forst him slacke
His grasping hold, and from her turne him backe:
Her vomit full of bookes and papers was,\(^3\)
With loathly frogs and toades, which eyes did lacke,

9. See, knight of Faerie Land.
1. In both the usual sense and the sense of "entangled condition."
2. I.e., his gall bladder (considered the seat of anger) was violently disturbed.
3. Alluding (at one level) to books and pamphlets of Catholic propaganda, notably attacks on Queen Elizabeth.
And creeping sought way in the weedy gras:
Her filthy parbrace\(\text{a}\) all the place defiled has.\(^4\)

As when old father Nilus gins to swell
With timely\(\text{a}\) pride above the Aegyptian vale,
His fatti\(\text{e}\) waves do fertile slime outwell,
And overflow each plaine and lowly dale:
But when his later spring gins to avale,\(\text{a}\)
Huge heapes of mudd he leaves, wherein there breed
Ten thousand kindes of creatures, partly male
And partly female of his fruitfull seed;
Such ugly monstrous shapes elswhere may no man reed.\(^6\)

The same so sore annoyed has the knight,
That welnigh choked with the deadly stinke,
Whose corage when the feend perceived to shrinke,
She poured forth out of her hellish sinke
Her fruitfull cursed spawne of serpents small,
Deformed monsters, fowle, and blacke as inke,
Which swarming all about his legs did crall,
And him encombred sore, but could not hurt at all.

As gentle Shepheard in sweete even-tide,
When ruddy Phoebus gins to welke\(\text{a}\) in west,
High on an hill, his fiocke to vewen wide,
Markes\(\text{e}\) which do byte their hasty supper best;
A cloud of combrous\(\text{e}\) gnattes do him molest,
All striving to infixe their feeble stings,
That from their noyance he no where can rest,
But with his clownish\(\text{e}\) hands their tender wings
He brusheth oft, and oft doth mar their miirmurings

Thus ill bestedd,\(\text{p}\) and fearful more of shame,
Then of the certaine perill he stood in,
Halfe furious unto his foe he came,
Resolved in minde all suddenly to win,
Or soone to lose, before he once would lin;\(\text{e}\)
And strooke at her with more then manly force,
That from her body full of filthie sin
He raft\(\text{e}\) her hatefull head without remorse;
A streame of cole black bloud forth gushed from her corse
Her scattred brood, soone as their Parent deare
They saw so rudely\(\text{e}\) falling to the ground,
Groning full deadly, all with troublous feare,
Gathred themselves about her body round,

\[^4\] Revelation 16.13: “And I saw three unclean spirits like frogs come out of the mouth of the dragon, and out of the mouth of the beast, and out of the mouth of the false prophet.”
Weening\(^t\) their wonted entrance to have found
At her wide mouth: but being there withstanded
They flocked all about her bleeding wound,
And sucked up their dying mothers blood,
25 Making her death their life, and eke\(^t\) her hurt their good.

That detestable sight him much amazde\(^t\),
To see th' unkindly Impes\(^t\) of heaven accurst,
Devoure their dam; on whom while so he gazd,
Having all satisfi.de their bloudy thurst,
26 Their bellies swolne he saw with fulnesse burst,
And bowels gushing forth: well worthy end
Of such as drunke her life, the which them nurst;
Now needeth him no longer labour spend,
His foes have slaine themselves, with whom he should contend.

His Ladie seeing all, that chaunst, from farre
Approcht in hast to greet\(^t\) his victorie,
And said, "Faire knight, borne under happy starre,
Who see your vanquisht foes before you lye;
Well worthy be you of that Armorie,\(^t\)
255 His feete all bare, his beard all hoarie gray,
And by his belt his booke he hanging had;
Sober he seemde, and very sagely sad,
And to the ground his eyes were lowly bent,
Simple in shew,\(^t\) and voyde of malice bad,
29 At length they chaunst to meet upon the way
25 An aged Sire, in long blacke weedes yclad,\(^t\)
His feete all bare, his beard all hoarie gray,
And by his belt his booke he hanging had;
Sober he seemde, and very sagely sad,\(^t\)
And to the ground his eyes were lowly bent,
24 In shew,\(^t\) and voyde of malice bad,
And all the way he prayed, as he went,
And often knockt his brest, as one that did repent.

He faire the knight saluted, louting\(^t\) low,
Who faire him quited,\(^t\) as that courteous was:

5. Dressed in long black garments.
And after asked him, if he did know
Of strange adventures, which abroad did pass.
"Ah my deare Sonne," quoth he, "how should, alas,
Silly old man, that lives in hidden cell,
Bidding his beades all day for his trespass,
Tydings of warre and worldly trouble tell?
With holy father sits not with such things to riel."

"But if of danger which hereby doth dwell,
And homebred evil ye desire to heare,
Of a strange man I can you tidings tell,
That wasteth all this countrey farre and neare."
"Of such," said he, "I chiefly do inquere,
And shall you well reward to shew the place,
In which that wicked wight his dayes doth wear.
For to all knighthood it is foule disgrace,
That such a cursed creature lives so long a space."

"Far hence," quoth he, "in wasteful wildernesse
His dwelling is, by which no living creature
May ever passe, but thorough great distress.
"Now," sayd the Lady, "draweth toward night,
And well I wote, that of your later fight
Ye all forwaried be: for what so strong,
But wanting rest will also want of might?
The Sunne that measures heaven all day long,
At night doth bait his steedes the Ocean waves among.

"Then with the Sunne take Sir, your timely rest,
And with new day new worke at once begin:
Untroubled night they say gives counsell best."
"Right well Sir knight ye have advised bin, Quoth then that aged man; "the way to win
Is wisely to advise: now day is spent;
Therefore with me ye may take up your In lodgings
For this same night." The knight was well content.
So with that godly father to his home they went.

A little lowly Hermitage it was,
Downe in a dale, hard by a forests side,
Far from resort of people, that did pass
In travell to and froe: a little wyde;
There was an holy Chappell edifyde,
Wherein the Hermite dewly wont to say
His holy things each morn and eventyde:
Thereby a Christall streame did gently play,
Which from a sacred fountaine welled forth alway.

6. I.e., it is not fitting for a holy hermit to meddle ("mell") with such things.
Arrived there, the little house they fill,
Ne looke for entertainement, where none was:
Rest is their feast, and all things at their will;
The noblest mind the best contentment has.

With faire discourse the evening so they pas:
For that old man of pleasing wordes had store,
And well-could file his tongue as smooth as glas;
He told of Saintes and Popes, and evermore
He strowd an Ave-Maty after and before.

The drouping Night thus creepeth on them fast,
And the sad humour, loading their eye liddes,
As messenger of Morpheus on them cast
Sweet slombring deaw, the which to sleepe them biddes.

Unto their lodgings then his guestes he riddes:
Where when all drownd in deadly sleepe he findes,
He to his study goes, and there amiddes
His Magick bookes and artes of sundry kindes,
He seekes out mighty charmes, to trouble sleepy mindes.

Then choosing out few wordes most horrible
(Let none them read), thereof did verses frame,
With which and other spelles like terrible,
He bade awake blacke Plutoes griesly Dame,
And cursed heaven, and spake reprochfull shame
Of highest God, the Lord of life and light;
A bold bad man, that dared to call by name
Great Gorgon, Prince of darknesse and dead night,
At which Cocytus quakes, and Styx is put to flight.

And forth he cald out of deepe darknesse dred
Legions of Sprights, the which like little flyes
Fluttering about his ever damned hed,
A-waite whereto their service he applyes,
To aide his friends, or fray his enimies:
Of those he chose out two, the falsest twoo,
And fittest for to forge true-seeming lyes;
The one of them he gave a message too,
The other by him selfe staide other worke to doo.

He making speedy way through spersed ayre,
And through the world of waters wide and deepe,
To Morpheus house doth hastily repaire.
Amid the bowels of the earth full steepe,
And low, where dawning day doth never peep,
His dwelling is; there Tethys his wet bed
Doth ever wash, and Cynthia still doth steepe
In silver deaw his ever-drouping hed,
Whilest sad Night over him her mantle black doth spred.

Whose double gates he findeth locked fast,
The one faire framed of burnisht Yvory,
The other all with silver overcast;
And wakefull dogges before them farre do lye,
Watching to banish Care their enimy,
Who oft is wont to trouble gentle Sleepe.
By them the Sprite doth passe in quietly,
And unto Morpheus comes, whom drowned deepe
In drowsie fit he findes: of nothing he takes keepe.

And more, to lulle him in his slumber soft,
A trickling streame from high rocke tumbling downe
And ever-drizling raine upon the Ioft,
Mixt with a murmuring winde, much like the sowne:
Of swarming Bees, did cast him in a swoone:
No other noyse, nor peoples troublous cryes,
As still are wont t’annoy the walled towne,
Might there be heard: but carelessse Quiet lyes,
WRap’t in eternall silence farre from enemies.

The messenger approching to him spake,
But his wast wordes returnd to him in vaine:
So sound he slept, that nought mought him awake.
Then rudely he him thrust, and pusht with paine,
Whereat he gan to stretch: but he againe
Shooke him so hard, that forced him to speake.
As one then in a dreame, whose dryer braine
Is tost with troubled sights and fancies weake,
He mumbled soft, but would not all his silence breake.

The Sprite then gan more boldly him to wake,
And threatened unto him the dreaded name
Of Hecate: whereat he gan to quake,
And lifting up his lumpish head, with blame
Halfe angry asked him, for what he came.
‘Hither,’ quothe he, “me Archimago sent,

3. Diana, the goddess of the moon.
4. Spenser is imitating descriptions of the caves of Morpheus in Chaucer (Book of the Duchess, lines 153—7f) and of Somnus in Ovid (Metamorphoses 11.592-632).
5. According to the old physiology, elderly people and other light sleepers had too little moisture in the brain.
6. The name can be construed as meaning both “archmagician” and “architect of images.”
He that the stubborne Sprites can wisely tame,
He bids thee to him send for his intent
A fit false dreeame, that can delude the sleepers sent.

The God obayde, and calling forth straighte way
A divers dreame out of his prison darke,
Delivered it to him, and downe did lay
His heauie head, devoide of carefull carke,
Whose sences all were straighte benumbd and starke.
He backe returning by the Yvorie dore,
Remounted up as light as chearefull Larke,
And on his little wings the dreame he bore
In hast unto his Lord, where he him left afore.

Who all this while with charmes and hidden artes,
Had made a Lady of that other Spright,
And framed of liquid ayre her tender partes
So lively, and so like in all mens sight,
That weaker sense it could have ravished quight:
The maker selfe for all his wondrous witt,
Was nigh beguiled with so goodly sight:
Her all in white he clad, and over it
Cast a blacke stole, most like to seeme for Una fit.

Now when that ydle dreame was to him brought Unto that Elfin knight he bad him fly,
Where he slept soundly void of evill thought
And with false shewes abuse his fantasy,
In sort as he him schooled privily:
And that new creature borne without her dew,
Full of the makers guile, with usage sly
He taught to imitate that Lady trew,
Whose semblance she did carrie under feigned hew.

Thus well instructed, to their worke they hast
And comming where the knight in slomber lay
The one upon his hardy head him plast,
And made him dreame of loves and lustfull play,
That nigh his manly hart did melt away,
Bathed in wanton blis and wicked joy:
Then seemed him his Lady by him lay,
And to him playnd how that false winged boy;
Her chast hart had subdewd, to learne Dame pleasures toy.

7. According to Homer (Odyssey 19.562—67) and Virgil (Aeneid 6.893—96), false dreams come through Sleep’s ivory gate, true dreams through his gate of horn.
8. Her name means “one, unity.” Elizabethan readers would know the Latin phrase Una Vera Fides (“one true faith”) and also the proverb “Truth is one.”
And she her selfe of beautie soveraigne Queene,
Faire Venus seemde unto his bed to bring
Her, whom he waking evermore did weene
To be the chastest flowre, that ay did spring
On earthly braunch, the daughter of a king,
Now a loose Leman' to vile service bound:
And eke the Graces seemed all to sing,
Hymen id Hymen, dauncing all around,
Whilst freshest Flora her with Yvie girond crownd.

In this great passion of unwonted lust,
Or wonted feare of doing ought amis,
He started up, as seeming to mistrust
Some secret ill, or hidden foe of his:
Lo there before his face his Lady is,
Under blake stole hyding her bayted hooke,
And as halfe blushing offred him to kis,
With gentle blandishment and lovely looke,
Most like that virgin true, which for her knight him took.

All cleane dismayd to see so uncOUTH sight,
And halfe enraged at her shamelesse guise,
He thought have slaine her in his fierce despight:
But hasty heat tempring with sufferance wise,
He stayde his hand, and gan himselfe advise
To prove his sense, and tempt her faigned truth.
Wringing her hands in wemens piteous wise,
Tho can she weepe, to stirre up gentle ruth,
Both for her noble bloud, and for her tender youth.

And said, "Ah Sir, my liege Lord and my love,
Shall I accuse the hidden cruell fate,
And mightie causes wrought in heaven above,
Or the blind God, that doth me thus amate,
For hoped love to winne me certaine hate?
Yet thus perforce he bids me do, or die.
Die is my dew: yet rew my wretched state
You, whom my hard avenging destinie
Hath made judge of my life or death indifferently.

"Your owne deare sake forst me at first to leave
My Fathers kingdome," There she stopt with teares;
Her swollen hart her speach seemd to bereave,
And then againe begun, "My weaker yeares

9. The three graces of classical mythology were personifications of grace and beauty; here they sing a call to the pleasures of the marriage bed (Hymen was god of marriage). In the March eclogue ad The Shepheardes Calender, E. K. glossed Flora as "the Goddess of flowers, but indeed (as saith Tacitus) a famous harlot."
Captived to fortune and frayle worldly feares,
Fly to your faith for succour and sure ayde:
Let me not dye in languor and long teares.

"Why Dame," quoth he, "what hath ye thus dismayd?"
What frayes ye, that were wont to comfort me affrayd?"

"Love of your selfe," she said, "and deare constraint"
In secret anguish and unpitied plaint,
While you in careless sleepe are drowned quight."
Her doubtfull words made that redoubted knight
Suspect her truth: yet since no'untruth he knew,
Her fawning love with foule disdainefull spight
He would not shend, but said, "Deare dame I rew,
That for my sake unknowne such grieue unto you grew.

"Assure your selfe, it fell not all to ground;
For all so deare as life is to my hart,
Ne let vaine feares procure your needlesse smart,
Where cause is none, but to your rest depart.'
Not all content, yet seemd she to appease
Her mournefull plaintes, beguiled of her art,
And fed with words, that could not chuse but please,
So slyding softly forth, she turnd as to her ease.

Long after lay he musing at her mood,
Much grieved to thinke that gentle Dame so light,
For whose defence he was to shed his blood.
At last dull wearinesse of former fight
Having yrockt a sleepe his irkesome spright,
That troublous dreame gan freshly tosse his braine,
With bowres and beds, and Ladies deare delight:
But when he saw his labour all was vaine,
With that misformed spright he backe returnd againe.

Canto 2

The guilefull great Enchaunter parts
The Redcrosse Knight from Truth:
Into whose stead faire falshood steps,
And workes him wofull ruth.

By this the Northerne wagoner had set
His seven fold teame behind the stedfast starre,
That was in Ocean waves yet never wet,
But firme is fixt, and sendeth light from farre
To all, that in the wide deepe wandring arre:
And chearefull Chaunticlere with his note shrill
Had warned once, that Phoebus fiery carre
In hast was climbing up the Easterne hill,
Full envious that night so long his roome did fill.

When those accursed messengers of hell,
That feigning dreame, and that faire-forged Spright
Came to their wicked maister, and gan tell
Their booteless pains, and ill succeeding night:
Who all in rage to see his skilfull might Deluded so, gan threaten hellish paine
And sad Proserpines wrath, them to affright.
But when he saw his threatning was but vaine,
He cast about, and searcht his balefull bookes againe.

Eftsoones he tooke that miscreated faire,
And that false other Spright, on whom he spred
A seeming body of the subtile aire,
Like a young Squire, in loves and lusty-hed
His wanton dayes that ever loosely led,
Without regard of armes and dreaded fight:
Those two he tooke, and in a secret bed,
Covered with darknesse and misleading night,
Them both together laid, to joy in vaine delight.

Forthwith he runnes with feigned faithfull hast
Unto his guest, who after troublous sights
And dreams, gan now to take more sound repast,
Whom suddenly he wakes with fearefull frights,
As one aghast with feends or damned sprights,
And to him cals, 'Rise rise unhappy Swaine,
That here wex old in sleepe, whiles wicked wights
Have knit themselves in Venus shamefull chaine;
Come see, where your false Lady doth her honour staine.'

All in amaze he suddenly up start
With sword in hand, and with the old man went;
Who soone him brought into a secret part,
Where that false couple were full closely ment
In wanton lust and lewd embracement:
Which when he saw, he burnt with gealous fire,
The eye of reason was with rage yblent,
And would have slaine them in his furious ire,
But hardly was restrained oP that aged sire.

Chariot of the sun god, Phoebus Apollo. "Chaunticlere": Chanticleer—generic name for a rooster.
Returning to his bed in torment great,
And bitter anguish of his guiltie sight,
He could not rest, but did his stout heart eat,
And wast his inward gall with deepe despight,

Malice

Yorksome of life, and too long lingering night.
At last faire Hesperus in highest skie
Had spent his lampe, and brought forth dawning light,
Then up he rose, and clad him hastily;
The Dwarf him brought his steed: so both away do fly.

The sun / revealed

Now when the rosy-fingred Morning faire,
Weary of aged Tithones saffron bed,
Had spred her purple robe through deawy aire,
And the high hils Titan discovered.
The royall virgin shooke off drowsy-hed,
And rising forth out of her baser bowre,
Lookt for her knight, who far away was fled,
And for her Dwarf, that wont° to wait each houre:
Then gan she waile and weepe, to see that woefull stowre.

Affliction

And after him she rode with so much speed
As her slow beast could make; but all in vaine:
For him so far had borne his light-foot steede,
Pricked with wrath and fiery fierce disdaine.
That him to follow was but fruitlesse paine;
Yet she her weary limbes would never rest,
But every hill and dale, each wood and plaine
Did search, sore grieved in her gentle brest,
He so ungently left her, whom she loved best.

Indignation

But subtill Archimago, when his guests
He saw divided into double parts,
And Una wandring in woods and forrests,
Th' end of his drift, he praised his divelish arts
That had such might over true meaning harts;
Yet rests not so, but other meanes doth make,
For her he hated as the hissing snake,
And in her many troubles did most pleasure take.

Plot

He then devisde himselfe how to disguise;
For by his mightie science he could take
As many formes and shapes in seeming wise,

Knowledge

6. The morning star.
7. Tithonus is the husband of Aurora, goddess of the dawn.
As ever Proteus to himselfe could make:
   Sometime a fowle, sometime a fish in lake,
   Now like a foxe, now like a dragon fell, fierce
   That of himselfe he oft for feare would quake,
   And oft would flye away. O who can tell

The hidden power of herbes, and might of Magicke spell?

But now se'eme best, the person to put on
   Of that good knight, his late beguiled guest:
   In mighty armes he was yclad anon,
   And silver shield: upon his coward brest
   A bownch of haires discoulour'd diversly:
   Full jolly knight he seemde, and well adrest,
   And when he sate upon his courser free,
   Saint George himselfe ye would have deemed him to be.

But he the knight, whose semblaunt he did beare,
   The true Saint George was wandred far away,
   Still flying from his thoughts and gealous feare;
   Will was his guide, and griefe led him astray.
   At last him chaunst to meete upon the way
   A faithlesse Sarazin all armed to point,
   In whose great shield was writ with letters gay
   Sans foy: full large of limbe and every joint
   He was, and cared not for God or man a point.

He had a faire companion of his way,
   A goodly Lady clad in scarlot red,
   Purfled with gold and pearle of rich assay.
   And like a Persian mitre on her hed
   She wore, with crownes and owches garnished,
   The which her lavish lovers to her gave;
   Her wanton palfrey all was overspred
   With tinsell trappings, woven like a wave,
   Whose bridle rung with golden bels and bosses brave.

With faire disport and courting dalliaunce
   She intertainde her lover all the way:
   But when she saw the knight his speare advaunce,
   She soone left off her mirth and wanton play,
   And bad her knight addressse him to the fray:
   His foe was nigh at hand. He prickt with pride
   And hope to winne his Ladies heart that day,

8. A sea god who could change his shape at will (Odyssey 4.398—424).
9. Without faith, faithless (French).
1. Proven of rich value.
2. The lady's garb associates her with the Whore of Babylon (Revelation 17.3—4): "And I saw a woman sit upon a scarlet colored beast, full of names of blasphemy, having seven heads and ten horns. And the woman was arrayed in purple and scarlet color, and decked with gold and precious stones and pearls, having a golden cup in her hand full of abominations and filthiness of her fornication."
Forth spurred fast: adowne his coursers side
The red bloud trickling staind the way, as he did ride.

The knight of the Redcrosse when him he spide,
Spurring so hote with rage dispitieous,
Gan fairly couch⁰ his speare, and towards ride:
Soone meete they both, both fell⁰ and furious,
That daunted⁰ with their forces hideous,
Their steeds do stagger, and amazed⁰ stand,
And eke⁰ themselves too rudely rigorous,⁰
Astonied⁰ with the stroke of their owne hand,
Do backe rebut,⁰ and each to other yeeldeth land.

As when two rams stird with ambitious pride,
Fight for the rule of the rich fleeced flocke,
Their horned fronts so fierce on either side
Do meete, that with the terour of the shocke
Astonied both, stand sencelesse as a blocke,
Forgetfull of the hanging victory:
So stood these twaine, unmoved as a rocke,
Both staring fierce, and holding idely
The broken reliques of their former cruelty.

The Sarazin sore daunted with the buffe
Snatcheth his sword, and fiercely to him flies;
Who well it wards, and quyteth⁰ cuff with cuff:
Each others equall puissaunce envies,
And through their iron sides with cruell spies
Does seeke to perce: repining courage yields
No foote to foe. The flashing fier flies
As from a forge out of their burning shields,
And streames of purple bloud new dies the verdant fields.

"Curse on that Crosse," quoth then the Sarazin,
"That keeps thy body from the bitter fit;
Dead long ygoe I wote⁰ thou haddest bin,
Had not that charme from thee forwarned⁰ it:
But yet I warne thee now assured sitt,
And hide thy head." Therewith upon his crest
With rigour⁰ so outrageous he smitt,
That a large share it hewd out of the rest,
And glauncing downe his shield, from blame him fairely blest.

Who thereat wondrous wroth, the sleeping spark
Of native vertue⁰ gan eftsoones⁰ revive,
And at his haughtie helmet making mark,⁰
So hugely⁰ stroke, that it the Steele did rive,

3. Preserved him from harm.
And cleft his head. He tumbling downe alive,
With blody mouth his mother earth did kis
Greeting his grave: his grudging ghost did strive complaining
With the fraile flesh; at last it flitted is,
Whither the soules do fly of men, that live amis.

The Lady when she saw her champion fall,
Like the old mines of a broken towre,
Staid not to waile his woefull funerall, death
But from him fled away with all her powre;
Who after her as hastily gan scowre,
scurry
Bidding the Dwarfe with him to bring away
The Sarazins shield, signe of the conqueroure.
Her soone he overtooke, and bad to stay,
For present cause was none of dread her to dismay.

She turning backe with ruefull countenaunce,
Cride, "Mercy mercy Sir vouchsafe to show
On silly Dame, subject to hard mischaunce,
And to your mighty will." Her humblesse low
In so ritch weedes and seeming glorious show, clothes
Did much emmove his stout heroicke heart,
And said, "Deare dame, your suddein overthrow
Much rueth me; but now put feare apart, grieves
And tell, both who ye be, and who that tooke your part."

Melting in teares, then gan she thus lament;
"The wretched woman, whom unhappy howre
Hath now made thrall to your commandement, slave
Before that angry heavens list to lowre,
And fortune false betraide me to your powre
Was (O what now availeth that I was!)
Borne the sole daughter of an Emperour,
He that the wide West under his rule has,
And high hath set his throne, where Tiberis doth pas."

"He in the first flowre of my freshest age, betrothed me unto the onely hair
Of a most mighty king, most rich and sage;
Was never Prince so faithfull and so faire,
Was never Prince so meeke and debonaire;
gracious
But ere my hoped day of spousall shone,
My dearest Lord fell from high honours staire, into the hands of his accursed fone, foes
And cruellly was slaine, that shall I ever mone.

4. The Tiber River runs through Rome. The lady is hence associated with the Catholic church. Her father, she says, is ruler of the west—but Una's father had the rule of both east and west (1.1.41); historically, the true church once embraced east and west.

5. The lady claims to have been betrothed to Christ, bridegroom of the church (Matthew 9.15).

And many yeares throughout the world I straid,
A virgin widow, whose deepe wounded mind
With love, long time did languish as the striken hind.\textsuperscript{9}

'At last it chaunced this proud Sarazin
To meete me wandring, who perforce\textsuperscript{6} me led
With him away, but yet could never win
The fort, that Ladies hold in soveraigne dread.\textsuperscript{6}
There lies he now with foule dishonour dead,
Who whiles he livde, was called proud Sans foy,
The eldest of three brethren, all three bred
Of one bad sire, whose youngest is Sans joy,
And twixt them both was borne the bloudy bold Sans loy.

"In this sad plight, friendlesse, unfortunate,
Now miserable I Fidessa\textsuperscript{6} dwell,
Craving of you in pitty of my state,
To do none ill, if please ye not do well."
He in great passion all this while did dwell,\textsuperscript{6}
More busying his quicke eyes, her face to view,
Then his dull eares, to heare what she did tell;
And said, "Faire Lady hart of flint would rew
The undeserved woes and sorrowes, which ye shew

"Henceforth in safe assuraunce may ye rest,
Having both found a new friend you to aid,
And lost an old foe, that did you molest:
Better new friend than an old foe is' said."
With chaunge of cheare\textsuperscript{6} the seeming simple maid
Let fall her eyen, as shamefast\textsuperscript{6} to the earth,
And yeilding soft, in that she nought gain-said,\textsuperscript{6}
So forth they rode, he feining\textsuperscript{6} seemely merth,
And she coy lookes: so dainty they say maketh derth.

Long time they thus together traveiled,
Till weary of their way, they came at last,
Where grew two goodly trees, that faire did spred
Their armes abroad, with gray mosse overcast,
And their greene leaves trembling with every blast,\textsuperscript{6}
Made a calme shadow far in compasse round:

6. Without law.
7. Proverbial: what's dear is rare; here, coyness creates unsatisfied desire.
The fearfull Shepheard often there aghast
Under them never sat, ne wont° there sound
His mery oaten pipe, but shund th' unlucky ground.

But this good knight soone as he them can° spie,
For the coole shade him thither hastly got:
For golden Phoebus now ymounted hie,
From fiery wheeles of his faire chariot
Hurted his beame so scorching cruell hot,
That living creature mote° it not abide;
And his new Lady it endured not.
There they alight, in hope themselves to hide
From the fierce heat, and rest their weary limbs a tide.
Faire seemely pleasance° each to other makes,
With goodly purposes° there as they sit:
And in his false° fancy he her takes
To be the fairest wight° that lived yit;
Which to expresse, he bends° his gentle wit,°
And thinking of those braunches greene to frame
A girlond for her dainty forehead fit,
He pluckt a bough; out of whose rift there came
Small drops of gory bloud, that trickled downe the same.

Therewith a piteous yelling voyce was heard,
Crying, "O spare with guilty hands to teare
My tender sides in this rough rynd embard,°
But fly, ah fly far hence away, for feare
Least° to you hap, that happened to me heare,
And to this wretched Lady, my deare love,
O too deare love, love bought with death too deare."
Astond° he stood, and up his haire did hove°
And with that suddain horror could no member move.

At last whenas the dreadfull passion
Was overpast, and manhood well awake,
Yet musing at the straunge occasion
And doubting much his sence, he thus bespake;
"What voyce of damned Ghost from Limbo° lake,
Or guilefull spright wandring in empty aire,
Both which fraile men do oftentimes mistake,"°
And ruefull plaints, me bidding guiltlesse bloud to spare?"

Then groning deepe, "Nor damned Ghost," quoth he,
"Nor guilefull sprite to thee these wordes doth speake,
But once a man Fradubio,° now a tree,

8. A region of hell, traditionally the abode of the unbaptized.
9. Fra (Italian "in" or "brother") + dubbio ("doubt"). The motif of a man imprisoned in a tree
Wretched man, wretched tree; whose nature weake,
A cruell witch her cursed will to wreake,
Hath thus transformed, and plast in open plaines,
Where Boreas doth blow full bitter bleake,
And scorching Sunne does dry my secret vaines:
For though a tree I see, yet cold and heat me paines."

"Say on Fradubio then, or° man, or tree," Quoth then the knight, "by whose mischievous arts
Art thou misshaped thus, as now I see?
He oft finds med'cine, who his griefe imparts;°
But double griefs afflict concealing harts,
As raging flames who striveth to supprese."
"The author then," said he, "of all my smarts,
Is one Duessa a false sorceresse,
That many errant° knights hath brought to wretchednesse.

"In prime of youthly yeares, when corage hot
The fire of love and joy of chevalree
First kindled in my brest, it was my lot
To love this gentle Lady, whom ye see,
Now not a Lady, but a seeming tree;
With whom as once I rode accompanyde,
Me chaunced of a knight encountred bee,
That had a like faire Lady by his syde,
Like a faire Lady, but did fowle Duessa hyde.

"Whose forged beauty he did take in hand,°
All other Dames to have exceeded farre,
I in defence of mine did likewise stand,
Mine, that did then shine as the Morning starre
So both to battell fierce arraunged arre,
In which his harder fortune was to fall
Under my speare: such is the dye° of warre:
Did yield her comely person, to be at my call.

"So doubly loved of Ladies unlike° faire,
Th‘ one seeming such, the other such indeede,
One day in doubt I cast° for to compare,
Whether° in beauties glorie did exceede;
A Rosy girlond was the victors meede:°
Both seemde to win, and both seemde won to bee,
So hard the discord was to be agreeede.
Fraelissa° was as faire, as faire mote bee,
And ever false Duessa seemde as faire as shee.

Derives from Virgil (Aenid 3.27—42) and is used by Ariosto (Orlando furioso 6.26—53).
1. Duessa means "double being." Dic (Italian "two") + esser (Latin "being").
2. Fraility (Italian Fragilita).
"The wicked witch now seeing all this while
The doubtfull ballaunce equally to sway,
What not by right, she cast to win by guile,
And by her hellish science\ raised straight way
A foggy mist, that overcast the day,
And a dull blast, that breathing on her face,
Dimmed her former beauties shining ray,
And with foule ugly forme did her disgrace:
Then was she faire alone, when none was faire in place.\n
"Then cride she out, 'Fye, fye, deformed wight,
Whose borrowed beautie now appeareth plaine
To have before bewitched all mens sight;
0 leave her soone, or let her soone be slaine.'
Her Iothly visage viewing with disdaine,
Eftsoones I thought her such, as she me told,
And would have kild her; but with faigned paine,
The false witch did my wrathfull hand withhold;
So left her, where she now is turnd to treen mould.

"Thens forth I tooke Duessa for my Dame,
And in the witch unweeting joyd long time,
Ne ever wist, but that she was the same,
Till on a day (that day is every Prime,\nWhen Witches wont° do penance for their crime)
I chaunst to see her in her proper hew,
Bathing her selfe in origane and thyme:
A filthy foule old woman I did vew,
That ever to have toucht her, I did deadly rew.°

'Her neather partes misshapen, monstruous,
Were hidd in water, that I could not see,
But they did seeme more foule and hideous,
Then\ womans shape man would beleeve to bee.
Thens forth from her most beastly companie
I gan refraine, in minde to slip away,
Soone as appeard safe opportunitie:
For danger great, if not assured decay°
I saw before mine eyes, if I were knowne to stray.

"The divelish hag by chaunges of my cheare
Perceived my thought, and drownd in sleepie night,
With wicked herbes and ointments did besmear
My bodie all, through charmes and magicke might,

3. Wlien nobody else was fair. 'She': Duessa.
4. Spring: or the first appearance of the new moon.
5. Oregano and thyme were used to cure scabs and itching.
That all my senses were bereaved quight:°
Then brought she me into this desert waste,
And by my wretched lovers side me pight,"°
Where now enclos'd in wooden wals full faste,"° Banisht from living wights, our weareie dayes we waste.'"

'But how long time," said then the Elfin knight,
"Are you in this misformed house to dwell?"
"We may not chaunge," quoth he, "this evil plight, Till we be bathed in a living well;"°
That is the terme prescribed by the spell.'°
"O how," said he, "mote° I that well out find,
That may restore you to your wonted well?"°
"Time and suffised fates to former kynd
Shall us restore," none else from hence may us unbynd.'°

The false Duessa, now Fidessa hight,"°
Heard how in vaine Fradubio did lament,
And knew well all was true. But the good knight
Full of sad feare and ghastly dreriment,°
When all this speech the living tree had spent,
The bleeding bough did thrust into the ground,
That from the bloud he might be innocent,
And with fresh clay did close the wooden wound:
Then turning to his Lady, dead with feare her found.

Her seeming dead he found with feigned feare,
As all unweeting of that well she knew,°
And paynd himselfe with busie care to reare
Her out of carelesse° swowne. Her eylids blew
And dimmed sight with pale and deadly hew°
At last she up gan lift: with trembling cheare°
Her up he tooke, too simple and too treu,
And oft her kist. At length all passed feare,°
He set her on her steede, and forward forth did beare.

Canto 3

Forsaken Truth long seehes her love,
And makes the Lyon mylde,
Marres° blind Devotions mart," and fals
In hand of leachour° vylde.

Nought is there under heav'ns wide hollownesse,°
That moves more deare compassion of mind,

6. I.e., imprisoned within the trees.
7. With allusion to John 4.14, the "well of water springing up into everlasting life."
8. I.e., time and the satisfaction of the fates alone can restore us to our former human nature.
9. I.e., pretending ignorance of what she knew well.
10. I.e., having overcome all fear.
Then beautie brought t' unworthy wretchednesse undeserved
Through envies snares or fortunes freakes unkind sudden changes
I, whether lately through her brightnesse blind,
Or through allegeance and fast fealtie, Which I do owe unto all woman kind,
Feel my heart perst with so great agonie,
When such I see, that all for pittie I could die.

And now it is empassioned so deepe, moved
For fairest Unas sake, of whom I sing,
That my fraile eyes these lines with teares do steepe,
To thinke how she through guilefull handeling, treatment
Though true as touch, touchstone though daughter of a king,
Though faire as ever living wight was faire,
Though nor in word nor deede ill meriting, separated
Is from her knight divorced in despaire And her due loves derived to that vile witches share.

Yet she most faithfull Ladie all this while press, crowd
Forsaken, wofull, solitarie mayd desnolate
Farre from all peoples prease, as in exile, Yet wished tydings none of him unto her brought.
In wilderness and wastfull deserts strayd, no one
To seeke her knight; who subtilly betrayd
Through that late vision, which th' Enchaunter wrought,
Had her abandond. She of nought affrayd,
Through woods and wastnesse wide him daily sought; wilderness
Yet she most faithfull Ladie all this while press, crowd
Forsaken, wofull, solitarie mayd desnolate
Farre from all peoples prease, as in exile, Yet wished tydings none of him unto her brought.
In wilderness and wastfull deserts strayd, no one
To seeke her knight; who subtilly betrayd
Through that late vision, which th' Enchaunter wrought,
Had her abandond. She of nought affrayd,
Through woods and wastnesse wide him daily sought; wilderness
Yet wished tydings none of him unto her brought.

One day nigh wearie of the yrkesome way, slow
From her unhastie beast she did alight,
And on the grasse her daintie limbes did lay shade
In secret shadow, farre from all mens sight:
From her faire head her fillet she undight,
And laid her stole aside. Her angels face
As the great eye of heaven shyned bright.
And made a sunshine in the shadie place;
Did never mortall eye behold such heavenly grace.

It fortuned out of the thickest wood chang'd
A ramping Lyon rushed suddainly, raging
Hunting full greedie after salvage blood; wild game
Soone as the royll virgin he did spy,
With gaping mouth at her ran greedily,
To have attonce devoured her tender corse; at once / body
But to the pray when as he drew more ny,
His bloudie rage asswaged with remorse,
And with the sight amazd, forgat his furious forse

She took off her headband.
In stead thereof he kist her weariest feet,
And lickt her Lilly hands with fawning tong,
As° her wronged innocence did weet.*
O how can beautie maister the most strong,
And simple truth subjue avenging wrong?
Whose yielded pride and proud submission,
Still dreading death, when she had marked long,
Her heart gan melt in great compassion,
And drizzling tears did shed for pure affection.

'The Lyon Lord of everie beast in field,' Ouoth she, 'his princely puissance° doth abate
And mightie proud to humble weake does yield,
Forgetfull of the hungry rage, which late
Him prickt, in pittie of my sad estate:'

But he my Lyon, and my noble Lord,
How does he find in cruel hart to hate
Her that him loved, and ever most adord,
As the God of my life? why hath he me abhord?'

Redounding° tears did choke th' end of her plaint,
Which softly ecchoed from the neighbour wood;
And sad to see her sorrowfull constraint°
The kingly beast upon her gazing stood;
With pittie calmd, downe fell his angry mood.
At last in close hart shutting up her paine,
Arose the virgin borne of heavenly brood,
And to her snowy Palfrey got againe,
To seeke her strayed Champion, if she might attaine.

The Lyon would not leave her desolate,
But with her went along, as a strong gard
Of her chast person, and a faithfull mate
Of her sad troubles and misfortunes hard;
Still° when she slept, he kept both watch and ward,
And when she wakt, he waited diligent,
With humble service to her will prepard:
So From her faire eyes he tooke commaundement,
And ever by her lookes conceived her intent.

Long she thus travelled through deserts wyde,
By which she thought her wandering knight shold pas,
Yet never shew° of living wight espyde;
Till that at length she found the troden gras,
In which the tract° of peoples footing was,
Under the steepe foot of a mountaine hore;°
The same she foliowes, till at last she has
A damzell spyde slow footing her before,\(^3\) That on her shoulders sad\(^*\) a pot of water bore.

To whom approching she to her gan call, To weet,\(^4\) if dwelling place were nigh at hand; But the rude\(^*\) wench her answered nought at all, She could not heare, nor speake, nor understand;\(^4\) Till seeing by her side the Lyon stand, With suddaine feare her pitcher downe she threw, And fled away: for never in that land Face of faire Ladie she before did vew, And that dread Lyons looke her cast in deadly\(^5\) hew.

Full fast she fled, ne ever lookt behynd, As if her life upon the wager lay,\(^5\) Sate in eternall night: nought could she say, But suddaine catching hold, did her dismay\(^*\) With quaking hands, and other signes of feare: Who full of ghastly fright and cold affray,\(^5\) Gan shut the dore. By this arrived there Dame Una, wearie Dame, and entrance did requere.\(^9\)

Which when none yeelded, her unruly Page With his rude\(^*\) clawes the wicket\(^6\) open rent, And let her in; where of his cruell rage Nigh dead with feare, and faint astonishment,\(^5\) She found them both in darkesome corner pent;\(^6\) Where that old woman day and night did pray Upon her beades\(^6\) devoutly penitent; Nine hundred Pater nosters every day, And thrise nine hundred Aves she was wont to say.\(^6\)

And to augment her painefull pennance more, Thrise every weeke in ashes she did sit, And next her wrinkled skin rough sackcloth wore,\(^7\) And thrise three times did fast from any bit:\(^5\) But now for feare her beads she did forget. Whose needlesse dread for to remove away, Faire Una framed words and count'nance fit: Which hardly\(^*\) doen, at length she gan them pray, With difficulty That in their cotage small, that night she rest her may.\(^8\)

\(^3\) I.e., walking slowly ahead of her. \(^4\) Cf. Mark 4.11-12: "unto them that are without, all these things are done in parables: That seeing they may see, and not perceive; and hearing they may hear, and not understand." \(^5\) I.e., fainting with amazement. \(^6\) Her prayers are the Lord’s Prayer ("Our Father") and the Hail Mary. \(^7\) Sackcloth and ashes are symbols of penitence. \(^8\) I.e., that she might rest herself.
The day is spent, and commeth drowsie night,
When every creature shrowded is in sleepe;
Sad Una downe her laies in wearie plight,
And at her feet the Lyon watch doth keepe:
In stead of rest, she does lament, and weepe
For the late° losse of her deare loved knight,
And sighes, and grones, and evermore does steepe
Her tender brest in bitter teares all night,
All night she thinks too long, and often lookes for light.

Now when Aldeboran was mounted hie
Above the shynie Cassiopeias chaire,⁹
And all in deadly sleepe did drowned lie,
One knocked at the dore, and in would fare;⁰
He knocked fast,⁹ and often curst, and sware,
That readie entrance was not at his call:
For on his backe a heavy load he bare
Of nightly stelths and pillage severall,¹
Which he had got abroad by purchase⁰ criminnall.

He was to weete⁷ a stout and sturdie thiefe,
Wont to robbe Churches of their ornaments,
And poore mens boxes of their due reliefe,
Which given was to them for good intents;
The holy Saints of their rich vestiments
He did disrobe, when all men carelesse slept,
And spoild the Priests of their habiliments,⁹ Whiles none the holy things in safety kept;
Then he by cunning sleights in at the window crept.

And all that he by right or wrong could find,
Unto this house he brought, and did bestow
Upon the daughter of this woman blind,
Abessa daughter of Corceca² slow,
With whom he whoredome usd, that few did know,
And fed her fat with feast of offerings,
And plentie, which in all the land did grow;
Ne spared he to give her gold and rings:
And now he to her brought part of his stolen things.

Thus long the dore with rage and threats he bet,⁰
Yet of those fearefull women none durst rize,
The Lyon frayed them, him in to let:⁴
He would no longer stay him to advize,⁰

9. The star Aldebaran, in the constellation Taurus, mounts over the constellation Cassiopeia.
1. I.e., he carried the booty gained from nightly thefts and various kinds of pillage.
2. A box for alms for the poor.
3. Corceca means "blind heart." Abessa's name comes from "abbes," also ab + esse (Latin): "from being," i.e., without substance.
4. I.e., neither of the women dared rise to let him in because the lion terrified ("frayed") them.
But open breaks the dore in furious wize,
And entering is; when that disdainfulP beast
Encountring fierce, him suddaine doth surprize,
And seizing cruell clawes on trembling brest,
Under his Lordly foot him proudly hath supprest.

Him booteth not resist, nor succour call,
His bleeding hart is in the vengers hand,
Who straights him rent in thousand pecces small,
And quite dismembred hath: the thirstie land
His fearefull friends weare out the wofull night,
Ne dare to wepe, nor seeme to understand
The heavie hap, which on them is alight.
Affraid, least to themselves the like mishappen might.

Now when broad day the world discovered has,
Up Una rose, up rose the Lyon eke,
And on their former journey forward pas,
In wayes unknowne, her wandring knight to seeke,
With paines farre passing that long wandring Greeke,
That for his love refused deitie;
Such were the labours of this Lady meeke,
Still seeking him, that from her still did flie,
Then furthest from her hope, when most she weened nie.

Soone as she parted thence, the fearefull twaine,
That blind old woman and her daughter deare
Came forth, and finding Kirkrapine there slaine,
For anguish great they gan to rend their heare,
And beat their brests, and naked flesh to teare.
And when they both had wept and wayld their fill,
To follow her, that was the causer of their ill.

Whom overtaking, they gan loudly bray,
With hollow howling, and lamenting cry,
Shamefully at her rayling all the way,
And her accusing of dishonesty;
That was the flowre of faith and chastity;
And still amidst her rayling, she did pray,
That plagues, and mischiefs, and long misery
Might fall on her, and follow all the way,
And that in endless error she might ever stray.
But when she saw her prayers nought prevail,
She backe returned with some labour lost;
And in the way as she did weepe and waile
A knight her met in mighty armes embost,
Yet knight was not for all his bragging boast.
But subtil Archimag, that Una sought
By traynes into new troubles to have lost:
Of that old woman tydings he besought,
If that of such a Ladie she could tellen ought.

Therewith she gan her passion to renew,
And cry, and curse, and raile, and rend her heare,
That causd her shed so many a bitter teare,
And so forth told the story of her feare:
Much seemed he to mone her haplesse chaunce,
And after for that Ladie did inquere;
Which being taught, he forward gan advance
His fair enchaunted steed, and eke his charmed launce.

Ere long he came, where Una traveild slow,
And that wilde Champion wayting her besyde:
Whom seeing such, for dread he durst not show
Himselfe too nigh at hand, but turned wyde
Unto an hill; from whence when she him spyde,
By his like seeming shield, her knight by name
She weend it was, and towards him gan ryde:
Approching nigh, she wist it was the same,
And with faire fearefull humblesse towards him shee came
And weeping said, "Ah my long lacked Lord,
Where have ye bene thus long out of my sight?
Much feared I to have bene quite abhord,
Or aught have done, that ye displeasen might,
That should as death unto my deare hart light:
For since mine eye your joyous sight did mis,
My chearefull day is turnd to chearelesse night,
And eke my night of death the shadow is;
But welcome now my light, and shining lampe of blis."

He thereto meeting said, "My dearest Dame,
Farre be it from your thought, and fro my will,
To thinke that knighthood I so much should shame,
As you to leave, that have me loved still.
And chose in Faery court of meere goodwill,
Where noblest knights were to be found on earth:

9. I.e., if she could tell anything ("ought") about such a lady.
1. I.e., be as a death blow to my loving heart.

('Deare' can also mean heavy, sore.)
2. Answering in like manner.
The earth shall sooner leave her kindly\(^6\) skill
To bring forth fruit, and make eternall derth,\(^9\)
Then I leave you, my liefe,\(^7\) yborne of heavenly berth.

29
'And sooth to say, why I left you so long,
Was for to seeke adventure in strange place,
Where Archimago said a felon strong
To many knights did daily worke disgrace;
But knight he now shall never more deface:\(^0\)
Good cause of mine excuse; that mote\(^7\) ye please
Well to accept, and evermore embrace
My faithfull service, that by land and seas
Have vowd you to defend, now then your plaint appease.\(^10\)

3°
His lovely\(^6\) words her seemd due recompence
Of all her passed paines: one loving howre
For many yeares of sorrow can dispence:\(^6\)
A dram of sweet is worth a pound of sowre:
She has forgot, how many a wofull stowre\(^0\)
For him she late endured; she speakes no more
Of past: true is, that true love hath no powre
To looken backe; his eyes be frxt before.
Before her stands her knight, for whom she toyld so sore.

3\(^1\)
Much like, as when the beaten marinere,
That long hath wandred in the Ocean wide,
Oft soust\(^0\) in swelling Tethys\(^3\) saltish teare,
And long time having tand his tawney hide
With blustering breath of heaven, that none can bide,
And scorching flames of fierce Orions hound,\(^4\)
Soone as the port from farre he has espide,
His chearefull whistle merrily doth sound,
And Nereus crownes with cups;\(^5\) his mates him pledg\(^0\) around.

Such joy made Una, when her knight she found;
And eke th' enchaunter joyous seemd no Iesse,
Then the glad marchant, that does vew from ground
His ship farre come from watrie wildernesse,
He hurles out vowes, and Neptune oft doth blesse:
So forth they past, and all the way they spent
Discoursing of her dreadfull late distresse,
In which he askt her, what the Lyon ment:
Who told her all that fell in journey as she went.\(^6\)

33
They had not ridden farre, when they might see
One pricking\(^0\) towards them with hastie heat,

3. The wife of Ocean; here, the ocean itself.
4. Sirius, the dog star, symbolizing hot weather (the dog days).
5. Nereus, a benevolent sea god, to whom the mariner in gratitude makes libations.
6. I.e., she told all that had befallen her on her journey.
Full strongly armd, and on a courser free,\nThat through his fiercenesse fomed all with sweat,\nAnd the sharpe yron\nWhen his hot ryder spurd his chauffed\nHis looke was sterne, and seemed still to threat\nCruell revenge, which he in hart did hyde,\nAnd on his shield Sans loy in bloudie lines was dyde.

When nigh he drew unto this gentle payre\nAnd saw the Red-crosse, which the knight did beare,\nHe burnt in fire, and gan eftsoones prepare\nHimselfe to battell with his couched\nLoth was that other, and did faint through feare,\nTo taste th' untryed dint\nBut yet his Lady did so well him cheare,\nThat hope of new good hap he gan to feele;\nSo bent\n 35
But that proud Paynim\nAnd full of wrath, that with his sharp-head speare\nThrough vainely crossed shield\nAnd had his staggering steede not shrunke for feare,\nThrough shield and bodie eke he should him beare:\nYet so great was the puissance\nThat from his saddle quite he did him beare:\nViolently\nAnd from his gored wound a well of bloud did gush.

36
Dismounting lightly from his loftie steed,\nHe to him lept, in mind to reave\nAnd proudly said, "Lo there the worthie meed\nOf him, that slew Sans foy with bloudie knife;\nHenceforth his ghost freed from repining strife,\nIn peace may passen over Lethe\nWhen mourning altars purgd with enemies life,\nThe blacke infernall Furies doen aslake:\nLife from Sans foy thou tookst, Sans loy shall from thee take."

Therewith in haste his helmet gan unlace,\nTill Una cride, "O hold that heavie hand,\nDeare Sir, what ever that thou be in place:\nEnough is, that thy foe doth vanquisht stand\nNow at thy mercy: Mercie not withstand:\nFor he is one the truest knight alive,\nThough conquerd now he lie on lowly land,\n
7. The cross on Archimago's shield was false and did Hiot give him the protection the Redcrosse knight received in his fight with Sansfey (see canto 2, stanza 18).\n8. The river of forgetfulness in Hades (but Styx—the river at Hell's entrance—would seem more appropriate here: see canto 5, stanza 10).\n9. Spirits of discord and revenge.\n1. I.e., do not withhold mercy, for he is the one truest knight.
And whilst him fortune favourd, faire did thrive
In bloudie field: therefore of life him not deprive."

Her piteous words might not abate his rage,
But rudely rending up his helmet, would
Have slaine him straight: but when he sees his age,
And hoarie head of Archimago old,
His hastie hand he doth amazed hold,
And halfe ashamed, wondred at the sight:

For the old man well knew he, though untold,
In charmes and magicke to have wondrous might,
Ne ever wont in field, ne in round lists to fight.

And said, "Why Archimago, lucklesse syre,
What doe I see? what hard mishap is this,
That hath thee hither brought to taste mine yre?
Or thine the fault, or mine the error is,
In stead of foe to wound my friend amis?"
He answered nought, but in a traunce still lay,
And on those guilefull dazed eyes of his
The cloud of death did sit. Which doen away,
He left him lying so, ne would no Ienger stay.

But to the virgin comes, who all this while Amased stands, her selfe so mockt to see
By him, who has the guerdon of his guile,
For so misfeigning her true knight to bee:
Yet is she now in more perplexitie,
Left in the hand of that same Paynim bold,
From whom her booteth not at all to flie;
Who by her cleanly garment catching hold,
Her from her Palfrey pluckt, her visage to behol.

But her fierce servant full of kingly awe
And high disdaine, whenas his soveraine Dame
So rudely handled by her foe he sawe,
With gaping jawes full greedy at him came,
And ramping on his shield, did weene the same
Have reft away with his sharpe rending clawes:
But he was stout, and lust did now inflame
His corage more, that from his griping pawes
He hath his shield redeemed, and forth his swerd he drawes.

O then too weake and feeble was the forse
Of salvage beast, his puissance to withstand:
For he was strong, and of so mightie corse,
As ever wielded speare in warlike hand,
And feates of armes did wisely understand.

Eftsoones he perced through his chaufed chest
With thrilling point of deadly yron brand,
And launche his Lordly hart: with death opprest
He roared aloud, whiles life forsooke his stubborne brest.

Who now is left to keepe the forlorne maid
From raging spoile of lawlesse victors will?
Her faithfull gard removed, her hope dismayd,
Her selfe a yeelded pray to save or spill.
He now Lord of the field, his pride to fill,
With foule reproches, and disdainfull spight
Her wildly entertaines, and will or nill,
Beares her away upon his courser light:
Her prayers nought prevaile: his rage is more of might.

And all the way, with great lamenting paine,
And piteous plaints she filleth his dull eares,
That stony hart could riven have in twaine,
And all the way she wets with flowing teares:
But he enraged with rancor, nothing heares.
Her servile beast yet would not leave her so,
But followes her farre off, ne ought he feares,
To be partaker of her wandring woe.

More mild in beastly kind, then that her beastly foe.

Canto 4

To sinfull house of Pride, Duessa guides the faithfull knight,
Where brothers death to wreak Sansjoy doth chalenge him to fight.

Young knight, what ever that dost armes professe,
And through long labours huntest after fame,
Beware of fraud, beware of ficklenesse,
In choice, and change of thy deare loved Dame,
Least thou of her believe too lightly blame,
And rash misweeming doe thy hart remove:
For unto knight there is no greater shame,
Then lightnesse and inconstancie in love;
That doth this Redcrosse knights ensample plainly prove.

Who after that he had faire Una lorne,
Through light misdeeming of her loialtie,
And false Duessa in her sted had borne,
or not bear she away quickly ("light") on his horse.

4. f.e., he pierced through the lion's angry ("chau-fed") chest with the penetrating ("thrilling") point of his sword.
5. I.e., he treats her basely ("vildly") and willingly
 Called Fidess', and so supposd to bee;
Long with her travelld, tile at last they see
A goodly building, bravely garnished,⁹
The house of mightie Prince it seemd to bee:
And towards it a broad high way⁷ that led,
All bare through peoples feet, which thither travelled.

Great troupe of people travelld thitherward
Both day and night, of each degree and place,⁵
But few returned, having scaped hard,⁶
With balefull beggerie, or foule disgrace,
Which ever after in most wretched case,
Like loathsome lazars,⁴ by the hedges lay.
Thither Duessa bad him bend his pace:¹⁰
For she is wearie of the toilesome way,
And also nigh consumed is the lingring day.

A stately Pallace built of squared bricke,
Which cunningly was without morter laid,
Whose wals were high, but nothing strong, nor thick,
And golden foile all over them displaid,
That purest skye with brightnesse they dismaid:
High lifted up were many loftie towres,
And goodly galleries farre over laid,
Full of faire windowes, and delightfull bowres;
And on the top a Diall told the timely howres.⁸

It was a goodly heape² for to behould,
And spake the praises of the workmans wit;
But full great pittie, that so faire a mould
Did on so weake foundation ever sit:
For on a sandie hill,⁹ that still did flit,
And fall away, it mounted was full hie,
That every breath of heaven shooked it:
And all the hinder parts, that few could spie,
Were ruinous and old, but painted cunningly.

Arrived there they passed in forth right;
For still⁶ to all the gates stood open wide,
Yet charge of them was to a Porter hight⁶
Cald Malvenu,¹ who entrance none denide:
Thence to the hall, which was on every side
With rich array and costly arras dight:²
Infinite sorts of people did abide

2. Decorated with costly wall hangings.

There waiting long, to win the wished sight
Of her, that was the Lady of that Pallace bright.

By them they passe, all gazing on them round,
And to the Presence* mount; whose glorious vew
Their frayle amazed senses did confound:
In living Princes court none ever knew
Such eridlesse richesse, and so sumptuous shew:
Ne° Persia selfe, the nourse of pompous pride
Like ever saw. And there a noble crew
Of Lordes and Ladies stood on every side,
Which with their presence faire, the place much beautifide.

High above all a cloth of State° was spred,
And a rich throne, as bright as sunny day,
On which there sate most brave embellished°
With royall robes and gorgeous array,
A mayden Queene, that shone as Titans° ray,
In glistring gold, and peerlesse pretious stone
Yet her bright blazing beautie did assay°
To dim the brightnesse of her glorious throne,
As envying her selfe, that too exceeding shone.

Exceeding shone, like Phoebus fairest childe,
That did presume his fathers firie wayne,
And flaming mouthes of steedes unwonted° wield
Through highest heaven with weaker° hand to rayne;
Proud of such glory and advancement vaine,
While flashing beames do doaze his feeble eyen,
He leaves the welkin° way most beaten plaine,
And rapt° with whirling wheeles, inflames the skyen,
With fire not made to burne, but fairely for to shyne.

So proud she shyned in her Princely state,
Looking to heaven; for earth she did disdayne,
And sitting high; for lowly° she did hate:
Lo underneath her scornefull feete, was layne
A dreadfull Dragon with an hideous trayne,
And in her hand she held a mirrhour bright,
Wherein her face she often vewed fayne,
And in her selfe-loved semblance tooke delight;
For she was wondrous faire, as any living wight.

Of griesly° Pluto she the daughter was,
And sad Proserpina the Queene of hell;

3. Presence chamber, where a sovereign receives guests.
4. Phaethon tried to drive the chariot of his father, Phoebus, the sun god, but set the skies on fire and fell.
5. Pride and figures associated with her in Renaissance literature and art often hold a mirror, emblematic of self-love.
Yet did she thinke her pearelesse worth to pass
That parentage, with pride so did she swell,
And thundring Jove, that high in heaven doth dwell,
And wield the world, she claymed for her syre,
Or if any else did Jove excell:
For to the highest she did still aspyre,
Or if ought higher were then that, did it desyre.

And proud Lucifera men did her call,
That made her selfe a Queene, and crownd to be,
Yet rightfull kingdome she had none at all,
Ne heritage of native soveraintie,
But did usurpe with wrong and tyrannie
Upon the scepter, which she now did hold:
Ne ruld her Realmes with Iawes, but policie,
And strong advizement of six wisards old,
That with their counsels bad her kingdome did uphold.

Soone as the Elfin knight in presence came,
And false Duessa seeming Lady faire,
A gentle Usher, Vanitie by name
Made rowme, and passage for them did prepare:
So goodly brought them to the lowest staire
Of her high throne, where they on humble knee
Making obeyssance, did the cause declare,
Why they were come, her royall state to see,
To prove the wide report of her great Majestee.

With loftie eyes, halfe loth to looke so low,
She thanked them in her disdainefull wise,
Ne other grace vouchsafed them to show
Of Princesse worthy, scarce them bad arise.
Her Lordes and Ladies all this while devise Themselves to setten forth to straungers sight:
Some frounce their curled haire in courtly guise,
Some prancke their ruffes, and others trimly dight
Their gay attire: each others greater pride does spight.

Goodly they all that knight do entertaine,
Right glad with him to have increast their crew:
But to Duess each one himselfe did paine
All kindnesse and faire courtesie to shew;
For in that court whylome her well they knew:
Yet the stout Faerie mongst the middest crowd
Thought all their glorie in knightly vew,
And that great Princesse too exceeding prowde,
That to strange knight no better countenance allowd.

6. Each despises the others’ greater pride.
Suddein upriseth from her stately place
The royall Dame, and for her coche doth call:
All hurtlen forth and she with Princely pace,
As faire Aurora in her purple pall,?

Out of the East the dawning day doth call:
So forth she comes: her brightnesse brode° doth blaze;
The heapes of people thronging in the hall,
Do ride each other, upon her to gaze:
Her glorious glitterand° light doth all mens eyes amaze.

So forth she comes, and to her coche does clyme,
Adorned all with gold, and girlonds gay,
That seemd as fresh as Flora in her prime,
And strove to match, in royall rich array,
The Gods stand gazing on, when she does ride
To Joves high house through heavens bras-paved way
Drawne of faire Pecocks, that excell in pride,
And full of Argus eyes their tailes dispredden wide.°

But this was drawne of six unequall beasts,
On which her six sage Counsellours did ryde,
Taught to obay their bestiall beheasts,°
With like conditions to their kinds applyde:°
Of which the first, that all the rest did guyde,
Was sluggish Idlenesse the nourse of sin;
Upon a slouthfull Asse he chose to ryde,
Arayd in habit blacke, and amis thin,
Like to an holy Monck, the service to begin.

And in his hand his Portesse° still he bare,
That much was worne, but therein little red,
For of devotion he had little care,
Still drownd in sleepe, and most of his dayes ded;
Scarse could he once uphold his heavie hed,
To Iooken, whether it were night or day:
May seeme the wayne° was very evill led,
When such an one had guiding of the way,
That knew not, whether right he went, or else astray.

From worldly cares himselfe he did esloyne,
And greatly shunned manly exercise,
From every worke he chalenged essoyne,
For contemplation sake: yet otherwise,
By which he grew to grievous malady;
For in his lustlesse limbs through evill guise
A shaking fever raignd continually:
Such one was Idlenesse, first of this company.

And by his side rode loathsome Gluttony,
Deformed creature, on a filthie swyne,
His belly was up-blowne with luxury,
And eke° with fatnesse swollen were his eyne,°
And like a Crane his necke was long and fyne,°
With which he swallowd up excessive feast,
For want whereof poore people oft did pyne;°
And all the way, most like a brutish beast,
He spued up his gorge,° that° all did him deteaste.

In greene vine leaves he was right fitly clad;
For other clothes he could not weare for heat,
And on his head an yvie girland had,°
From under which fast trickled downe the sweat:
Still as he rode, he somewhat still did eat,
And in his hand did beare a bouzing can,
Of which he supt so oft, that on his seat
His dronken corse he scarce upholden can,
In shape and life more like a monster, then a man.

Unfit he was for any worldly thing,
And eke unhauble once to stirre or go,°
Not meet° to be of counsell to a king,
Whose mind in meat and drinke was drowned so,
That from his friend he seldome knew his fo:
Full of diseases was his carcas blew,
And a dry dropsie through his flesh did flow,
Which by misdiet daily greater grew:
Such one was Gluttony, the second of that crew.

And next° to him rode lustfull Lechery,
Upon a bearded Goat,° whose rugged° haire,
And whally° eyes (the signe of gelosy,°)
Was like the person selfe, whom he did beare:
Who rough, and blacke, and filthy did appeare,
Unseemely man to please faire Ladies eye;
Yet he of Ladies oft was loved deare,
When fairer faces were bid standen by;°
O who does know the bent of womens fantasy?°

2. The crane is a common symbol of gluttony because its long and thin ("fyne") neck allows extended pleasure in swallowing.
3. Vomited up what he had swallowed.
4. He resembles the drunken satyr Silenus, foster father of Bacchus, god of wine; ivy is sacred to Bacchus.
5. Traditional symbol of lust.
In a greene gowne he clothed was full faire,
Which underneath did hide his filthinesse,
And in his hand a burning hart he bare,
Full of vaine follies, and new fangleness; for he was false, and fraught with ficklenesse,
And learned had to love with secret lookes,
And well could daunce, and sing with ruefulnesse,
And fortunes tell, and read in loving bookes,
And thousand other wayes, to bait his fleshly hookes.

Inconstant man, that loved all he saw,
And lusted after all, that he did love,
Ne would his looser life be tide to law,
But joyd weake wemens hearts to tempt and prove
If from their loyall loves he might them move;
Which lewdness fild him with reprochfull paine
Of that fowle evill, which all men reprove,
That rots the marrow, and consumes the braine:
Such one was Lecherie, the third of all this traine.

And greedy Avarice by him did ride,
 Upon a Camell Ioaden all with gold;
 Two iron coffers hong on either side,
 With precious mettall full, as they might hold,
 And in his lap an heape of coine he told;
 For of his wicked pelfe his God he made,
 And unto hell him selfe for money sold;
 Accursed usurie was all his trade,
 And right and wrong ylike in equall ballaunce waide.

His life was nigh unto deaths doore yplast,
 And thread-bare cote, and cobled shoes he ware,
 Ne scarce good morsell all his life did tast,
 But both from backe and belly still did spare,
 To fill his bags, and richesse to compare;
 Yet chylde nor kinsman living had he none
 To leave them to; but thorough daily care
 To get, and nightly feare to lose his owne,
 He led a wretched life unto him selfe unknowne.

Most wretched wight, whom nothing might suffise,
 Whose greedy lust did lacke in greatest store,
 Whose need had end, but no end covetise,
 Whose wealth was want, whose plenty made him pore,
 Who had enough, yet wished ever more;
 A vile disease, and eke in foote and hand

6. Either manuals on the art of love (e.g., Ovid's
Are Amatorii) or more ordinary erotic.
7. The camel as a symbol of avarice is based on Matthew 19.24: "It is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle, than for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of God."
8. I.e., he made no distinction between right and wrong.
A grievous gout tormented him full sore,
That well he could not touch, nor go, nor stand:
Such one was Avarice, the fourth of this faire band.

And next to him malicious Envie rode,
Upon a ravenous wolfe, and still did caw
Betweene his cankred teeth a venemous tode,
But inwardly he chawed his owne maw:
At neighbours wealth, that made him ever sad;
For death it was, when any good he saw,
And wept, that cause of weeping none he had,
But when he heard of harme, he wexed wondrous glad.

All in a kirtle of discolourd say
He clothed was, ypainted full of eyes;
And in his bosome secretly there lay
An hatefull Snake, the which his taile upytes
In many folds, and mortall sting implyes.
Still as he rode, he gnasht his teeth, to see
Those herpes of gold with griple Covetyse,
And grudged at the great felicitie
Of proud Lucifera, and his owne companie.

He hated all good workes and vertuous deeds,
And him no lesse, that any like did use,
And who with gracious bread the hungry feeds,
His almes for want of faith he doth accuse;
So every good to bad he doth abuse:
And eke the verse of famous Poets witt
He does backebite, and spightfull poison spues
From leprous mouth on all, that ever writt:
Such one vile Envie was, that fifte in row did sitt.

And him beside rides fierce revenging Wrath,
Upon a Lion, loth for to be led;
And in his hand a burning brond he hath,
The which he brandisheth about his hed;
His eyes did hurle forth sparkles fiery red,
And stared sterne on all, that him beheld,
As ashes pale of hew and seeming ded;
And on his dagger still his hand he held,
Trembling through hasty rage, when choler in him sweld.

His ruffin raiment all was staind with blood,
Which he had spilt, and all to rags yrent:
Through unadvised rashnesse woxen wood,
For of his hands he had no governement, control
Ne cared for° bloud in his avengement: minded
But when the furious fit was overpast, actions
Yet wilfull man he never would forecast,
Flow many mischieves should ensue his heedlesse hast.°

35

Full many mischieves follow cruell Wrath;
Abhorred bloudshed, and tumultuous strife,
Unmanly murder, and unthrifty scath,°
Bitter despight,° with rancours rusty knife,
And fretting griefe the enemy of life;
All these, and many evils moe° haunt ire,°
The swelling Splene,° and Frenzy raging rife.
The shaking Palsey, and Saint Fraunces fire:
Such one was Wrath, the last of this ungoldly tire.°

36

And after all, upon the wagon beame
Rode Sathan,° with a smarting whip in hand,
With which he forward lasht the laesie teme,
So oft as Slowth° still in the mire did stand.
Huge routs° of people did about them band,
Showting for joy, and still before their way
A foggy mist had covered all the land;
And underneath their feet, all scattered lay
Dead sculs and bones of men, whose life had gone astray.

37

So forth they marchen in this goodly sort,°
To take the solace° of the open aire,
And in fresh flowring fields themselves to sport;
Emonstg the rest rode that false Lady faire,
The fowle Duessa, next unto the chaire
Of proud Lucifera, as one of the traine:
But that good knight would not so nigh repaire,°
Him selfe estraunging from their joyaunce°
Whose fellowship seemd far unfit for warlike swaine.

38

So having solaced themselves a space
With pleausaunce of the breathing° fields yfed,
They backe returned to the Princely Place;
Whereas an errant knight in armes ycled,°
And heathnish shield, wherein with letters red
Was writ Sans joy, they new arrived find:
Enflamed with fury and fiers hardly-hed,"
He seemd in hart to harbour thoughts unkind,
And nourish bloody vengeaunce in his bitter mind.

3. I.e., he never would foresee (“forecast”) the calamities his careless haste caused.
4. I.e., inhuman murder and destructive harm.
5. In Renaissance physiology, the spleen was regarded as the seat of ill-humor.
6. Presumably St. Anthony’s fire: erysipelas, or the flaming itch; appropriate to Wrath.
Who when the shamed shield7 of slaine Sans foy
He spied with that same Faery champions page,
Bewraying8 him, that did of late destroy
His eldest brother, burning all with rage
He to him leapt, and that same envious gage9
Of victors glory from him snatcht away:
But th 'Elfin knight, which ought that warlike wage,10
Disdaind to loose the meed he wonne in fray,10
And him encountring10 fierce, reskewd the noble pray.

 Therewith they gan to hurtlen11 greedily,
Redoubted bataile ready to darrayne,9
And clash their shields, and shake their swords on hy,
That with their sturre12 they troubled all the traine;
Till that great Queene upon eternall paine
Of high displeasure, that ensewen
Commaunded them their fury to refraine,
And if that either to that shield had right,
In equall lists9 they should the morrow next it fight.

 "Ah dearest Dame," quoth then the Paynim bold,
"Pardon the errour of enraged wight,13
Whom great griefe made forget the raines to hold
Of reasons rule, to see this recreant10 knight,
No knight, but treachour14 full of false despight15
And shamefull treason, who through guile16 hath slayn
The prowest17 knight, that ever field did fight,
Even stout Sans foy (O who can then refrayn?)
Whose shield he beares renverst, the more to heape disdayn.

 "And to augment the glorie of his guile,
His18 dearest love the faire Fidessa loe
Is there possessed of19 the traytour vile,
Who reapes the harvest sownen by his foe,
Sownen in bloudy field, and bought with woe:
That20 brothers hand shall dearely well requight
So be, O Queene, you equall favour showe.20
Him little answerd th 'angry Elfin knight:
He never meant with words, but swords to plead his right.

 But threw his gauntlet as a sacred pledge,
His cause in combat the next day to try:
So been they parted both, with harts on edge,
To be avenged each on his enimy.
That night they pas in joy and jollity,
Feasting and courting both in bowre and hall;

For Steward was excessive Gluttonie,
That of his plenty poured forth to all;
Which done,\(^1\) the Chamberlain\(^2\) Slowth did to rest them call.

Now whenas darkesome night had all displayd
Her coleblacke curtein over brightest skye,
The warlike youthes on dayntie\(^5\) couches layd,\(^3\)
Did chace away sweet sleepe from sluggish eye,
To muse on meanes of hoped victory,
But whenas Morpheus\(^4\) had with leaden mace
Arrested all that courtly company,
Up-rose Duessa from her resting place,
And to the Paynims lodging comes with silent pace.

Whom broad awake she finds, in troublous fit,
Forecasting, how his foe he might annoy,
And him amoves\(^6\) with speaches seeming fit:
"Ah deare Sans joy, next dearest to Sans foy,
Cause of my new grieve, cause of my new joy,
Joyous, to see his ymage in mine eye,
And greeved, to thinke how foe did him destroy,
That was the flowre of grace and chevalrye;
Lo his Fidessa to thy secret faith I flye."

With gentle wordes he can\(^8\) her fairely\(^8\) greet,
And bad say on the secret of her hart.
Then sighing soft, 'I learne that little sweet
Oft tempred is,' quoth she, 'with muchell\(^9\) smart:
Of deare Sans foy, I never joyed howre,
But in eternall woes my weaker\(^9\) hart
Have wasted, loving him with all my powre,
And for his sake have felt full many an heavie stowre.\(^0\)

"At last when perils all I weened past,
And hoped to reape the crop of all my care,
Into new woes unknowing\(^4\) I was cast,
By this false faytor,\(^9\) who unworthy ware\(^9\)
His worthy shield, whom he with guilefull snare
Entrapped slew, and brought to shamefull grave.
Me silly\(^8\) maid away with him he bare,
And ever since hath kept in darksome cave,
For that I would not yeeld, that\(^9\) to Sans foy I gave What

"But since faire Sunne hath sperst\(^9\) that lowring clowd,
And to my loathed life now shewes some light,

3. The court attendant in charge of the bedchambers.
4. Here, the god of sleep (cf. 1.1. 318 and note).
5. I.e., since my breast was pierced with the arrow of love.
Under your beames I will me safely shrowd,\[take shelter\]
From dreaded storme of his disdainfull spight:
To you th' inheritance belongs by right
Of brothers praise, to you eke longs\[belong\]
Let not his love, let not his restlesse spri\[ghost\]
Be unrevenged, that calles to you above
From wandring Stygian\[6\]

Thereto said he, 'Faire Dame be nought dismaid
For sorrowes past; their griefe is with them gone:
Ne yet of present perill be affraid;
For needless feare did never vantage\[aid\]
And helplesse hap it booteth not to mone.

Dead is Sans-foy, his vitall\[living\] paines are past,
Though greeved ghost for vengeance deepe do grone:
He lives, that shall him pay his dewties\[rites\]
And guiltie Elfin bloud shall sacrifice in hast.'

"O but I feare the fickle freakes,"\[unpredictable\] quoth shee,
"Of fortune false, and oddes of armes in field."
"Why dame," quoth he, "what oddes can ever bee,
Where both do fight alike, to win or yield?"
"Yea but," quoth she, "he beares a charmed shield,
And eke enchaunted armes, that none can perce,
Ne none can wound the man, that does them wield."
"Charmd or enchaunted," answerd he then ferce,\[fiercely\]
"I no whit reck, ne you the like need to reherce."

"But faire Fidessa, sithens fortunes guile,
Or enimies powre hath now captived you,
Returne from whence ye came, and rest a while
Till morrow next, that I the Elfe subdew,
And with Sans foyes dead dowry you endew."
"Ay me, that is a double death," she said,
"With proud foes sight my sorrow to renew:
Where ever yet I be, my secrete aid
Shall follow you." So passing forth she him obaid.

Canto 5

The faithfull knight in equall field
subdewes his faithlesse foe, Wliom false Duessa saves, and for his cure to hell does goe.

The noble hart, that harbours vertuous thought,
And is with child of glorious great intent,

6. I.e., from wandering on the banks of the river Styx, in Hades.
7. I.e., it does not help to moan over that which is beyond help ('helplesse hap').
8. Advantage of superior arms.
9. I do not care at all.
1. I.e., endow you with the legacy of the dead Sansfoy.
Can never rest, until it forth have brought
Th' eternal brood of glory excellent:

Such restlesse passion did all night torment
The flaming corage of that Faery knight,
Devizing, how that doughtie turnament
With greatest honour he achieve might;
Still did he wake, and still did watch for dawning light.

At last the golden Orientall gate
Of greatest heaven gan to open faire,
And Phoebus fresh, as bridegome to his mate,
Came dauncing forth, shaking his deawie hair:
And hurl'd his glistring beams through gloomy aire.
Which when the wakeful Elfe perceived, straight way
He started up, and did him selfe prepaire,
In sun-bright armes, and battailous array:
For with that Pagan proud he combat will that day.

And forth he comes into the commune hall,
Where earely waite him many a gazing eye,
To weet what end to straunger knights may fall.
There many Minstrales maken melody,
To drive away the dull melancholy,
And many Bardes, that to the trembling chord
Can tune their timely voyces cunningly,
And many Chroniclers, that can record
Old loves, and warres for ladies doen by many a Lord.

Soone after comes the cruel Sarazin,
In woven mail all armed warily,
And sternly looks at him, who not a pin
Does care for looke of living creatures eye.
They bring them wines of Greece and Araby,
And daintie spices fetcht from furthest Ind,
To kindle heat of courage privily:
And in the wine a solemnne oth they bynd
T' observe the sacred lawes of armes, that are assynd.

At last forth comes that far renowned Queene,
With royall pomp and Princely majestie;
She is ybrought unto a paled greene,
And placed under stately canapee,
The warlike feates of both those knights to see.
On th' other side in all mens open vew
Duessa placed is, and on a tree

2. That good must be manifested in action, not in mere intent, is an important Renaissance commonplace.
3. I.e., the sun. Cf. Psalm 19.4-5: "In them hath he set a Tabernacle for the sun. Which is as a bridegroom coming out of his chamber."
4. Minstrels play the music on their instruments, bards sing the words, chroniclers—historians, epic poets—write of love and war.
Sans-foy his shield is hangd with blody hew:
Both those the lawrell girlonds\(^5\) to the victor dew.

A shrilling trompet soundd from on hye,
And unto battaill bade° them selves addresse:
Their shining shieldes about their wrestes\(^6\) they tye,
And burning blades about their heads do besse,\(^6\)
The instruments of wrath and heaviness:\(^6\)
With greedy force each other doth assayle,
And strike so fiercely, that they do impresse
Deepe dinted furrowes in the battred mayle;
The yron walles to ward their blowes are weake and fraile.\(^6\)

The Sarazin was stout,\(^6\) and wondrous strong,
And heaped blowes like yron hammers great:
For after bloud and vengeance he did long.
The knight was fiers,\(^6\) and full of youthly heat:
And doubled strokes, like dreaded thunders threat:
For all for prayse and honour he did fight.
Both stricken strike, and beaten both do beat,
That from their shields forth flyeth firie light,
And helmets hewn deepe, shew marks of eithers might.

So th' one for wrong, the other strives for right:
As when a Gryfon\(^7\) seiz'd\(^6\) of his pray,
A Dragon fiers encountreth in his flight,
Through widest ayre making his ydle\(^8\) way,
That would his rightfull ravine rend away;
With hideous horrour both together smight,
And souce\(^6\) so sore, that they the heavens affray:
The wise Southsayer\(^6\) seeing so sad sight,
Th' amazed vulgar tels of warres and mortall fight.

So th' one for wrong, the other strives for right,
And each to deadly shame would drive his foe:
The cruell Steele\(^6\) so greedily doth bight
In tender flesh, that streames of bloud down flow,
With which the armes, that earst\(^9\) so bright did show,
Into a pure vermilion now are dyde:
Great ruth\(^1\) in all the gazers harts did grow,
Seeing the gored woundes to gape so wyde,
That victory they dare not wish to either side.

At last the Paynim chaunst to cast his eye,
His suddein\(^9\) eye, flaming with wrathfull fyre,
Upon his brothers shield, which hong thereby:

5. Laurel wreaths were awarded to the victor of a joust.
6. I.e., their armor is too frail to withstand such blows.
7. A legendary monster, half-eagle, half-lion.
85 Therewith redoubled was his raging yre," anger
And said, "Ah wretched sonne of wofull syre, reward
Doest thou sit wayling by black Stygian Lake reward
Whilst here thy shield is hangd for victors hyre," slaken
And sluggishe german doest thy forces siake,°
90 To after-send his foe, that him may overtake?

"Goe cautive Elfe, him quickly overtake, servile
And soone redeeme from his long wandring woe; rescued
Goe guiltie ghost, to him my message make, life-restoring
That I his shield have quit from dying foe." cause
Therewith upon his crest he stroke him so, determined
That twice he reeled, readie twice to fall;
End of the doubtfull battell deemed tho
The lookers on," and lowd to him gan call
The false Duessa, "Thine the shield, and I, and all."

Soone as the Faerie heard his Ladie speake, life-restoring
Out of his swooning dreame he gan awake,
And quickning faith, that earst was woxen weake, cause
The creeping deadly cold away did shake:
Tho moved with wrath, and shame, and Ladies sake,°
Of all attonce he cast° avengd to bee, determined
And with so exceeding furie at him strake, that forced him to stoupe upon his knee;
Had he not stouped so, he should have cloven bee.

And to him said, "Goe now proud Miscreant,°
Thy selfe thy message doe° to german deare, believer
Alone he wandring thee too long doth want:
Goe say, his foe thy shield with his doth beare." give Therewith his heavie hand he high gan reare,
Him to have slaine; when loe a darkesome clowd determined
Upon him fell: he no where doth appeare,
But vanisht is. The Elfe him cals alowd,
But answer none receives: the darknes him does shrowd.°

In haste Duessa from her place arose,
And to him running said, "O prowest knight,
That ever Ladie to her love did chose,
Let now abate the terror of your might,
And quench the flame of furious despight;°
And bloudie vengeance; in th' infernall powres
Covering your foe with cloud of deadly night.
Have borne him hence to Plutoes balefull bowres.° i.e., Hades
The conquest yours, I yours, the shield, and glory yours.°

8. Kinsman; here, brother.
9. I.e., the onlookers then ("tho") thought this would end the battle, heretofore in doubt ("doubtful").
Not all so satisfy'd, with greedy eye
He sought all round about, his thirsty blade
To bath in blood of faithlesse enemy;

Who all that while lay hid in secret shade:
He standes amazed, how he thence should fade.
At last the trumpets Triumph sound on hie,
And running Heralds humble homage made,
Greeting him goodly with new victorie,
And to him brought the shield, the cause of enmitie.

And to that soveraine Queene,
And falling her before on lowly knee,
To her makes present of his service seene;
Which she accepts, with thankes, and goodly gree,
Greatly advancing his gay chevalree.

Wherewith he goeth to that soveraine Queene,
And falling her before on lowly knee,
To her makes present of his service seene;
Which she accepts, with thankes, and goodly gree,
Greatly advancing his gay chevalree.

Home is he brought, and laid in sumptuous bed:
Where many skilfull leaches him abide,
To salve his hurts, that yet still freshly bled.
In wine and oyle they wash his woundes wide,
And softly can embalm on every side.

And all the while, most heavenly melody
About the bed sweet musicke did divide,
Him to beguile oP griefe and agony:
And all the while Duessa wept full bitterly.

As when a wearie traveller that strays
By muddy shore of broad seven-mouthed Nile,
Unweeting of the perillous wandring wayes,
Doth meet a cruell craftie Crocodile,
Which in false griefe hyding his harmefull guile,
Doth weepe full sore, and sheddeth tender teares:
The foolish man, that pitties all this while
His mournefuil plight, is swallowed up unware,
Forgetfull of his owne, that mindes anothers cares.

So wept Duessa untill eventide,
That shyning lampes in Joves high house were light:
Then forth she rose, ne lenger would abide,
But comes unto the place, where th' Hethen knight
In slombring swownd nigh voyd of vitall spright,
Lay covered with inchaunted cloud all day:
Whom when she found, as she him left in plight,
To wayle his woefull case she would not stay,
But to the easterne coast of heaven makes speedy way.

Where griesly Night, with visage deadly sad,
That Phoebus chearefull face durst never vew,
And in a foule blacke pitchie mantle clad,
She findes forth comming from her darkesome mew,
Before the dore her yron charet stood,
And cole blacke steedes yborne of hellish brood,
Who when she saw Duessa sunny bright,
Adorned with gold and jewels shining cleare,
She greatly grew amazed at the sight,
And th’ unacquainted light began to feare:
For never did such brightnesse there appeare,
And would have backe retyrde to her cave,
Untill the witches speech she gan to heare,
Saying, "Yet O thou dreaded Dame, I crave Abide, till I have told the message, which I have"

She stayd, and foorth Duessa gan proceede,
"O thou most auncient Grandmother of all,
More old then Jove, whom thou at first didst breede,
Or that great house of Gods caelestiall,
Which wast begot in Daemogorgons hall,
And sawst the secrets of the world unmade,
Why suffredst thou thy Nephewes deare to fall
With Elfin sword, most shamefully betrade?
Lo where the stout Sans joy doth sleepe in deadly shade.

"And him before, I saw with bitter eyes
The bold Sans foy shriyne underneath his speare;
And now the pray of fowles in field he lyes,
Nor wayld of friends, nor laid on groning beare,
That whylome was to me too dearely deare.
O what of Gods then boots it to be borne,
If old Aveugles sonnes so evill heare?
Or who shall not great Nightes children scorne,
When two of three her Nephews are so foule forlorn?"

"Up then, up dreary Dame, of darknesse Oueene,
Go gather up the reliques of thy race,
Or else goe them avenge, and let be seene,
That dreaded Night in brightest day hath place,
And can the children of faire light deface.
Her feeling speeches some compassion moved
In hart, and chaunge in that great mothers face:
Yet pittie in her hart was never proved
Till then: for evermore she hated, never loved.

And said, "Deare daughter rightly may I rew
The fall of famous children borne of mee,
And good successes, which their foes ensee:"
But who can turne the streame of destinee,
Or breake the chayne of strong necessitee,
Which fast is tyde to Joves eternall seat?
The sonnes of Day he favoureth, I see,
To make one great by others losse, is bad excheat.
"Yet shall they not escape so freely all;
For some shall pay the price of others guilt:
And he the man that made Sans foy to fall,
Shall with his owne bloud price that he hath spilt.
But what art thou, that telst of Nephews kilt?"
"I that do seeme not I, Duessa am,"
Ouoth she, "how ever now in garments gilt,
And gorgeous gold arayd I to thee came:
Duessa I, the daughter of Deceipt and Shame."

Then bowing downe her aged backe, she kist
The wicked witch, saying; "In that faire face
The false resemblance of Deceipt, I wist
Did closely lurke; yet so true-seeming grace
It carried, that I scarse in darkesome place
Could it discerne, though I the mother bee
Of falshood, and root of Duessaes race.
O welcome child, whom I have longd to see,
And now have seene unwares. Lo now I go with thee."

Then to her yron wagon she betakes,
And with her beares the fowle welfavourd witch:
Through mirkesome aire her readie way she makes.
Her twyfold Teme, of which two bla'cke as pitch,
And two were browne, yet each to each unlich,
Did softly swim away, ne ever stampe,
Unlesse she chaunst their stubborne mouths to twitch;
Then foming tarre, their bridles they would champe,
And trampling the fine element, would fiercely rampe.

9. The golden chain that binds the entire universe; the image goes back as far as Homer (Iliad 8.18—27).
So well they sped, that they be come at length
Unto the place, whereas the Paynim lay,

Devoid of outward sense, and native strength,
Coverd with charmed cloud from view of day,
And sight of men, since his late\textsuperscript{e} lucklesse fray.

His cruel wounds with clotted\textsuperscript{d} bloud congealed,
They binden up so wisely,\textsuperscript{a} as they may,
And handle softly, till they can be healed:
So lay him in her charret, close in night concealed.

And all the while she stood upon the ground,
The wakefull dogs did never cease to bay,
As giving warning of th' unwonted\textsuperscript{g} sound,

With which her yron wheeles did them affray,
And her darke griesly\textsuperscript{h} looke them much dismay;
The messenger of death, the ghastly Owle
With drearie shrieks did also her bewray;
And hungry Wolves continually did howle,

At her abhorred face, so filthy and so fowle.

Thence turning backe in silence soft they stole,
And brought the heavie corse with easie pace
To yawning gulf of deepe Avernus hole.\textsuperscript{1}

By that same hole an entrance darke and bace
With smoake and sulphure hiding all the place,
Descends to hell: there creature never past,
That backe returned without heavenly grace;
But dreadfull Furies, which their chaines have brast,\textsuperscript{b}
And damned sprights sent forth to make ill\textsuperscript{e} men aghast.

By that same way the direfull dames doe drive
Their mournefull charret, fill\textsuperscript{b} with rusty blood,
And downe to Plutos house are come bilive,\textsuperscript{g}
Which passing through, on every side them stood
The trembling ghosts with sad amazed mood.

Chattering their yron teeth, and staring wide
With stonie eyes; and all the hellish brood
Of feends infernall flockt on every side,
To gaze on earthly wight, that with the Night durst ride

They pas the bitter waves of Acheron,

Where many soules sit wailing woefully,
And come to fiery flood of Phlegeton,\textsuperscript{2}
Whereas the damned ghosts in torments fry,
And with sharpe shrilling shriekes doe bootlesse\textsuperscript{e} cry,
Cursing high Jove, the which them thither sent.

1. In classical mythology Avernus is hell, where Pluto (line 282) reigns.
2. Acheron and Phlegeton are rivers in hell.
295 The house of endless pain is built thereby,
  In which ten thousand sorts of punishment
The cursed creatures doe eternally torment.

Before the threshold dreadfull Cerberus

In which sad Aesculapius\footnote{The god of medicine.} farre a part Emprisond was in chaines remedilesse,\footnote{Beyond any remedy.}
For that Hippolytus rent corse\footnote{I.e. body.} he did redresse.\footnote{I.e. used to.}

325 Hippolytus a jolly\footnote{Gallant.} huntsman was,
That wont in charet chace the foming Bore;
He all his Peeres in beautie did surpas,
But Ladies love as losse of time forbore:
His wanton stepdame\footnote{Arousing jealous.} loved him the more,
But when she saw her offred sweets refused
Her love she turnd to hate, and him before
His father fierce of treason false accused,
And with her jealous\footnote{Arousing jealous.} termes his open eares abused.
Who all in rage his Sea-god syre° besought.

Some cursed vengeance on his sonne to cast:
From surging gulf two monsters straight were brought,
With dread whereof his chasing steedes aghast,
Both charet swift and huntsman overcast.
His goodly corps on ragged cliffs yrent,
Was quite dismembred, and his members chast
Scattered on every mountaine, as he went,
That of Hippolytus was left no moniment.

His cruell stepdame seeing what was donne,
Her wicked dayes with wretched knife did end,
In death avowing th’ innocence of her sonne.
Which hearing his rash Syre, began to rend
His haire, and hastie tongue, that did offend:
Tho° gathering up the relics of his smart
By Dianes meanes, who was Hippolyts frend,
Them brought to Aesculape, that by his art
Did heale them all againe, and joyned every part.

Such wondrous science in mans wit to raine
When Jove avizd,° that could the dead revive,
And fates expired° could renew againe,
Of endlesse life he might him not deprive,
But unto hell did thrust him downe alive,
Where long remaining, he did alwaies strive
Himselfe with salves to health for to restore,
And slake the heavenly fire, that raged evermore.

There auncient Night arriving, did alight
From her nigh wearie waine,
To Aesculapius brought the wounded knight:
Whom having softly disarayd of armes,
Tho° gan to him discover° all his harmes,
Beseeching him with prayer, and with praise,
If either salves, or oyles, or herbes, or charmes
A fordonne° wight from dore of death mote raise,
He would at her request prolong her nephews daies.

"Ah Dame," quoth he, "thou temptest me in vaine,
To dare the thing, which daily yet I rew,
And the old cause of my continued paine
With like attempt to like end to renew.
Is not enough, that thrust from heaven dew'l
Here endless penance for one fault I pay,
But that redoubled crime with vengeance new Thou biddest me to eke? Can Night defray
The wrath of thundring Jove, that rules both night and day?*

"Not so," quoth she; "but sith that heavens king
From hope of heaven hath thee excluded quight,
Why fearest thou, that canst not hope for thing,*
And fearest not, that more thee hurten might,
Now in the powre of everlasting Night?
Goe to then, O thou farre renowned sonne
Of great Apollo, shew thy famous might
In medicine, that else hath to thee wonne already Great paines, and greater praise, both never to be donne."

Her words prevaild: And then the learned leach*
His cunning hand gan to his wounds to lay,
And all things else, the which his art did teach:
Which having seene, from thence arose away
The mother of dread darknesse, and let stay
Aveugles sonne there in the leaches cure,
And backe returning tooke her wonted way,
To runne her timely race, whilst Phoebus pure
In westerne waves his wearie wagon did recure.

The false Duessa leaving noyous Night,
Returnd to stately pallace of dame Pride;
Where when she came, she found the Faery knight
Departed thence, albe his woundes wide
Not throughly heald, unreadie were to ride.
Good cause he had to hasten thence away;
For on a day his wary Dwarfe had spide,
Where in a dungeon deep huge numbers lay
Of captive wretched thrals, that wayled night and day.

A ruefull sight, as could be seene with eie;
Of whom he learned had in secret wise
The hidden cause of their captivitie,
How mortgaging their lives to Covetise,
Through wastfuIP Pride, and wanton Riotise,
They were by law of that proud Tyrannesse
Provokt with Wrath, and Envies false surmise,
Condemned to that Dongeon mercilesse,
Where they should live in woe, and die in wretchednesse.

There was that great proud king of Babylon
That would compell all nations to adore,
And him as onely God to call upon,
Till through celestiaall doome\(^*\) throwne out of dore,
Into an Oxe he was transformed of yore:
There also was king Croesus,\(^4\) that enhaunst\(^0\)
His heart too high through his great riches store;
And proud Antiochus,\(^*\) the which advaunst
His cursed hand gainst God, and on his altars daunst.\(^0\)

And them long time before, great Nimrod was,
That first the world with sword and fire warrayd;\(^0\)
And after him old Ninus\(^5\) farre did pas\(^7\)
In princely pompe, \(\text{of all the world obeyd;}
There also was that mightie Monarch layd
Low under all, yet above all in pride,
That name of native\(^0\) syre did fowle upbrayd,
And would as Ammons sonne be magnifide,
Till scornd of God and man a shamefull death he dide.\(^7\)

All these together in one heape were throwne,
Like carkases of beasts in butchers stall.
And in another corner wide\(^6\) were strowne
The antique ruines of the Romaines fall:
Great Romulus the Grandsyre of them all,
Proud Tarquin, and too lordly Lentulus,
Stout Scipio, and stubborne Hannibal,
Ambitious Sylla, and sterne Marius,
High Caesar, great Pompey, and fierce Antonius.\(^8\)

Amongst these mighty men were wemen mixt,
Proud wemen, vaine, forgetfull of their yoke:\(^0\)
The bold Semiramis,\(^9\) whose sides transfixt
With sonnes owne blade, her fowle reproches spoke;
Faire Sthenoboea,\(^7\) that her selve did choke
With wilfull cord, for wanting\(^0\) of her will;
High minded Cleopatra, that with stroke
Of Aspes sting her selve did stoutly kill:
And thousands moe the like, that did that dongeon fill.

Besides the endlesse routs\(^0\) of wretched thralles,
Which thither were assembled day by day,

4. King of Lydia, famous for his riches.
5. King of Syria, who desecrated the Jewish temple of Jerusalem (1 Maccabees 1.20—24).
6. In classical mythology, Ninus was founder of Nineveh, archetype of the wicked city (see the Book of Jonah). Nimrod, identified as the first tyrant, caused the Tower of Babel to be built in defiance of God (Genesis 10.9-10, 11.1-9).
7. The reference is to Alexander the Great, whose "shamefull death" came ten days after he fell ill at a drinking party. The son of Philip II of Macedon, Alexander was occasionally worshiped as the son of Jupiter Ammon.
8. Romulus was the founder of Rome; Tarquin, a Roman tyrant; Lentulus, a conspirator with Catiline to overthrow the Republic; Scipio, a Roman general, conqueror of Carthage; Hannibal, a Carthaginian general; Sulla, a Roman civil war general; Marius, Sulla’s rival. The figures in the final line are Julius Caesar, Pompey the Great, and Mark Antony.
9. Queen of King Proteus of Argos; she lusted after her brother-in-law Bellerophon.
From all the world after their wofull fallers,
Through wicked pride, and wasted wealthes decay.

But most of all, which in that Dongeon lay
Fall from high Princes courts, or Ladies bowres,
Where they in idle pompe, or wanton play,
Consumed had their goods, and thriftlesse howres,
And lastly throwne themselves into these heavy stowres.6

Whose case whereas the carefull Dwarfe had tould,
And made ensample of their mourneful sight
Unto his maister, he no lenger would
There dwell in perill of like painefull plight.
But early rose, and ere that dawning light
Discovered had the world to heaven wyde,
He by a privie Posterne tooke his flight,
That of no envious eyes he mote be spyde:
For doubtlesse death enseaued, if any him descryde.6

Scarse could he footing find in that fowle way,
For many corses, like a great Lay-stall°
Of murdred men which therein strowed lay,
Without remorse, or decent funerall:
Which all through that great Princessse pride did fall
And came to shamefull end. And them beside Forth ryding underneath the castell wall,
A donghill of dead carkases he spide,
The dreadfull spectacle of that sad house of Pride.1

From lawlesse lust by wondrous grace
fayre Una is releast:
Whom salvage ° nation does adore,
and learnes her wise beheast. °

As when a ship, that flyes faire under saile,
An hidden rocke escaped hath unwares,8
That lay in waite her wrack for to bewaile,2
The Marriner yet halfe amazed stares
At perill past, and yet in doubt ne dares
To joy at his foolie-happie oversight:6
So doubly is distrest twixt joy and cares
The dreadlesse courage of this Elfin knight,
Having escapt so sad ensamples in his sight.

1. Named in the argument of canto 4, but in the poem itself, only now, after we have been shown what the name means.
2. I.e., cause the shipwreck and thereby cause it to be bewailed.
Yet sad he was that his too hastie speed
The faire Duess' had forst him leave behind;
And yet more sad, that Una his deare dreed
Her truth had staind with treason so unkind
Yet crime in her could never creature find,
But for his love, and for her owne selfe sake,
She wandred had from one to other Ynd,
Him for to seeke, ne ever would forsake,
Till her unwares the fierce Sansloy did overtake.

Who after Archimagoes fowle defeat,
Led her away into a forrest wilde,
And turning wrathfull fire to lustfull heat,
With beastly sin thought her to have defilde,
And made the vassall of his pleasures vile.°
Yet first he cast by treatie, and by traynes.°
Her to perswade, that stubborne fort to yilde:
For greater conquest of hard love he gaynes,
That workes it to his will, then° he that it constraines.°

With fawning wordes he courted her a while,
And looking lovely, and oft sighing sore,
Her constant hart did tempt with diverse guile:
But wordes, and lookes, and sighes she did abhore,
As rocke of Diamond stedfast evermore.4
Yet for to feed his fyrie lustfull eye,
He snatcht the vele, that hong her face before;
Then gan her beautie shine, as brightest skye,
And burnt his beastly hart t' efforce° her chastitye.

So when he saw his flatt'ring arts to fayle,
And subtile engines bet from batteree,°
With greedy force he gan the fort assayle,
Whereof he weend° possessed soone to bee,
And win rich spoile of ransackt chastetee.
Ah heavens, that do this hideous act behold,
And heavenly virgin thus outraged see,
How can ye vengeance just so long withhold,
And hurle not flashing flames upon that Paynim bold?

The pitteous maiden carefull° comfortlesse,
Does throw out thrilling° shriekes, and shrieking cryes,
The last vaine helpe of womens great distresse,
And with loud plaints importuneth the skyes,
That molten starres do drop like weeping eyes;

3. I.e., she would have wandered from the East to the West Indies.
4. The diamond, because of its hardness, was an emblem of fidelity.
5. I.e., beaten (’bet’) from their fruitless assault (’batteree’) on her unmovable virtue.
And Phoebus flying so most shamefull sight,
His blushing face in foggy cloud imlyes,\(^6\) buries
And hides for shame. What wit of mortall wight
Can now devise to quit a thrall\(^6\) from such a plight?

55 Eternall providence exceeding\(^7\) thought,
Where none appereas can make her selfe a way:
A wondrous way it for this Lady wrought,
From Lyons clawes to pluck the gripped\(^8\) pray.
Her shrill outcryes and shriekes so loud did fray,
That all the woodees and forestes did resownd;
A troupe of Faunes and Satyres far away
Within the wood were dauncing in a rownd,
Whiles old Sylvanus slept in shady arber sownd.

Who when they heard that pitteous strained, voice,
In hast forsooke their rurall meriment,
And ran towards the far re-bounded\(^9\) noyce,
To weet, what wight so loudly did lament.
Unto the place they come incontinent;\(^6\) re-echoed
Whom when the raging Sarazin espide,
A rude, misshapen, monstrous rablement,
Whose like he never saw, he durst not bide,
But got his ready steeed, and fast away gan ride.

The wyld woodgods arrived in the place,
There find the virgin dolefull desolate,
With ruffled rayments, and faire blubbred\(^8\) face,
As her outrageous foe had left her late,
And trembling yet through feare of former hate;
All stand amazed at so uncouth\(^9\) sight,
And gin to pittie her unhappie state,
In their rude\(^8\) eyes unworthie\(^9\) of so wofull plight.

She more amazed, in double dread doth dwell;
And every tender part for feare does shake:
As when a greedie Wolfe through hunger fell\(^8\) fierce
A seely\(^5\) Lambe farre from the flocke does take,
Of whom he meanes his bloudie feast to make,
A Lyon spyes fast running towards him,
The innocent pray in hast he does forsake,
Which quit\(^8\) from death yet quakes in every lim
With chaunge of feare, to see the Lyon looke so grim.\(^5\) rescued

Such fearefull fit assaid\(^9\) her trembling hart,
Ne word to speake, ne joynt to move she had:

6. Woodland deities with men's bodies above the waist and goats' bodies below, noted for their sensuality.
Sylvanus, Roman god of the woods, is traditionally associated with fauns.
The salvage nation feel her secret smart,
And read her sorrow in her countenance sad;
Their frowning foreheads with rough homes yclad,
And rustic horror all aside doe lay,
And gently grening, shew a semblance glad
To comfort her, and fear to put away,
Their backward bent knees teach her humbly to obey.

The doubtfull Damzell dare not yet commit
Her single person to their barbarous truth,
But still twixt fear and hope amazd does sit,
Late learned what harme to haste trust ensueth:
They in compassion of her tender youth,
Are wonne with pity and unwonted ruth,
And all prostrate upon the lowly plaine,
Do kiss her feete, and fawne on her with countenance faine.

Their harts she ghesseth by their humble guise,
And yields her to extremity of time;
So from the ground she fearlees doth arise,
And walketh forth without suspect of crime:
They all as glad, as birds of joyous Prime,
Thence lead her forth, about her dauncing round,
Shouting, and singing all a shepheards ryme,
And with greene braunches strowing all the ground,
Do worship her, as Oueene, with olive girlond round

And all the way their merry pipes they sound,
That all the woods with doubled Eccho ring,
And with their horned feet do weare the ground,
Leaping like wanton kids in pleasant Spring.
So towards old Sylvanus they her bring;
Who with the noyse awaked, commeth out,
To weet the cause, his weake steps governing
And aged limbs on Cypresse stadle stout,
And with an yvie twyne his wast is girt about.

Far off he wonders, what them makes so glad,
Or Bacchus merry fruit they did invent.
Or Cybeles frantick rites have made them mad;
They drawing nigh, unto their God present
The floure of faith and beautie excellent.
The God himselfe vewing that mirrhour rare,
Stood long amazd, and burnt in his intent;

---

7. I.e., teach their knees, bent backward like a goates, to obey her.
8. I.e., her solitary self to their wild allegiance ("barbarous truth").
9. I.e., necessity of the time.
1. I.e., whether ("or") they did find ("invent") wine grapes.
2. Orgiastic dances in worship of Cybele, goddess of the powers of Nature.
3. Glowed with intense concentration. Una is a "mirrhour rare" in the sense that she is a paragon, a perfect reflection of heavenly faith and beauty.
His owne faire Dryope now he thinkes not faire,
And Pholoe fowle, when her to this he doth compaire.

The woodborne people fall before her flat,
And worship her as Goddesse of the wood;
And old Sylvanus selfe bethinkes not,° what
To think of wight so faire, but gazing stood,
In doubt to deeme her borne of earthly brood;
Sometimes Dame Venus selfe he seemes to see,
But Venus never had so sober mood;
Sometimes Diana he her takes to bee,
But misseth bow, and shaftes, and buskins° to her knee.

By vew of her he ginneth to revive
His ancient love, and dearest Cyparisse,°
And calles to mind his pourtraiture alive,°
How faire he was, and yet not faire to° this,
And how he slew with glauncing dart amisse
A gentle Hynd, the which the lovely boy
Did love as life, above all worldly blisse;
For griefe whereof the lad n'ould° after joy,
But pynd away in anguish and selfe-wild annoy.

The woody Nymphes, faire Hamadryades,
Her to behold do thither runne apace,
And all the troupe of light-foot Naiades,
Flocke all about to see her lovely face:
But when they vewed have her heavenly grace,
They envie her in their malitious mind,
And fly away for feare of fowle disgrace:
But all the Satyres scorne their woody kind,
And henceforth nothing faire, but her on earth they find.

Glad of such Iucke, the Luckelesse lucky maid,
Did her content to please their feeble eyes,
And long time with that salvage people staid,
To gather breath in many miseries.
During which time her gentle wit she plyes,
To teach them truth, which worshipt her in vaine,
And made her th' Image of Idolatryes;
But when their bootlesse° zeal she did restraine
From her own worship, they her Asse would worship fayn.°

It fortuned a noble warlike knight
By just occasion to that forrest came,
To seeke his kindred, and the lineage right,°

4. Dryope and Pholoe were nymphs loved by Faunes, Pan; for Spenser, the names Faunas, Pan, and Sylvanus were apparently interchangeable.
5. A fair youth, beloved of Sylvanus, turned into a cypress tree.
6. I.e., his appearance when alive.
7. Spirits of trees, whose lives ended when the tree they inhabited died.
8. The idol of their idolatries.
From whence he took his well deserved name:
He had in armes abroad wonne mucheil\textsuperscript{9} fame,
And fild far landes with glorie of his might,
Plaine, faithfull, true, and enimy of shame,
And ever loved to fight for Ladies right,
But in vaine glorious frayes\textsuperscript{8} he little did delight.

A Satyres sonne yborne in forrest wyld,
By straunge adventure as it did betyde,\textsuperscript{9}
And there begotten of a Lady myld,
That was in sacred bands of wedlocke tyde
To Therion,\textsuperscript{9} a loose unruly swayne;
Who had more joy to raunge the forrest wyde,
And chase the salvage beast with busie payne,\textsuperscript{9}
Then serve his Ladies love, and wast\textsuperscript{8} in pleasures vayne

The forlorne mayd did with loves longing burne,
And could not lacke\textsuperscript{8} her lovers company,
But to the wood she goes, to serve her turne,
And seeke her spouse, that from her still\textsuperscript{8} does fly,
And followes other game and venery:\textsuperscript{1}

So long in secret cabin there he held
Her captive to his sensuall desire,
Till that with timely\textsuperscript{9} fruit her belly sweld,
And bore a boy unto that salvage sire:
Then home he suffred her for to retire,
For ransome leaving him the late borne childe;
Whom till to ryper yeares he gan aspire,\textsuperscript{9}
He noursled\textsuperscript{8} up in life and manners wilde,
E mongst wild beasts and woods, from lawes of men exilde.

For all he taught the tender ymp,\textsuperscript{9} was but
To banish cowardize and bastard\textsuperscript{8} feare;
His trembling hand he would him force to put
Upon the Lyon and the rugged Beare,
And from the she Beares teats her whelps to teare;
To tame, and ryde their backes not made to beare;
And the Robuckes\textsuperscript{2} in flight to overtake,
That every beast for feare of him did fly and quake.

\textsuperscript{9} The name means “wild beast.” “Thyamis”: passion.
“Labryde”: turbulence.
\textsuperscript{1} The word means both hunting and sexual play.
\textsuperscript{2} A species of deer noted for its speed.
Thereby so fearlesse, and so fell he grew,
That his owne sire and maister of his guise Did often tremble at his horrid view, And oft for dread of hurt would him advise,
The angry beasts not rashly to despise,
Nor too much to provoke; for he would learne The Lyon stoup to him in lowly wise,
(A lesson hard) and make the Libbard sterne Leave roaring, when in rage he for revenge did earne.

And for to make his powre approved more,
Wyld beasts in yron yokes he would compell; The spotted Panther, and the tusked Bore, The Pardale swift, and the Tigre cruell; The Antelope, and Wolfe both fierce and fell; And them constrainne in equall teme to draw. Such joy he had, their stubborne harts to quell, And sturdie courage tame with dreadfull aw, That his beheast they feared, as a tyrans law.

His loving mother came upon a day Unto the woods, to see her little sonne; And chaunst unwares to meet him in the way, After his sportes, and cruell pastime donne, That roaring all with rage, did lowd requere Her children deare, whom he away had wonne: The Lyon whelpe she saw how he did beare, And lull in rugged armes, withouten childish feare.

The fearefull Dame all quaked at the sight, And turning backe, gan fast to fly away, Untill with love revokt from vaine affright, She hardly yet perswaded was to stay, And then to him these womanish words gan say; "Ah Satyrane, my dearling, and my joy, For love of me leave off this dreadfull play; To daily thus with death, is no fit toy, Go find some other play-fellowes, mine own sweet boy."

In these and like delights of bloudy game He trayned was, till ryper yeares he raught, And there abode, whilst any beast of name Walkt in that forest, whom he had not taught To feare his force; and then his courage haught Desird of forreine foemen to be knowne; And far abroad for straunge adventures sought:

3. Side by side, yoked together in a team.
In which his might was never overthrowne,
But through all Faery lond his famous worth was blown.

Yet evermore it was his manner faire,
After long labours and adventures spent,
Unto those native woods for to repaire,
To see his sire and ofspring of ancients.
And now he thither came for like intent;
Where he unwares the fairest Una found,
Teaching the Satyres, which her sat around,
Trew sacred lore, which from her sweet lips did redound.

He wondred at her wisedome heavenly rare,
Whose like in womens wit he never knew;
And when her curteous deeds he did compare,
Gan her admire, and her sad sorrowes rew;
Blaming of Fortune, which such troubles threw,
And joyd to make proofe of her crueltie
On gentle Dame, so hurtlesse, and SO trew.
Thenceforth he kept her goodly company,
And Learnd her discipline of faith and veritie.

But she all vowd unto the Redcrosse knight,
His wandring perill closely did lament,
Ne in this new acquaintaunce could delight,
But her deare heart with anguish did torment,
And all her wit in secret counsels spent,
How to escape. At last in privie wise
To Satyrane she shewed her intent;
Who glad to gain such favour, gan devise,
How with that pensive Maid he best might thence arise.

So on a day when Satyres all were gone,
To do their service to Sylvanus old,
The gentle virgin left behind alone
He led away with courage stout and bold.
Too late it was, to Satyres to be told,
Or ever hope recover her againe:
In vaine he seekes that having cannot hold.
So fast he carried her with carefull paine,
That they the woods are past, and come now to the plaine.

The better part now of the lingers day,
They traveild had, when as they farre espide
A wearie wight forwandring by the way,
And towards him they gan in hast to ride,
To weet of newes, that did abroad betide,
Or tydings of her knight of the Redcrosse.
But he them spying, gan to turne aside,
For feare as seemd, or for some feigned losse;°
More greedy they of newes, fast towards him do crosse.

35
A silly° man, in simple weedes forworne,°
And sold with dust of the long dried way;
His sandales were with toilesome travell torne,
As° he had traveild many a sommers day,
Through boyling sands of Arabie and Ynde;°
And in his hand a Jacobs staffe,° to stay
His wearie limbes upon: and eke behind,
His scrip° did hang, in which his needments he did bind.

36
The knight approching nigh, of him inquerd
Tydings of warre, and of adventures new;
But warres, nor new adventures none he herd.
Then Una gan to aske, if ought° he knew,
Or heard abroad of that her champion trew,
That in his armour bare a croslet° red.
"Aye me, Deare dame," quoth he, "well may I rew
To tell the sad sight, which mine eies have red:"°
These eyes did see that knight both living and eke ded.

37
That cruell word her tender hart so thrild,°
That suddein cold did runne through every vaine,
And stony horrour all her sences fild
With dying fit,° that downe she fell for paine.
The knight her lightly° reared up againe,
And comforted with curteous kind reliefer
Then wonne from death, she bad him tellen plaine
The further processe° of her hidden griefe;
The lesser pangs can beare, who hath endured the chiefe.

38
Then gan the Pilgrim thus, "I chaunst this day,
This fatall day, that shall I ever rew,"°
To see two knights in travell on my way
(A sory° sight) arraunged° in battell new,
Both breathing vengeaunce, both of wrathfull hew:
My fearfull flesh did tremble at their strife,
To see their blades so greedily imbrew,°
That drunke with bloud, yet thristed after life:
What more? the Redcrosse knight was slaine with Paynim knife."

"Ah dearest Lord," quoth she, "how might that bee,
And he the stoutest knight, that ever wonne?"°
"Ah dearest dame," quoth he, "how might I see
4. Soak themselves in blood.
The thing, that might not be, and yet was done?
"Where is," said Satyrane, "that Paynims sonne,
That him of life, and us of joy hath reft?"
"Not far away," quoth he, "he hence doth wonne Foreby a fountaine, where I late him left close by Washing his bloudy wounds, that through the Steele were cleft."

Therewith the knight thence marched forth in hast,

Whiles Una with huge heavinesse opprest, grief
Could not for sorrow follow him so fast;
And soone he came, as he the place had ghest,
Whereas that Pagan proud him selfe did rest,
In secret shadow by a fountaine side:
Even he it was, that earst° would have supprest before / violated
Faire Una: whom when Satyrane espide,

With fowle reprochfull words he boldly him defide.

And said, "Arise thou cursed Miscreaunt,"

That hast with knightlesse guile and trecherous
Faire knighthood fowly shamed, and doest vaunt
That good knight of the Redcrosse to have slain:
Arise, and with like treason now maintain
Thy guilty wrong, or else thee guilty yield."
The Sarazin this hearing, rose amain, at once
And catching up in hast his three square shield, triangular
And shining helmet, soone him buckled to the field.

And drawing nigh him said, "Ah misborne Elfe,°

In evill houre thy foes thee hither sent,
Anothers wrongs to wreake upon thy selfe:
Yet ill thou blamest me, for having blent°
My name with guile and traiterous intent;
That Redcrosse knight, perdie,° I never slew,
by God (pardieu)
But thou his errour shalt, I hope now proven trew."

Therewith they gan, both furious and fell,

To thunder blowes, and fiersly to assaile
Each other bent° his enimy to quell, determined / hill
That with their force they perset° both plate and maile, pierced
And made wide furrowes in their fleshes fraile,
That it would pity° any living eie bring pity to Large floods of bloud adowne their sides did raile,° flow
But floods of bloud could not them satisfie:
error in fighting me. But you will now repeat that error and that regret.

Both hungered after death: both chose to win, or die.

5. Base-born knight of Faerie Land ("Elfe").
6. I.e., had Redcrosse been wearing his arms the enchanter Archimago would not have to regret his
So long they fight, and fell revenge pursue,
That fainting each, themselves to breathen let,
And oft refreshed, battell oft renue:
As when two Bores with rancling malice met,
Their gory sides fresh bleeding fiercely fret;°
Til breathlesse both them selves aside retire,
Where faming wrath, their cruell tuskes they whet,
And trample th' earth, the whiles they may respire;
Then backe to fight againe, new breathed and entire:°

So fiersly, when these knights had breathed once,
They gan to fight returne, increasing more
Their puissant° force, and cruell rage attonce,
With heaped strokes more hugely, then before,
That with their drerie° wounds and bloudy gore
They both deformed,° scarcely could be known.
By this sad Una fraught° with anguish sore,
Led with their noise, which through the aire was thrown,
Arrived, where they in erth their fruitles bloud had sown.

Whom all so soone as that proud Sarazin
Espide, he gan revive the memory
Of his lewd lusts, and late attempted sin,
And left the doubtfull° battell hastily,
To catch her, newly offred to his eie:
But Satyrane with strokes him turning, staid,
And sternely bad him other businesse plie,
Then° hunt the steps of pure unspotted Maid:
Wherewith he all enraged, these bitter speaches said

'O foolish faeries sonne, what furie mad
Hath thee incenst, to hast thy dolefull fate?
Were it not better, I that Lady had,
Then that thou hast repented it too late?
Most sencelesse man he, that himselfe doth hate,
To love another. Lo then for thine ayd
Here take thy lovers token on thy pate.'°
So they to fight; the whiles the royall Mayd
Fled farre away, of that proud Paynim sore afrayd.

But that false Pilgrim, which that leasing° told,
Being in deed old Archimage, did stay
In secret shadow, all this to behold,
And much rejoiced in their bloudy fray:
But when he saw the Damsell passe away
He left his stond,° and her pursewd apace,
In hope to bring her to her last decay,° i.e., her death
But for to tell her lamentable case,
And eke\(^7\) this battels end, will need another place.\(^7\)

Canto 7

The Redcrosse knight is captive made
By Gyaunt proud opprest,\(^1\)

Prince Arthur meets with Una greatly with those newes distrest.

What man so wise, what earthly wit so ware,\(^9\)
As to descry\(^6\) the crafty cunning traitie,\(^6\)
By which deceit doth maske in visour\(^a\) faire,
And cast her colours dyed deepe in graine,\(^8\)

To seeeme like Truth, whose shape she well can faine,
And fitting gestures to her purpose frame,
The guiltlesse man with guile to entertaine?\(^9\)
Great maistresse of her art was that false Dame,
The false Duessa, cloked with Fidessaes name.

Who when returning from the drey Night,
She found not in that perilous house of Pryde,
Where she had left, the noble Redcrosse knight,
Her hoped pray, she would no lenger bide,

But forth she went, to seeke him far and wide.

Ere long she found, whereas\(^4\) he weare sate,
To rest him selfe, forby\(^2\) a fountaine side,
Disarmed all of yron-coted Plate,
And by his side his steed the grassy forage ate.

He feedes upon the cooling shade, and bayes\(^8\)
His sweatie forehead in the breathing wind,
Which through the trembling leaves full gently playes
Wherein the cherefull birds of sundry kind
Do chaunt sweet musick, to delight his mind:

The Witch approaching gan him fairely\(^*\) greet,
And with reproch of carelesnesse\(^*\) unkind
Upbrayd, for leaving her in place unmeet,\(^9\)
With fowle words temppring\(^6\) faire, soure gall with hony sweet,

Unkindnesse past, they gan of solace treat,\(^6\)
And bathe in pleasance of the joyous shade,
Which shielded them against the boyling heat,
And with greene boughes decking a gloomy glade,
About the fountaine like a girond made;
Whose bubbling wave did ever freshly well,
Ne ever would through fervent\(^6\) somer fade:\(^9\)

THE FAERIE QUEENE, BOOK 1, CANTO 10 / 787

The sacred Nymph, which therein wont° to dwell, was accustomed
Was out of Dianes favour, as it then befell.

The cause was this: one day when Phoebë° fayre
With all her band was following the chase,"°
This Nymph, quite tyred with heat of scorching ayre
Sat dowrte to rest in middest of the race:
The goddesse wroth gan fowly her disgrace,
And bad the waters, which from her did flow,
Be such as she her selfe was then in place.°
Thenceforth her waters waxed dull and slow,
And all that drunke thereof, did faint and feeble grow.

Hereof this gentle knight unweeting° was,
And lying downe upon the sandie graile,"°
Drunke of the streame, as cleare as cristall glas;
Eftsoones° his manly forces gan to faile,
And mightie strong was turnd to feeble fraile.
His chaunged powres at first themselves not felt,
Till crudled° cold his corage° gan assaile,
And chearefulP bloud in faintnesse chill did melt,
Which like a fever fit through all his body swelt."°

Yet goodly court he made still to his Dame,
Pourd out in loosnesse° on the grassy grownd,
Both carelesse of his health, and of his fame:
Till at the last he heard a dreadfull sownd,
That through the wood loud bellowing, did rebownd,
That all the earth for terrour seemed to shake,
And trees did tremble. Th' Elfe therewith astownd, Upstarted lightly° from his looser make,°
And his unready weapons gan in hand to take.

But ere he could his armour on him dight,
Or get his shield, his monstrous enimy
With sturdie steps came stalking in his sight,
An hideous Geant horrible and hye,
That with his talnesse seemd to threat the skye,
The ground eke° groned under him for dreed;°
His living like saw never living eye,
Ne durst behold: his stature did exceed
The hight of three the tallest sonnes of mortall seed.

The greatest Earth his uncouth° mother was,
And blustring Aeolus his boasted sire,°

I.e., Diana, goddess of the moon and of chase.
Spread out in lewdness ("loosnesse"): sexually pended.
2. Too licentious ("looser") companion.
3. Aeolus was keeper of the winds. The giant's descent from Earth and Wind links him to earthquakes.
Who with his breath, which through the world doth pas,
Her hollow womb did secretly inspire,
And fild her hidden caves with stormie yre,
That she conceived; and trebling the dw time,
In which the wombes of women do expire,
Brought forth this monstrous masse of earthly slime,
Puft up with emptie wind, and fild with sinfull crime.

So grown great through arrogant delight
Of th' high descent, whereof he was yborne,
And through presumption of his matchlesse might,
All other powres and knighthood he did scorne.

Such now he marcheth to this man forlorne,
And left to losse: his stalking steps are stayde
Upon a snaggy Oke, which he had tome
Out of his mothers bowelles, and it made
His mortall mace, wherewith his foemen he dismayde.

That when the knight he spide, he gan advance
With huge force and insupportable mayne,
And towards him with dreadfull fury praunce;
Who haplesse, and eke hopelesse, all in vaine
Did to him pace, sad battaile to darrayne,
Disarmd, disgrast, and inwardly dismayde,
And eke so faint in every joynt and vaine,
Throtigh that fraile fountaine, which him feeble made,
That scarsely could he weeld his bootlesse single blade.

The Geaunt strooke so maynly mercilesse,
That could have overthrowne a stony towre,
And were not heavenly grace, that him did blesse,
He had beene pouldred all, as thin as flowre:
But he was wary of that deadly stowre,
And lightly lept from underneath the blow:
Yet so exceeding was the villeins powre,
That with the wind it did him overthrow,
And all his sences stound, that still he lay full low.

As when that divelish yron Engin wrought
In deepest Hell, and framd by Furies skill,
With windy Nitre and quick Sulphur fraught,
And ramd with bullet round, ordaind to kill,
Conceiveth fire, the heavens it doth fill
With thundring noyse, and all the ayre doth choke,
That none can breath, nor see, nor heare at will,
Through smouldry cloud of duskish stincking smoke,
That th' onely breath him daunts, who hath escapt the stroke.

4. i.e., he uses as walking stick a knotty (“snaggy”) oak tree.
5. In its usual sense, but also “dis-made, dissolved.”
6. Filled (“fraught”) with gunpowder (“Nitre” and “Sulphur”).
7. i.e., the blast or smell alone (“onely”) overcomes him.
So daunted when the Geaunt saw the knight,
His heavie hand he heaved up on hye,
And him to dust thought to have battred quight,
Untill Duessa loud to him gan crye;
"O great Orgoglio, greatest under skye,
O hold thy mortall hand for Ladies sake,
Hold for my sake, and do him not to dye,
But vanquisht thine eternal! bondslave make,
And me thy worthy meed unto thy Leman take."

He hearkned, and did stay from further harmes,
To gayne so goodly guerdon, as she spake:
So willingly she came into his armes,
Who her as willingly to grace did take,
Then up he tooke the slombred senselesse corse,
And ere he could out of his swowne awake,
Him to his castle brought with hastie forse,
And in a Dongeon deepe him threw without remorse

From that day forth Duessa was his deare,
And highly honourd in his haughtie eye,
He gave her gold and purple pall to weare,
And triple crowne set on her head full hye,
And her endowd with royall majestye:
Then for to make her dreaded more of men,
And peoples harts with awfull terrour tye,
A monstrous bea't ybred in filthy fen
He chose, which he had kept long time in darksome den.

Such one it was, as that renowned Snake
Which great Alcides in Stremona slew,
Long fostred in the filth of Lerna lake,
Whose many heads out budding ever new,
Did breed him endlesse labour to subdew:
But this same Monster much more ugly was;
For seven great heads out of his body grew,
An yron brest, and backe of scaly bras,
And all embrewd in bloud, his eyes did shine as glas.

His tayle was stretched out in wondrous length,
That to the house of heavenly gods it raught,
And with extorted powre, and borrowed strength,
The ever-burning lamps\(^8\) from thence it brought.
And proudly threw to ground, as things of nought;
And underneath his filthy feet did tread
The sacred things, and holy heasts foretaught.\(^3\)
Upon this dreadfull Beast with sevenfold head
He set the false Duessa, for more aw and dread.

The wofull Dwarf, which saw his maisters fall,
Whiles he had keeping of his grasing steed,
And valiant knight become a caytive\(^5\) thrall,
When all was past, tooke up his forlorne weed,\(^6\)
His mightie armour, missing most at need;
His silver shield, now idle maisterlesse;
His poynant\(^6\) speare, that many made to bleed,
The ruefull moniments\(^6\) of heavinesse,
And with them all departes, to tell his great distresse.

He had not travaild long, when on the way
He wofull Ladie, wofull Una met,
Fast flying from the Paynims greedy pray,\(^7\)
Whilst Satyrane him from pursuit did let:\(^5\)
Who when her eyes she on the Dwarf had set,
And saw the signes, that deadly tydings spake,
She fell to ground for sorrowfull regret,
And lively breath her sad brest did forsake,
Yet might her pitteous hart be seene to pant and quake.

The messenger of so unhappie newes
Would faine\(^5\) have dye: dead was his hart within,
Yet outwardly some little comfort shewes:
At last recovering hart, he does begin
To rub her temples, and to chaufe her chin,
And every tender part does tosse and turne:
So hardly he the flitted life does win,
Unto her native prison to retourne:\(^4\)
Then gins her grieved ghost\(^5\) thus to lament and mourne.

"Ye dreary instruments of dolefull sight,
That doe this deadly spectacle behold,
Why do ye lenger feed on loathed light,
Or liking find to gaze on earthly mould,\(^5\)
Sith\(^\prime\) cruell fates the carefull\(^5\) threeds unfould,
The which my life and love together tyde?
Now let the stony dart of senselesse cold\(^0\) i.e., death
Perce to my hart, and pas through every side,
And let eternall night so sad sight fro me hide.

3. Doctrines ("holy heasts") previously taught.
4. I.e., with such difficulty ("so hardly") he persuades ("does win") the life back to her body
5. I.e., or find it pleasure to gaze on earthly forms

"O lightsome day, the Iampe of highest Jove,
First made by him, mens wandring wayes to guyde,
When darknesse he in deepest dungeon drove,
Henceforth thy hated face for ever hyde,
And shut up heavens windowes shying wyde:
For earthly sight can nought but sorrow breed,
And late repentance, which shall long abyde.
Mine eyes no more on vanitie shall feed,
But seeled up with death, shall have their deadly meed.

Then downe againe she fell unto the ground;
But he her quickly reared up againe:
Thrise did she sinke adowne in deadly swownd,
And thrise he her revived with busie paine:
At last when life recovered had the raine,
And over-wrestled his strong enemie,
With foltring tong, and trembling every vaine,
"Tell on," quoth she, "the wofull Tragedie,
The which these reliques sad present unto mine eie.
"Tempestuous fortune hath spent all her spight,
Thy sad tongue cannot tell more heavy plight,
Then that I feele, and harbour in mine hart:
Who hath endured the whole, can beare each part.
If death it be, it is not the first wound,
That launched hath my brest with bleeding smart.
Begin, and end the bitter balefuil stound;
If lesse, then that I feare, more favour I have found."

Then gan the Dwarfe the whole discourse declare,
The subtill traines of Archimago old;
The wanton loves of false Fidessa faire,
Bought with the bloud of vanquisht Paynirri bold:
The wretched payre transformed to treeri mould;
The house of Pride, and perils round about;
The combat, which he with Sans joy did hould;
Wherein captived, of life or death he stood in doubt.
She heard with patience all unto the end,
And strove to maister sorrowfull assay,
Which greater grew, the more she did contend,
And almost rent her tender hart in tway:
And love fresh coles unto her fire did lay:
For greater love, the greater is the losse.
Was never Ladie loved dearer day."

6. An allusion to Genesis 1:3: "And God said, Let there be light: and there was light."
7. I.e., there was never a lady who loved life ("day") more dearly than she loved Redcrosse.
Then she did love the knight of the Redcrosse;
For whose deare sake so many troubles her did tosse.

At last when fervent sorrow slaked was,
She up arose, resolving him to find
Alive or dead: and forward forth doth pas,
All as the Dwarf the way to her assynd:
And evermore in constant carefull mind
She fed her wound with fresh renewed bale;
Long tost with storms, and bet with bitter wind,
High over hils, and low adowne the dale,
She wandred many a wood, and measurd many a vale.

At last she chaunced by good hap to meet
A goodly knight, faire marching by the way
Together with his Squire, arayed meet:
His glitterand armour shined farre away,
Like glauncing light of Phoebus brightest ray;
From top to toe no place appeared bare,
That deadly dint of Steele endanger may:
Athywart his brest a bauldrick brave he ware,
That shynd, like twinkling stars, with stons most precious rare.

And in the midst thereof one pretious stone
Of wondrous worth, and eke of wondrous mights,
Shapt like a Ladies head, exceeding shone,
Like Hesperus amongst the lesser lights,
And strove for to amaze the weaker sights;
In yuory sheath, ycarved with curious slights;
Whose hiltts were burnisht gold, and handle strong
Of mother pearle, and buckled with a golden tong.

His haughtie helmet, horrid all with gold,
Both glorious brightnesse, and great terour bred;
For all the crest a Dragon did enfold
With greedie pawes, and over all did spred
His golden wings: his dreadfull hideous hed
Close couched on the bever, seemed to throw
From flaming mouth bright sparkles fierie red,
That suddeine horror to faint harts did show;
And scaly tayle was stretcht adowne his backe full low.

Upon the top of all his loftie crest,
A bunch of haires discoulour diversly,
With springled pearle, and gold full richly drest,
Did shake, and seemed to daunce for jollity.
Like to an Almond tree ymounted hye
On top of greene Selinis\textsuperscript{9} all alone,
With blossomes brave bedecked daintily;
Whose tender locks do tremble every one
At every little breath, that under heaven is blowne.

His warlike shield all closely covered was,
Ne might of mortall eye be ever seene;
Not made of \textit{Steele}, nor of enduring bras,
Such earthly mettals soone consumed bene:
But all of Diamond perfect pure and cleene\textsuperscript{9} clear
It framed was, one massie entire mould.\textsuperscript{1}
Hewen out of Adaman\textit{t} rocke with engines\textsuperscript{9} keene,
That point of speare it never percen could,
Ne dint of direfull sword divide the substance would.

The same to wight\textsuperscript{9} he never wont disclose,
But\textsuperscript{9} when as monsters huge he would dismay,
Or daunt unequal\textsuperscript{2} armies of his foes,
For so exceeding shone his glistring ray,
That Phoebus golden face it did attaint,\textsuperscript{6} make dim
As when a cloud his beames doth over-lay;
And silver Cynthia\textsuperscript{9} wexed pale and faint,
As when her face is staynd with magick art\textsuperscript{3} constraint.

No magicke arts hereof had any might,
Nor bloudie wordes of bold Enchaunters call,
But all that was not such, as seemd in sight,
Men into stones therewith he could transmew,
And stones to dust, and dust to nought at all;
And when him list the prouder lookes subdew,
He would them gazing blind, or turne to other hew.\textsuperscript{9} form

Ne let it seeme, that credence this exceedes,
For he that made the same, was knowne right well
To have done much more admirable\textsuperscript{4} deedes.
It Merlin was, which whylome\textsuperscript{4} did excell
All living wightes in might of magick spell:
Both shield, and sword, and armour all he wrought
For this young Prince,\textsuperscript{4} when first to armes he fell,\textsuperscript{9} came eclipse of the moon.

\item \textsuperscript{1} The shield was made of one solid piece of diamond, unflawed, unpierceable, translucent.

\item \textsuperscript{3} Magicians were believed to be able to cause an eclipse of the moon.
\item \textsuperscript{4} The reference to Merlin indicates that the prince is Arthur (who had been mentioned in the canto’s prefatory quatrain). In the Letter to Raleigh, he is identified with "magnificence," understood as the perfection of all the virtues and containing them all.

But when he dyde, the Faerie Queene it brought
To Faerie lond, where yet it may be seen, if sought.

A gentle youth, his dearely loved Squire
His speare of heben° wood behind him bare,
Whose harmefull head, thrice heated in the fire,
Had riven many a brest with pikehead® square;
A goodly person, and could menage° faire
His stubborne steed with curbed canon bit,³
Who under him did trample as the aire,
And chaufª that any on his backe should sit;
The yron rowels° into frothy fome he bit.

When as this knight nigh to the Ladie drew,
With lovely court° he gan her entertaine;
But when he heard her answers loth, he knew
Some secret sorrow did her heart distrainerª
Which to albay, and calme her storming paine,
Faire feeling words he wisely gan display,⁹
And for her humour fitting purpose faine;
To tempt the cause it selfe for to bewray;
Wherewith emmoved, these bleeding words she gan to say.

"What worlds delight, or joy of living speach
Can heart, so plunged in sea of sorrowes deepe,
And heaped with so huge misfortunes, reach?
The carefuIP cold beginneth for to creepe,
And in my heart his yron arrow steepe,
Such helplesse harmes yts better hidden keepe,
Then rip up° griefe, where it may not availe,
My last left comfort is, my woes to weepe and waile."

"Ah Ladie deare," quoth then the gentle knight,
"Well may I weene,° your griefe is wondrous great;
For wondrous great griefe groneth in my spright,
Whiles thus I heare you of your sorrowes treat.
But wofull Ladie let me you intrete,
For to unfold the anguish of your hart:
Mishaps are maistred by advice discrete,
And counsell mitigates the greatest smart;
Found never helpe, who never would his hurts impart."

"O but," quoth she, "great griefe will not be tould,
And can more easily be thought, then said."
"Right so"; quoth he, "but he, that never would,
Could never: will to might gives greatest aid."⁸

6. i.e., suited his manner to her mood.
7. i.e., he never found help who would not tell his sorrows.
8. i.e., he that fails to will something cannot do it:
   willing gives the greatest help to one's power ("might").
"But grief," quoth she, "does greater grow displaid, i.e., when revealed
If then it find not helpe, and breedes despaire."
"Despaire breedes not," quoth he, "where faith is staid." firm
"No faith so fast," quoth she, "but flesh does paire." impair
"Flesh may empaire," quoth he, "but reason can repaire."

His goodly reason, and well guided speach
So deepe did settle in her gratious thought, wound
That her perswaded to disclose the breach.0
Which love and fortune in her heart had wrought.
And said; "Faire Sir, I hope good hap hath brought
You to inquire the secrets of my griefe,
Or that your wisedome will direct my thought,
Or that your prowesse can me yield reliefer
Then heare the storie sad, which I shall tell you breife

"The forlorne Maiden, whom your eyes have seene
The laughing stocke of fortunes mockeries,
Am th' only daughter of a King and Queene,
Whose parents deare, whilest equall destinies
Did runne about,9 and their felicities
The favourable heavens did not envy,
Did spread their rule through all the territories,
Which Phison and Euphrates floweth by,
And Gehons golden waves doe wash continually.1

"Till that their cruell cursed enemy,
An huge great Dragon horrible in sight,
Bred in the loathly lakes of Tartary,0
With murdrous ravine, and devouring might
Their kingdome spoild,9 and countrey wasted quight:
Themselves, for feare into his jawes to fall,
He forst to castle strong to take their flight,
Where fast embard0 in mightie brasen wall,
He has them now foure yeres besiegd to make them thrall.

"Full many knights adventurous and stout
Have enterprizd that Monster to subdew;
From every coast0 that heaven walks about,
Have thither come the noble Martiell crew;
That famous hard atchievements still pursew,
Yet never any could that girland win,
But all still quailed,5 and still he greater grew:
All they for want of faith, or guilt of sin.

The pitteous pray of his fierce crueltie have bin.

"At last ylredd0 with farre reported praise,
Which flying fame throughout the world had spread,
http://englishworld20111.wordpress.com/
Of doughtie knights, whom Faery land did raise,
That noble order hight of Maidenhed."

Forthwith to court of Gloriane I sped,
Of Gloriane great Queene of glory bright,
Whose kingdomes seat Cleopolis is red,
There to obtaine some such redoubted knight,
That Parents deare from tyrants powre deliver might.

"It was my chance (my chance was faire and good)
There for to find a fresh unproved knight,
Whose manly hands imbrewed in guiltie blood
Had never bene, ne ever by his might
Had throwne to ground the unregarded right:
Yet of his prouesse prove he since hath made
(I witnesse am) in many a cruell fight;
The groning ghosts of many one dismaide
Have felt the bitter dint of his avenging blade.

"And ye the forlorne reliques of his powre,
His byting sword, and his devouring speare,
Which have endured many a dreadfull stowre,
Can speake his prouesse, that did earst you beare,
And well could rule: now he hath left you heare,
To be the record of his ruefull losse,
And of my dolerfull disaventurous deare:
O heavie record of the good Redcrosse,
Where have you left your Lord, that could so well you tosse?

"Well hoped I, and faire beginnings had,
That he my captive Iangour should redeeme,
Till all unweeting, an Enchaunter bad
His sence abusd, and made him to misdeeme
My loyalty, not such as it did seeme;
That rather death desire, then such despight.
Be judge ye heavens, that all things right esteeme,
How I him loved, and love with all my might,
So thought I eke of him, and thinke I thought aright.

"Thenceforth me desolate he quite forsooke,
To wander, where wilde fortune would me lead,
And other bywaies he himselfe betooke,
Where never foot of living wight did tread,
That brought not bace the balefull body dead; i.e., who was not killed
In which him chaunced false Duessa meeete,
Mine onely foe, mine onely deadly dread.

2. The type or analogue of the Order of the Garter.
Its emblem shows St. George killing the dragon, and its star is the Red Cross.
3. Cleopolis means "famous city."
4. i.e., his strong hands had never been guiltily stained ("imbrewed") with blood.
5. i.e., relieve my state, captive to sadness.
6. i.e., I, who prefer death to such treachery ("des-pight").
7. i.e., the only object of my mortal fear.
Who with her witchcraft and misseeming\textsuperscript{a} sweete,\textsuperscript{f} false appearance
Inveigled him to follow her desires unmeete.\textsuperscript{a} improper

"At last by subtill sleights she him betraid
Unto his foe, a Gyant huge and tall,
Who him disarmed, dissolute,\textsuperscript{a} dismaid,\textsuperscript{i} improper
Unwares surprised and with mightie mail\textsuperscript{a} club
The monster mercilesse him made to fall,
Whose fall did never foe before behold;
And now in darkesome dungeon, wretched thrall,
Remedilesse, for aie\textsuperscript{a} he doth him hold;
This is my cause of griefe, more great, then may be told."

Ere she had ended all, she gan to faint:
But he her comforted and faire bespake,
"Certes, Madame, ye have great cause of plaint,
That stoutest heart, I weene, could cause to quake.
But be of cheare, and comfort to you take:
For till I have acquit\textsuperscript{a} your captive knight,
Assure your selfe, I will you not forsake."
His chearefull words revived her chearelesse spright,
So forth they went, the Dwarfe them guiding ever right.

Canto 8

Her love is firme, her care continuall,
So oft as he through his owne foolish pride,
Or weaknesse is to sinfull bands\textsuperscript{a} made thrall:

Else should this Redcrosse knight in bands have dye,
For whose deliverance she this Prince doth thither guide.

They sadly travelld thus, untill they came
Nigh to a castle builded strong and hie:
Then cryde the Dwarfe, 'Io yonder is the same;
In which my Lord my liege doth lucklesse lie,
Thrall to that Gyants hatefull tyrannie:

Therefore, deare Sir, your mightie powres assay.\textsuperscript{a} put to trial
The noble knight alighted by and by\textsuperscript{a} immediately

\textsuperscript{a} I.e., forever ("for aie") without hope of rescue ("remedilesse").
From loftie steede, and bad the Ladie stay.
To see what end of fight should him befall that day.

So with the Squire, th' admirer of his might,
He marched forth towards that castle wall:
Whose gates he found fast shut, ne living wight
To ward the same, nor answere commers call.

Then tooke that Squire an home of bugle small,
Which hong adowne his side in twisted gold,
And tassels gay. Wyde wonders over all
Of that same homes great vertues weren told,
Which had approved bene in uses manifold.

Was never wight, that heard that shrilling sound,
But trembling feare did feele in every vaine;
Three miles it might be easie heard around,
And Ecchoes three answered it selfe againe:
Might once abide the terror of that blast,
But presently was voide and wholly vaine:
No gate so strong, no Iocke so firme and fast,
But with that percing noise flew open quite, or birast.

The same before the Geants gate he blew,
That all the castle quaked from the ground,
And every dore of freewill open flew.
The Gyant selfe dismaied with that sownd,
Where he with his Duessa dalliance fownd,
In hast came rushing forth from inner bowre,
With staring countenance sterne, as one astownd,
And staggering steps, to weet, what suddein stowre
Had wrought that horror strange, and dared his dreaded powre.

And after him the proud Duessa came,
High mounted on her manyheaded beast,
And every head with fyrie tongue did flame,
And every head was crowned on his creast,
And bloudie mouthed with late cruell feast.
That when the knight beheld, his mightie shild
Upon his manly arme he soone addrrest,
And at him fiercely flew, with courage fild,
And eger greedinesse through every member thrid
Therewith the Gyant buckled him to fight,
Inflamed with scornefull wrath and high disdaine,
And lifting up his dreadfull club on hight,
All armed with ragged snubbes and knottie graine,

"Wide wonders" (marvelous tales) told of the horn connect it with the horn of the legendary French hero Roland and the ram's horn of Joshua, with which he razed the walls of Jericho (Joshua 6.5).
Him thought at first encounter to have slaine.

But wise and warie was that noble Pere, peer

And lightly leaping from so monstrous maine, force

Did faire avoid the violence him nere;

It booted nought, to thinke, such thunderbolts to beare.1

Ne shame he thought to shunne so hideous might:

The idle stroke, enforcing furious way, useless

Missing the marke of his misaymed sight

Did fall to ground, and with his° heavie sway

So deeply dinted in the driven clay,

That three yardes deepe a furrow up did throw:

The sad earth wounded with so sore assay, assault

Did grone full grievous underneath the blow,

And trembling with strange feare, did like an earthquake show.

As when almightie Jove in wrathfull mood,

To wreake the guilt of mortall sins is bent, punish / disposed

Hurles forth his thundring dart with deadly food, hatred (feud)

Enrold in flames, and smouldring dreiment, smothering darkness

Through riven cloudes and molten firmament;

The fierce threeforked engin making way, weapon

Both loftie towres and highest trees hath rent,

And all that might his angrie passage stay,

And shooting in the earth, casts up a mount of clay.

10

His boystrous club, so buried in the ground, massive

He could not rearen up againe so light, easily

But that the knight him at avantage found,

And whiles he strove his combred clubbe to quight release

Out of the earth, with blade all burning bright

He smote off his left arme, which like a blocke

Did fall to ground, deprived of native might;

Large streames of bloud out of the truncked stocke truncated stump

Forth gushed, like fresh water stremes from riven rokke.2

Dismaied with so desperate deadly wound,

And eke impatient of unwonted paine, also

He loudly brayd with beastly yelling sound,

That all the fields rebellowed againe;

As great a noyse, as when in Cymbrian4 plaine

An heard of Bulles, whom kindly5 rage doth sting, natural

Do for the milkie mothers want complaine,5

And fill the fields with troublous bellowing,

The neighbour woods around with hollow murmur ring.

1. I.e., it was useless to think of withstanding such blows.
2. Cf. Exodus 17.6, where Moses smites the rock and water flows forth.
3. I.e., unable to bear ("impatient of") this unfamiliar ("unwonted") pain.
4. Jutland, once called the Cimbric peninsula.
5. I.e., mourn the cows' absence.
That when his deare Duessa heard, and saw
The evill stownd, that daungerd her estate,
Unto his aide she hastily did draw
Her dreadfull beast, who sloane with bloud of late
Came ramping* forth with proud presumpteous gate,*
And threatened all his heads like flaming brands,*
But him the Squire made quickly to retrate,
Encountring fierce with single sword in hand,
And twixt him and his Lord did like a bulwarke stand.

The proud Duessa full of wrathfull spight,
And fierce disdaine, to be affronted so,
Enforst her purple* beast with all her might
That stop* out of the way to overthroe,
Scorning the let* of so unequall foe:
But nathemore* would that courageous swayne
To her yeeld passage, gainst his Lord to goe,
But with outrageous* strokes did him restraine,
And with his bodie bard the way atwixt them twaine.

Then tooke the angrie witch her golden cup,
Which still* she bore, replete with magick artes;*
Death and despeyre did many thereof sup,
And secret poyson through their inner parts,
Th' eternall bale* of heevie wounded harts;
Which after charmes and some enchauntments said,
She lightly sprinkled on his weaker* parts;
Therewith his sturdie courage soone was quayd,*
And all his senses were with suddeine dread dismayd.

So downe he fell before the cruelle beast,
Who on his necke his bloudie claws did seize,
That life nigh crushout of his panting brest:
No powre he had to stirre, nor will to rize.
That when the careful knight gan well avise,
He lightly* left the foe, with whom he fought,
And to the beast gan turne his enterprise;
For wondrous anguish in his hart it wrought,
To see his loved Squire into such thraldome* brought.

And high adavancing* his bloud-thirstie blade,
Stroke one of those deformed heads so sore,*
That of his puissance* proud ensample made;
His monstrous scalpe* downe to his teeth it tore
And that misformed shape mis-shaped more:

6. I.e., the peril ("stownd") that endangerd her state.
7. Alludes to the golden cup of the woman in Revelation, which is "full of abominations and filthiness of her fornications" (17.4); the chalice of the Roman church; and the cup of Circe, the sorceress who turned men into beasts (in Odyssey 10).
8. "I saw one of... (the beast's) heads as it were wounded to death" (Revelation 13.3).
A sea of bloud gusht from the gaping wound,
That her gay garments staynd with filthy gore,
And overflowed all the field around;
That over shoes in bloud he waded on the ground.

17
Thereat he roared for exceeding paine,
That to have heard, great horror would have bred,
And scourging th' emptie ayre with his long traine,
Through great impatience of his grieved hed
His gorgeous ryder from her loftie sted
Would have cast downe, and trod in durtie myre,
Had not the Gyant soone her succoured;
Who all enraged with smart and franticke yre,
Came hurtling in full fierce, and forst the knight retyre.

The force, which wont in two to be disperst,
In one alone left hand he now unites,
Which is through rage more strong then both were erst;
With which his hideous club aloft he dites,
And at his foe with furious rigour smites,
That strongest Oake might seeme to overthrow:
The stroke upon his shield so heavie lites,
That to the ground it doubleth him full low:
What mortall wight could ever beare so monstrous blow?

And in his fall his shield, that covered was,
Did loose his vele by chaunce, and open flew:
The light whereof, that heavens light did pas,
Such blazing brightnesse through the aier threw,
That eye mote not the same endure to vew.
Which when the Gyant spyde with staring eye,
He downe let fall his arme, and soft withdrew
His weapon huge, that heaved was on hye
For to have slaine the man, that on the ground did lye.

20
And eke the fruitfull-headed beast, amazed
At flashing beames of that sunshiny shield,
Became starke blind, and all his senses dazed,
That downe he tumbled on the durtie field,
And seemed himselfe as conquered to yield.
Whom when his maistresse proud perceived to fall,
Whiles yet his feeble feet for faintnesse reeld,
Unto the Gyant loudly she gan call,
"O helpe Orgoglio, helpe, or else we perish all."

At her so pitteous cry was much amooved
Her champion stout, and for to ayde his frend,
Againe his wonted angry weapon prooved:
9. I.e., through inability to endure ("impatience")
1. I.e., in the one hand left to him.

his afflicted ("grieved") head.
But all in vain: for he has read his end iss In that bright shield, and all their forces spend Themselves in vain: for since that glauncing\(^6\) sight,
He hath no power to hurt, nor to defend;
As where th' Almighty's lightning brand\(^5\) does light,
It dimmes the dazed eyen, and daunts the senses quight

22 Whom when the Prince, to battle new addrest,
And threatening high his dreadful stroke did see,
His sparkling blade about his head he blest,\(^5\)
And smote off quite his right leg by the knee,
That downe he tumbled; as an aged tree,
Whose hartsstrings with keene steel\(^5\) nigh hewen be,
The mightie trunke halfe rent, with ragged rift\(^7\)
Doth roll adowne the rocks, and fall with fearfull drift.\(^0\)

23 Or as a Castle reared high and round,
By subtile engins and malicious slight\(^2\)
Is undermined from the lowest ground,
And her foundation forst,\(^7\) and feeble quight,
At last downe falles, and with her heaped hight
Her hastie ruine does more heavie make,
Such was this Gyaunts fall, that seemed to shake
The stedfast globe of earth, as\(^5\) it for feare did quake.

24 The knight then lightly\(^v\) leaping to the pray,
With mortall steel him smot againe so sore,
That headlesse his unweldy bodie lay,
All wallowd in his owne fowle bloudy gore,
Which flowed from his wounds in wondrous store.\(^0\)
But soone as breath out of his breast did pas,
That huge great body, which the Gyaunt bore,
Was vanisht quite, and of that monstrous mas
Was nothing left, but like an emptie bladder was.

25 Whose grievous fall, when false Duessa spide,
Her golden cup she cast unto the ground,
And crowned mitre\(^v\) rudely\(^v\) threw aside;
Such perrsing griefe her stubborne hart did wound,
That she could not endure that dolefull stound,\(^0\)
But leaving all behind her, fled away:
The light-foot Squire her quickly turned around,
And by hard meanes enforcing her to stay,
So brought unto his Lord, as his deserved pray.

2. Clever machines of war ("engins") and evil strategy.
3. An allusion to the pope's triple tiara.
The royall Virgin, which beheld from farre,
In pensive plight, and sad perpiexitie,
Came running fast to greet his victorie,
With sober gladnesse, and myld modestie,
And with sweet joyous cheare° him thus bespake;
"Faire braunch of noblesse, flowre of chevalrie,
That with your worth the world amazed make,
How shall I quite° the paines, ye suffer for my sake?

"And you° fresh bud of vertue springing fast,
Whom these sad eyes saw nigh unto deaths dore,
What hath poore Virgin for such perill past,
My simple selfe, and service evermore;
And he that high does sit, and all things see
Behold what ye this day have done for mee,
And what I cannot quite, requite with usuree.°

"But sith° the heavens, and your faire handeling°
Have made you maister of the field this day,
Your fortune maister eke with governing,
Ne let that wicked woman scape away;
For she it is, that did my Lord bethrall,
My dearest Lord, and deepe in dongeon lay,
Where he his better dayes hath wasted all.°
O heare, how piteous he to you for ayd does call."

Forthwith he gave in charge unto his Squire,
That scariot whore to keepen carefully;
Whiles he himselfe with greedie° great desire
Into the Castle entred forcibly,
Where living creature none he did espye;
Then gan he lowdly through the house to call:
But no man cared to answere to his crye.
There raignd a solemne silence over all,
Nor voice was heard, nor wight was seene in bowre or hall.

At last with creeping crooked pace forth came
An old old man, with beard as white as snow,
That on a staffe his feeble steps did frame;°
And guide his wearie gate° both too and fro:
For his eye sight him failed long ygo,
And on his arme a bounch of keyes he bore,
The which unused, rust did overgrow:
Those were the keyes of every inner dore,
But he could not them use, but kept them still in store.

But very uncouth sight was to behold,
How he did fashion his untoward pace,
For as he forward mooved his footing old,
So backward still was turned his wrincled face,
Unlike to men, who ever as they trace,
Both feet and face one way are wont to lead.
This was the auncient keeper of that place,
And foster father of the Gyant dead;
His name Ignaro did his nature right aread.

His reverend haires and holy gravitie
The knight much honord, as beseemed well,
And gently askt, where all the people bee,
Which in that stately building wont to dwell.
Who answerd him full soft, he could not tell.
Againe he askt, where that same knight was layd,
Whom great Orgoglio with his puissaunce fell
Had made his caytive thrall; againe he sayde,
He could not tell: ne ever other answere made.

Then asked he, which way he in might pas:
He could not tell, againe he answered.
The courteous knight displeased was,
And said, 'Old sire, it seemes thou hast not red that same silver hed
How ill it sits with that same silver hed
In vaine to mocke, or mockt in vaine to bee:
But if thou be, as thou art pourtrahed
With natures pen, in ages grave degree,
Aread in graver wise, what I demaund of thee.'

His answere likewise was, he could not tell.
Whose sencelesse speach, and doted ignorance
When as the noble Prince had marked well,
He ghest his nature by his countenance,
And calmd his wrath with goodly temperance.
Then to him stepping, from his arme did reach
Those keyes, and made himselfe free enterance.
Each dore he opened without any breach;
There was no barre to stop, nor foe him to empeach.

There all within full rich arayd he found,
With royal arras and resplendent gold,
And did with store of every thing abound,
That greatest Princes presence might behold.
But all the floore (too filthy to be told)
With bloud of guiltlesse babes, and innocents trew,\(^7\)
Which there were slaine, as sheepe out of the fold,
Defiled was, that dreadfull was to vew,
And sacred ashes over it was strowed new.

And there beside of marble stone was built
An Altare, carved with cunning imagery,\(^0\)
On which true Christians bloud was often spilt,
And holy Martyrs often doen to dye,\(^7\)
With cruell malice and strong tyranny:
Whose blessed sprites from underneath the stone
To God for vengeance cryde continually,
That hardest heart would bleede, to heare their piteous mone.

Through every rowme he sought, and every bowr,
But no where could he find that wofull thrall:
At last he came unto an yron doore,
That fast was lockt, but key found not at all
Emongst that bounch, to open it withall;
But in the same a little grate was pight,\(^7\)
Through which he sent his voyce, and lowd did call
With all his powre, to weet,\(^0\) if living wight
Were housed therewithin, whom he enlargen\(^0\) might.

Therewith an hollow, dreary, murmuring voyce
These piteous plaints and dolours\(^a\) did resound;
'O who is that, which brings me happy choyce
Of death,\(^9\) that here lye dying every stound,\(^0\)
Yet live perforce in balefull\(^0\) darkenesse bound?
For now three Moones have changed thrice their hew,
Since I the heavens chearefull face did vew,
O welcome thou, that doest of death bring tydings trew.'

Which when that Champion heard, with percing point
Of pitty deare\(^a\) his hart was thrilled\(^a\) sore,
And trembling horour ran through every joynt,
For ruth of gentle knight so fowle forlore:\(^a\)
Which shaking off, he rent that yron dore,
With furious force, and indignation fell,\(^a\)
Where entred in, his foot could find no flore,

7. Probably alluding to Herod’s massacre of the Innocents (Matthew 2.16), who were traditionally viewed as the first martyrs for Christ.
8. “And when he had opened the fifth seal, I saw under the altar the souls of them that were slain for the word of God, and for the testimony which they held: And they cried with a loud voice, saying, How long, O Lord, holy and true, dost thou not judge and avenge our blood on them that dwell on the earth?” (Revelation 6.9-10).
9. I.e., the chance or right to choose death.
But all a deepe descent, as darke as hell,
That breathed ever forth a filthie baneful smell.

Nor noyous smell his purpose could withhold,
(Entire affection hateth nicer hands)
But that with constant zeal, and courage bold,
After long paines and labours manifold,
He found the means that Prisoner up to reare;
Whose feeble thighes, unhable to uphold
His pined corse, him scarce to light could beare,
A ruefull spectacle of deathe and ghastly dreere.

His sad dull eyes deepe sunck in hollow pits,
Could not endure th’ un wonted sunne to view;
His bare thin cheekes for want of better bits,
And empty sides deceived of their dew.
Could make a stony hart his hap to rew;
His rawbone armes, whose mighty brawned bowrs
Were wont to rive Steeple plates, and helmets hew,
Were cleane consumed, and all his vitall powres
Decayd, and all his flesh shrank up like withered flowres.

Whom when his Lady saw, to him she ran
With hasty joy: to see him made her glad,
And sad to view his visage pale and wan,
Who earst in flowres of freshest youth was clad.
Tho° when her well of teares she wasted had,
She said, "Ah dearest Lord, what evill starre
On you hath fround, and pourd his influence bad,
That of your selfe ye thus berobbed arre,
And this misseeming hew° your manly looks doth mnarre? unseemly appearance

"But welcome now my Lord, in wele or woe,
Whose presence I have lackt to long a day;
And fie on Fortune mine avowed foe,
Whose wrathfull wreakes them selves do now alay.
And for these wrongs shall treble penaunce pay
Of treble good: good growes of evils priefe,"
The chearelesse man, whom sorrow did dismay,
Had no delight to treaten of his grieve;
His Lons endured famine needed more reliefe.

"Faire Lady," then said that victorious knight,
"The things, that grievous were to do, or beare,
Them to renew,° I wote," breeds no delight;
Best musicke breeds delight in loathing eare:
But th’ only good, that growes of passed feare,

1. i.e., Fortune will now make amends for his wrongs with triple benefits, as good comes from evils endured ("priefe").
Is to be wise, and ware of like age.
This dayes ensample hath this lesson deare
Deepe written in my heart with yron pen,
That blisse may not abide in state of mortall men.

"Henceforth sir knight, take to you wonted strength,
And maister these mishaps with patient might;
Loe where your foe lyes stretcht in monstrous length,
And loe that wicked woman in your sight,
The roote of all your care, and wretched plight,
Now in your powre, to let her live, or dye."
"To do her dye," quoth Una, "were despiight,
And shame t' avenge so weake an enimy;
But spoile her of her scariot robe, and let her fly."
So as she bad, that witch they disaraid,
And robd of royall robes, and purple pall,
And ornaments that richly were displaid;
Ne spared they to strip her naked all.
Then when they had despoild her tire and call,
Such as she was, their eyes might her behold,
That her misshaped parts did them appall,
A loathly, wrinckled hag, ill favoured, old,
Whose secret filth good manners biddeth not be told.

Her craftie head was altogether bald,
And as in hate of honorable eel,
Was overgrowne with scurfe and filthy scalp;
Her teeth out of her rotten gummes were feld,
And her sowre breath abhominably smeld;
Her dried dugs, like bladders lacking wind,
Hong downe, and filthy matter from them welld;
Her wrizled skin as rough, as maple rind,
So scabby was, that would have loathd all womankind
Her neather parts, the shame of all her kind,
My chaster Muse for shame doth blush to write;
But at her rompe she growing had behind
A foxes taile, with dong all fowly dight;
And eke her feete most monstrous were in sight;
For one of them was like an Eagles claw,
With griping talaunts armd to greedy fight,
The other like a Beares uneven paw:
More ugly shape yet never living creature saw.
Which when the knights beheld, amazd they were,
And wondred at so fowle deformed wight.
"Such then," said Una, "as she seemeth here,
Such is the face of falshood, such the sight
Of fowle Duessa, when her borrowed light
Is laid away, and counterfesaunce° knowne.'
Thus when they had the witch disrobed quight,
And all her filthy feature° open shoune,
They let her goe at will, and wander wayes unknowne.

She flying fast from heavens hated face,
And from the world that her discovered wide,
Fled to the wastful° wilderness apace,
From living eyes her open shame to hide,
And lurkt in rocks and caves long unespid.
But that faire crew° of knights, and Una faire
Did in that castle afterwards abide,
To rest them selves, and weary powres repaire,
Where store they found of all, that dainty° was and rare.

Canto 9
His loves and lineage° Arthur tells:
The knights knit friendly hands°
Sir Trevisan flies from Despayre,
Whom Redcrosse knight withstands.

O goodly golden chaine,° wherewith yfere°
The vertues linked are in lovely wize:°
And noble minds of yore allied were,
In brave poursuit of chevalrous emprize,
That none did others safety despize,°
Nor aid envy° to him, in need that stands,
But friendly each did others prayse devize
How to advaunce with favourable hands,
As this good Prince redeemd the Redcrosse knight from bands.

Who when their powres, empaird through labour long,
With dew repast° they had recured° well,
And that weake captive wight now waxed° strong,
Them list° no lenger there at Ieasure dwell,
But forward fare, as their adventures fell,
But ere they parted, Una faire besought
That straunger knight his name and nation tell;
Least° so great good, as he for her had wrought,
Should die unknown, and buried be in thanklesse thought.

"Faire virgin," said the Prince, "yë me require
A thing without the compas of° my wit:

5. The golden chain of love or concord that binds the world and the human race together (cf. 220—22 and note).
For both the lignage and the certain Sire,
From which I sprong, from me are hidden yit.
For all so soone as life did me admit
Into this world, and shewed heavens light,
From mothers pap I taken was unfit:
And streight delivered to a Faery knight,
To be upbrought in gentle thewes and martiall might.

"Unto old Timon° he me brought bylive,°
Old Timon, who in youthly yeares hath beene
In warlike feates th' expertest man alive,
And is the wisest now on earth I weene;
His dwelling is low in a valley greene,
Under the foot of Rauran mossy hore,°
From whence the river Dee as silver cleene°
His tombling billowes rolls with gentle rore:"°
There all my dayes he traind me up in vertuous lore.

"Thither the great Magicien Merlin came,
As was his use,° oftimes to visit me:
For he had charge my discipline° to frame,
And Tutours nouriture° to oversee.
Him oft and oft I askt in privitie,
Of what Ioines and what lignage I did spring:
Whose aunswere bad me still assured bee,
That I was sonne and heire unto a king,
As time in her just terme° the truth to light should bring."

"Well worthy impe,"° said then the Lady gent,°
"And Pupill fit for such a Tutours hand.
But what adventure, or what high intent
Hath brought you hither into Faery land,
Aread° Prince Arthur,° crowne of Martiall band?"
"Full hard it is," quoth he, "to read° aright
The course of heavenly cause, or understand
The secret meaning of th' eternall might,
That rules mens waiyes, and rules the thoughts of living wight.

"For whither he through fatall deepe foresight°
Me hither sent, for cause to me unghest,
Or that fresh bleeding wound, which day and night
Whilome° doth rancle in my riven brest,
With forced fury following his behest,°
Me hither brought by waiyes yet never found,
You to have helpt I hold my selfe yet blest."
"Ah curteous knight," quoth she, "what secret wound Could ever find,\textsuperscript{a} to grieve the gentlest hart on ground?"

'Deare Dame,' quoth he, "you sleeping sparkes awake,
Which troubled once, into huge flames will grow,
Ne ever will their fervent fury slake
Till living moysture into smoke do flow,
And wasted\textsuperscript{b} life do lye in ashes low.
Yet sithens\textsuperscript{c} silence lesseneth not my fire,
But told it flames, and hidden it does glow,
I will revele, what ye so much desire:
Ah Love, lay downe thy bow, the whiles I may respire.\textsuperscript{d}

"It was in freshest flowre of youthly yeares,
When courage first does creepe in manly chest,
Then first the coale of kindly\textsuperscript{e} heat appeares
To kindle love in every living brest;
But me had warnd old Timons wise behest,
Those creeping flames by reason to subdew,
Before their rage grew to so great unrest,
As miserable lovers use\textsuperscript{f} to rew,
Which still wex\textsuperscript{g} old in woe, whiles  woe still wexeth new.

"That idle name of love, and lovers life,
As\textsuperscript{h} losse of time, and vertues enmy
I ever scornd, and joyd to stirre up strife,
In middest of their mournfull Tragedy,
Ay wont to laugh, when them I heard to cry,
And blow the fire, which them to ashes brent:\textsuperscript{i}
Their God himselfe, grieved at my Iibertie,
Shot many a dart at me with fiers intent,
But I them warded all with wary government.\textsuperscript{j}

"But all in vaine: no fort can be so strong,
Ne fleshly brest can armed be so sound,
But will at last be wqnne with battrie\textsuperscript{k} long,
Or unawares at disavantage found;
Nothing is sure, that growes on earthly ground:
And who most trustes in arme of fleshly might,
And boasts, in beauties chaine not to be bound,
Doth soonest fall in disaventrous\textsuperscript{l} fight,
And yeeldes his caytive\textsuperscript{m} neck to victours most\textsuperscript{n} despight.

"Ensample make of him your haplesse joy,\textsuperscript{o}
And of my selfe now mated,\textsuperscript{p} as ye see;
Whose prouder\textsuperscript{q} vaunt that proud avenging boy
Did soone pluck downe, and curbd my libertie.
For on a day prickt\textsuperscript{r} forth with jollitie
\textsuperscript{1} I.e., self-control. The descriptions here of Cupid's archery and of the siege of the castle of chastity (in the next stanza) have many echoes from the courtly love tradition.
Of looser life, and heat of hardiment, too loose / boldness
Raunging the forest wide on courser free,
The fields, the floods, the heavens with one consent
Did seeme to laugh on me, and favour mine intent.

"For-weartied" with my sports, I did alight utterly wearied
From loftie steed, and downe to sleepe me layd;
The verdant gras my couch did goodly dight, green / make
And pillow was my helmet faire displayd;
Whiles every sence the humour sweet embayd, us
And slombring soft my hart did steale away,
Me seemed, by my side a royall Mayd Her daintie limbes full softly down did lay;
So faire a creature yet saw never sunny day.

"Most goodly glee" and lovely blandishment entertainment / compliment
She to me made, and bad me love her deare,
For dearely sure her love was to me bent,
As when just time expired should appeare.
But whether dreames delude, or true it were,
Was never hart so ravisht with delight,
Ne living man like words did ever heare,
And at her parting said, She Queene of Faeries hight.

"When I awoke, and found her place devoyd," empty
And nought but pressed gras, where she had lyen,
I sorrowed all so much, as earst I joyd,
And washed all her place with watry eyen.
From that day forth I loved that face divine; care-filled
From that day forth I cast in carefulP mind,
To seeke her out with labour, and long tyne," hardship
And never vowed to rest, till her I find.
Nine monethes I seeke in vaine yet ni'll will not
That vow unbind.

Thus as he spake, his visage wexed pale,
And chaunge of hew great passion did bewray;
Yet still he strove to cloke his inward bale," grief
And hide the smoke, that did his fire display,
Till gentle Una thus to him gan say;
"O happy Queene of Faeries, that hast found
Mongst many, one that with his prowesse may Defend thine honour, and thy foes confound:
True Loves are often sown, but seldom grow on ground."
O fairest virgin, full of heavenly light,
Whose wondrous faith, exceeding earthly race,
Was firmest fixt in mine extremest case.°
And you, my Lord, the Patrone° of my life,
Of that great Queene may well gaine worthy grace:
For onely worthy you through prowes priefe° demonstration of prowess
Yf living man mote° worthy be, to be her liefe."° may /love

So diversly discoursing of their loves,
The golden Sunne his glistring head gan shew,
And sad remembraunce now the Prince amoves,
With fresh desire his voyage to pursew:
Als° Una earnd° her traveill to renew.
Then those two knights, fast friendship for to bynd,
And love establish each to other trew,
Gave goodly gifts, the signes of gratefull mynd,
And eke as pledges firme, right hands together joynd.

Prince Arthur gave a boxe of Diamond sure,°
Embowed° with gold and gorgeous ornament,
Wherein were closd few drops of liquor pure,
Of wondrous worth, and vertue° excellent,
That any wound could heale incontinent:
Which to requite, the Redcrosse knight him gave
A booke, wherein his Saveours testament
Was writ with golden letters rich and brave;
A worke of wondrous grace, and able souLes to save.

Thus beene they parted, Arthur on his way
To seeke his love, and th' other for to fight
With Unas foe, that all her realme did pray.
But she now weighing the decayed plight,
And shrunken synewes of her chosen knight,
Would not a while her forward course pursew,
Ne bring him forth in face of dreadfull fight,
Till he recovered had his former hew:
For him to be yet weake and wearie well she knew.

So as they traveild, lo they gan espy
An armed knight towards them gallop fast,
That seemed from some feared foe to fly,
Or other griesly thing, that him agast.
Still° as he fled, his eye was backward cast,
As if his feare still followed him behind;
Als flew his steed, as he his bands had brast,
And with his winged heeles did tread the wind,
As he had beene a fole of Pegasus his kind.°

5. I.e., as if he had been a foal of a horse like Pegasus, the flying horse of classical mythology.
Nigh as he drew, they might perceive his head
To be unarm’d, and curld uncombed heares
Upstaring stiff, dismay’d with uncouth dread;
Nor drop of bloud in all his face appeares
Nor life in limbe: and to increase his feares,
In fowle reproch of knighthoods faire degree,
About his neck an hempen rope he weares,
That with his glistring armes does ill agree;
But he of rope or armes has now no memoree.

The Redcrosse knight toward him crossed fast,
To weet, what mister wight was so dismayd:
There him he finds all sencelesse and aghast,
That of him selfe he seemd to be afrayd;
Whom hardly he from flying forward stayd,
Till he these wordes to him deliver might;
"Sir knight, aread who hath ye thus arayd,
And eke from whom make ye this hasty flight:
For never knight I saw in such misseeming plight."
He answerd nought at all, but adding new Feare to his first amazment, staring wide
With stony eyes, and hartlesse hollow hew,
Astonisht stood, as one that had aspide
Infernall furies, with their chaines untide.
Him yet againe, and yet againe bespake
The gentle knight; who nought to him replide,
But trembling every joynt did inly quake,
And foltring tongue at last these words seemd forth to shake.

"For Gods deare love, Sir knight, do me not stay;
For loe he comes, he comes fast after mee."
Eft looking backe would faine have runne away;
But he him forst to stay, and tellen free
The secret cause of his perplexitie:
Yet nathemore by his bold hartie speach,
Could his bloud-frosen hart emboldned bee,
But through his boldnesse rather feare did reach,
Yet forst, at last he made through silence suddein breach
"And am I now in safetie sure," quoth he,
"From him, that would have forced me to dye?
And is the point of death now turnd fro mee,
That I may tell this haplesse history?"

"Then shall I you recount a ruefull cace," pitiable event
"For loe he comes, he comes fast after mee."
Eft looking backe would faine have runne away;
But he him forst to stay, and tellen free
The secret cause of his perplexitie:
Yet nathemore by his bold hartie speach,
Could his bloud-frosen hart emboldned bee,
But through his boldnesse rather feare did reach,
Yet forst, at last he made through silence suddein breach
"And am I now in safetie sure," quoth he,
"From him, that would have forced me to dye?
And is the point of death now turnd fro mee,
That I may tell this haplesse history?"

6. I.e., with blanched, bloodless countenance.
Said he, "the which with this unlucky eye
I late beheld, and had not greater grace
Me reft\(^\text{7}\) from it, had bene partaker of the place.\(^\text{7}\)

"I lately chaunst (Would I had never chaunst)
With a faire knight to keepen companee,
Sir Terwin\(^\text{8}\) hight,\(^\text{9}\) that well himselfe advaunst
In all affaires, and was both bold and free,
But not so happie as mote happie bee:
He loved, as was his lot, a Ladie gent,\(^\text{9}\)
That him again\(^\text{a}\) loved in the least degree:
For she was propd, and of too high intent,\(^\text{0}\)
And joyd to see her lover languish and lament.

"From whom returning sad and comfortlesse,\(^\text{0}\)
As on the way together we did fare,
We met that villen (God from him me blesse\(^\text{9}\))
That cursed wight, from whom I scapt whyleare,
A man of hell, that cals himselfe Despaire;\(^\text{9}\)
Who first us greets, and after faire areedes\(^\text{a}\)
Of tydings strange, and of adventures rare:
So creeping close, as Snake in hidden weedes,
Inquireth of our states, and of our knightly deedes.

"Which when he knew, and felt our feeble harts
Embost\(^\text{9}\) with bale,\(^\text{9}\) and bitter byting griefe,
Which love had launched\(^\text{b}\) with his deadly darts,
With wounding words and termes of foule repriefe\(^\text{b}\)
He pluckt from us all hope of due reliefe,
That earst\(^\text{c}\) us held in love of Iingring life;
Then hopelesse hartlesse, gan the cunning thiefe
Perswade us die, to stint\(^\text{d}\) all further strife:
To me he lent this rope, to him a rustie\(^\text{d}\) knife.

"With which sad instrument of hastie death,
That wofull lover, loathing Ienger\(^\text{e}\) light,
A wide way made to let forth living breath.
But I more fearefull, or more luckie wight,
Dismayd with that deformed dismall sight,
Fled fast away, halfe dead with dying feare;\(^\text{d}\)
Ne yet assur’d of life by you, Sir knight,
Whose like infirmitie like chaunce may beare:
But God you never let his charmed speeches heare.\(^\text{1}\)

"How may a man," said he, "with idle speach
Be wonne, to spoyle\(^\text{d}\) the Castle of his health?"
"I wote," quoth he, "whom trial late did teach,
That like would not for all this worldes wealth:
His subtil tongue, like dropping honny, mealt'h
Into the hart, and searcheth every vaine,
That ere one be aware, by secret stealth
His powre is reft, and weaknesse doth remaine.
O never Sir desire to try his guilefull traine." test I treachery

"Certes," said he, "hence shall I never rest,
Till I that treachours art have heard and tride;
And you Sir knight, whose name mote I request,
Of grace do me unto his cabin guide.'
"I that hight Trevisan," quoth he, "will ride
Against my liking backe, to doe you grace:
But nor for gold nor glee will I abide
By you, when ye arrive in that same place;
For lever had I die, then see his deadly face." rather/than

Ere long they come, where that same wicked wight
His dwelling has, low in an hollow cave,
Darke, dolefull, drearie, like a greedie grave,
That still for carrion carcases doth crave:
On top whereof dwelt the ghastly Owle,
Shrieldng his balefull note, which ever drave
Farre from that haunt all other chearefull fowle;
And all about it wandring ghostes did waile and howle.

And all about old stockes and stubs of trees,
Whereon nor fruit, nor leafe was ever seene,
Did hang upon the ragged rocky knees;
On which had many wretches hanged beene,
Whose carcases were scattered on the greene,
And throwne about the cliffs. Arrived there,
That bare-head knight for dread and dolefull teene;
Would faine have fled, ne durst approachen neare,
But th' other forst him stay, and comforted in feare.

That darkesome cave they enter, where they find
That cursed man, low sitting on the ground,
Musing full sadly in his sullein mind;
His griesie lockes, long growen, and unbound,
Disordred hong about his shoulders round,
And hid his face; through which his hollow eyne
Lookt deadly dull, and stared as astound;
His raw-bone cheekes through penurie and pine,
Were shronke into his jawes, as he did never dine.

2. I.e., would not do the like again.
3. The meaning is uncertain, but may be "flight" or "dread."
4. Beauty; i.e., not for anything in the world.
5. Traditionally a messenger of death.
His garment nought but many ragged clouts,
With thornes together pind and patched was,
The which his naked sides he wrapt abouts;
And him beside there lay upon the gras

All wallowd in his owne yet luke-warme blood,
That from his wound yet welled fresh alas;
In which a rustie knife fast fixed stood,
And made an open passage for the gushing flood

Which piteous spectacle, approving
The wofull tale that Trevisan had told,
When as the gentle Redcrosse knight did vew,
With firie zeale he burnt in courage bold,
Him to avenge, before his bloud were cold,

And to the vilein said, "Thou aged damned wight,
The author of this fact, we here behold,
What justice can but judge against thee right,
With thine owne bloud to price his bloud, here shed in sight?"

"What franticke fit," quoth he, "hath thus distraught
Thee, foolish man, so rash a doome to give?
What justice ever other judgement taught,
But he should die, who merites not to live?
None else to death this man despaying drive,
But his owne guiltie mind deserving death.

Is then unjust to each his due to give?
Or let him die, that loatheth living breath?
Or let him die at ease, that liveth here uneath?
"Who travels by the wearie wandring way,
To come unto his wished home in haste,
And meetes a flood, that doth his passage stay,
Is not great grace to helpe him over past,
Or free his feet, that in the myre sticke fast?
Most envious man, that grieves at neighbours good,
And fond, that joyest in the woe thou hast,

Why wilt not let him passe, that long hath stood
Upon the banke, yet wilt thy selfe not passe the flood?

"He there does now enjoy eternall rest
And happie ease, which thou doest want and crave,
And further from it daily wanderest:

What if some little paine the passage have,
That makes fraile flesh to feare the bitter wave?
Is not short paine well borne, that brings long ease,
And layes the soule to sleepe in quiet grave?
Sleepe after toyle, port after stormie seas,
Ease after warre, death after life does greatly please.\textsuperscript{6}

The knight much wondred at his suddeine wit,\textsuperscript{41} quick intelligence
And said, "The terme of life is limited,
Ne may a man prolong, nor shorten it;
The souldier may not move from watchfull sted,\textsuperscript{7}
"Who life did limit by almightie doome," Quoth he, "knowes best the termes established;
And he, that points the Centonell his roome,\textsuperscript{8} station
Doth license him depart at sound of morning droome.\textsuperscript{8}

"Is not his deed, what ever thing is donne,
In heaven and earth? did not he all create
To die againe? all ends that was begonne.
Their times in his eternall booke of fate
Are written sure, and have their certaine\textsuperscript{9} date. fixed
Who then can strive with strong necessitie,
That holds the world in his still chaunging state,
Or shunne the death ordaynd by destinie?
When houre of death is come, let none aske whence, nor why.

"The lenger\textsuperscript{9} life, I wote\textsuperscript{9} the greater sin,
The greater sin, the greater punishment:
All those great battels, which thou boasts to win,
Through strife, and bloud-shed, and avengement,
Now prayd, hereafter deare\textsuperscript{8} thou shalt repent:
For life must life, and bloud must bloud repay.\textsuperscript{9}
Is not enough thy evill life forespent?
For he, that once hath missed the right way,
The further he doth goe, the further he doth stray.

"Then do no further goe, no further stray,
But here lie downe, and to thy rest betake,
Th' ill to prevent, that life ensewen may.\textsuperscript{1}
For what hath life, that may it loved make,
And gives not rather cause it to forsake?
Feare, sicknesse, age, losse, labour, sorrow, strife,
Paine, hunger, cold, that makes the hart to quake;
And ever fickle fortune rageth rife,
Ail which, and thousands mo\textsuperscript{9} do make a loathsome life. more \textsuperscript{6} Despaire's arguments on behalf of suicide as against a painful life are derived, like those of Hamlet in his third soliloquy (\textit{Hamlet} 3.1.58-90), principally from Seneca, Marcus Aurelius, other ancient Stoics, and Old Testament statements on divine justice.

\textsuperscript{7} The sentry post assigned him.
\textsuperscript{8} Drum, with a pun on doom.
\textsuperscript{9} An echo of Genesis 9.6: "Whoso sheddeth man's blood, by man shall his blood be shed."
\textsuperscript{1} I.e., to prevent the evil that will ensue in the rest of your life.
"Thou wretched man, of death hast greatest need,
If in true balance thou wilt weigh thy state:
For never knight, that dared warlike deed,
More lucklesse disaventures did amate:°
Witnessse the dungeon deepe, wherein of late
Thy life shut up, for death so oft did call;
And though good lucke prolonged hath thy date,°
Yet death then, would the like mishaps forestall,
Into the which hereafter thou maiest happen fall.°

"Why then doest thou, O man of sin, desire
To draw thy dayes forth to their last degree?
Is not the measure of thy sinfull hire°
High heaped up with huge iniquitie,
Against the day of wrath,° to burden thee?
Is not enough that to this Ladie milde
Thou falsed° hast thy faith with perjurie,°
And sold thy selfe to serve Duessa vile°
With whom in all abuse thou hast thy selfe defilde?

"Is not he just, that all this doth behold
From highest heaven, and beares an equall° eye?
Shall he thy sins up in his knowledge fold,
And guiltie be of thine impietie?
Is not his law, Let every sinner die:
Die shall all flesh? what then must needs be donne,
Is it not better to doe willinglie,
Then linger, till the glasse° be all out ronne?
Death is the end of woes: die soon, O faeries sonne."

The knight was much enmoved with his speach,
That as a swords point through his hart did perse,
And in his conscience made a secret breach,°
Well knowing true all, that he did rehearse°
And to his fresh remembrance did reverse°
The ugly vew of his deformed crimes,
That all his manly powres it did disperse,
As he were charmed with inchaunted rimes,
That oftentimes he quakt, and fainted° oftentimes.

In which amazement, when the Miscreant°
Perceived him to waver weake and fraile,
Whiles trembling horror did his conscience dant,"°
And hellish anguish° did his soule assaile,
To drive him to despaire, and quite to quail,°
He shewed him painted in a table° plaine,

Despaire cites only half of the Scripture verse: "The wages of sin is death; but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord" (Romans 6.23).
The damned ghosts, that doe in torments waile,
And thousand feends that doe them endlesse paine
With fire and brimstone, which for ever shall remaine.

The sight whereof so throughly him dismayd,
That nought but death before his eyes he saw,
And ever burning wrath before him laid,
By righteous sentence of th' Almighties law:
Then gan the villein him to overcraw,
And brought unto him swords, ropes, poison, fire,
And all that might him to perdition draw;
And bad him choose, what death he would desire:
For death was due to him, that had provokt Gods ire.

But when as none of them he saw him take,
He to him raught a dagger sharpe and keene,
And gave it him in hand: his hand did quake,
And tremble like a leafe of Aspin greene,
And troubled bloud through his pale face was seene
To come, and goe with tydings from the hart,
As it a running messenger had beene.
At last resolved to worke his finall smart,
He lifted up his hand, that backe againe did start.

Which when as Una saw, through every vaine
The crudled cold ran to her well of life,
As in a sworne: but soone relived againe,
Out of his hand she snatcht the cursed knife,
And threw it to the ground, enraged rife,
And to him said, "Fie, fie, faint harted knight,
What meanest thou by this reprochfull strife?
Is this the battell, which thou vauntst to fight
With the fire-mouthed Dragon, horrible and bright?

Come, come away, fraile, feeble, fleshly wight,
Ne let vaine words bewitch thy manly hart,
Ne divelish thoughts dismay thy constant spright.
In heavenly mercies hast thou not a part?
Why shouldst thou then despeire, that chosen art?
Where justice growes, there grows eke greater grace,
And that accurst hand-writing doth deface
Arise, Sir knight arise, and leave this cursed place."

3. Cf. 2 Thessalonians 2.13: "God hath from the beginning chosen you to salvation through sanctification of the Spirit and belief of the truth." This is one of several similar passages in the epistles of St. Paul that form the basis of the theological doctrine of predestination.

4. An echo of Colossians 2.14: "Blotting out the handwriting of ordinances [i.e., the Old Testament Law] that was against us, which was contrary to us, and took it out of the way, nailing it to his cross."
So up he rose, and thence amounted straight.
Which when the carle beheld, and saw his guest
Would safe depart, for all his subtrill sleight,
He chose an halter from among the rest,
And with it hung himselfe, unbid unblest.
But death he could not worke himselfe thereby;
For thousand times he so himselfe had drest,
Yet nathelesse it could not doe him die,
Till he should die his last, that is eternally.

Canto 10

Her faithfull knight faire Una brings
To house of Holinesse,
Where he is taught repentance, and
The way to heavenly blesse.°

What man is he, that boasts of fleshly might,
And vaie assurance of mortality,°
Which all so soone, as it doth come to fight, Against spirituall foes, yeelds by and by,°
Or from the field most cowardly doth fly?
Ne let the man ascribe it to his skill,
That thorough grace hath gained victory.
If any strength we have, it is to ill,
But all the good is Gods, both power and eke° will.

By that, which lately hapned, Una saw,
That this her knight was feeble, and too faint;
And all his sinews woxen weake and raw,°
Through long enprisonment, and hard constraint,
Which he endured in his late restraint,
That yet he was unfit for bloudie fight:
Therefore to cherish him with diets daint,
She cast° to bring him, where he chearen° might,
Till he recovered had his° late decayed plight.

There was an auntient house not farre away,
Renowmd throughout the world for sacred lore,
And pure unspotted life: so well they say
It governd was, and guided evermore,
Through wisedome of a matrone grave and hore;°
Whose onely joy was to relieve the needes
Of wretched soules, and helpe the helpelesse pore:
All night she spent in bidding of her bedes,°
And all the day in doing good and godly deedes.

5. “For by grace are ye saved through faith; and that not of yourselves: it is the gift of God: Not of works, lest any man should boast” (Ephesians 2:8—9);
9) “it is God which worketh in you both to will and to do of his good pleasure” (Philippians 2:13).
Dame Caelia\textsuperscript{6} men did her call, as thought
From heaven to come, or thither to arise.

The mother of three daughters, well upbrought
In goodly thewes,\textsuperscript{6} and godly exercise;\textsuperscript{6}
The eldest two most sober, chast, and wise,
Fidelia and Speranza virgins were,
Though spousd, yet wanting\textsuperscript{6} wedlocks solemnize;
But faire Charissa to a lovely fere\textsuperscript{7} Was lincked, and by him had many pledges dere.\textsuperscript{6}

Arrived there, the dore they find fast lockt;
For it was warely watched night and day,
For feare of many foes: but when they knockt,
The Porter opened unto them streight way:
He was an aged syre, all hory gray,
With lookes full lowly cast, and gate\textsuperscript{8} full slow,
Wont\textsuperscript{8} on a staffe his feeble steps to stay,
Hight Humilta.\textsuperscript{8} They passe in stouping low;
For streight and narrow was the way, which he did show.

Each goodly thing is hardest to begin,
But entred in a spacious court they see,
Both plaine, and pleasant to be walked in,
Where them does meete a francklin\textsuperscript{4} faire and free,
And entertaines with comely courteous glee,
His name was Zele,\textsuperscript{9} that him right well became,
For in his speeches and behaviour hee
Did labour lively to expresse the same,
And gladly did them guide, till to the Hall they came.

There fairely them receives a gentle Squire,
Of milde demeanure, and rare courtesie,
Right cleanly clad in comely sad\textsuperscript{9} attire;
In word and deede that shewed great modestie,
And knew his good\textsuperscript{9} to all of each degree,
Hight Reverence. He them with speeches meet\textsuperscript{9} fitting
Does faire entreat; no courting nicetie,\textsuperscript{9}
But simple true, and eke unfaine sweet,
As might become a Squire so great persons to greet.

And afterwards them to his Dame he leades,
That aged Dame, the Ladie of the place:

\textsuperscript{6} I.e., many children. The daughters' names mean "faith," "hope," and "charity," cf. the three Saracens: Sansfoy, Sansjoy, and Sansloy. This canto draws heavily on scriptural references, especially 1 Corinthians 13.13: "And nowabideth faith, hope, charity, these three; but the greatest of these is charity." Many aspects of the House of Holiness oppose their counterparts in the House of Pride

\textsuperscript{7} Alluding to Matthew 7.13-14: see the note to stanza 10 below.

\textsuperscript{8} Freeholder, landowner.

\textsuperscript{9} He treats them courteously ("faire"); no courtly affectation ("nicetie").
Who all this while was busie at her beades:
Which doen, she up arose with seemely grace,
And toward them full matronely did pace.
Where when that fairest Una she beheld,
Whom well she knew to spring from heavenly race,
Her hart with joy unwonted inly sweld,°
As feeling wondrous comfort in her weaker eld.°

And her embracing said, "O happie earth,
Whereon thy innocent feet doe ever tred,
Most vertuous virgin borne of heavenly berth,
That to redeeme thy woefull parents head,
From tyrans rage, and ever-dying dread,°
Hast wandred through the world now long a day°
Yet ceasest not thy wearie soles to lead,
What grace hath thee now hither brought this way?
Or doen thy feeble feet unwittingly hither stray?

Strange thing it is an errant knight to see
Here in this place, or any other wight,
That hither turnes his steps. So few there bee,
That chose the narrow path, or seeke the right:
All keepe the broad high way, and take delight
With many rather for to go astray,
And be partakers of their evill plight,
Then with a few to walke the rightest way;°

O foolish men, why haste ye to your owne decay?

"Thy selfe to see, and tyred limbs to rest,
O matrone sage," quoth she, "I hither came,
And this good knight his way with me addrest,°
Led with thy prayses and broad-blazed fame,
That up to heaven is blowne."° The auncient Dame
Him goodly greeted in her modest guise,
And entertaynd them both, as best became,
With all the court'sies,° that she could devise,
Ne wanted ought,° to shew her bounteous or wise.

Thus as they gan of sundry things devise,°
Loe two most goodly virgins came in place,
Ylinked arme in arme in lovely wise,°
With countenance demure, and modest grace,
They numbred even steps and equall pace:
Of which the eldest, that Fidelia hight,

1. Like a matron, i.e., a woman in charge of an establishment.
2. An echo of Matthew 7.13—14: "Broad is the way that leadeth to destruction, and many there be which go in thereat: . . . strait is the gate and narrow is the way, which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it."
3. I.e., your praises and fame are widely celebrated ("blazed"), reaching ("blowne") up to heaven.
Like sunny beames threw from her Christall face,
That could have dazled° the rash beholders sight,
And round about her head did shine like heavens light.

She was arrayed all in lilly white,
And in her right hand bore a cup of gold,
With wine and water fild up to the hight,
In which a Serpent did himselfe enfold,
That horrour made to all, that did behold;
But she no whit did chaunge her constant mood:°
And in her other hand she fast did hold
A booke, that was both sign'd and seald with blood,
Wherein darke° things were writ, hard to be understood.°

Her younger sister, that Speranza hight,
Was clad in blew, that her beseemed well;
Not all so chearefull seemed she of sight,°
As was her sister; whether dread did dwell,
Or anguish in her hart, is hard to tell:
Upon her arme a silver anchor lay,
Whereon she leaned ever, as befell;°
And ever up to heaven, as she did pray,
Her stedfast eyes were bent, ne swarved other way.

They seeing Una, towards her gan wend,°
Who them encounters with like courtesie;
Many kind speeches they betwene them spend,
And greatly joy each other well to see:
Then to the knight with shamefast° modestie
They turne themselves, at Unas meke request,
And him salute with well beseeming glee;
Who faire them quites,° as him beseemed best,
And goodly gan discourse of many a noble gest.°

Then Una thus; "But she your sister deare,
The deare Charissa where is she become'?
Or wants she health, or busie is elsewhere?°
"Ah no," said they, "but forth she may not come:
For she of late is lightned of her wombe,
And hath encreast the world with one sonne more,
That her to see should be but troublesome.'
"Indeede," quoth she, "that should her trouble sore,
But thankt be God, that her encrease so evermore.'

4. The cup of wine and water signifies the sacrament of Communion; the serpent is a symbol of the crucified Christ (of whom the serpent lifted up by Moses, Numbers 21.9, is a recognized "type" or prefiguration).
5. The New Testament. See 2 Peter 3.16: "in which [i.e., in the epistles of the apostle Paul] are some things hard to be understood."
6. The iconographic symbol of hope.
7. Charity, the fruitful virtue, is often depicted as a mother with many children.
8. I.e., God be thanked, who continually increases her thus.
Then said the aged Caelia, "Deare dame, And you good Sir, I wote° that of your toyle, And labours long, through which ye hither came, Ye both forwearied° be: therefore a whyle I read° you rest, and to your bowres recoyle.° Then called she a Groome, that forth him led Into a goodly lodge, and gan despoile° Of puissant armes, and laid in easie bed; His name was meeke Obedience rightfully ared.°

Now when their wearie limbes with kindly° rest, And bodies were refresht with due repast,° Faire Una gan Fidelia faire request, To have her knight into her schoolehouse plaste, That of her heavenly learning he might taste, And heare the wisedome of her words divine. She graunted, and that knight so much agraste,° That she him taught celestiall discipline,° And opened his dull eyes, that light mote in them shine.

And that her sacred Booke, with bloud° ywrit, i.e., the blood of Christ That none could read, except she did them teach, She unto him disclosed every whit, And heavenly documents° thereout did preach, That weaker wit of man could never reach, Of God, of grace, of justice, of free will, That wonder was to heare her goodly speach: For she was able, with her words to kill, And raise againe to life the hart, that she did thrill.°

And when she list° poure out her larger spright,° She would commaund the hastie Sunne to stay, Or backward turne his course from heavens hight; Sometimes great hostes of men she could dismay, Dry-shod to passe, she parts the flouds in tway; And eke huge mountaines from their native seat She would commaund, themselves to beare away, And throw in raging sea with roaring threat. Almighty God her gave such powre, and puissance great.°

The faithfull knight now grew in litle space,° By hearing her, and by her sisters lore, To such perfection of all heavenly grace, That wretched world he gan for to abhore,°

9. Retire to your rooms.
1. Joshua made the sun stand still (Joshua 10.12); Hezekiah made it turn backward (2 Kings 20.10); with 300 men Gideon was victorious over the Midianite hosts (Judges 7.7); Moses led the Israelites through the parted waters of the Red Sea (Exodus 14.21—31); faith, said Christ, can move mountains (Matthew 21.21). All these are miracles of faith.
2. I.e., he began to abhor the world.
And mortall life gan loath, as thing forelore,
Greeved with remembrance of his wicked wayes,
And prickt with anguish of his sinnes so sore,
That he desird to end his wretched dayes:
So much the dart of sinfull guilt the soule dismayes.

But wise Speranza gave him comfort sweet,
And taught him how to take assured hold
Upon her silver anchor, as was meet;
Else had his sinnes so great, and manifold
Made him forget all that Fidelia told.

In this distressed doubtfull agonie,
When him his dearest Una did behold,
Disdeining life, desiring leave to die,
She found her selfe assayld with great perplexitie.

In that disease of grieved conscience,
And well could cure the same; His name was Patience.
Who comming to that soule-diseased knight,
Could hardly him intreat, to tell his griefe:
Which knowne, and all that noyd his heavie spright
Well searcht, he gan apply reliefe
Of salves and med'cines, which had passing priefe,
And thereto added words of wondrous might:
By which to ease he him recured briefe,
And much asswaged the passion of his plight,
That he his paine endured, as seeming now more light.

But yet the cause and root of all his ill,
Inward corruption, and infected sin,
Not purged nor heald, behind remained still,
And festring sore did rankle yet within,
Close creeping twixt the marrow and the skin.
Which to extirpe, he laid him privily
Downe in a darkesome lowly place farre in,
Whereas he meant his corrosives to apply,
And with strict diet tame his stubborne malady.

In ashes and sackcloth he did array
His daintie corse, proud humors to abate,
And dieted with fasting every day,
The swelling of his wounds to mitigate,
And made him pray both earely and eke late:
And ever as superfluous flesh did rot
Amendment readie still at hand did wayt,
To pluck it out with pincers firie whot,°
That soon in him was left no one corrupted jot.

And bitter Penance with an yron whip,
Was wont him once to disple° every day:
And sharpe Remorse his hart did pricke and nip,
That drops of bloud thence like a well did play;
And sad Repentance used to embay°
His bodie in salt water smarting sore,
The filthy blots of sinne to wash away.°
So in short space they did to health restore
The man that would not live, but earst° lay at deathes dore

In which his torment often was so great,
That like a Lyon he would cry and rore,
And rend his flesh, and his owne synewes eat.
His own deare Una hearing evermore
His ruefull shrieks and gronings, often tore
Her guiltlesse garments, and her golden heare,
For pitty of his paine and anguish sore;
Yet all with patience wisely she did beare;
For well she wist, his crime could else be never cleare.°
Whom thus recovered by wise Patience,
And trew Repentance they to Una brought:
Who joyous of his cured conscience,
Him dearely kist, and fairely eke besought
Himselfe to cherish,° and consuming thought
To put away out of his carefuIP brest.
By this° Charissa, late° in child-bed brought,
Was woxen strong, and left her fruitfull nest;
To her faire Una brought this unacquainted guest
She was a woman in her freshest age,
Of wondrous beauty, and of bountie° rare,
With goodly grace and comely personage,°
That was on earth not easie to compare;°
Full of great love, but Cupids wanton snare
As hell she hated, chast in worke and will;
Her necke and breasts were ever open bare,
That ay thereof her babes might sucke their fill;

The rest was all in yellow robes arrayed still.
always

A multitude of babes about her hong,
Playing their sports, that joyd her to behold,
Whom she fed, whiles they were weake and young,
But thrust them forth still, as they wexed old:
i.e., weaned them

And on her head she wore a tyre of gold, headress
Adorned with gemmes and owches wondrous faire, jouries
Whose passing price unath was to be told;
surpassing / scarcely
And by her side there sate a gentle pair
Of turtle doves,
8 she sitting in an yvorie chaire.

The knight and Una entring, faire her greet,
And bid her joy of that her happen brood;
appropriate
Who them requites with court'sies seeming meet,
And entertaines with friendly chearefull mood.
Then Una her besought, to be so good,
As in her vertuous rules to schoole her knight,
Now after all his torment well withstood,
In that sad house of Penaunce, where his spright
Had past the paines of hell, and long enduring night

She was right joyous of her just request,
And taking by the hand that Faeries sonne,
Gan him instruct in every good behest,
i.e., command
Of love, and righteousness, and well to donne, i.e., right action
And wrath, and hatred warily to shonne,
That drew on men Gods hatred, and his wrath,
And many soules in dolours had fordonne:
In which when him she well instructed hath,
From thence to heaven she teacheth him the ready path.

Wherein his weaker wandring steps to guide,
An auncient matrone she to her does call,
Whose sober looks her wisedome well descride:
Her name was Mercie, well knowne over all,
To be both gratious, and eke Iiberall:
To whom the carefull charge of him she gave,
To lead aright, that he should never fall
That Mercy in the end his righteous soule might save
In all his wayes through this wide worldes wave,

The godly Matrone by the hand him beares
Forth from her presence, by a narrow way, leads
i.e., Charissa's

7. Her yellow (saffron) robe is the color of marriage, fertility, and maternity. Her chaste, fruitful love (Christian agape) is opposed to "Cupid's wan-snare" (eros).
8. Emblem of true love and faithful marriage.
Scattered with bushy thornes, and ragged breares,\(^6\)
Which still before him she removed away,
That nothing might his ready passage stay:
And ever when his feet encombred were,
Or gan to shrinke, or from the right to stray,
She held him fast, and firmly did upbeare,
As carefull Nourse her child from falling oft does reare.

Eftsoones unto an holy Hospitall,\(^9\)
That was fore\(^6\) by the way, she did him bring,
In which seven Bead-men\(^7\) that had vowed all
Their life to service of high heavens king
Did spend their dayes in doing godly thing:
Their gates to all were open evermore,
That by the wearie way were traveiling,
And one sate wayting ever them before,
To call in commers-by, that needy were and pore.\(^9\)

The first of them that eldest was, and best,\(^6\)
Of all the house had charge and governement,
As Guardian and Steward of the rest:
And lodging, unto all that came, and went:
Not unto such, as could him feast againe,\(^9\)
And double quite,\(^9\) for that he on them spent,
But such, as want of harbour\(^9\) did constraine:
Those for Gods sake his dewty was to entertaine.

The second was as Almner\(^1\) of the place,
His office was, the hungry for to feed,
And thristy give to drinke, a worke of grace:
The grace of God he layd up still in store,
Which as a stocke\(^9\) he left unto his seede;\(^9\)
He had enough, what need him care for more?
And had he lesse, yet some he would give to the pore

The third had of their wardrobe custodie,
In which were not rich tyres,\(^8\) nor garments gay,
The plumes of pride, and wings of vanitie,
But clothes meet to keepe keene could\(^9\) away,
And naked nature seemely\(^9\) to aray;
With which bare wretched wights he dayly clad,
The images of God in earthly clay;
And if that no spare clothes to give he had,
His owne coate he would cut, and it distribute glad.

\(^6\) I.e., one beadsman sat in front of the gates, to call in needy wayfarers.
\(^7\) An almoner distributed charity (alms) to the poor.
The fourth appointed by his office was,
Poore prisoners to relieve with gracios ayd,
And captives to redeeme with price of bras,
From Turkes and Sarazins, which them had stayd;
And though they faultie were, yet well he wayd,
That God to us forgiveth every howre
Much more then that, why they in bands were laid,
And he that harrowd hell with heavie stowre,
The faultie soules from thence brought to his heavenly bowre.

The fift had charge sicke persons to attend,
And comfort those, in point of death which lay;
For them most needeth comfort in the end,
When sin, and hell, and death do most dismay
The feeble soule departing hence away.
All is but lost, that living we bestow,
If not well ended at our dying day.
O man have mind of that last bitter throw;
For as the tree does fall, so lyes it ever low.
The sixth had charge of them now being dead,
In seemely sort their corses to engrave,
And deck with dainty flowres their bridall bed,
That to their heavenly spouse both sweet and brave
They might appeare, when he their soules shall save.
The wondrous workemanship of Gods owne mould,
Whose face he made, all beasts to feare, and gave
All in his hand, even dead we honour should.
Ah dearest God me graunt, I dead be not defould.
The seventh now after death and buriall done,
Had charge the tender Orphans of the dead
And widowe syd, lest they should be undone:
In face of judgement his right would plead,
Ne ough he the powre of mighty men did dread
In their defence, nor would for gold or fee
Be wonne their rightfull causes downe to tread:
And when they stood in most necessitee,
He did supply their want, and gave them ever free.

There when the Elfin knight arrived was,
The first and chiefest of the seven, whose care

2. Christ, who journeyed to hell to deliver those good people who lived before his time, according to a story popular in the Middle Ages. It originated in the apocryphal gospel of Nicodemus (cf. Piers Plowman, Passus 1B).
3. "In the place where the tree falleth, there it shall be" (Ecclesiastes 11.3).
4. The human body is God's own image ("mould") and a "mould" of God's making (see Genesis 1.26-30, 2.7).
5. Always freely. The seven beadsmen here correspond to, and perform, the seven works of charity, or corporal mercy: lodging the homeless, feeding the hungry, clothing the naked, redeeming the captive, comforting the sick, burying the dead, and succoring the orphan.
Was guests to welcome, towards him did pass:
Where seeing Mercie, that his steps up bare,
And always led, to her with reverence bare
He humbly louted in meek lowliness,
And seemely welcome for her did prepare:
For of their order she was Patronesse,
Albe' Charissa were their chiefest founderesse.

There she awhile him stayes, him selfe to rest,
That to the rest more able he might bee:
During which time, in everie good behest
And godly worke of Almes and charitee
She him instructed with great industree;
Shortly therein so perfect he became,
That from the first unto the last degree,
His mortall life he learned had to frame
In holy righteousnesse, without rebuke or blame.

Thence forward by that painfull way they pas,
Forth to an hill, that was both steepe and hy;
On top whereof a sacred chappell was,
And eke a little Hermitage thereby,
Wherein an aged holy man did lye,
That day and night said his devotion,
Ne other worldly busines did apply;
His name was heavenly Contemplation;
Of God and goodnesse was his meditation.

Great grace that old man to him given had;
For God he often saw from heavens hight,
All were his earthly eyen both blunt and bad,
And through great age had lost their kindly sight,
Yet wondrous quick and persant was his spright,
As Eagles eye, that can behold the Sunne:
That hill they scale with all their powre and might,
That his frayle thighes nigh wearie and fordonne
Gan faile, but by her helpe the top at last he wonne.

There they do finde that godly aged Sire,
With snowy lockes adowne his shoulders shed,
As hoarie frost with spangles doth attire
The mossy braunches of an Oke halfe ded.
Each bone might through his body well be red,
And every sinew seen through his long fast:
For nought he cared his carcass long unfed;
His mind was full of spirituall repast,
And pyned his flesh, to keepe his body low and chast.

6. I.e., he did not attend to any worldly activities.
Who when these two approching he aspide,
At their first presence grew agrieved sore;
That forst him lay his heavenly thoughts aside;
And had he not that Dame respected more,
Whom highly he did reverence and adore,
He would not once have moved for the knight.
They him saluted standing far afore;
Who well them greeting, humbly did requight,
And asked, to what end they clomb that tedious height.

"What end," quoth she, "should cause us take such paine,
But that same end, which every living wight
Should make his marke," high heaven to attaine?
Is not from hence the way, that leadeth right
To that most glorious house, that glistreth bright
With burning starres, and everliving fire,
Whereof the keyes are to thy hand entrusted
By wise Fidelia? she doth thee require,
To shew it to this knight, according his desire."

"Thrice happy man," said then the father grave,
"Whose staggering steps thy steady hand doth lead,
And shewes the way, his sinfull soule to save.
Who better can the way to heaven aread
Then thou thy selfe, that was both borne and bred
In heavenly throne, where thousand Angels shine?
Thou dost the prayers of the righteous seed
Present before the majestie divine,
And his avenging wrath to clemencie incline.

"Yet since thou bidst, thy pleasure shalbe donne.
Then come thou man of earth, and see the way,
That never yet was seene of Faeries sonne,
That never leads the traveller astray,
But after labours long, and sad delay,
Brings them to joyous rest and endless blis.
But first thou must a season fast and pray,
Till from her bands the spright assoiled is,
And have her strength recured from fraile infirmitis."

That done, he leads him to the highest Mount;
Such one, as that same mighty man of God,
That bloud-red billowes like a walled front
On either side disparted with his rod,
Till that his army dry-foot through them yod,"

I.e., he was at first sorely grieved at their arrival.
An allusion to humankind's formation from the dust of the earth (Genesis 2.7) and also to the knight's name (see below, stanza 66 and note 1).
Dwelt forty days upon; where writ in stone
With bloody letters by the hand of God,
The bitter doom of death and balefull mone
He did receive, whiles flashing fire about him shone.

Or like that sacred hill, whose head full hie,
Adorn'd with fruitfull Olives all around,
Is, as it were for endless memory
Of that dear Lord, who oft thereon was found,
For ever with a flowring garland crownd:
Or like that pleasant Mount, that is for ay
Through famous Poets verse each where renown'd,
On which the thrice three learned Ladies play
Their heavenly notes, and make full many a lovely lay.

From thence, far off he unto him did shew
A little path, that was both steepe and long,
Which to a goodly city led his view;
Whose walls and towers were builded high and strong
Of perle and precious stone, that earthly tongue
Cannot describe, nor wit of man can tell;
Too high a ditty for my simple song;
The city of the great king it well,
Everywhere renown'd,
Whose walls and towers were built so high extend
Her lofty towers unto the starry sphere,
And what unknown nation there empeopled were.

"Faire knight," quoth he, "Hierusalem that is,
The new Hierusalem, that God has built
For those to dwell in, that are chosen his,
His chosen people purged from sinfull guilt,
With precious blood, which cruelly was spilt
On cursed tree, of that unspotted lam.
That for the sinnes of all the world was kilt:

9. I.e., the Ten Commandments ("bloody letters") carried with them the judgment ("doome") of death and pain (causing sorrowful moans—"bale-full mone").
1. The mountain is successively compared to Mount Sinai, where Moses, after parting the "blood-red billowes" of the Red Sea, received the tables of the Ten Commandments; to the Mount of Olives, associated with Christ; and to Mount Parnassus, where the Nine Muses of art and poetry dwell.
2. Cf. Jacob's ladder, which "reached to heaven; and behold the angels of God ascending and descending on it" (Genesis 28.12).
3. Christ (the lamb of God), whose death on the cross ("cursed tree") purged the guilt of sin from those "chosen his."
THE FAERIE QUEENE, BOOK 1, CANTO 1

Now are they Saints all in that Citie sam,
More deare unto their God, then younglings to their dam."

'Till now,' said then the knight, 'I weened well,
That great Cleopolis, where I have beene,
In which that fairest Faerie Queene doth dwell,
The fairest Citie was, that might be seene;
And that bright towre all built of chrestall cleene,
Panthea, seemed the brightest thing, that was:
But now by proofe all otherwise I weene;
For this great Citie that does far surpas,
And this bright Angels towre quite dims that towre of glas.'

'Most trew,' then said the holy aged man;
Yet is Cleopolis for earthly frame,
The fairest peece, that eye beholden can:
And well beseeses all knights of noble name,
That covet in th' immortall booke of fame
To be eternized, that same to haunt,
And doen their service to that soveraigne Dame,
That glorie does to them for guerdon saunt:
For she is heavenly borne, and heaven may justly vaunt.

'And thou faire ymp, sprung out from English race,
How ever now accompted Elfins sonne,
Well worthy doest thy service for her grace,
To side a virgin desolate foredone.
But when thou famous victorie hast wonne,
Thenceforth the suit of earthly conquest shonne,
And wash thy hands from guilt of blody field:
For bloud can nought but sin, and wars but sorrowes yield.

'Then seeke this path, that I to thee presage,
Which after all to heaven shall thee send;
Then peaceably thy paineful pilgrimage
To yonder same Hierusalem do bend.
Where is for thee ordaind a blessed end:
For thou emongst those Saints, whom thou dost see,
Shalt be a Saint, and thine owne nations frend
And Patrone: thou Saint George shalt called bee,
Saint George of mery England, the signe of victoree.'

4. The New Jerusalem is described in Revelation 21—22, 'the nations of them which are saved shall walk in the light of it' (21:24).
5. 'City of Fame'; in the historical allegory, London or Westminster.
6. Reminiscent of the temple of glass in Chaucer's House of Fame; perhaps intended to allude to Westminster Abbey as pantheon of the English great.
7. I.e., The New Jerusalem far surpasses Cleopolis.
8. I.e., may justly boast (vaunt) that heaven is her home.
"Unworthy wretch," quoth he, "of so great grace,
How dare I thinke such glory to attaine?"
"These that have it attaing, were in like case," Quoth he, "as wretched, and lived in like paine."
"But deeds of armes must I at last be faine," content (to leave)
And Ladies love to leave so dearely bought?"
"What need of armes, where peace doth ay ever remaine,"
Said he, "and battailes none are to be fought?
As for loose° loves are° vaine, and vanish into nought." wanton / i.e., they are

"O let me not," quoth he, "then turne againe
Backe to the world, whose joyes so fruitlesse are
Or straignt way on that last long voyage fare,
That nothing may my present hope empare."°
"That may not be," said he, "ne maist thou yit Forgo that royall maides bequeathed care,"
Who did her cause into thy hand commit,
Till from her cursed foe thou have her freely quit.'

"Then shall I soone," quoth he, "so God me grace,
Abet° that virgins cause disconsolate,
But now aread,° old father, why of late
Didst thou behight° me borne of English blood, Whom all a Faeries sonne doen nominate?"°
"That word shall I," said he, "avouchen° good,
Sith° to thee is unknowne the cradle of thy brood.

"For well I wote," thou springst from ancient race
Of Saxon kings, that have with mightie hand
And many bloudie battailes fought in place°
High reard their royall throne in Britane land,
And vanquisht them,° unable to withstand:
From thence a Faerie thee unweeting reft,°
There as thou slept in tender swadling band,
And her base Elfin brood there for thee left.

Such men do Chaungelings call, so chaungd by Faeries theft.

'Thenche she thee brought into this Faerie lond,
And in an heaped furrow did thee hyde,
Where thee a Ploughman all unweeting° fond,
As he his toylesome teme° that way did guyde,
And brought thee up in ploughmans state to byde,
Whereof Georgos he thee gave to name:°
Till prickt° with courage, and thy forces pryde,

I. I.e., as a name. Georgos is Greek for "farmer" (cf. Virgil's Georgics, on farming).
To Faery court thou cam'st to seeke for fame,
And prove thy puissant° armes, as seemes thee best became."

595 'O holy Sire," quoth he, "how shall I quight°
The many favours I with thee have found,
That hast my name and nation red° aright,
And taught the way that does to heaven bound?
This said, adowne he looked to the ground,
To have returnd, but dazed° were his eyne,
Through passing° brightnesse, which did quite confound
His feeble sence, and too exceeding shyne.
So darke are earthly things compard to things divine.

600 At last whenas himselfe he gan to find,°
To Una back he cast him to retire;
Who him awaited still with pensive° mind.
Great thankes and goodly meed° to that good syre,
He thence departing gave for his paines hyre.°
So came to Una, who him joyd to see,
And after litle rest, gan him desire,
Of her adventure mindfull for to bee.
So leave they take of Caelia, and her daughters three

Canto 11

The knight with that old Dragon fights
two dayes incessantly:
The third him overthrowes, and gayns
most glorious victoiy.

High time now gan it wex° for Una faire,
To thinke of those her captive Parents deare,
And their forwasted kingdome to repaier.°
Where to whenas they now approached neare,
With hartie° words her knight she gan to cheare,
And in her modest manner thus bespake;
"Deare knight, as deare, as ever knight was deare,
That all these sorrowes suffer for my sake,
High heaven behold the tedious toyle, ye for me take.

*Now are we come unto my native soyle,
And to the place, where all our perils dwell;
Here haunts that feend, and does his dayly spoyle,
Therefore henceforth be at your keeping well,"°
And ever ready for your foeman fell.
The sparke of noble courage now awake,
And strive your excellent selfe to excell;

2. i.e., to restore their kingdom, laid waste (by the dragon).
That shall ye evermore renowned make,
Above all knights on earth, that battell undertake.'

And pointing forth, 'lo yonder is,' said she,

The brassen towre in which my parents deare
For dread of that huge feend emprisond be,
Whom I from far see on the walles appeare,
Whose sight my feeble soule doth greatly cheare:
And on the top of all I do espye
The watchman wayting tydings glad to heare,
ThatO my parents might I happily
Unto you bring, to ease you of your misery.°

With that they heard a roaring hideous sound,
That all the ayre with terrour filled wide,
And seemd uneath to shake the stedfast ground.
Almost that dreadfull Dragon they espide,
Where stretcht he lay upon the sunny side
Of a great hill, himselfe like a great hill.
But all so soone, as he from far descride
Those glistring armes, that heaven with light did fill,
He rousd himselfe full blith,° and hastned them untill.°

Then bad° the knight his Lady yede aloofe,
And to an hill her selfe withdraw aside,
From whence she might behold that battailles prooP
And eke° be safe from daunger far descryde:°
She him obayd, and turnd a little wyde.
Now O thou sacred Muse, most learned Dame,
The Nourse of time, and everlasting fame,
That warlike hands ennoblest with immortall name;

O gently come into my feeble brest,
Come gently, but not with that mighty rage,
Wherewith the martiall troupes thou doest infest,
And harts of great Heroes doest enrage,
That nought their kindled courage may aswage,
Soone as thy dreadfull trompe° begins to sownd;
The God of warre with his fiers equipage
Thou doest awake, sleepe never he so sownd,"°
And scared nations doest with honour sterne astown.°

Faire Goddesse lay that furious fit° aside,
Till I of warres and bloudy Mars do sing°
And Briton fields with Sarazin° bloud bedyde,°
Twixt that great faery Queene and Paynim° king,
That with their horribleness heaven and earth did ring,
A worke of labour long, and endless praise:
But now a while let downe that haughtie string,
And to my tunes thy second tenor rayse,
That I this man of God his godly armes may blaze.

By this the dreadful Beast drew nigh to hand,
Halfe flying, and halfe footing in his hast,
That with his largenesse measured much land,
And made wide shadow under his huge wast;
As mountaine doth the valley overcast.
Approaching nigh, he reared high afore
His body monstrous, horrible, and vast,
Which to increase his wondrous greatness more,
Was swolne with wrath, and poysen, and with bloody gore
And over, all with brasen scales was arm'd,
Like plated coate of Steele, so couched neare,
That nought mote perce, ne might his corse be harm'd
With dint of sword, nor push of pointed speare;
Which as an Eagle, seeing pray appeare,
His aery Plumes doth rouze, full rudely dight,
So shaked he, that horrour was to heare,
For as the clashing of an Armour bright,
Such noyse his rouzed scales did send unto the knight.

His flaggy wings when forth he did display,
Were like two sayles, in which the hollow wynd
Is gathered full, and worketh speedy way:
And eke the pennes, that did his pineons bynd,
Were like mayne-yards, with flying canvas lynd,
With which whenas him list the ayre to beat,
And there by force unwonted passage find,
The cloudes before him fled for terror great,
And all the heavens stood still amazed with his threat
His huge long tayle wound up in hundred foldes,
Does overspred his long bras-scaly backe,
Whose wreathef boughts when ever he unfoldes,
And thicke entangled knots adown does slacke,
Bespotted as with shields of red and blacke,
It sweepeth all the land behind him farre,
And of three furlongs does but little lacke;
And at the point two stings in-fixed arre,
Both deadly sharpe, that sharpest Steele exceeden farre.

5. The "haughtie" (high-pitched) mode would be appropriate to a large-scale epic war; the "second tenor" (lower in pitch) to this present battle.
7. I.e., the ribs of his wings were like the massive spars (main yards) to which a ship's mainsail is affixed.
But stings and sharpest Steele did far exceed\textsuperscript{10} i.e., were far exceeded by
The sharpenesse of his cruell rending clawes;
Dead was it sure, as sure as death in deed,\textsuperscript{0} in its effect
What ever thing does touch his ravenous pawes,
Or what within his reach he ever drawes.

But his most hideous head my toung to tell
Does tremble: for his deepe devouring jawes
Wide gaped, like the griesly\textsuperscript{15} mouth of hell,\, horrid
Through which into his darke abisse all ravin\textsuperscript{0} fell.\, pre\textsuperscript{0}y;\, booty

And that\textsuperscript{15} more wondrous was, in either jaw
Three ranckes of yron teeth enraunged were,
In which yet trickling bloud and gobbets raw\textsuperscript{20} chunks of unswallowed food
Of late\textsuperscript{0} devoured bodies did appeare,
That sight thereof bred cold congealed feare:
Which to increase, and all at once to kill,
Out of his stinking gorge\textsuperscript{15} forth steemed still,\, maw
That all the ayre about with smoke and stench did fill.

His blazing eyes, like two bright shining shields,
Did burne with wrath, and sparkled living fyre;
As two broad Beacons, set in open fields,
Send forth their flames farre off to every shyre,\textsuperscript{0} shire
And warning give, that enemies conspyre,
With fire and sword the region to invade;
So flamed his eyne\textsuperscript{15} with rage and rancorous yre:\, eyes/ire, anger
But farre within, as in a hollow glade,
Those glaring lampes were set, that made a dreadfull shade.

So dreadfully he towards him did pas,
Forelifting up aloft his speckled brest,
As for great joyance of his newcome guest.
Eftsoones he gan advance his haughtie crest,
As chauffed\textsuperscript{30} Bore his bristles doth upreare,
And shoke his scales to battell readie drest;\textsuperscript{0} prepared
That made the Redcrosse knight nigh quake for feare,
As bidding bold defiance to his foeman neare.

The knight gan fairely couch\textsuperscript{35} his steadie speare,
And fiercely ran at him with rigorous\textsuperscript{0} might:
The pointed Steele arriving rudely\textsuperscript{0} theare,
His harder hide would neither perce, nor bight,
But glaucing by forth passed forward right;
Yet sore amoved with so puissant push,
The wrathfull beast about him turned light,\textsuperscript{0} quickly
And him so rudely passing by, did brush
With his long tayle, that horse and man to ground did rush
Both horse and man up lightly rose againe,
And fresh encounter towards him addrest:
But th' idle stroke yet backe recoyled in vaine,
And found no place his deadly point to rest.
Exceeding rage enflamed the furious beast,
To be avenged of so great despight,
For never felt his imperceable brest
So wondrous force, from hand of living wight;
Yet had he proved its powre of many a puissant knight.

Then with his waving wings displayed wyde,
Himselfe up high he lifted from the ground,
And with strong flight did forcibly divide
The yielding aire, which nigh too feeble found
Her flitting partes, and element unsound,
To beare so great a weight: he cutting way
With his broad sayles, about him soared round:
At last low stouping with unweldie sway,
Snatcht up both horse and man, to beare them quite away.

Long he them bore above the subject plaine,
So farre as Ewghen bow a shaft may send,
Till struggling strong did him at last constraine,
To let them downe before his flightes end:
As hagard hauke presuming to contend
With hardie fowle, above his hable might,
His wearie pounces all in vaine doth spend,
To trusse the pray too heavie for his flight;
Which comming downe to ground, does free it selfe by fight

He so disseized of his gryping grosse,
The knight his thrilant speare againe assayd
In his bras-plated body to embosse,
And three mens strength unto the stroke he Iayd;
Wherewith the stiffe beame quaked, as affrayd,
And glauncing from his scaly necke, did glyde
Close under his left wing, then broad displayd.
The percing Steele there wrought a wound full wyde,
That with the uncouth smart the Monster lowdly cryde.

He cryde, as raging seas are wont to rore,
When wintry storne his wrathfull wreck does threat,
The rolling billowes beat the ragged shore,
As they the earth would shoulder from her seat,
And greedie gulfes does gape, as he would eat
His neighbour element in his revenge:
Then gin the blustering brethren boldly threat,

8. Freed from his formidable grip.
To move the world from off his stedfast henge, axis
And boystrous battell make, each other to avenge.

The steely head stucke fast still in his flesh,
Till with his cruell clawes he snatcht the wood,
And quite a sunder broke. Forth flowed fresh
A gushing river of blacke goarie clotted blood,
That drowned all the land, whereon he stood;
The stream thereof would drive a water-mill.
Treblly augmented was his furious mood
With bitter sense of his deepe rooted ill, injury
That flames of fire he threw forth from his large nosethrill.

His hideous tayle then hurled he about,
And therewith all enwrapt the nimble thyes thigs
Of his froth-fomy steed, whose courage stout
Striving to loose the knot, that fast him tyes,
Himselfe in streighter tighter bandes too rash impleys, of necessity
That to the ground he is perforce did constraynd
To throw his rider: who can did quickly ryse
From off the earth, with durty bloud distaynd, defiled
For that reprochfull fall right fowly he disdaynd.

And fiercely tooke his trenchand sharp blade in hand,
With which he stroke so furious and so fell, fiercely
That nothing seemd the puissance could withstand:
Upon his crest the hardned yron fell,
But his more hardned crest was armd so well,
That deeper dint therein it would not make:
Yet so extremely did the buffe blow/dismay
That from thenceforth he shund the like to take,
But when he saw them come, he did them still forsake, avoid

The knight was wrath to see his stroke beguyld, foiled
And smote againe with more outrageous might;
But backe againe the sparckling Steele recoyld,
And left not any marke, where it did light;
As if in Adamant rocke it had bene pight, struck against
The beast impatient of his smarting wound,
And of so fierce and forcible despight, powerful injury
Thought with his wings to stye mount above the ground;
But his late wounded wing unserviceable found.

Then full of griefe and anguish vehement,
He lowly brayd, that like was never heard,
And from his wide devouring oven sent
A flake flash of fire, that flashing in his beard,
Him all amazd, and almost made affeard;
The scorching flame sore swunged all his face,
And through his armour all his bodie seard,
That he could not endure so cruell cace,
But thought his armes to leave, and helmet to unlace.

Not that great Champion of the antique world,
Whom famous Poetes verse so much doth vaunt,
And hath for twelve huge labours high extold,
So many furies and sharpe fits did haunt,
When him the poysoned garment did enchaunt
With Centaures bloud, and bloudie verses charmed,
As did this knight twelve thousand dolours daunt,
Whom fyrie Steele now burnt, that earst° him armed,
That erst him goodly armed, now most of all him harmed.2

Faint, wearie, sore, emboyled, grieved, burnt
With heat, toyle, wounds, armes, smart, and inward fire
That never man such mischiefes did torment;
Death better were, death did he oft desire,
But death will never come, when needes require.
Whom so dismayd when that his foe beheld,
He cast to suffer him no more respire,
But gan his sturdie sterne about to weld,
And him so strongly stroke, that to the ground him feld.

It fortuned (as faire it then befell)
Behind his backe unweeting, where he stood,
Of auncient time there was a springing well,
From which fast trickled forth a silver flood,
Full of great vertues, and for med'cine good.
Whylome, before that cursed Dragon got
That happie land, and all with innocent blood
Defyld those sacred waves, it rightly hot
The Well of Life, ne yet his vertues had forgot.

For unto life the dead it could restore,
And guilt of sinfull crimes cleane wash away,
Those that with sickness were infected sore,
It could recure, and aged long decay
Renew, as one were borne that very day.
Both Silo this, and Jordan did excell,
And th' English Bath, and eke the german Spau,

2. Redcrosse's fire baptism is compared with the burning shirt of Nessus, which killed Hercules, "that great Champion of the antique world" (line 235). His "twelve huge labours" are paralleled to the knight's "twelve thousand dolours."

3. An allusion to Revelation 22.1—2: "And he showed me a pure river of water of life, clear as crystal, proceeding out of the throne of God, and of the Lamb. In the midst of the street of it, and on either side of the river, was the tree of life which bare twelve manner of fruits and yielded her fruit every month: and the leaves of the tree were for the healing of the nations."
Ne can Cephise, nor Hebrus match this well:

Into the same the knight backe overthrown, fell.4

Now gan the golden Phoebus for to steepe
His fierie face in billowes of the west,
And his faint steedes watred in Ocean deepe,
Whiles from their jornall labour they did rest,

When that infernall Monster, having cast
His wearie foe into that living well,
Can did high advance his broad discoloured brest,
Above his wonted pitch, with countenance fell,
And clapt his yron wings, as victor he did dwell.

Which when his pensive Ladie saw from farre,
Great woe and sorrow did her soule assay,
As weening that the sad end of the warre,
And gan to highest God entirely pray,
That feared chaunce from her to turne away;

With folded hands and knees full lowly bent
All night she watcht, ne once adowne would lay
Her daintie limbs in her sad dreriment,
But praying still did wake, and waking did lament.

The morrow next gan early to appeare,
That Titan rose to runne his daily race;
But early ere the morrow next gan reare
Out of the sea faire Titans deawy face,
Up rose the gentle virgin from her place,
And looked all about, if she might spy

Her loved knight to move his manly pace:
For she had great doubt of his safety,
Since late she saw him fall before his enemy.

At last she saw, where he upstarted brave
Out of the well, wherein he drenched lay;
As Eagle fresh out of the Ocean wave,
Where he hath left his plumes all hoary gray,
And deckt himselfe with feathers youthly gay,
Like Eyas hauke up mounts unto the skies,
His newly budded pinses to assay,
And marveiles at himselfe, still as he flies:
So new this new-borne knight to battell new did rise.

Whom when the damned feend so fresh did spy,
No wonder if he wondred at the sight,

4. The Well of Life, with its powers of renewal, is successively compared with waters of the Bible, of England and Europe, and of classical antiquity. In the pool of Siloam ("Silo") a blind man was cured by Christ (John 9.7); water of the river Jordan cured Naaman of leprosy (2 Kings 5.14) and Christ was baptized therein (Matthew 3.16); "Bath" and "Spau" (Spa) were famed for their medicinal waters. "Cephise" and "Hebrus" in Greece were noted for purifying and healing powers.
And doubted, whether his late enemy
It were, or other new supplied knight.

He, now to prove his late renewed might,
High brandishing his bright deaw-burning blade,
Upon his crested scalpe so sore did smite,
That to the scull a yawning wound it made:
The deadly dint his dulld senses all dismayd.

I wote not, whether the revenging Steele
Were hardned with that holy water dew,
Wherein he fell, or sharper edge did feele,
Or his baptized hands now greater grew;
Or other secret vertue did ensue;
Else never could the force of fleshly arme,
Ne molten mettall in his bloud embrew:
For till that stound could never wight him harme,
By subtilty, nor slight, nor might, nor mighty charme.

The cruell wound enraged him so sore,
That loud he yelled for exceeding paine;
As hundred ramping Lyons seemed to rore,
Whom ravenous hunger did thereto constraine:
Then gan he tosse aloft his stretched traine,
And therewith scourge the buxome aire so sore,
That to his force to yeelden it was faine;
Ne ought his sturdie strokes might stand afore,
That high trees overthrew, and rocks in peeces tore.

The same advauncing high above his head,
With sharpe intended sting so rude him smot,
That to the earth himdrove, as stricken dead,
Ne living wight would have him life behot:
The mortall sting his angry needle shot
Quite through his shield, and in his shoulder seasd,
Where fast it stucce, ne would there out be got:
The griefe thereof him wondrous sore diseasd,
Ne might his ranckling paine with patience be appeasd.

But yet more mindfull of his honour deare,
Then of the grievous smart, which him did wring,
From loathed soile he can him lightly reare,
And strove to loose the farre infixed sting:
Which when in vaine he tryde with struggeling,
Inflamed with wrath, his raging blade he heft,
And strooke so strongly, that the knotty string
Of his huge taile he quite a sunder cleft,
Five joynts thereof he hewd, and but the stump him left.

5. I.e., neither could anything ('ought') stand before his violent ('sturdie') strokes.
6. Promised. I.e., no one would have thought he could survive the blow.
Hart cannot thinke, what outrage, and what cries, with foul enfouldred smoake and flashing fire, That all was covered with darknesse dire: Then fraught with rancour, and engorged ire, He cast at once him to avenge for all, And gathering up himselfe out of the mire, Upon his sunne-bright shield, and grip it fast withall.

Much was the man encombred with his hold, In feare to lose his weapon in his paw, Ne wist yet, how his talents to unfold; Nor harder was from Cerberus greedie jaw To plucke a bone, then from his cruell claw To reave by strength the griped gage away: Thrice he assayd it from his foot to draw, And thrise in vaine to draw it did assay, It booted nought to thinke, to robbe him of his pray.

Tho when he saw no power might prevaile, His trustie sword he cald to his last aid, Wherewith he fiercely did his foe assaile, And double blowes about him stoutly laid, That glauncing fire out of the yron plaid; When heayie hammers on the wedge are swaid; Therewith at last he forst him to unty one of his grasping feete, him to defend thereby.

The other foot, fast fixed on his shield, Whenas no strength, nor stroks mote him constraine To loose, ne yet the warlike pledge to yield, He smot thereat with all his might and maine, That nought so wondrous puissance might sustaine; Upon the joynt the lucky Steele did light, And made such way, that hewd it quite in twaine; The paw yet missed not his minisht might, But hong still on the shield, as it at first was pight.

For griece thereof, and divelish despight, From his infernall fournace forth he threw Huge flames, that dimmed all the heavens light, Enrold in duskish smoke and brimstone blew; As burning Aetna from his boyling stew Doth belch out flames, and rockes in peeces broke,
And ragged ribs of mountaines molten new
Enwrapt in coleblacke clouds and filthy smoke,
That all the land with stench, and heaven with horror choke.

45
The heate whereof, and harmefull pestilence
So sore him noyd,° that forst him to retire
A little backward for his best defence,
To save his bodie from the scorching fire,
Which he from hellish entrailes did expire.°
It chaunst (eternall God that chaunce did guide)
As he recoyled backward, in the mire
His nigh forwearied° feeble feet did slide,
And downe he fell, with dread of shame sore terrifide.

46
There grew a goodly tree him faire beside,
Loaden with fruit and apples rosie red,
As they in pure verminion had beeene dide,
Whereof great vertues over all were red;°
For happie life to all, which thereon fed,
And life eke everlasting did befall:
Great God it planted in that blessed sted°
With his almightie hand, and did it call
The Tree of Life, the crime of our first fathers fall.°

47
In all the world like was not to be found,
Save in that soile, where all good things did grow,
And freely sprong out of the fruitfull ground,
As incorrupted Nature did them sow,
Till that dread Dragon all did overthrow.
Another like faire tree eke grew thereby,
Whereof who so did eat, eftsoones did know
Both good and ill: O mornefull memory:
That tree through one mans fault hath doen us all to dy.°
i.e., killed us

48
From that first tree forth flowd, as from a well,
A trickling streame of Balme, most soveraine°
And daintie deare,° which on the ground still fell,
And overflowed all the fertill plaine,
As it had deawed bene with timely° raine:
Life and long health that gratious° ointment gave,
And deadly wounds could heale, and reare° againe
The senselesse corse appointed° for thegrave.
Into that same he fell: which did from death him save.°

9. Genesis 2.9 describes the Tree of Life and also the Tree of Knowledge of Good and Evil, both of which God planted in the Garden of Eden. The "crime of our first fathers fall" is that Adam, in eating of the second and being banished from Eden, separated himself—and (according to Christian doctrine) his descendants—from the first. The Tree of Life appears again in the New Jerusalem (Revelation 22.2).
I. The healing balm flowing from the Tree of Life is understood to be Christ’s blood, shed to redeem humankind from eternal damnation.
For nigh thereto the ever damned beast
durst not approach, for he was deadly made,\textit{i.e., a child of death}\n
And all that life preserved, did detest:
Yet he it oft attempted to invade.
By this the drooping day-light gan to fade,
And yeeld his roome\textit{its place} to sad succeeding night,
Who with her sable mantle gan to shade

The face of earth, and wayes of living wight,
And high her burning torch set up in heaven bright

When gentle Una saw the second fall
Of her deare knight, who wearie of long fight,
And faint through losse of bloud, moved not at all,

But lay as in a dreame of deepe delight,
Besmeard with pretyous Balme, whose vertuous might
Did heale his wounds, and scorching heat alay,
Again she stricken was with sore affright,
And for his safetie gan devoutly pray;

And watch the noyous\textit{nevertheless} night, and wait for joyous day.

The joyous day gan early to appeare,
And faire Aurora from the deawy bed
Of aged Tithone gan her selfe to reare,\textit{valiant}
With rosie cheekes, for shame as blushing red;

Her golden Iockes for haste were loosely shed
About her eares, when Una her did marke
Clymbe to her charet, all with flowers spred,
From heaven high to chase the chearelesse darke;

Then freshly up arose the doughtie\textit{valiant} knight,
All healed of his hurts and woundes wide,
And did himselfe to battell readie dight:\textit{prepare}
Whose early foe awaiting him beside
To have devourd, so soone as day he spyde,

When now he saw himselfe so freshly reare,
As if late fight had nought him damnifyde,\textit{injured}
He woke\textit{grew} dismayd, and gan his fate to feare;
Nathlesse\textit{nevertheless} with wonted rage he him advaunced

And in his first encounter, gaping wide,

He thought attonce him to have swallowed quight,
And rusht upon him with outrageous pride;
Who him r’encountring fierce, as hauke in flight,
Perforce rebutted\textit{drove} backe. The weapon bright
Taking advantage of his open jaw,
   Ran through his mouth with so importune° might,
That deepe emperst his darksome hollow maw,
And back retyrd,° his life blew forth with all did draw.

54
So downe he fell, and forth his life did breath,
   That vanisht into smoke and clouds swift;
So downe he fell, that th’ earth him underneath
Did groane, as feeble so great load to lift;
So downe he fell, as an huge rockie clift,
   Whose false° foundation waves have washt away,
With dreadfull poyse° is from the mayneland rift,°
And rolling downe, great Neptune doth dismay;
So downe he fell, and like an heaped mountaine lay.

55
The knight himselfe even trembled at his fall,
   So huge and horrible a masse it seemed;
And his deare Ladie, that beheld it all,
Durst not approch for dread, which she misdeemed,°
But yet at last, when as the direfull feend
She saw not stirre, off-shaking vaine affright,
She nigher drew, and saw that joyous end:
Then God she prayd, and thankt her faithfull knight,
That had atchiev’d so great a conquest by his might.

Canto 12

Faire Una to the Redcrosse knight
   betrouthed is with joy:
Though false Duessa it to barre her false sleights doe impoy.

Behold I see the haven nigh at hand,
   To which I meane my weareie course to bend;
Vere the maine shete, and beare up with the land,°
   The which afore is fairely to be kend,°
And seemeth safe from stormes, that may offend;
There this faire virgin weareie of her way
Must landed be, now at her journeies end:
   There eke° my feeble basket° a while may stay,
Till merry° wind and weather call her thence away.

Scarsely had Phoebus in the glooming East°
   i.e., dawn
Yet harnessed his firie-footed teeme, crest
Ne reard above the earth his flaming creast,°
When the last deadly smoke aloft did steeme,

4. I.e., on being drawn back.
5. Release the mainsail line and sail toward the land. The nautical metaphor echoes many classical authors and Chaucer’s Troilus and Criseyde (2.1-7).
That signe of last outbreathed life did seeme
Unto the watchman on the castle wall;
Who thereby dead that baleful! evil Beast did deeme,
And to his Lord and Ladie lowd gan call,
To tell, how he had seene the Dragons fall.

Uprose with hastie joy, and feeble speed
That aged Sire, the Lord of all that land,
And looked forth, to weet, know if true indeede
Those tydings were, as he did understand,
Which whenas true by tryall he out fond,
He bad to open wyde his brazen gate,
Which long time had bene shut, and out of hond straightway
Proclaymed joy and peace through all his state;
For dead now was their foe, which them forrayed late.6

Then gan triumphant Trompets sound on hie,
That sent to heaven the ecchoed report
Of their new joy, and happy victorie
Gainst him, that had them long opprest with tort, wrong
And fast imprisoned in sieged fort.
Then all the people, as in solemnse feast,
To him assembled with one full consort, all together
Rejoycing at the fall of that great beast,
From whose eternall bondage now they were releast.

Forth came that auncient Lord and aged Queene,
Arayd in antique robes downe to the ground,
And sad habiliments right well beseeene;
A noble crew about them waited round
Of sage and sober Peres, all gravelly gownd;
Whom farre before did march a goodly band
Of tall young men, all hable armes to sownd,
But now they laurell braunches bore in hand;
Glad signe of victorie and peace in all their land.

Unto that doughtie Conquerour they came,
And him before themselves prostrating low,
Their Lord and Patrone defender loud did him proclame,
And at his feet his laurell boughes did throw.
Soone after them all dauncing on a row
The comely virgins came, with girlands dight, adorned
As fresh as flowres in medow greene do grow,
When morning deaw upon their leaves doth light:
And in their hands sweet Timbrels all upheld on hight tambourines

6. Had recently ravaged.
7. i.e., their sober, appropriate (“right well”) attire.
8. Able to fight with weapons.
And them before, the fry of children young
Their wanton sports and childish mirth did play,
And to the Maydens sounding tymbrels sung
In well attuned notes, a joyous lay,
And made delightfull musick all the way,
Untill they came, where that faire virgin stood;
As faire Diana in fresh sommers day
Beholds her Nymphes, enraunged in shadie wood,
Some wrestle, some do run, some bathe in christall flood.

So she beheld those maydens meriment
With chearefull vew; who when to her they came,
Themselves to ground with gratious humblesse bent,
And her adored by honorable name,
Lifting to heaven her everlasting fame:
Then on her head they set a girland greene,
And crowned her twixt earnest and twixt game:
Who in her selfe-resemblance well beseene
Did seeme such, as she was, a goodly maiden Queene.

And after all, the raskall many ran,
Heaped together in rude rablement,
To see the face of that victorious man:
Whom all admired, as from heaven sent,
But when they came, where that dead Dragon lay,
Stretcht on the ground in monstrous large extent,
The sight with idle feare did them dismay,
Ne durst approch him nigh, to touch, or once assay.

Some feard, and fled; some feard and well it faynd:
One that would wiser seeme, then all the rest,
Warnd him not touch, for yet perhaps remaynd
Some lingring life within his hollow brest,
Or in his wombe might lurke some hidden nest
Of many Dragonets, his fruitfull seed;
Another said, that in his eyes did rest
Yet sparckling fire, and bad thereof take heed;
Another said, he saw him move his eyes indeed.

One mother, when as her foolehardie chyld
Did come too neare, and with his talants play,
Halfe dead through feare, her little babe retyl,
And to her gossips gan in counsell say;
"How can I tell, but that his talants may Yet scratch my sonne, or rend his tender hand?"
So diversly themselves in vaine they fray.

looking appropriately like herself.
Whiles some more bold, to measure him nigh stand,
To prove\(^9\) how many acres he did spread of land.

Thus flocked all the folke him round about,
The whiles that hoarie\(^9\) king, with all his traine,
Being arrived, where that champion stout
After his foes defeasance\(^9\) did remaine,
 Him goodly greetes, and faire does entertaine,
With princely gifts of yvorie and gold,
And thousand thanks he yelds for all his paine
Then when his daughter deare he does behold,
Her dearely doth imbrace, and kisseth manifold.\(^9\)

And after to his Pallace he them brings,
With shaumes,\(^1\) and trompets, and with Clarions sweet;
And all the way the joyous people sings,
And with their garments strowes the paved street:
Whence mounting up, they find purveyance\(^0\)
Of all, that royall Princes court became,\(^0\)
And all the floore was underneath their feet
Bespreed with costly scarlot of great name,\(^0\)
On which they lowly sit, and fitting purpose frame.\(^2\)

What needs me tell their feast and goodly guize,\(^0\)
In which was nothing riotous nor vaine?
What needs of daintie dishes to devize,\(^0\)
Of comely\(^0\) services, or courtly trayne?\(^2\)
My narrow leaves cannot in them containe
The large discourse\(^6\) of royall Princes state.
Yet was their manner then but bare and plaine:
For th' antique world excesse and pride did hate;
Such proud luxurious pompe is swollen up but late.\(^0\)

Then when with meates and drinkes of every kinde
Their fervent appetites they quenched had,
That auncient Lord gan fit occasion finde,
Of straunge adventures, and of perils sad,\(^9\)
Which in his travell him befallen had,
For to demaund\(^6\) of his renowned guest:
Who then with utt'rance grave, and count'nance sad,
From point to point, as is before exprest,
Discourst his voyage long, according\(^6\) his request.

Great pleasure mixt with pittifulP regard,
That godly King and Queene did passionate,\(^0\)
While they his pittifulP adventures heard,
That oft they did lament his lucklesse state,
And often blame the too importune\(^6\) fate,

1. The shawm was the medieval and Renaissance predecessor of the oboe.
2. Make seemly conversation.
That heapd on him so many wrathfull wreakes: vengeful injuries
For never gentle knight, as he of late,
So tossed was in fortunes cruell freakes, hims
And all the while salt teares bedeawd the hearers cheaks.

Then said that royall Pere in sober wise:
"Deare Sonne, great beene the evils, which ye bore
From first to last in your late enterprise,
That I note, know not
For never living man, I weene, so sore
In sea of deadly daungers was distrest;
But since now safe ye seised reached
And well arrived are (high God be blést),
Let us devize of ease and everlasting rest."

"Ah dearest Lord," said then that doughty knight
"Of ease or rest I may not yet devize;
For by the faith, which I to armes have plight/immediately / enterprise
I bounden am streight after this emprize, immediately / enterprise
As that your daughter can ye well advize,
Backe to returne to that great Faerie Oueene, and well arrived are (high God be blést),
And her to serve six yeares in warlike wize,
Gainst that proud Paynim king, that workes her teene:reached Therefore I ought crave pardon, till I there have beene." must

"Unhappie falles that hard necessitie," Quoth he, "the troubler of my happie peace,
And vowed foe of my felicitie;
Ne nor / press, contend obligation
I against the same can justly preace:
But since that band ye cannot now release,
Nor doen undo (for vowes may not be vaine),
Soone as the terme of those six yeares shall cease,
Ye then shall hither backe returne againe,
The marriage to accomplish vowd betwixt you twain.

"Which for my part I covet to performe,
In sort as through the world I did proclame,
That who so kild that monster most deforme, even as
And him in hardy battaile overcame, hideous
Should have mine onely daughter to his Dame, wife
And of my kingdome heire apparaunt bee:
Therefore since now to thee perteines the same, belongs
By dew desert of noble chevalree,
Both daughter and eke kingdome, Io I yield to thee.

Then forth he called that his daughter faire,
The fairest Un’ his onely daughter deare,
His onely daughter, and his onely heyre;
Who forth proceeding with sad° sober cheare,
As bright as doth the morning starre appeare
Out of the East, with flaming lockes bedight,
To tell that dawning day is drawing neare,
And to the world does bring long wished light;
So faire and fresh that Lady shewd her selfe in sight.

So faire and fresh, as freshest flowre in May;
For she had layd her mournefull stole aside,
And widow-like sad wimple° throwne away,
Wherewith her heavenly beautie she did hide,
Whiles on her weary journey she did ride;
And on her now a garment she did weare,
All lilly white, withouten spot, or pride,
That seemed like silke and silver woven neare,°
But neither silke nor silver therein did appeare.°

The blazing brightnesse of her beauties beame,
And glorious light of her sunshyny face°
To tell, were as to strive against the streame.
My ragged rimes are all too rude and bace,
Her heavenly lineaments for to enchace.°
Ne wonder; for her owne deare loved knight,
All° were she dayly with himselfe in place,
Did wonder much at her celestiall sight:
Oft had he seen her faire, but never so faire dight.

So fairely dight, when she in presence came,
She to her Sire made humble reverence,
And bowed low, that her right well became,
And added grace unto her excellence:
Who with great wisdome, and grave eloquence
Thus gan to say. But eare° he thus had said,
With flying speede, and seeming great pretence,°
Came running in, much like a man dismayed,
A Messenger with letters, which his message said.

All in the open hall amazed stood,
At suddeinnesse of that unwarie° sight,
And wondred at his breathlesse hastie mood.
But he for nought would stay his passage right°
Till fast° before the king he did alight;
Where falling flat, great humblesse he did make,
And kist the ground, whereon his foot was pight;°

5. 'The marriage of the Lamb is come, and his wife hath made herself ready. And to her was granted that she should be arrayed in fine linen, clean and white: for the fine linen is the righteousness of saints’ (Revelation 19.7—8).
6. Revelation 21.9, II describes the New Jerusalem as 'the bride, the Lamb’s wife, . . . her light was like unto a stone most precious.'
Then to his hands that writ\(^9\) he did betake,\(^9\) Which he disclosing, red thus, as the paper spake.

"To thee, most mighty king of Eden faire, Her greeting sends in these sad lines addrest, The wofull daughter, and forsaken heire Of that great Emperour of all the West; And bids thee be advized for the best, Ere thou thy daughter linck in holy band Of wedlocke to that new unknowen guest: For he already plighted his right hand Unto another love, and to another land."

"To me sad mayd, or rather widow sad, He was affiaunced long time before, And sacred pledges he both gave, and had, False erraunt knight, infamous, and forswore: Witnesse the burning Altars, which\(^9\) he swore, by which And guiltie heavens of his bold perjury, i.e., and heavens polluted by Which though he hath polluted oft of yore, Yet I to them for judgement just do fly, And them conjure\(^9\) t' avenge this shamefull injury."

"Therefore since mine he is, or\(^9\) free or bond, Or false or trew, or living or else dead, Withhold, O soveraine Prince, your hasty hond From knitting league with him, I you aread; Ne wene\(^9\) my right with strength adowne to tread, Through weakenesse of my widowhed, or woe: For truth is strong, her rightfull cause to plead, And shall find friends, if need requireth soe, So bids thee well to fare, Thy neither friend, nor foe, Fidessa."

When he these bitter byting words had red, The tydings straunge did him abashed make, That still he sate long time astonished As in great muse,\(^9\) ne word to creature spake. At last his solemne silence thus he brake, With douftfull eyes fast fixed on his guest: "Redoubted\(^9\) knight, that for mine onely sake Thys life and honour late adverlturest, Let nought be hid from me, that ought to be exprest.

"What meane these bloudy vowes, and idle threats, Throwne out from womanish impatient mind?"
Here heaped up with terrries of love unkind,
My conscience cleare with guilty bands would bind?
High God be witnesse, that I guiltlesse ame.
But if your selfe, Sir knight, ye faultie find,
Or wrapped be in loves of former Dame,
With crime do not it cover, but disclose the same."

To whom the Redcrosse knight this answere sent,
"My Lord, my King, be nought hereat dismayd,
Till well ye wote by grave intendiment, a serious investigation
What woman, and wherefore doth me upbrayd
With breach of love, and loyalty betrayd.
It was in my mishaps, as hitherward I lately traveld, that unwares I strayd
Out of my way, through perils straunge and hard;
That day should faile me, ere I had them all declard.

"There did I find, or rather I was found
Of this false woman, that Fidessa hight,
Fidessa hight the falsest Dame on ground,
Most false Duessa, royall richly dight,
That easie was t’ invegle weaker sigh:  deceive
Who by her wicked arts, and wylie skill,
Too false and strong for earthly skill or might,
Unwares me wrought unto her wicked will,
And to my foe betrayd, when least I feared ill."

Then stepped forth the goodly royall Mayd,
And on the ground her selfe prostrating low,
With sober countenaunce thus to him sayd:
"O pardon me, my soveraigne Lord, to show
The secret treasons, which of late I know
To have bene wrought by that false sorceresse.
She onely she it is, that earst did throw formerly
This gentle knight into so great distresse,
That death him did awaite in dayly wretchednesse.

"And now it seemes, that she subborned hath
This craftie messenger with letters vaine,
To worke new woe and improvided scath,  unexpected harm
By breaking of the band betwixt us twaine;
Wherein she used hath the practicke paine  treacherous skill
Of this false footman, clokt with simplenesse,
Whom if ye please for to discover plaine,
Ye shall him Archimago find, I ghesse,
The falsest man alive; who tries shall find no losse."

The king was greatly moved at her speach,
And all with suddein indignation fraight.
Bad° on that Messenger rude hands to reach.
Eftsoones the Gard, which on his state did wait,
Attacht that faitor false, and bound him strait:
Who seeming sorely chauffed at his band,
As chained Beare, whom cruell dogs do bait,
With idle force did faine them to withstand,
And often semblance made to scape out of their hand.

But they him layd full low in dungeon deepe,
And bound him hand and foote with yron chains.
And with continuall watch did warely keepe;
Who then would thinke, that by his subtile trains
He could escape fowle death or deadly paines?
Thus when that Princes wrath was pacifide,
He gan renew the late forbidden banes,
And to the knight his daughter deare he tyde,
With sacred rites and vowes for ever to abyde.

His owne two hands the holy knots did knit,
That none but death for ever can devide;
His owne two hands, for such a turne most fit,
The housling° fire did kindle and provide,
And holy water thereon sprinckled wide;
At which the bushy Teade° a groome did light,
And sacred lampe in secret chamber hide,
Where it should not be quenched day nor night,
For feare of evill fates, but burnen ever bright.

Then gan they sprinckle all the posts with wine,
And made great feast to solemnize that day;
They all perfumde with frankencense divine,
And precious odours fetcht from far away,
That all the house did sweat with great aray:
And all the while sweete Musicke did apply
Her curious° skill, the warbling notes to play,
To drive away the dull Melancholy;
The whiles one sung a song of love and jollity.

During the which there was an heavenly noise
Heard sound through all the Pallace pleasantly,
Like as it had bene many an Angels voice,
Singing before th’ eternall majesty,
In their trinall triplicities on hye;
Yet wist no creature, whence that heavenly sweet
Proceeded, yet each one felt secretly
Himselfe thereby reft of his sences meet,
And ravished with rare impression in his sprite.

Great joy was made that day of young and old,
And solemn feast proclaimed throughout the land,
That their exceeding merth may not be told:
Suffice it hear by signes to understand
The usuall joyes at knitting of loves band.
Thrise happy man the knight himselfe did hold,
Possessed of his Ladies hart and hand,
And ever, when his eye did her behold,
His heart did seeme to melt in pleasures manifold.

Her joyous presence and sweet company
In full content he there did long enjoy,
Ne wicked envie, ne vile gealosy
His deare delights were able to annoy:
Yet swimming in that sea of blissfull joy,
He nought forgot, how he whilome had sworne,
In case he could that monstrous beast destroy,
Unto his Faerie Queene backe to returne:
The which he shortly did, and Una left to mourne.

Now strike your sailes ye jolly Mariners,
For we be come unto a quiet rode,*
Where we must land some of our passengers,
And light this wearie vessell of her lode.
Here she a while may make her safe abode,
Till she repaired have her tackles spent,*
And wants supplide. And then aigne abroad
On the long voyage whereto she is bent:
Well may she speede and fairely finish her intent

2. The "trinall triplicities" are the nine angelic orders, divided into three groups of three, the whole hierarchy corresponding to the nine spheres of the universe. The music heard in this stanza is the music of the spheres, not audible on earth since the Fall.

3. "Let us be glad and rejoice, and give honor to him: for the marriage of the Lamb is come" (Revelation 19.7). In Revelation, the marriage of Christ and the New Jerusalem signals the general redemption.

The Legend of Sir Guyon,
or
Of Temperance

Summary
In Book Two, Sir Guyon represents and becomes the virtue of Temperance, which requires moderation, self-control, and sometimes abstinence in regard to anger, sex, greed, ambition, and the whole spectrum of passions, desires, pleasures, and material goods. In his climactic adventure, he visits and destroys the Bower of Bliss of the witch Acrasia.

From Canto 12

[THE BOWER OF BLISS]

Thence passing forth, they shortly do arrive, Whereas the Bowre of Blisse was situate; A place pickt out by choice of best alive, That natures worke by art can imitate: In which what ever in this worldly state Is sweet, and pleasing unto living sense, Or that may dayntiest fantasie aggrate, Was poured forth with plentifull dispence, And made there to abound with lavish affluence.

Goodly it was enclosed round about, Aswell their entred guests to keepe within, As those unruly beasts to hold without; Yet was the fence thereof but weake and thin; Nought feard their force, that fortilage to win, But wisdomes powre, and temperaunces might, By which the mightiest things efforced bin: And eke the gate was wrought of substaunce light, Rather for pleasure, then for battery or fight.

Yt framed was of precious yvory, That seemd a worke of admirable wit;

1. The Bower of Bliss, perhaps the most famous of Spenser’s symbolic places, has been variously interpreted. Some critics emphasize its aspects of sterility and artifice; others, its seductive and threatening eroticism and idolatrie akin to that associated with the New World and Ireland.
2. I.e., Guyon and a character called the Palmer, who is his guide throughout Book 2 (and who is usually thought to represent reason). Pilgrims to the Holy Land were called palmers in token of the palm leaves they often brought back.
3. Just outside the Bower, Guyon and the Palmer encountered “many beasts, that roard outrageously, / As if that hunger’s point, or Venus sting / Had them enraged” (stanza 39). The Palmer had used the magical power of his staff to turn their aggression into cringing fear.
4. I.e., it was not at all feared that the physical force of the beasts could breach that fortress.
30 And therein all the famous history
Of Jason and Medaea was ywrit;
Her mighty charmes, her furious loving fit,
His goodly conquest of the golden fleece,
His falsed faith, and love too lightly flit,°

35 The wondred Argo, which in venturous piece admired
First through the Euxine seas bore all the flwr of Greece.°

40 Ye might have seene the frothy billowes fry°
Under the ship, as thorough them she went,
That seemd the waves were into yvory,
Or yvory into the waves were sent;
And other where the snowy substaunce sprent°

45 With vermeil,° like the boyes bloud therein shed,
A piteous spectacle did represent,
And otherwhiles with gold besprinkeled;

50 Yt seemd th' enchaunted flame, which did Creiisa wed.°

46 All this, and more might in that goodly gate
Be red; that ever open stood to all,
Which thither came: but in the Porch there sate
A comely personage of stature tall,

51 And semblaunce pleasing, more then naturall,
That travellers to him seemd to entize;
His looser garment to the ground did fall,
And flew about his heeles in wanton wize,
Not fit for speedy pace, or manly exercize.

56 They in that place him Genius did call:
Not that celestall powre, to whom the care
Of life, and generation of all
That lives, pertaines in charge particulare,°
Who wondrous things concerning our welfare,

61 And strange phantomes doth let us oft forsee,
And oft of secret ill bids us beware:
That is our Selfe,° whom though we do not see,
Yet each doth in him selfe it well perceive to bee.

66 Therefore a God him sage Antiquity
Did wisely make,° and good Agdistes call:

67 But this same° was to that quite contrary,
The foe of life, that good envyes to all,
That secretly doth us procure to fall,
Through guilefull semblants, which he makes us see. illusions
He of this Gardin had the governall,
And Pleasures porter was devizd to bee,
Holding a staffe in hand for more formalitie.

With diverse flowres he daintily was deckt,
And strowed round about, and by his side
A mighty Mazer bowle of wine was set,
Wherewith all new-come guests he gratifide:
So did he eke Sir Guyon passing by:
But he his idle curtesie defide,
And overthrew his bowle disdainfully;
And broke his staffe, with which he charmed semblants sly.

Thus being entred, they behold around
A large and spacious plaine, on every side
Strowed with pleaasuns, whose faire grassy ground
Mantled with greene, and goodly beautifide
With all the ornaments of Floras pride,
Wherewith her mother Art, as halfe in scorne
Of niggard Nature, like a pompous bride
Did decke her, and too lavishly adorne,
When forth from virgin bowre she comes in th' early morn.

Thereto the Heavens alwayes Joviall,
Lookt on them lovely, still in stedfast state,
Ne suffred storme nor frost on them to fall,
Their tender buds or leaves to violate,
Nor scorching heat, nor cold intemperate
T afflict the creatures, which therein did dwell,
But the milde aire with season moderate
Gently attempred, and disposd so well,
That still it breathed forth sweet spirit and holesome smell.

More sweet and holesome, then the pleaasunt hill
Of Rhodope, on which the Nimpe, that bore
A gyaunt babe, her selfe for griefe did kill;
Or the Thessalian Tempe, where of yore
Faire Daphne Phoebus hart with love did gore;
Or Ida, where the Gods lov'd to repaire,
When ever they their heavenly bowres forlore;
Or sweet Parnasse, the haunt of Muses faire;
Or Eden selfe, if ought with Eden mote compaire.

4. A drinking cup of maple.
5. Raised deceitful apparitions. The rod and bowl are traditional emblems of enchantment (cf. Duessa's cup, 1.8, stanza 14).
6. Serene and beneficent, as influenced by the planet Jupiter.
7. The nymph Rhodope, who had a "gyaunt babe," Athos, by Neptune, was turned into a mountain.
Much wondred Guyon at the faire aspect
Of that sweet place, yet suffred no delight
To sink into his sence, nor mind affect,
But passed forth, and lookt still forward right,
Bridling his will, and maistering his might:
Till that he came unto another gate;
No gate, but like one, being goodly dight
With boughes and braunches, which did broad dilate
Their clasping armes, in wanton wreathings intricate.

So fashioned a Porch with rare device,
Archt over head with an embracing vine,
Whose bounches hanging downe, seemed to entice
All passers by, to tast their lushious wine,
And did themselves into their hands incline,
As freely offering to be gathered:
Some deepe empurpled as the Hyacint,
Some as the Rubine, laughing sweetly red,
Some like faire Emeraudes, not yet well ripened.

And them amongst, some were of burnisht gold,
So made by art, to beautifie the rest,
Which did themselves amongst the leaves enfold,
As lurking from the vew of covetous guest,
That the weake bowes, with so rich load opprest,
Did bowe adowne, as over-burdened.
Under that Porch a comely dame did rest,
Clad in faire weedes, but fowle disordered,
And garments loose, that seemd unmeet for womanhed.

In her left hand a Cup of gold she held,
And with her right the riper fruit did reach,
Whose sappy liquor, that with fulnesse sweld,
Into her cup she scruzd, with daintie breach
Of her fine fingers, without fowle empeach
That so faire wine-presse made the wine more sweet:
Thereof she usd to give to drinke to each,
Whom passing by she happened to meet:
It was her guise, all Straungers goodly so to greet.

So she to Guyon offred it to tast;
Who taking it out of her tender hond,
The cup to ground did violently cast,
That all in peeces it was broken fond:
And with the liquor stained all the lond:
Whereat Excesse exceedingly was wroth,
Yet no'te the same amend, ne yet withstand,

8. The hyacinth or jacinth, a sapphire-colored stone.
But suffered\(^a\) him to passe, all\(^b\) were she loth; \(\text{allowed/although}\)
Who nought regarding her displeasure forward goth.

58
There the most daintie Paradise on ground,
515 It selfe doth offer to his sober eye,
In which all pleasures plenteously abound,
And none does others happinesse envye:
The painted\(^b\) flowres, the trees upshooting hye,
520 The dales for shade, the hilles for breathing space,
The trembling groves, the ChristalP running by;
And that, which all faire workes doth most aggrace,
The art, which all that wrought, appeared in no place.

59
One would have thought (so cunningly, the rude,
And scorned parts were mingled with the fine)
That nature had for wantonesse ensude\(^b\)
Art, and that Art at nature did repine;
So striving each th' other to undermine,
Each did the others worke more beautifie;
So diff'ring both in willes, agreed in fine:
So all agreed through sweete diversitie,
This Gardin to adorne with all varietie.

60
And in the midst of all, a fountaine stood,
Of richest substaunce, that on earth might bee,
So pure and shiny, that the silver flood
535 Through every channell running one might see;
Most goodly it with curious imageree
Was over-wrought, and shapes of naked boyes,
Of which some seemd with lively jollitee,
To fly about, playing their wanton toyes,
Whilest others did them selves embay in liquid joyes.

61
And over all, of purest gold was spred,
A trayle of yvie in his native hew:
For the rich mettall was so coloured,
That wight, who did not well avis'd it vew,
540 Would surely deeme it to be yvie trew:
Low his lascivious armes adown did creepe,
That themselves dipping in the silver dew,
Their fleecy flowres they tenderly did steep,
Which\(^b\) drops of Christall seemd for wantones to weepe.

62
Infinit streames continually did well
Out of this fountaine, sweet and faire to see,
The which into an ample laver\(^b\) fell,
And shortly grew to so great quantitie,
That like a little lake it seemd to bee:
Whose depth exceeded not three cubits\(^9\) hight,
That through the waves one might the bottom see,
All pave'd beneath with Jaspar shining bright,
That seemd the fountaine in that sea did sayle upright.

And all the margent\(^6\) round about was set,
With shady Laurell trees, thence to defend\(^0\)
The sunny beames, which on the billowes bet,\(^a\)
And those which therein bathed, mote offend.\(^6\)
As Guyon hapned by the same to wend,
Two naked Damzelles he therein espyde,
Which therein bathing, seemed to contend,
And wrestle wantonly, ne car'd to hyde,
Their dainty parts from vew of any, which them eyde.

Sometimes the one would lift the other quight
Above the waters, and then downe againe
Her plong,\(^a\) as over maistered by might,
Where both awhile would covered remaine,
And each the other from to rise\(^0\) restraine;
The whiles their snowy limbes, as through a vele,
So through the Christall waves appeared plaine:
Then suddeinly both would themselves unhele,\(^9\)
And th' amarous sweet spoiles\(^6\) to greedy eyes revele.

As that faire Starre, the messenger of morne,\(^1\)
His deawy face out of the sea doth reare:
Or as the Cyprian goddess,\(^2\) newly borne
Of th' Oceans fruitfull froth,\(^9\) did first appeare:
Such seemed they, and so their yellow heare
Christalline humour\(^a\) dropped downe apace.
Whom such when Guyon saw, he drew him neare,
And somewhat gan relent his earnest pace;
His stubborne brest gan secret pleasaunce to embrace.

The wanton Maidens him espying, stood
Gazing a while at his unwonted guise;
Then th' one her selfe low ducked in the flood,
Abasht, that her a straunger did avise;\(^a\)
But th' other rather higher did arise,
And her two lilly paps aloft displayd,
And all, that might his melting hart entise
To her delights, she unto him bewrayed;\(^0\)
The rest hid underneath, him more desirous made.

9. A cubit is about twenty inches (thus the depth is less than five feet).
1. Unless "his" in the next line is to be taken as neuter, it implies that the reference is not to Venus but to Phosphorus (or Heosphorus), the minor male divinity sometimes identified with the morning star.
2. Venus, one of whose principal shrines was on the island of Cyprus.
With that, the other likewise up arose,
And her faire lockes, which formerly were bownd
Up in one knot, she low adowne did lose:\nWhich flowing long and thick, her cloth'd arownd,
And th' yvorie in golden mantle gownd:
So that faire spectacle from him was reft,°
Yet that, which reft it, no lesse faire was fownd:
So hid in lockes and waves from lookers theft,
Nought but her lovely face she for his looking left.

Withall she laughed, and she blusht withall,
That blushing to her laughter gave more grace,
And laughter to her blushing, as did fall:
Now when they spide the knight to slacke his pace,
Them to behold, and in his sparkling face
The secret signes of kindled lust appeare,
Their wanton meriments they did encrease
And to him beckned, to approch more neare,
And shewd him many sights, that courage cold could reare.\n
On which when gazing him the Palmer saw,
He much rebukt those wandring eyes of his,
And counseld well, him forward thence did draw.
Now are they come nigh to the Bowre of blis
Of her fond° favorites so named amis:
When thus the Palmer: "Now Sir, well avise;°
For here the end of all our travell° is:
Here wonnes° Acrasia, whom we must surprise,
Else she will slip away, and all our drift despise.°

Efsoones° they heard a most melodious sound,
Of all that mote delight a daintie eare,
Such as attonce might not on living ground,
Save in this Paradise, be heard elswhere:
Right hard it was, for wight,° which did it heare,
To read,° what manner musickie that mote bee:
For all that pleasing is to living eare,
Was there consorted in one harmonee,
Birdes, voyces, instruments, windes, waters, all agree.

The joyous birdes shrouded in chearefull shade,
Their notes unto the voyce atttempted° sweet;
Th' Angelicall soft trembling voyces made
To th° instruments divine respondence meet:\nThe silver sounding instruments did meet°
With the base murmure of the waters fall:

3. That could arouse sexual desire ("courage") when cold.
The waters fall with difference discreet, distinct variation
Now soft, now loud, unto the wind did call:
The gentle warbling wind low answered to all.

There, whence that Musick seemed heard to bee,
Was the faire Witch her selfe now solacing, taking pleasure
With a new Lover, whom through sorceree
And witchcraft, she from farre did thither bring:
There she had him now layd a slombering,
In secret shade, after long wanton joyes:
Whilst round about them pleasantly did sing
Many faire Ladies, and lascivious boyes,
That ever mixt their song with light licentious toyes. amorous play

And all that while, right over him she hong,
With her false eyes fast fixed in his sight,
As seeking medicine, whence she was stong,
Or greedily depasturing delight:
And oft inclining downe with lasses light,
For feare of waking him, his lips bedewd,
And through his humid eyes did sucke his spright,
Quite molten into lust and pleasure lewd;
Wherewith she sighed soft, as if his case she rewd. pitied

The whiles some one did chaunt this lovely lay:
"Ah see, who so faire thing doest faine to see,
In springing flowre the image of thy day;
Ah see the Virgin Rose, how sweetly shee
Doth first peepe forth with bashfull modestee,
That fairer seemes, the lesse ye see her may;
Lo see soone after, how more bold and free
Her bared bosome she doth broad display;
Loe see soone after, how she fades, and falles away.

"So passeth, in the passing of a day,
Of mortall life the leafe, the bud, the flowre,
Ne more doth flourish after first decay,
That earst was sought to decke both bed and bowre, formerly
Of many a Ladie, and many a Paramowre: lover
Gather therefore the Rose, whilst yet is prime, (its) springtime
For soone comes age, that will her pride deflowre:
Gather the Rose of love, whilst yet is time,
Whilst loving thou mayst loved be with equal crime."

4. Acrasia—whose name means both "intemperance" and "incontinence"—bears many resemblances to the classical Circe (in Odyssey' 10 as well as the more witchlike and seductive figure in Ovid's Metamorphoses 14) and also to the enchantresses of Italian romance who derive from Circe: Acratia in Trissino's L'Italia liherata and Armida in Tasso's Gerusalemme liherata. Much of the description in this scene is imitated from Tasso's account of the garden of Armida.
5. The song ("lay") of stanzas 74 and 75 imitates that in Gerusalemme liherata 16.14-15; this is a classic statement of the carpe florsem (or carpe diem) theme—pick the flower of youth before it fades.
He ceast, and then gan all the quire of birdes
Their diverse notes t’attune unto his lay,
As in approvance of his pleasing words.

Yet swarved not, but kept their forward way,
Through many covert groves, and thickets close,
In which they creeping did at last display
That wanton Ladie, with her lover lose,
Whose sleepie head she in her lap did soft dispose
Upon a bed of Roses she was layd,
As faint through heat, or dight to pleasant sin,
And was arayd, or rather disarayd,
All in a vele of silke and silver thin,
That hid no whit her alablaster skin,
But rather shewd more white, if more might bee:
More subtile web Arachne\textsuperscript{e} cannot spin,
Nor the fine nets, which oft we woven see
Of scorched deaw, do not in th’ aire more lightly flee.\textsuperscript{o}

Her snowy brest was bare to readie spoyle
Of hungry eies, which n’ote\textsuperscript{e} therewith be fild,
And yet through languor of her late sweet toyle,
Few drops, more cleare then Nectar, forth distild,
That like pure Orient perles\textsuperscript{f} adowne it trild,\textsuperscript{i}
And her faire eyes sweet smyling in delight,
Moystened their fierie beames, with which she thrild
Fraile harts, yet quenched\textsuperscript{f} not; like starry light quenched; killed
Which sparckling on the silent waves, does seeme more bright.

The young man sleeping by her, seemd to bee
Some goodly swayne of honorable place,\textsuperscript{o}
That certes\textsuperscript{e} it great pittie was to see Him his nobilitie so foule deface;
A sweet regard,\textsuperscript{o} and amiable grace,
Mixed with manly sternnesse did appeare
Yet sleeping, in his well proportioned face,
And on his tender lips the downy heare
Did now but freshly spring, and silken blossomes beare

His warlike armes, the idle instruments
Of sleeping praise,\textsuperscript{g} were hong upon a tree,
And his brave\textsuperscript{g} shield, full of old moniments,\textsuperscript{o}
Was fowly ra\textsuperscript{g}t,\textsuperscript{i} that none the signes might see;
Ne for them, ne for honour cared hee,
Ne ought,\textsuperscript{g} that did to his advauncement tend,
But in lewd loves, and wastfull luxuree,\textsuperscript{o}

\textsuperscript{6.} I.e., Guyon and the Palmer.  \textsuperscript{7.} Lustrous pearls of the East.
His dayes, his goods, his bodie he did spend:

O horrible enchantment, that him so did blend.

The noble Elfe, and carefull Palmer drew
So nigh them, minding nought, but lustfull game,
That suddein forth they on them rusht, and threw
A subtile net, which onely for the same

The skilfull Palmer formally did frame.

So held them under fast, the whiles the rest
Fled all away from feare of fowler shame.
The faire Enchauntresse, so unwares opprest,
Tryde all her arts, and all her sleights, thence out to wrest.

And eke her lover strove: but all in vaine;
For that same net so cunningly was wound,
That neither guile, nor force might it distraine.

They tooke them both, and both them strongly bound
In captive bandes, which there they readie found:
But her in chaines of adamant he tyde;
For nothing else might keepe her safe and sound;
But Verdant so he hight he soone untyde,
And counsell sage in steed thereof to him applyde.

But all those pleasant bowres and Pallace brave,
Guyon broke downe, with rigour pittilesse;
Ne ought their goodly workmanship might save
Them from the tempest of his wrathfulnesse,
But that their blisse he turnd to balefulnesse:
Their groves he feld, their gardins did deface,
Their banket houses burne, their buildings race,
And of the fairest late, now made the fowlest place.

Then led they her away, and eke that knight
They with them led, both sorrowfull and sad:
The way they came, the same returnd they right,
Till they arrived, where they lately had
Charmd those wild-beasts, that raged with furie mad.
Which now awaking, fierce at them gan fly,
As in their mistresse reskew, whom they lad; led
But them the Palmer soone did pacify.

Then Guyon askt, what meant those beastes, which there did ly.

Said he, 'These seeming beasts are men indeed,
Whom this Enchauntresse hath transformed thus,
Wylome her lovers, which her lusts did feed,' formerly

8. Knight of Faerie Land, here, Guyon.
9. The episode recalls the capture of Venus and her lover Mars in a net cunningly set around his marriage bed by Venus's husband, Vulcan, the blacksmith god (Odyssey 8.272-84).
1. Steel or some other extremely hard substance.
2. See above, stanza 43, note 3.
Now turned into figures hideous,
According to their mindes like monstruous." 53
"Sad end," quoth he, "of life intemperate,
And mournefull meed° of joyes delicious:
But Palmer, if it mote thee so aggrate,
Let them returned be unto their former state."

Streight way he with his vertuous\(^9\) staffe them strooke,
And streight of beasts they comely men became;
Yet being men they did unmanly looke,
And stared ghistly, some for inward shame,
That had an hog beene late, hight\(^4\) Grille by name,
Repined\(^6\) greatly, and did him miscall,\(^6\)
That had from hoggish forme him brought to naturall.

Said Guyon, "See the mind of beastly man,
That hath so soone forgot the excellence
Of his creation, when he life began,
That now he chooseth, with vile difference,\(^6\)
To be a beast, and lacke intelligence."
To whom the Palmer thus, "The donghill kind
Delights in filth and foule incontinence:
Let Grill be Grill, and have his hoggish mind,
But let us hence depart, whilest wether serves and wind."

From The Third Booke of The Faerie Queene

Summary The third book of The Faerie Queene is a multifaceted exploration of the virtue of chastity, which is, for Spenser, closely bound up with the power of love. The principal character is the lady knight Britomart, on a quest to find her destined beloved, the knight Artegall. Her adventures are braided together with those of many others, including the twins Belphoebe and Amoret, whose miraculous conception and birth is related at the opening of canto 6. The infant Belphoebe is adopted by the goddess Diana; Amoret is taken up by the goddess Venus and brought to the Garden of Adonis, Spenser's most remarkable allegorical vision of erotic union and procreation.

3. Even as their own minds were similarly monstrous. Circe changed Odysseus's companions into animals, but Odysseus had a charm to release them.
4. According to one of Plutarch's dialogues, a man named Gryllus ("fierce," "cruel"), having been changed into a hog by Circe, refused to be restored to human form by Odysseus.
1. The heroine's name comes from the pseudo-Virgilian poem Ciris (lines 295-305), where Britomartis is a goddess associated with Diana, the chaste goddess of the moon. For Spenser, her name suggests the (false) etymology Brito-("Brito-ness") + Mart ("Mars," god of war).
The hirth of faire Belphoebe and
Of Amoret is told.
The Gardins of Adonis fraught
With pleasures manifold.

Well may I weene,
0 faire Ladies, all this while
Ye wonder, how this noble Damozell
So great perfections did in her compile,
Sith that in salvage forests she did dwell,
So farre from court and royall Citadell,
The great schoolmistresse of all curtesy:
Seemeth that such wild woods should far expell
All civill usage and gentility,
And gentle sprite deforme with rude rusticity.

But to this faire Belphoebe in her berth
The heavens so favourable were and free,
Looking with myld aspect upon the earth,
In th' Horoscope of her nativitee,
That all the gifts of grace and chastitee
On her they poured forth of plenteous home;
Jove laught on Venus from his soveraigne see,
And Phoebus with faire beames did her adorne,
And all the Graces rockt her cradle being borne.

Her berth was of the wombe of Morning dew,
And her conception of the joyous Prime,
And all her whole creation did her shew
Pure and unsptected from all loathly crime,
That is ingenerate in fleshly slime.
So was this virgin borne, so was she bred,
So was she trayned up from time to time,
In all chast vertue, and true bounti-hed
Till to her dew perfection she was ripened.

Her mother was the faire Chrysogonee,
The daughter of Amphisa, who by race
A Faerie was, yborne of high degree,
She bore Belphoebe, she bore in like case

2. Horn of plenty, cornucopia. The planets were in favorable relationship ("myld aspect") at her birth; the combination of Jupiter ("Jove") and Venus was thought to be especially fortunate.
3. An echo of Psalm 110.3 (Book of Common Prayer): "The dew of thy birth is of the womb of the morning," taken to refer to the conception and birth of Christ.
4. Like Christ or the Virgin, she is said to be free of original sin, which is innate ("ingenerate") in human flesh.
5. "Of double nature" (Greek). "Chrysogonee": "golden-born" (Greek), alluding to Danae, who conceived when Jove visited her as a golden shower.
Faire Amoretta in the second place:
These two were twinnes, and twixt them two did share
The heritage of all celestiall grace.

That all the rest it seem'd they robbed bare
Of bountie, and of beautie, and all vertues rare.

It were a goodly storie, to declare,
By what straunge accident faire Chrysogone
Conceived these infants, and how them she bare,
In this wild forrest wandring all alone,
After she had nine moneths fulfild and gone:
For not as other wemens commune brood,
They were enwombed in the sacred throne
Of her chaste bodie, nor with commune food,
As other wemens babes, they sucked vitall blood.

But wondrously they were begot, and bred
Through influence of th' heavens fruitfull ray,
As it in antique bookes is mentioned.
It was upon a Sommers shynie day,
When Titan' faire his beames did display,
In a fresh fountaine, farre from all mens vew,
She bathed her brest, the boyling heat t' allay;
She bathed with roses red, and violets blew,
And all the sweetest flowres, that in the forrest grew.

Till faint through irkesome wearinesse, adowne
Upon the grassie ground her selfe she layd
To sleepe, the whiles a gentle slombring swowne
Upon her fell all naked bare displayd;
The sunne-beames bright upon her body playd,
Being through former bathing mollifide,
And pierst into her wombe, where they embayd
That in her pregnant flesh they shortly fructifide.

Miraculous may seeme to him, that reades
So straunge ensample of conception;
But reason teacheth that the fruitfull seades
Of all things living, through impression
Of the sunbeames in moyst complexion,
Doe life conceive and quickned are by kynd:
So after Nilus' inundation,
Infinite shapes of creatures men do fynd,
Informed in the mud, on which the Sunne hath shynd.

6. I.e., an emanation from the heavens—continuing the analogue to the Virgin's miraculous conception of Christ.
7. The sun; the first Greek sun god, Helios, was descended from the Titans.
8. The theory that life was spontaneously generated by the sun's influence on the moist earth is drawn from Ovid and Lucretius.
Great father he of generation
Is rightly cald, th' author of life and light;
And his faire sister for creation
Ministreth matter fit, which tempred right
With heate and humour,°edes the living wight.°
So srong these twinnes in wombe of Chrysogone,
Yet wist° she nought thereof, but sore affright,
Wondred to see her belly so upblone,
Which still increast, till she her terme had full outgone
Whereof conceiving shame and foule disgrace,
Albeit° her guiltlesse conscience her cleard,
She fled into the wildernes a space,°
Till that unweedy burden she had reard,°
And shund dishonor, which as death she feared
Where wearie of long travell,° downe to rest
Her selfe she set, and comfortably cheard;
There a sad° cloud of sleepe her overkest,
And seized every sense with sorrow sore opprest.

It fortuned,° faire Venus having lost
Her little sonne, the winged god of love,
Who for some light° displeasure, which him crost,°
Was from her fled, as flit as ayerie Dove,°
And left her blisfull bowre of joy above,
(So from her often he had fled away,
When she for ought° him sharply did reprove,
And wandred in the world in strange aray,
Disguiz'd in thousand shapes, that none might him bewray.°)

Him for to seeke, she left her heavenly hous,
The house of goodly formes and faire aspects,°
Whence all the world derives the glorious Features of beautie, and all shapes select,°
With which high God his workmanship hath deckt;°
And searched every way, through which his wings
Had borne him, or his tract° she mote° detect:
She promist kisses sweet, and sweeter things
Unto the man, that of him tydings to her brings.

First she him sought in Court, where most he used
But many there she found, which sore accused
His falsehood, and with foule infamous blot
His cruell deede and wicked wyle did spot: vilify
Ladies and Lords she every where mote heare
Complayning, how with his empoyshed shot
Their wofull harts he wounded had whileare, a while before
And so had left them languishing twixt hope and feare.

She then the Citties sought from gate to gate,
And every one did aske, did he him see;
And every one her answerd, that too late
He had him seene, and felt the crueltie
Of his sharpe darts and whot artilerie; hot weapons
And every one threw forth reproches rife
Of his mischievous deede, and said, That hee
Was the disturber of all civill life,
The enimy of peace, and author of all strife.

Then in the countrey she abroad him sought,
And in the rurall cottages inquired,
Where also many plaints to her were brought,
How he  their heedlesse harts with love had fyred,
And his false venim through their veines inspyred; breathed
And eke the gentle shepheard swayne, which sat
Keeping their fleecie flockes, as they were hyred,
She sweetly heard complaine, both how and what
Her sonne had to them doen; yet she did smile thereat.

But when in none of all these she him got,
She gan avize, where else he mote him hyde:
At last she her bethought, that she had not Yet sought the salvage woods and forrests wyde, wild
In which full many lovely Nymphes abyde,
Mongst whom might be, that he did closely lye,
Or that the love of some of them him tyde:
For thy she thither cast her course t' apply,
To search the secret haunts of Dianes company.

Shortly unto the wastefull woods she came,
Whereas she found the Goddesse with her crew,
After late chace of their embrewed game,
Sitting beside a fountaine in a rew, some
Some of them washing with the liquid dew
From off their dainty limbes the dustie sweat,
And soyle which did deforme their lively hew;
Others lay shaded from the scorching heat;
The rest upon her person gave attendance great.

She having hong upon a bough on high
Her bow and painted quiver, had unlaste

5. This episode alludes to the myth of Actaeon, who angered Diana by surprising her in her bath; she transformed him into a stag and he was torn apart by his own hounds.
Her silver buskins\(^6\) from her nimble thigh,
And her lancke loynes\(^6\) ungirt, and brests unbraste,
After her heat the breathing cold to taste;
Her golden lockes, that late in tresses bright
Embreaded were for hindring of her haste,\(^6\)
Now loose about her shoulders hong undight,\(^0\)
And were with sweet Ambrosia\(^0\) all besprinckled light.

Soone as she Venus saw behind her backe,
She was ashamed to be so loose surprized,
And wox\(^e\) halfe wroth against her damzels slacke,
That had not her thereof before avized,\(^7\)
But suffred her so carelesly disguised\(^0\)
Be overtaken. Soone her garments loose
Upgath'ring, in her bosome she comprized,
Waxing halfe wroth against her damzels slacke,
That had not her thereof before avized,
But suffred her so carelesly disguised

Goodly\(^9\) she gan faire Cytherea\(^8\) greet,
And shortly asked her, what cause she brought Into that wildernesse for her unmeet,\(^0\)
From her sweete bowres, and beds with pleasures fraught:
That suddein change she strange adventure\(^0\) thought.
To whom halfe weeping, she thus answered,
That she her dearest sonne Cupido sought,
Who in his frowardnesse\(^9\) from her was fled;
That she repented sore, to have him angered.

Thereat Diana gan to smile, in scorne
Of her vaine plaint, and to her scoffing sayd;
"Great pittie sure, that ye be so forlorne \(^0\)
Of your gay sonne, that gives ye so good aye
To your disports: ill mote ye bene apayd."\(^9\)
But she was more engrieved, and replide;
"Faire sister, ill beseeemes it to upbrayd
A dolefull heart with so disdainfull pride;
The like that mine, may be your paine another tide."\(^9\)

"As you in woods and wanton wildernesse
Your glory set, to chace the salvage beasts,
So my delight is all in joyfulnesse,
In beds, in bowres, in banckets,\(^9\) and in feasts:
And ill becomes you with your loftie creasts,\(^0\)

6. I.e., her golden locks were braided ("embreaded"), lest they should hinder her swiftness.
7. I.e., she was half-angered at her nymphs, who were remiss in not warning her (of Venus’s presence).
8. Venus, so named in allusion to her emergence from the sea on the island of Cythera.
9. I.e., your son aids you in your bad sports; may you be repaid in kind by this ill trick he plays on you.
To scorne the joy, that Jove is glad to seeke;
We both are bound to follow heavens beheasts,
And tend our charges with obeisance meeke:
Spare, gentle sister, with reproch my paine to eeke.

'And tell me, if that ye my sonne have heard,
To lurk amongst your Nymphes in secret wize;
Or keepe their cabins: much I am affeard,
Least he like one of them him selfe disguize,
And turne his arrowes to their exercize:
So may he long himselfe full easie hide:
For he is faire and fresh in face and guize,
As any Nymph (let not it be envyde.)'
So saying every Nymph full narrowly she eyde.

But Phoebe therewith sore was angered,
And sharply said; 'Goe Dame, goe seeke your boy,
Where you him lately left, in Mars his bed:
He comes not here, we scorne his foolish joy,
Ne lend we leisure to his idle toy:
But if I catch him in this company,
By Stygian lake I vow, whose sad annoy
The Gods doe dread, he dearely shall abye:
lie clip his wanton wings, that he no more shall fly.'

Whom when as Venus saw so sore displeased,
She inly sory was, and gan relent,
What she had said: so her she soone appeased,
With sugred words and gentle blandishment,
Which as a fountaine from her sweet lips went,
And welled goodly forth, that in short space
She was well pleased, and forth her damzels sent,
Through all the woods, to search from place to place,
If any tract of him or tydings they mote trace.

To search the God of love, her Nymphes she sent Throughout the wandring forrest every where:
And after them her selfe eke with her went
To seeke the fugitive, both farre and nere.
So long they sought, till they arrived were
In that same shadie covert, whereas lay
Faire Crysogone in slombry traunce whilere:
Who in her sleepe (a wondrous thing to say)
Unwares had borne two babes, as faire as springing day.

1. I.e., he may shoot his arrows disguised as one of Diana's hunting nymphs (also, he may shoot at them, causing them to fall in love).
2. Referring to Venus's love affair with Mars.
3. An oath sworn on the river Styx even the gods feared to break.
4. In making peace with her opposite, Venus here enacts one of her traditional roles, Concord.
Unwareds she them conceived, upwareds she bore:
She bore withouten paine, that she conceived
Withouten pleasure: ne her need implore
Lucinaes aide: which when they both perceived,
They were through wonder nigh of sense bereaved,

And gazing each on other, nought bespake:
At last they both agreed, her seeming grieved
Out of her heavy swowne not to awake,
But from her loving side the tender babes to take.

Up they them tooke, each one a babe uptooke,
And with them carried, to be fostered;
Dame Phoebe to a Nymph her babe betooke,
To be upbrought in perfect Maydenhed,
And of her selfe her name Belphoebe red:
But Venus hers thence farre away conveyd,
To be upbrought in goodly womanhed,
And in her little loves stead, which was strayd,
Her Amoretta cald, to comfort her dismayd.

She brought her to her joyous Paradize,
Where most she wonnes, when she on earth does dwel.

So faire a place, as Nature can devize:
Whether in Paphos, or Cytheron hill,
Or it in Gnidus be, I wote not well;
But well I wote by tryall,
All other pleasant places doth excell,
And called is by her lost loveres name,
The Gardin of Adonis, farre renownd by fame.

In that same Gardin all the goodly flowres,
Werewith dame Nature doth her beautifie,
And decks the girlonds of her paramoures,
Are fetcht: there is the first seminari,
Of all things, that are borne to live and die,
According to their kindes. Long worke it were,
Here to account the endless progenie
Of all the weedes, that bud and blossom there;
But so much as doth need, must needs be counted here.

It sited was in fruitfull soyle of old,
And girt in with two walles on either side;
The one of yron, the other of bright gold,
That none might thorough breake, nor over-stride:

And double gates it had, which opened wide,

5. "Lucina" is another name for Juno (or sometimes Diana) as goddess of childbed.
6. Because she takes the place of Cupid (Amor), she is named Amoretta, "a little love."
7. These are all shrines of Venus.
8. The beautiful young hunter Adonis, passionately loved by Venus, was, in the standard version of the myth, killed by a boar.
By which both in and out men moten8 pas;
Th' one faire and fresh, the other old and dride:
Old Genius9 the porter of them was,
Old Genius, the which a double nature has.

He letteth in, he letteth out to wend.°
All that to come into the world desire;
A thousand thousand naked babes attend
About him day and night, which doe require,
That he with fleshly weedes would them attire:1
Such as him list,1 such as eternall fate
Ordained hath, he clothes with sinfull mire,°
And sendeth forth to live in mortall state,
Till they againe returne backe by the hinder gate.

After that they againe returned beene,
They in that Gardin planted be againe;
And grow afresh, as° they had never seene
Fleshly corruption, nor mortall paine.
Some thousand yeares so doen they there remaine;
And then of him are clad with other hew,°
Or sent into the chaungefull world againe,
Till thither they returne, where first they grew:
So like a wheele around they runne from old to new.2

Ne° needs there Gardiner to set, or sow,
To plant or prune: for of their owne accord
All things, as they created were, doe grow,
And yet remember well the mightie word,
Which first was spoken by th' Almighty lord,
That bad them to increase and multiply:3
Ne° doe they need with water of the ford,°
Or of the clouds to moysten their roots dry;
For in themselves eternall moisture they imply.°

Infinite shapes of creatures there are bred,
And uncouth0 formes, which none yet ever knew,
And every sort is in a sundry0 bed
Set by it selfe, and ranckt in comely rew:°
Some fit for reasonable soules t' indew,4
Some made for beasts, some made for birds to weare,
And all the fruitfull spawne of fishes hew°

9. God of generation and so of the natural processes, birth and death. The Garden of Adonis is a myth of Spenser's devising.
1. I.e., the souls in their preexistent state ("naked babes") request to be clothed with flesh.
2. The original source for Spenser's myth of cyclic generation and reincarnation is Plato's Republic 10 (the myth of Er).
3. "And God saide unto them, Be fruitful, and multiply, and replenish the earth" (Genesis 1.28).
4. I.e., some of these shapes are fit for humans to assume. An echo of 1 Corinthians 15.39: "All flesh is not the same flesh: but there is one kind of flesh of men, another flesh of beasts, another flesh of fishes and another of birds."
In endlesse rancks along enraunged were,
That seem’d the Ocean could not containe them there.

Daily they grow, and daily forth are sent
Into the world, it to replenish more;
Yet is the stocke not lessened, nor spent,
But still remaines in everlasting store.\(^{abundance}\)

As it at first created was of yore.
For in the wide wombe of the world there lyes,
In hatefull darkenesse and in deepe horrore,
An huge eternall Chaos, which supplyes
The substances of natures fruitfull progenyes.

All things from thence doe their first being fetch,
And borrow matter, whereof they are made,
Which when as forme and feature it does ketch,\(^{enter}\)
Becomes a bodie, and dotth then invade\(^{ghastly}\)
The state of life, out of the griesly\(^{matter}\) shade.

That substance\(^{is it destroyed}\) is eterne, and bideth so,
Ne when the life decayes, and forme does fade,
Doth it consume,
But chaunged is, and often altred to and fro.

The substance is not chaunged, nor altered,
But’ th’ only forme\(^{except only the form}\) and outward fashion;
For every substance is conditioned
To change her hew,\(^{appearance}\) and sundry formes to don,
Meet\(^{suited}\) for her temper and complexion:
For formes are variable and decay,
By course of kind,\(^{drooping}\) and by occasion;
And that faire flowre of beautie fades away,
As doth the lilly fresh before the sunny ray.

Great enimy to it, and to all the rest,
That in the Gardin of Adonis springs,
Is wicked Time, who with his scyth address,\(^{armed}\)
Does mow the flowring herbes and goodly things,
And all their glory to the ground downe flings,
Where they doe wither, and are fowly mard:\(^{marred}\)
He flyes about, and with his flaggy\(^{drooping}\) wings
Beates downe both leaves and buds without regard,
Ne ever pittie may relent\(^{soften}\) his malice hard.

Yet pittie often did the gods relent,
To see so faire things mard, and spoyled quight:\(^{quite}\)
And their great mother Venus did lament
The losse of her deare brood, her deare delight;
Her hart was pierst with pittie at the sight,
When walking through the Gardin, them she spyde,
Yet no’t e\(^{could not / wrong}\) she find redresse for such despight.
For all that lives, is subject to that law:

All things decay in time, and to their end do draw.

But were it not, that Time their troubler is,
All that in this delightful! Gardin growes,
Should happie be, and have immortall blis;
For here all plentie, and all pleasure flowes,
And sweet love gentle fits\(^6\) amongst them throwes, \(\text{i.e., fits of passion}\)
Without fell\(^5\) rancor, or fond\(^5\) gealosie;
Franckly each paramour his leman knowes,\(^5\)
Each bird his mate, ne any does envie
Their goodly meriment, and gay felicitie.

There is continuall spring, and harvest there\(^6\)
Continuall, both meeting at one time:
For both the boughes doe laughing blossomes beare,
And with fresh colours decke the wanton Prime,\(^6\)
Which seeme to labour under their fruits lode:
The whiles the joyous birdes make their pastime
Emongst the shadie leaves, their sweet abode,
And their true loves without suspition\(^6\) tell abrode.

Right in the middest of that Paradise,
There stood a stately Mount, on whose round top
A gloomy\(^7\) grove of mirtle trees\(^7\) did rise,
Whose shadie boughes sharpe Steele did never lop,
Nor wicked beasts their tender buds did crop,
But like a girlond compassed the hight,
And from their fruitfull sides sweet gum did drop,
That all the ground with precious deaw bedight,
Threw forth most dainty odours, and most sweet delight.

And in the thickest covert of that shade,
There was a pleasant arbour, not by art,
But of the trees owne inclination\(^8\) made,
Which knitting their rancke\(^8\) braunches part to part,
With wanton yvie twyne entrayld athwart,\(^8\)
And Eglington, and Caprifole\(^8\) emong,
Fashiond above within their inmost part,
That nether Phoebus beams could through them throng,\(^9\)
Nor Aeolus\(^8\) sharp blast could worke them any wrong.

And all about grew every sort\(^9\) of flowre,
To which sad lovers were transformd of yore;

---

5. Openly each lover has intercourse with ('knowes') his mistress.
6. The coincidence of spring and autumn is characteristic of unfallen nature in Eden; other features of this description are drawn from a common literary topic, the locus amoenus (pleasant place).
7. Mirtle ('mirtle') trees were sacred to Venus.
8. 'Mount': with allusion to the mons veneris.
9. I.e., with luxuriant jvy entwined among them.
Fresh Hyacinthus, Phoebus paramoure,
And dearest love,\(^9\)
Foolish Narcisse, that likes the watry shore,
Sad Amaranthus, made a flowre but late,\(^9\) only recently
Sad Amaranthus, in whose purple gore
Me seemes I see Amintas wretched fate,
To whom sweet Poets verse hath given endlesse date.\(^1\)

46
There wont° faire Venus often to enjoy
Her deare Adonis joyous company,
And reape sweet pleasure of the wanton boy;
There yet, some say, in secret he does ly,
Lapped in flowres and pretiuous spycery,\(^b\) spices
By her hid from the world, and from the skill\(^o\) knowledge
Of Stygian Gods,\(^2\) which doe her love envy;
But she her selfe, when ever that she will,
Possesseth\(^i\) him, and of his sweetnesse takes her fill. i.e., sexually

47
And sooth\(^n\) it seemes they say: for he may° not
For ever die, and ever buried bee
In balefull night, where all things are forgot;
All\(^b\) be he subject to mortalitie,
Yet is eterne in mutabilitie,
And by succession made perpetuall,
Transformed oft, and chaunged diverslie:
For him the Father of all formes they call;\(^3\)
Therefore needs mote° he live, that living gives to all. must

48
There now he liveth in eternall bliss,
Joying\(^g\) his goddesse, and of her enjoyd:
Ne feareth he henceforth that foe of his,
Which with his cruell tuske him deadly cloyd:\(^g\) gored
For that wilde Bore, the which him once annoyd,\(^o\) injured
She firmely hath emprisoned for ay,
That her sweet love his malice mote\(^o\) avoyd,
In a strong rocky Cave, which is they say,
Hewen underneath that Mount, that none him losen\(^o\) may. set free

49
There now he lives in everlasting joy,
With many of the Gods in company,
Which thither haunt,\(^n\) and with the winged boy
Sporting himselfe in safe felicity:
Who when he\(^h\) hath with spoiles\(^o\) and cruelty

9. This quatrain is damaged—in rhyme pattern as well as in the truncated fourth line.
1. The purple Amaranthus is a symbol of immortality; the Greek name means “unfading.” By one poetic account, Amintas died for the love of Phillis and was transformed into the Amaranthus. Hyacinth and Narcissus were also transformed into flowers and thereby eternized.
2. Gods of the underworld (e.g., Pluto, Hecate, the Furies, Charon) who have a claim on Adonis in that in the usual formulation of the myth he was killed by the boar.
3. Adonis imposes successive forms on enduring substance and thereby brings living creatures into being.
4. Cupid, now restored to Venus.
Ransackt the world, and in the wofull harts
Of many wretches set his triumphes hye,
Thither resorts, and laying his sad darts
Aside, with faire Adonis playes his wanton parts.

And his true love faire Psyche with him playes,
Faire Psyche to him lately reconcyld,
With which his mother Venus her revyld,
And eke himselfe her cruelly exyld:
But now in stedfast love and happy state
She with him lives, and hath him borne a chyld,
Pleasure, that doth both gods and men agg rate,
Pleasure, the daughter of Cupid and Psyche late.

Hither great Venus brought this infant faire,
The younger daughter of Chrysogonee,
And unto Psyche with great trust and care
Committed her, yfostered to bee,
Who no lesse carefully her tendered,
Then her owne daughter Pleasure, to whom shee
Made her companion, and her lessoned
In all the lore of love, and goodly womanhead.

In which when she to perfect ripenesse grew,
Of grace and beautie noble Paragone,
She brought her forth into the worldes vew,
To be th’ ensample of true love alone,
To Faery court she came, where many one
Admyrd her goodly haveour,
His feeble hart wide launched with loves cruell wound.

But she to none of them her love did cast,
Save to the noble knight Sir Scudamore,
To whom her loving hart she linked fast
In faithfull love, t’ abide for evermore,
And for his dearest sake endured sore,
Her former love, and stedfast loyalty,
As ye may elsewhere read that ruefull history.

5. "Playes" suggests, as well, sexual play. Cupid abandoned Psyche when she disobeyed his command not to look on his face; she became his bride, and immortal, after enduring many severe trials imposed by Venus. The myth was often read as an allegory of the soul’s trials in this life before it gains heaven.
6. See canto 11, stanza 7 and note.
Cantos 7—10 Summary

Cantos 7 and 8 focus especially on the adventures of the beautiful maiden Florimell, who, always in flight from threatening males, narrowly escapes a series of disasters. Cantos 9 and 10 tell the story of the aged and fanatically jealous miser Malbecco, his lusty young wife, Hellenore, her elopement with the knight Paridell, Malbecco’s fruitless pursuit of them, and his eventual transformation into the allegorical figure of Jealousy.

Canto 11

Britomart chaceth Ollyphant, findes Scudamour distrest;
Assayes the house of Busyrane,
where Loves spoyles are exprest.

O Hatefull hellish Snake, what furie furst
Brought thee from balefull house of Proserpine,
Where in her bosome she thee long had nursed,
And fostered up with bitter milke of tine,
Fowle Gealosie, that turnest love divine
To joylesse dread, and mak' st the loving hart
With hatefull thoughts to languish and to pine,
And feed it selfe with selfe-consuming smart?

Of all the passions in the mind thou vilest art.

O let him far be banished away,
And in his stead let Love for ever dwell,
Sweet Love, that doth his golden wings embay
In blessed Nectar, and pure Pleasures well,
Untroubled of vile feare, or bitter fell.
And ye faire Ladies, that your kingdomes make
In th' harts of men, them governe wisely well,
And of faire Britomart ensample take,
That was as trew in love, as Turtle to her make.

Who with Sir Satyrane, as earst ye red,
Forth ryding from Malbecco's hostlesse hous,
Far off aspyde a young man, the which fled
From an huge Geaunt, that with hideous
And hatefull outrage long him chaced thus;
It was that Ollyphant, the brother deare
Of that Argante vile and vitious,
From whom the Squire of Dames was reft whylere;
This all as bad as she, and worse, if worse ought were.

7. Queen of Hades and consort of Pluto. The snake is an attribute of Envy, to which Jealousy is related; also the hair of the vengeful deities, the Furies, is made up of snakes.
8. The turtledove was a common symbol of matrimonial love and fidelity.
9. As you saw before (in 3.10, stanza 1). Satyrane had first appeared in 1.6, stanzas 20—48. 1. Ollyphant and Argante, brother and sister giants, lived in incest and practiced many other sexual evils. Satyrane rescued the exceptionally promiscuous Squire of Dames from Argante in 3.7, stanzas 37—38.
For as the sister did in feminine
And filthy lust exceede all woman kind,
So he surpassed his sex masculine,
In beastly use that I did ever find;
Whom when as Britomart beheld behind
The fearfull boy so greedily pursuwe,
She was emmoved in her noble mind,
T' employ her puissaunce to his reskew,
And pricked fiercely forward, where she him did vew.

Ne was Sir Satyrane her far behinde,
But with like fiercenesse did ensewe the chace:
Whom when the Gyaunt saw, he soone resinde his former suit, and from them fled apace;
They after both, and boldly bad him bace,
And each did strive the other to out-goe,
But he them both outran a wondrous space,
For he was long, and swift as any Roe,
And now made better speed, t' escape his feared foe.

It was not Satyrane, whom he did feare,
But Britomart the flowre of chastity;
For he the powre of chast hands might not beare,
But alwayes did their dread encounter fly:
And now so fast his feet he did apply,
That he has gotten to a forrest neare,
Where he is shrowded in security.
The wood they enter, and search every where,
They searched diversely, so both divided were.

Faire Britomart so long him followed,
That she at last came to a fountaine sheare,
By which there lay a knight all wallowed lying prostrate
Upon the grassy ground, and by him neare
His haberjeon, his helmet, and his speare;
A little off, his shield was rudely throwne,
On which the winged boy in colours cleare depicted was, full easie to be knowne,
And he thereby, where ever it in field was showne.

His face upon the ground did groveling ly,
As if he had bene sloombring in the shade,
That the brave Mayd would not for courtesy,
Out of his quiet slomber him abrade,
Nor seeme too suddeinly him to invade;
Still as she stood, she heard with grievous throb ever

2. The knight's shield implies that he is the Sir Scudamore (Italian scudo + amore 'shield of love') mentioned in the prefatory quatrain.
Him grone, as if his hart were peepees made,
And with most painefull pangs to sigh and sob,
That pitty did the Virgins hart of patience rob.

At last forth breaking into bitter plaintes
He said, "O soveraigne Lord that sit'st on hye,
And raignst in blis emongst thy blessed Saintes,
How suffrest thou such shamefull crueltie,
So long unwreaked of thine enimy?
Or hast thou, Lord, of good mens cause no heed?
Or doth thy justice sleepe, and silent ly?

What booteeth then the good and righteous deed, what is the vise of
If goodnesse find no grace, nor righteousnesse no meed?"

"If good find grace, and righteousnesse reward,
Why then is Amoret in captive band,
Sith that more bounteous creature never fared
On foot, upon the face of living land?
Or if that heavenly justice may withstand
The wrongfull outrage of unrighteous men,
Why then is Busirane with wicked hand
Suffred, these seven monethes day in secret den
My Lady and my love so cruelly to pen?

"My Lady and my love is cruelly pend
In dolefull darkenesse from the vew of day,
Whilest deadly torments do her chast brest rend,
And the sharpe Steele doth rive her hart in tway,
All for she Scudamore will not deny.
Yet thou vile man, vile Scudamore art sound,
Ne canst her ayde, ne canst her foe dismay;
Unworthy wretch to tread upon the ground,
For whom so faire a Lady feele so sore a wound."

There an huge heape of singulfes did oppresse
His strugling soule, and swelling throbs empeach
His foltring toung with pangs of drrerinesse,
Choking the remnant of his plaintife speach,
As if his dayes were come to their last reach.
Which when she heard, and saw the ghastly fit,
Threatning into his life to make a breach,
Both with great ruth and terrour she was smit,
Fearing least from her cage the wearie soule would flit.

Tho stooping downe she him amoved light;
Who therewith somewhat starting, up gan looke,
And seeing him behind a straunger knight,
Whereas no living creature he mistooke.

3. His name associates him with Busiris, an Egyptian king famous for his cruelty and identified with the Pharaoh of Exodus; hence, he is a symbol of tyranny.
With great indignaunce he that sight forsooke,
And downe againe himselfe disdainfully
Abjecting, th' earth with his faire forhead stooke:
Which the bold Virgin seeing, gan apply
Fit medicne to his griefe, and spake thus courteously.

"Ah gentle knight, whose deepe conceived griefe
Well seemes t' exceede the powre of patience,
Yet if that heavenly grace some good reliefe
You send, submit you to high providence,
And ever in your noble hart prepense,
That all the sorrow in the world is lesse,
Then vertues might, and values\textsuperscript{c} confidence,
For who nill\textsuperscript{c} bide the burden of distresse,
Must not here thinke to live: for life is wretchednesse.

"Therefore, faire Sir, do comfort to you take,
And freely read,\textsuperscript{c} what wicked felon so
Hath outraged you, and thrald\textsuperscript{c} your gentle make.
Perhaps this hand may helpe to ease your woe,
And wreake\textsuperscript{c} your sorrow on your cruell foe,
At least it faire endevour will apply.\textsuperscript{c}
Those feeling wordes so neare the quicke\textsuperscript{c} did goe,
That up his head he reared easily,\textsuperscript{c}
And leaning on his elbow, these few wordes let fly.

"What boots it plaine, that cannot be redrest,
And sow vaine sorrow in a fruitlesse eare,
Sith powre of hand, nor skill of learned brest
Ne worldly price cannot redeeme my deare,
Out of her thraidome\textsuperscript{c} and continuall feare?
For he the tyrant, which her hath in ward\textsuperscript{c}
By strong enchauntments and blacke Magicke leare,
Hath in a dungeon deepe her close embard,
And many dreadfull feends hath pointed to her gard.
\textsuperscript{c}loved\textsuperscript{c} imprisoned\textsuperscript{c}

"There he tormenteth her most terribly,
And day and night afflicts with mortall paine,
Because to yield him love she doth deny,
Once to me yold,\textsuperscript{c} not to be yold againe:
But yet by torture he would her constraine
Love to conceive in her disdainfull brest;
Till so she do, she must in doole\textsuperscript{e} remaine,
Ne may by living meanes be thence relest:
What boots it then to plaine, that cannot be redrest?"

With this sad hersall\textsuperscript{c} of his heavy stresse,\textsuperscript{c}
The warlike Damzell was empassiond sore,

4. What is the use of complaining for what cannot be helped?
5. Scudamore’s courtship and winning of Amoret as his love is recounted in 4.10.
And said, 'Sir knight, your cause is nothing lesse,
Then is your sorrow, certes if not more;\(^6\)
For nothing so much pitty doth implore,
As gentle Ladies helplesse misery.
But yet, if please ye listen to my lore,\(^7\)
I will with prove of last extremity,\(^7\)
Deliver her fro thence, or with her for you dy.'

"Ah gentlest\(^8\) knight alive," said Scudamore,
"What huge heroicke magnanimity\(^6\)
Dwels in thy bounteous brest? what couldst thou more,
If she were thine, and thou as now am I?
O spare thy happy dayes, and them apply
To better boot,\(^9\) but let me dye, that ought;
More is more losse: one is enough to dy.'
"Life is not lost," said she, "for which is bought Endlesse renownm, that more then death is to be sought.'

Thus she at length perswaded him to rise,
And with herwend,\(^9\) to see what new successse
Mote him befall upon new enterprise;
His armes, which he had vowed to disprofesse,\(^9\)
She gathered up and did about him dresse,
And his forwardred steed unto him got:
So forth they both yfere\(^9\) make their progresse,
And march not past the mountenaunce of a shot,
Till they arrived, whereas their purpose they did plot.\(^9\)

There they dismounting, drew their weapons bold
And stoutly came unto the Castle gate;
Whereas no gate they found, them to withhold,
Nor ward\(^9\) to wait at morne and evening late,
But in the Porch, that did them sore amate,\(^9\)
A flaming fire, ymixt with smouldry smoke,
And stinking Sulphure, that with griesly hate
And dreadfull horrour did all entraunce choke,
Enforced them their forward footing to revoke.\(^9\)

Greatly thereat was Britomart dismayd,
Ne in that stownd\(^9\) wist, how her selfe to beare;
For daunger vaine it were, to have assayd\(^9\)
That cruell element, which all things feare,
Ne none can suffer to approchen neare:
And turning backe to Scudamour, thus sayd;
"What monstrous enmity provoke\(^9\) we heare,\(^9\)
\(^6\) I.e., certainly ('certus') your cause is worthy of your great sorrow, or even more.
\(^7\) I.e., at the extreme peril of my life.
\(^8\) Nobility of mind, which produces the highest virtues and the greatest deeds.
\(^9\) I.e., they went no farther than the distance of a bow shot before they arrived at the place they purposed to go.
\(^1\) I.e., nor in that trouble ('stownd') did she know ('wist') what to do.
Foolhardy as th’ Earthes children, the which made Battell against the Gods? so we a God invade.

'Daunger without discretion to attempt,
Inglorious and beastlike is: therefore Sir knight Aread° what course of you is safest dempt,“
“This is,” quoth he, “the dolorous despight,° Which earst° to you I playnd:
This fire be quencht by any wit or might,
Ne yet by any means remov’d away,
So mighty be th’ enchauntments, which the same do stay.

What is there else, but cease these fruitlesse paines,
And leave me to my former languishing?
Faire Amoret must dwell in wicked chaines,
And Scudamore here dye with sorrowing.

"Perdy° not so,” said she, “for shamefull thing
It were t’ abandon noble chevisaunce,°
For shew of perill, without venturing:
Rather let try extremities of chaunce,
Then enterprised prayse for dread to disavaunce.’

Therewith resolv’d to prove her utmost might,
Her ample shield she threw before her face,
And her swords point directing forward right,
Assayld° the flame, the which efsoones° gave place,
And did it selfe divide with equall space,°
That through she passed; as a thunder bolt Perceth the yielding ayre, and doth displace
The soring clouds into sad showres ymolt;°
So to her yold the flames, and did their force revolt.’

Whom whenas Scudamour saw past the fire,
Safe and untoucht, he likewise gan assay,°
With greedy will, and envious desire,
And bad° the stubborne flames to yield him way:
But cruel Mulciber° would not obey
His threatfull pride, but did the more augment
His mighty rage, and with imperious sway
Him forst (maulgre)° his fiercenesse to relent/
And backe retire, all scorcht and pitifully brent.

With huge impatience he inly swelt,°
More for great sorrow, that he could not pas,
Then for the burning torment, which he felt,
That with fell woodnesse he effierced was,°

2. I.e., we are like the Titans who dared to do battle against the Olympian gods.
3. I.e., it is better to chance extreme danger than retreat from praiseworthy enterprises because of fear.
4. I.e., he was maddened with fierce fury.
And wilfully him throwing on the gras,
Did beat and bounse his head and breast full sore; thump
The whiles the Championesse now entred has
The utmost rowme, and past the formost outermost room/foremost dore
The utmost rowme, abounding with all precious store.

For round about, the wals yclothed were tapestries
With goodly arras of great majesty,
Woven with gold and silke so close and nere, tight
That the rich metall lurked privily, secretly
As faining to be hid from envious eye; enjoying
Yet here, and there, and every where unwares unexpectedly
It shewed it selfe, and shone unwillingly;
Like a discouled Snake, whose hidden snares multicolored
Through the greene gras his long bright burnisht backe declares.

And in those Tapets weren fashioned
Many faire pourtraicts, and many a faire feate, also/recount
And all of love, and all of lusty-hed,
As seemed by their semblaunt did entreat; also
And eke all Cupids warres they did repeate, formerly
And cruell battels, which he whilome fought
Gainst all the Gods, to make his empire great;
Besides the huge massacres, which he wrought
On mighty kings and cesars, into thraldome brought. caesars

Therein was writ, how often thundring Jove woven
Had felt the point of his hart-percing dart,
And leaving heavens kingdome, here did rove
In straungue disguize, to slake his scalding smart;
Now like a Ram, faire Helle to pervert,
Now like a Rull, Europa to withdraw:
lifelike
Ah, how the fearefull Ladies tender hart
Did lively seeme to tremble, when she saw lover's
The huge seas under her t' obey her servaunts law.

Soone after that into a golden showre
Him selfe he chaunged faire Danae to vew,
And through the roofe of her strong brassen towre
Did raine into her lap an hony dew;
The whiles her foolish garde, that little knew gout
Of such deceite, kept th' yron dore fast bard,
And watcht, that none should enter nor issew;

5. I.e., the pictures ("pourtraicts") seemed, by their appearance ("semblaunt"), to treat entirely of deeds of love and merriment ("lusty-hed").
6. A golden ram (not specifically identified in legend as Jove) came to carry away ("pervert") Helle from the fury of her stepmother Ino; Jove assumed the shape of a bull to seduce Europa and carried her over the seas.
7. In another part of the tapestry ("soone after") Jove is shown as a shower of gold, impregnating Danae.
Vaine was the watch, and bootlesse all the ward, useless
Whenas the God to golden hew him selfe shape transfard.

32
Then was he turnd into a snowy Swan, loving
To win faire Leda to his lovely trade:° ingenuity
O wondrouses skill, and sweet wit° of the man,
That her in daffadillies sleeping made,
From scorching heat her daintie limbes to shade:
Whiles the proud Bird ruffling° his fethers wyde,
And brushing° his faire brest, did her invade;
She slept, yet twixt her eyelids closely spyde,
How towards her he rusht, and smiled at his pryde.° sexual desire

33
Then shewd it, how the Thebane Semelee
Deceived of gealous Juno, did require
To see him in his soveraigne majestee, longer
Armd with his thunderbolts and lightning fire,
Whence dearely she with death bought her desire.°

But faire Alcmena better match did make,
Joying his love in likenf se more entire;
Three nights in one, they say, that for her sake
He then did put, her pleasures lenger to partake.

34
Twise was he seene in soaring Eagles shape, yielding
And with wide wings to beat the buxome° ayre,
Once, when he with Asterie did scape,
Againe, when as the Trojane boy so faire
He snatcht from Ida hill, and with him bare:°
Wondrous delight it was, there to behould,
How the rude Shepheards after him did stare,
Trembling through feare, least down he fallen should,
And often to him calling, to take surer hould.

35
In Satyres shape Antiopa he snatcht:
And like a fire, when he Aegin' assayd:
A shepheard, when Mnemosyne he catcht:
And like a Serpent to the Thracian mayd.°
Whiles thus on earth great Jove these pageaunts playd,
The winged boy did thrust into° his throne,
And scoffing, thus unto his mother sayd,
"Lo now the heavens obey to me alone,
And take me for their Jove, while Jove to earth is gone."

8. Jove became a swan to seduce Leda.
9. Juno tricked Semele into having Jove visit her in all his power; she was burned to death by lightning and thunderbolts.
1. Jove visited Alcmena in the likeness of her husband Amphitryon and made that one night the length of three.
2. Asterie changed herself into a quail to avoid Jove’s advances, but he captured her as an eagle; in that form he also snatched Ganymede, who became cupbearer to the gods.
3. Jove came as a satyr to Antiope; in fire to Aegina; as a shepherd to Mnemosyne, goddess of memory (who bore the Nine Muses); and as a serpent to Proserpina, "the Thracian maid."
And thou, faire Phoebus, in thy colours bright
Wast there enwoven, and the sad distresse,
In which that boy thee plonged, for despight,
That thou bewrayedst his mothers wantonnesse,
When she with Mars was meynt in joyfulnesse:
For thy he thild thee with a leaden dart,
Therefore pierced to love faire Daphne, which thee loved lesse:
Lesse she thee loved, then was thy just desart,
Yet was thy love her death, and her death was thy smart.

So lovedst thou the lusty Hyacinct,
So lovedst thou the faire Coronis deare:
Yet both are of thy haplesse hand extinct,
Yet both in flowres do live, and love thee beare,
The one a Paunce, the other a sweet breare:
For griefe whereof, ye mote have lively seene
The God himselfe rending his golden heare,
And breaking quite his gyrlond ever greene,
With other signes of sorrow and impatient teene.

Both for those two, and for his owne deare sonne,
The sonne of Climen he did repent,
Who bold to guide the charret of the Sunne,
Himselfe in thousand peeces fondly rent,
And all the world with flashing fier brent;
So like, that all the walles did seeme to flame.
Yet cruel Cupid, not herewith content,
Forst him eftsornes to follow other game,
And love a Shepheards daughter for his dearest Dame.

He loved Isse for his dearest Dame,
And for her sake her cattell fed a while,
And for her sake a cowheard vile became,
The servant of Admetus cowheard vile,
Whiles that from heaven he suffered exile.
Long were to tell each other lovely fit,
Now like a Lyon, hunting after spoile,
Now like a Stag, now like a faulcon flit:
All which in that faire arras was most lively writ.

4. Two stories are combined: Apollo’s punishment for revealing Venus’s adultery with Mars was “the sad distresse” of doting on Leucothoe; later he chased Daphne, who escaped by metamorphosis into a laurel tree. Cupid’s lead-tipped arrows produce unhappiness in love.
5. Apollo accidentally killed his lover Hyacinth at a game of quoits, and transformed him into a flower (“paunce,” pansy); he killed Coronis out of jealousy, but her transformation to a sweetbriar seems to be Spenser’s invention.
6. Foolishly tore apart. Phaethon, son of Apollo and Climen, extracted permission to drive the chariot of the Sun through the heavens; unable to control the horses, he killed himself and almost burned up the world.
7. Two stories are combined: Apollo disguising himself as a shepherd to gain Isse, and serving Admetus, king of Pheres in Thessaly, as a cowherd.
Next unto him was Neptune pictured,
In his divine resemblance wondrous lyke:
His face was rugged, and his hoarie hed
Dropped with brackish deaw; his three-forkt Pyke
He stearnly shooke, and therewith fierce did stryke
The raging billowes, that on every syde
They trembling stood, and made a long broad dyke,°
That his swift charet might have passage wyde,
Which foure great Hippodames did draw in temewise tyde.°

His sea-horses did seeme to snort amayne,°
And from their nosethrilles blow the brynie streame,
That made the sparckling waves to smoke agayne,
And flame with gold, but the white fomy creame,
Did shine with silver, and shoot forth his beame.
The God himselfe did pensive seeme and sad,
And hong adowne his head, as° he did dreame:
For privy love his brest empierced had,
Ne ought but deare Bisaltis ay° could make him glad.

He loved eke° Iphimedia deare,
And Aeolus faire daughter Arne hight,°
For whom he turnd him selfe into a Steare,°
And fed on fodder, to beguile her sight.
Also to win Deucalions daughter bright,
He turnd him selfe into a Dolphin fayre;
And like a winged horse he tooke his flight,
To snaky-locke Medusa to repayre,°
On whom he got faire Pegasus, that flitteth in the ayre.°

Next Saturne was, (but who would ever weene,°
That sullein Saturne ever weend° to love?
Yet love is sullein,° and Saturnlike seene,
As he did for Erigone it prove,)
That to a Centaure did him selfe transmove.
So prooved it eke that gracious° God of wine,
When for to compasse° Philliras hard love,
He turnd himselfe into a fruitfull vine,
And into her faire bosome made his grapes decline.°

8. Neptune, god of the sea, is here portrayed with his trident ("three-forkt Pyke") and riding in a chariot ("charet") drawn by a team of four sea horses ("Hippodames").
9. In Greek myth it was Bisalts's daughter Theophane who made Neptune happy: he made love to her in the form of a ram.
1. Neptune came to Iphimedia as a flowing river, to Arne as a steer, and to Deucalion's daughter Melantho as a dolphin.
2. Neptune ravished Medusa in Minerva's temple, for which cause her hair was turned to snakes; she gave birth to the winged horse, Pegasus.
3. Hang down. Saturn, associated with melancholy, is not usually portrayed as a lover. Spenser here transposes two myths: Saturn loved Philyra ("Philirias") not Erigone, from which union came the Centaur; Bacchus ("God of wine") tricked Erigone with a false bunch of grapes.
Long were to tell the amorous assays, assaults
And gentle pangeloes, with which he made meeke, i.e., Cupid
The mighty Mars, to learne his wanton playes:
How oft for Venus, and how often eek also
For many other Nymphes he sore did shreek,
With womanish teares, and with unwarlike smarts, pains
Privily moystening his horrid cheek, secretly / bristly
There was he painted full of burning darts, arrows
And many wide woundes launched through his inner parts. torn

Ne did he spare (so cruell was the Elfe)
His owne deare mother, (ah why should he so?)
Ne did he spare sometime to pricke himselfe,
That he might tast the sweet consuming woe,
Which he had wrought to many others moe.

But to declare the mournfull Tragedyes,
And spoiles, wherewith he all the ground did strow,
More eath to number, with how many eyes easy
High heaven beholds sad lovers nightly theeveryes.

Kings Queenes, Lords Ladies, Knights and Damzels gentle
Were heaped together with the vulgar sort,
And mingled with the raskall rablement, rabble, masses
Without respect of person or of port,
To shew Dan Cupids powre and great effort:
And round about a border was entrayld, woven
Of broken bowes and arrowes shivered short,
And a long bloudy river through them rayld,
So lively and so like, that living sence it fayld.

And at the upper end of that faire rowme,
There was an Altar built of pretious stone,
Of passing valew, and of great renowne, surpassing
On which there stood an Image all alone,
Of massy gold, which with his owne light shone;
And wings it had with sundry colours dight, adorned
More sundry colours, then the proud Pavone,
Beares in his boasted fan, or Iris bright, goddess of the rainbow
When her discoulourd bow she spreds through heaven bright.

Blindfold he was, and in his cruell fist
A mortall bow and arrowes keene did hold, deadly
With which he shot at randon, when him list, when it pleased him
Some headed with sad lead, some with pure gold.
(Ah man beware, how thou those darts behold)
A wounded Dragon under him did ly,
Whose hideous tayle his left foot did enfold,
And with a shaft was shot through either eye,
That no man forth might draw, ne no man remedy.

And underneath his feet was written thus,
Unto the Victor of the Gods this bee:
And all the people in that ample hous
Did to that image bow their humble knee,
And oft committed fowle Idolatree.

That wondrous sight faire Britomart amazed,
Ne seeing could her wonder satisfie,
But ever more and more upon it gazed,
The whiles the passing brightnes her fraile sences dazed. surpassing

Tho as she backward cast her busie eye, then i.e., behind the statue
To search each secret of that goodly sted, place
Over the dore thus written she did spye
Be bold: she oft and oft it over-red,
Yet could not find what sence it figured:
But what so were therein or writ or ment,
She was no whit thereby discouraged
From prosecuting of her first intent,
But forward with bold steps into the next roome went.

Much fairer, then the former, was that roome,
And richlier by many partes arayd:
For not with arras made in painefull loome,
But with pure gold it all was overlayd,
Wrought with wilde Antickes, which their follies playd,
As if they living were:
A thousand monstrous formes therein were made,
Such as false love doth oft upon him weare,
For love in thousand monstrous formes doth oft appeare.

And all about, the glistring walles were hong
With warlike spoiles, and with victorious prayes,
Of mighty Conquerours and Captaines strong,
Which were whilome captived in their days
To cruel love, and wrought their owne decayes:
Their swerds and speres were broke, and hauberques rent;
And their proud girlonds of tryumphant bays were Troden in dust with fury insolent,
To shew the victors might and mercilesse intent.

8. The dragon is traditionally a guard, symbolic of vigilance.
9. I.e., much ("by many parts") more richly deco-raised ("arayd").

1. Grotesque statues.
2. Coats of mail. "Swerds": swords.
3. Wreaths of laurel ("bays") were traditionally awarded to great military conquerors.
The warlike Mayde beholding earnestly
The goodly ordinance of this rich place,
Did greatly wonder, ne could satisfy
Her greedy eyes with gazing a long space,
But more she servaild that no footings trace,
Nor wight appear'd, but wasteful emptiness,
And solemne silence over all that place:
Strange thing it seem'd, that none was to possesse
So rich purveyance, ne them keepe with carefulnesse.

And as she lookt about, she did behold,
How over that same dore was likewise writ,
Be bold, be bold, and every where
That much she muz'd, yet could not construe it
By any ridling skill, or commune wit.
At last she spyde at that roomes upper end,
Another yron dore, on which was writ,
Be not too bold; whereto though she did bend
Her earnest mind, yet wist not what it might intend.

Thus she there waited untill eventyde,
Yet living creature none she saw appeare:
And now sad shadowes gan the world to hyde,
From mortall vew, and wrap in darkenesse dreare;
Yet nould she d' off her weary armes, for feare
Of secret daunger, ne let sleepe oppresse
Her heavy eyes with natures burdein deare,
But drew her selfe aside in sickernesse,
And her welpointed weapons did about her dresse.

Canto 12

The maske of Cupid, and th' enchaunted
Chamber are displayd,
Whence Britomart redeemes faire
Amoret, through charmes decayd.

Tho when as chearelesse Night ycovered had Faire heaven with an universall cloud,
That every wight dismayd with darknesse sad,
In silence and in sleepe themselves did shroud,
She heard a shrilling Trompet sound aloud,
Signe of nigh battell, or got victory;
Nought therewith daunted was her courage proud,
But rather stird to cruell enmity,
Expecting ever, when some foe she might descry.

4. Her well-appointed (and/or sharp) weapons she drew ("did dresse") about her.
5. This episode resembles a court masque with allegorical personages and emblematic clothing and props. It is also a "Triumph" of Cupid, who is preceded and followed by the allegorical qualities that attend on his reign and who displays Amoret as the spoils of his victory, the victim of the attitudes toward love which he promotes.
With that, an hideous storme of wilde arose,
With dreadfull thunder and lightning atwixt,
And an earthquake, as if it straighte would lose
The worlds foundations from his centre fixt;
A direfull stench of smoke and sulphure mixt
Ensewed, whose noyance fill'd the fearfull sted,
From the fourth house of night untill the sixt:
Yet the bold Britonesse was nought ydred,
Though much emmoved, but stedfast still persevered.

All suddenly a stormy whirlwind blew
Throughout the house, that clapped every dore,
With which that yron wicket open flew,
As it with mightie levers had bene tore:
And forth issewd, as on the ready flore
Of some Theatre, a grave personage,
That in his hand a branch of laurell bore,
Yclad in costly garments, fit for tragicke Stage.

Proceeding to the midst, he still did stand,
As if in mind he somewhat had to say,
And to the vulgar beckning with his hand,
In signe of silence, as to heare a play,
By lively actions he gan bewray
Some argument of matter passioned;
Which doen, he backe retyred soft away,
And passing by, his name discovered.

The noble Mayd, still standing all this vewd,
And merveild at his strange intendiment;
With that a joyous fellowship issewd
Of Minstrals, making goodly meriment,
With wanton Bardes, and Rymers impudent,
All which together sung full chearfully
A lay of loves delight, with sweet concent;
After whom marcht a jolly company,
In manner of a maske, enraged orderly.

The whiles a most delitious harmony,
In full straunge notes was sweetly heard to sound,
That the rare sweetnesse of the melody
The feeble senses wholly did confound,
And the fraile soule in deepe delight nigh dround:
And when it ceast, shrill trompetts loud did Bray,
That their report did farre away rebound,
And when they ceast, it gan againe to play.

The whiles the maskers marched forth in trim array.

The first was Fancy,° like a lovely boy,
Of rare aspect, and beautie without peer;
Matchable either to that ympe of Troy,¹
Whom Jove did love, and chose his cup to beare,
Or that same daintie lad, which was so deare
To great Alcides,² that when as he dyde,
He wailed womanlike with many a teare,
And every wood, and every valley wyde
He fild with Hylas name; the Nymphes eke° Hylas cryde

His garment neither was of silke nor say,³
But painted plumes, in goodly order dight,
Like as the sunburnt Indians⁴ do aray
Their tawney bodies, in their proudest plight:
As those same plumes, so seemd he vaine and light,
That by his gate might easily appeare;

For still⁵ he far'd as dauncing in delight,
And in his hand a windy⁶ fan did beare,
That in the idle aire he mov'd still here and there.

And him beside marcht amorous Desyre,
Who seemd of riper yeares, then th' other Swaine,⁷
Yet was that other swayne this elders syre,
And gave him being, commune to them twaine:
His garment was disguised very vaine,³
And his embrodered Bonet sat awry;
Twist both his hands few sparkes he close did straine,⁴
Which still he blew, and kindled busily,
That soone they life conceiv'd, and forth in flames did fly.

Next after him went Doubt, who was yclad
In a discoulour'd⁶ cote, of straunge disguise,
That at his backe a brode Capuccio had,
And sleeves dependant Albanese-wyse:⁷
He lookt askew with his mistrustfull eyes,
And nicely⁸ trode, as th' thornes lay in his way,
Or that the flore to shrinke he did avyse,
And on a broken reed he still did stay
His feeble steps, which shrunke, when hard theron he lay.

With him went Daunger, clothed in ragged weed,
Made of Beares skin, that him more dreadfull made,
Yet his owne face was dreadfull, ne did need
Straunge horrour, to deforme his griesly shade;
A net in th' one hand, and a rustie blade
In th' other was, this Mischief, that Mishap;
With th' one his foes he threatened to invoke,
With th' other he his friends ment to enwrap:
For whom he could not kill, he practizd to entrap.

Next him was Feare, all arm'd from top to toe,
Yet thought himselfe not safe enough thereby,
But feard each shadow moving to and fro,
And his owne armes when glittering he did spy,
Or clashing heard, he fast away did fly,
As ashes pale of hew, and wingyheeld;
And evermore on Daunger fixt his eye,
Gainst whom he alwaies bent a brasen shield,
Which his right hand unarmed fearefully did wield.

With him went Hope in rancke, a handsome Mayd,
Of chearefull looke and lovely to behold;
In silken samite she was light arayd,
And her faire lockes were woven up in gold;
She alway smyld, and in her hand did hold
An holy water Sprinkle, dipt in deowe,
With which she sprinckled favours manifold,
On whom she list, and did great liking sheowe,
Great liking unto many, but true love to feowe.

And after them Dissemblance, and Suspect
Marcht in one rancke, yet an unequall paire:
For she was gentle, and of milde aspect,
Courteous to all, and seeming debonaire,
Goodly adorned, and exceeding faire:
Yet was that all but painted, and purloynd,
And her bright browes were deckt with borrowed haire:
Her deedes were forged, and her words false coynd,
And alwaies in her hand two clewes of silke she twynd.

5. I.e., he trod with great precision and care ("nicely") as if thorns lay in his path or as if he perceived ("did avyse") the floor to give way ("shrunke"). His cane was a broken reed, which collapsed ("shrunke") when he leaned on it.
6. Danger's face was terrifying, needing nothing external ("strange") to further deform his horrid ("griesly") appearance. His net and bloodstained ("rustie") knife indicate the kinds of perils he signifies.
7. I.e., he was pale as ashes and fled as if his heels had wings.
8. Aspergillum, a brush to sprinkle holy water.
9. Dissimulation and Suspcion.
But he was foule, ill favoured, and grim,
Under his eyebrows looking still askaunce;
And ever as Dissemblance laught on him,
He lowrd° on her with daungerous° eyeglaunce;
Shewing his nature in his countenance;
His rolling eyes did never rest in place,
But walkt° each where, for feare of hid mischaunce,
Holding a lattice° still before his face,
Through which he still did peepe, as forward he did pace.

Next him went Griefe, and Fury matcht yfere;°
Griefe all in sable sorrowfully clad,
Downe hanging his dull head, with heavy chere,"
Yet inly being more, then° seeming sad:
A paire of Pincers in his hand he had,
With which he pinched people to the hart,
In wilfull languor° and consuming smart,°
Dying each day with inward wounds of dolours dart.

But Fury was full ill appareiled
In rags, that naked nigh° she did appeare,
With ghastly lookes and dreadfull drerihed;
For from her backe her garments she did teare,
And from her head oft rent her snarled heare:
In her right hand a firebrand she did tosse°
About her head, still roming here and there;
As a dismayed° Deare in chace embost,°
Forgetfull of his safety, hath his right way lost.

After them went Displeasure and Pleasance,
He looking lompish° and full sullein sad,"
And hanging downe his heavy countenance;
She chearefull fresh and full of joyance glad,
As if no sorrow she ne felt ne drad;°
That evill matched paire they seemd to bee:
An angry Waspe th' one in a vialiad,
Th' other in hers an hony-lady Bee;°
Thus marched these sixe couples forth in faire degree.

After all these there marcht a most faire Dame,
Led of two grysie° villeins, th' one Despight,
The other cleped° Cruelty by name;°
She dolefull Lady, like a dreary Spright,°
Cald by strong charmes out of eternall night,
Had deaths owne image figurd in her face,
Full of sad signes, fearefull to living sight;

1. Honey bee or honey-laden bee.
2. Typical attributes of the lady in the world of courtly love and love sonnets: her "cruelty" causes her to reject her lover with scorn ("despight").
Yet in that horror shewd a seemely grace,
And with her feeble feet did move a comely pace.

Her brest all naked, as nett° ivory,
Without adorne° of gold or silver bright,
Wherewith the Craftesman wonts it beautify,
Of her dew honour was despoyled quight,
And a wide wound therein (O ruefull sight)
Entrenched deepe with knife accursed keene,
Yet freshly bleeding forth her fainting spright,
(The worke of cruel hand) was to be seene,
That dyde in sanguine° red her skin all snowy cleene

At that wide orifice her trembling hart
Was drawne forth, and in silver basin layd,
Quite through transfixed with a deadly dart,
And in her bloud yet steeming fresh embayd:
And those two villeins, which her steps upstayd,
When her weake feete could scarcely her sustaine,
And fading vitall powers gan to fade,
Her forward still with torture did constraine,
And evermore encreased her consuming paine.

Next after her the winged God himself
Came riding on a Lion ravenous,
Taught to obay the menage° of that Elfe,
That man and beast with powre imperious
Subdeweth to his kingdome tyrannous:
His blindfold eyes he bade° a while unbind,
That his proud spoyle of that same dolorous
Faire Dame he might behold in perfect kind;
Which seene, he much rejoyced in his cruell mind

Of which full proud, himselfe up rearing hye,
He looked round about with sterne disdaine;
And did survay his goodly company:
And marshalling the evill ordered traine,
With that the darts which his right hand did straine,
Full dreadfully he shooke that all did quake,
And clapt on hie his coulourd winges twaine,
That all his many° it affraide did make:
Tho blinding° him againe, his way he forth did take.

Behinde him was Reproch, Repentance, Shame;
Reproch the first, Shame next, Repent behind:
Repentance feeble, sorrowfull, and lame:
Reproch despightfull, careless, and unkind;
Shame most ill favourd, bestiall, and blind:

3. I.e., without the jewels that usually beautify her breast.
4. I.e., full of scorn, careless of where his attacks fall, unnatural.
Shame lowrd,° Repentance sigh’d, Reproch did scould; scowled
Reproch sharpe stings, Repentance whips entwind.
Shame burning brond-yrns° in her hand did hold: branding irons
All three to each unlike, yet all made in one mould.

And after them a rude confused rout
Of persons flockt, whose names is hard to read:°
Emongst them was sterne Strife, and Anger stout,°
Unquiet Care, and fond° Unthriftihead,
Lewd° Losse of Time, and Sorrow seeming dead,
Inconstant Chaunge, and false Disloyaltie,
Consuming Riotise,° and guilty Dread debauchery
Of heavenly vengeance, faint Infirmitie,
Vile Povertie, and lastly Death with infamie.

There were full many moe° like maladies,
Whose names and natures I note readen well;°
So many moe, as there be phantasies
In wavering wemens wit, that none can tell,°
Or paines in love, or punishments in hell;
All which disguised marcht in masking wise,
About the chamber with that Damozell,
And then returned, having marched thrise,
Into the inner roome, from whence they first did rise.

So soone as they were in, the dore streight way
Fast locked, driven with that stormy blast,
Which first it opened; and bore all away.
Then the brave Maid, which all this while was plast°
In secret shade, and saw both first and last,
Issewed° forth, and went unto the dore,
To enter in, but found it locked fast:
It vaine she thought with rigorous uprore°
For to efforce, when charmes had closed it afore.

Where force might not availe, there sleights and art
She cast° to use, both fit for hard emprize;°
For thy° from that same roome not to depart
Till morrow next, she did her selfe avize,°
When that same Maske againe should forth arize
The morrow next appeard with joyous cheare,
Calling men to their daily exercize,
Then she, as morrow fresh, her selfe did reare
Out of her secret stand,° that day for to out weare.

All that day she outwore in wandering,
And gazing on that Chambers ornament,
Till that againe the second evening
Her covered with her sable vestiment,
Wherewith the worlds faire beautie she hath blent:° obscured

http://englishworld20111.wordpress.com/
Then when the second watch was almost past,
That brassen dore flew open, and in went

260 Bold Britomart, as she had late forecast,
Neither of idle shewes, nor of false charmes aghast.

So soone as she was entred, round about
She cast her eyes, to see what was become
Of all those persons, which she saw without:

265 But lo, they straught were vanisht all and some,
Ne living wight she saw in all that roome,
Save that same woefull Ladie, both whose hands
Were bounden fast, that did her ill become,
And her small wast girt round with yron bands,

270 Unto a brassen pillour, by the which she stands.

And her before the vile Enchaunter sate,
Figuring strange characters of his art,
With living bloud he those characters wrote,
Dreadfully dropping from her dying hart,
Numbly transfixed with a cruel dart,
And all perforce to make her him to love.

275 Ah who can love the worker of her smart?
A thousand charmes he formerly did prove;
Yet thousand charmes could not her stedfast heart remove 280 Soone as that virgin knight he saw in place,

His wicked bookes in hast he overthrew,
Not caring his long labours to deface,
And fiercely running to that Lady trew,
A murdrous knife out of his pocket drew,
The which he thought, for vileinous despight,
In her tormented bodie to embrew:

285 But the stout Damzell to him leaping light,
His cursed hand withheld, and maistered his might.
From her, to whom his fury first he ment,

300 The wicked weapon rashly he did wrest,
And turning to her selfe his fell intent,
Unwares it strooke into her snowy chest,
That little drops empurpled her faire brest.
Exceeding wroth therewith the virgin grew,

295 Albe the wound were nothing deepe imprest,
And fiercely forth her mortall blade she drew,
To give him the reward for such vile outrage dew.

34 So mightily she smote him, that to ground
He fell halfe dead; next stroke him should have slaine,

300 Had not the Lady, which by him stood bound.

5. From 9 P.M. to midnight.
6. I.e., he did not care if he ruined the spells he had labored over.
Dernely unto her called to abstaine,
From doing him to dy. For else her paine
Should be remediless, sith none but hee,
Which wrought it, could the same recure againe.
Therewith she stayd her hand, loth stayd to bee;
For life she him envye, and long'd revenge to see.

And to him said, "Thou wicked man, whose meed"
For so huge mischief, and vile villany
Is death, or if that ought do death exceed,
Be sure, that nought may save thee from to dy,
But if that thou this Dame doe presently
Restore unto her health, and former state;

He glad of life, that lookt for death but late,
Did yield himselfe right willing to prolong his date.

And rising up, gan straignt to overlooke
Those cursed leaves, his charmes backe to reverse;
Full dreadfull things out of that balefull booke
He red, and measured many a sad verse,
That horror gan the virgins hart to perse,
And her faire locks up stared stiffe on end,
Hearing him those same bloudy lines rehearse;
And all the while he red, she did extend
Her sword high over him if ought he did offend.

Anon she gan perceive the house to quake,
And all the dores to rattel round about;
Yet all that did not her dismaied make,
Nor slacke her threatfull hand for daungers dout,
But still with stedfast eye and courage stout
Abode, to weet what end would come of all.
At last that mightie chaine, which round about
Her tender waste was wound, adowne gan fall,
And that great brasen pillour broke in pecces small.

The cruell Steele, which thrild her dying hart,
Pierced as of his owne accord,
And the wyde wound, which lately did disparst
Her bleeding brest, and riven bowels gor'd,
Was closed up, as it had not bene bor'd,
And every part to safety full sound,
As she were never hurt, was soonest restor'd:
When she felt her selfe to be unbound,
And perfect hole, prostrate she fell unto the ground.

7. I.e., you deserve death or, if possible, something worse than death, and nothing will save you from death ("to dy") unless ("But if") you immediately ("presently") restore this lady.
8. I.e., be pronounced in proper meter many distressing verses (incantations).
9. I.e., nor relax her threatening hand for fear of danger.
39
Before Faire Britomart, she fell prostrate,
Saying, "Ah noble knight, what worthy meed"
Can wretched Lady, quit from wofull state,
Yield you in lieu of this your gracious deed?
Your vertue selfe her owne reward shall breed,
Even immortall praise, and glory wyde,
Which I your vassall, by your prowess freed,
Shall through the world make to be notifyde,
And goodly well advance, that goodly well was tryde."

40
But Britomart uprearing her from ground,
Said, "Gentle Dame, reward enough I weene" for many labours more, then I have found,
This, that in safety now I have you scene,
And meane of your deliverance have beene:
Henceforth faire Lady comfort to you take,
And put away remembrance of late teene;
In stead thereof know, that your loving Make,
Hath no lesse griefe endured for your gentle sake."

41
She much was cheard to heare him mentiond,
Whom of all living wights she loved best.
Then laid the noble Championesse strong hond
Upon th' enchaunter, which had her distrest
So sore, and with foule outrages opprest:
With that great chaine, wherewith not long ygo
He bound that pitteous Lady prisoner, now relest, Himselfe she bound, more worthy to be so,
And captive with her led to wretchednesse and wo.

42
Returning backe, those goodly roomes, which erst
She saw so rich and royally arayd,
Now vanisht utterly, and cleane subverst
She found, and all their glory quite decayd,
That sight of such a chaunge her much dismayd
Thence forth descending to that perlous Porch,
Those dreadfull flames she also found delayd,
And quenched quite, like a consumed torch.
That erst all entrers wont so cruelly to scorch.

43
More easie issew now, then entrance late
She found: for now that famed dreadfull flame,
Which chokt the porch of that enchaunted gate,
And passage hard to all, that thither came,
Was vanisht quite, as it were not the same,
And gave her leave at pleasure forth to passe.

1. I.e., as your vassal I will make known ("notifyed") throughout the world and extol ("advance") your virtue, which was so fully tested ("tryde").
Th’ Enchaunter selfe, which all that fraud did frame,
To have effect the love of that faire lasse,
Seeing his worke now wasted depe enforced was.

44
But when the victoresse arrived there,
Where late she left the pensife Scudamore,
With her owne trusty Squire, both full of feare,
Neither of them she found where she them lore:
Theiret her noble hart was stonisht sore;
But most faire Amoret, whose gentle spright
Now gan to feede on hope, which she before
Conceived had, to see her owne deare knight,
Being thereof beguyld was fild with new affright.

45
But he sad° man, when he had long in drede
Awayted there for Britomarts returne,
Yet saw her not nor signe of her good speed,
His expectation to despaire did turne,
Misleeming° sure that her those flames did burne;
And therefore gan advise° with her old Squire,
Who her deare nourslings losse no lesse did mourne,
Tence to depart for further side t’ enquire:
Where let them wend at will, whilst here I doe respire.

1590, 1596

Amoretti and Epithalamion In the early 1590s the widowed Spenser wooed and won Elizabeth Boyle, whom he married in Ireland in 1594. The next year he published a small volume that included the sonnet sequence Amoretti ("little loves" or "little cupids") and the Epithalamion. Several of the sonnets explicitly address an "Elizabeth," and the volume’s subtitle, "Written not long since," suggests that these poems, taken together, are a portrait of Spenser’s recent courtship and marriage. It was unusual to write sonnets about a happy and successful love; traditionally, the sonneteer’s love was for someone painfully inaccessible. Spenser rehearses some of the conventional motifs of frustration and longing, but his cycle of polished, eloquent poems leads toward joyous possession. Thus, for example, in sonnet 67 ("Lyke as a huntsman after weary chace"), he transforms a Petrarchan lament into a vision of unexpected fulfillment.

Spenser’s great celebration of this fulfillment is the Epithalamion. A learned poet, he was acutely conscious that he was writing within a tradition: an epithalamion is a wedding song whose Greek name conveys that it was sung on the threshold of the

2. Her nurse, Glauce, is her squire.
3. Mistakenly thinking.
4. Take a breath, rest from my labors. In the 1590 edition, Book 3, and the poem, ended with the happy reunion of Scudamour and Amoret in a passionate embrace:

   Lightly he clipt her twist his armes twaine,
   And straightly did embrace her body bright,
   Her body, late the prison of sad pains,
   Now the sweet lodge of love and deare delight:

But she faire Lady overcommen quight
Of huge affection, did in pleasure melt,
And in sweete ravishment pourd out her spright:
No word they spake, nor earthly thing they felt,
But like two senceles stocks in long embracement dwelt.

But in the 1596 edition Spenser made a bridge to his three added books by replacing the earlier ending with stanzas 43—45, as given here.
bride's chamber. The genre, which goes back at least as far as Sappho (ca. 612 B.C.E.), was widely practiced by the Roman poets, particularly Catullus, and imitated in the Renaissance. Its elements typically include an invocation of the Muses, followed by a celebratory description of the procession of the bride, the religious rites, the singing and dancing at the wedding party, the preparations for the wedding night, and the sexual consummation of the marriage.

In long, flowing stanzas, Spenser follows these conventions closely, adapting them with exquisite delicacy to his small-town Irish setting and native folklore. But his first stanza announces a major innovation: “So I unto myselfe alone will sing.” Traditionally, the poet of an epithalamion was an admiring observer, a kind of master of ceremonies; by combining the roles of poet and bridegroom, Spenser transforms a genial social performance into a passionate lyric utterance. Equally remarkable innovations are the complex stanza form, for which no direct model has been discovered, and the still more complex overall structure. That structure is a triumph of symbolic patterning; the more scholars have studied it, the more elaborate the order they seem to have uncovered. This subtle and rich poetic structure conjures up not only a single day of celebration but also, beyond this particular event, an orderly, harmonious universe, with a hidden pattern of coherence and regularity. If the Epithalamion goes to remarkable lengths to affirm this pattern, it is perhaps because it also registers so insistently all that threatens the enduring happiness of wedded love and indeed of human life itself. The greatest threat is the force over which the poem exercises its greatest power:
time.

From Amoretti

Sonnet 1

Happy ye leaves\(^1\) when as those lilly hands,
Which hold my life in their dead doing\(^6\) might,
Shall handle you and hold in loves soft bands.\(^6\)
Lyke captives trembling at the victors sight.

And happy lines, on which with starry light,
Those lamping\(^6\) eyes will deigne sometimes to look
And reade the sorrowes of my dying spright,\(^6\)
Written with teares in harts close\(^6\) bleeding book.

And happy rymes bath'd in the sacred brooke
Of Helicon\(^2\) whence she derived is,
When ye behold that Angels blessed looke,
My soules long lacked foode, my heavens blis.
Leaves, lines, and rymes, seeke her to please alone,
Whom if ye please, I care for other none.

Sonnet 34\(^3\)

Lyke as a ship that through the Ocean wyde,
By conduct of some star doth make her way,
Whenas a storme hath dimd her trusty guyde,
Out of her course doth wander far astray:
So I whose star, that wont\(^6\) with her bright ray was accustomed

---

2. The “sacred brooke” is Hippocrene, which flows from Mount Helion, the mountain sacred to the Muses.
3. An adaptation of Petrarch’s Rima 189 (translated by Sir Thomas Wyatt, p. 597, where a modern prose translation can also be found).
Me to direct, with cloudes is overcast,
Doe wander now in darknesse and dismay,
Through hidden perils round about me placet.
Yet hope I well, that when this storme is past
My Helice the lodestar of my lyfe
Will shine again, and looke on me at last,
With lovely light to cleare my cloudy grief.
Till then I wander careful comfortlesse,
In secret sorow and sad pensivenesse.

Sonnet 37
What guyle is this, that those her golden tresses,
She doth attyre under a net of gold:
And with sly° skill so cunningly them dresses,
That which is gold or heare,° may scarce be told?
Is it that mens frayle eyes, which gaze too bold,
She may entangle in that golden snare:
And being caught may craftily enfold
Theyr weaker harts, which are not wel aware?
Take heed therefore, myne eyes, how ye doe stare
Henceforth too rashly on that guilefull net,
In which if ever ye entrapped are,
Out of her bands ye by no means shall get.
Fondnesse° it were for any being free,
To covet fetters, though they golden bee.

Sonnet 54
Of this worlds Theatre in which we stay,
My love like the Spectator ydly sits
Beholding me that all the pageants° play,
Disguysing diversly my troubled wits.
Sometimes I joy when glad occasion fits,
And mask in myrth lyke to a Comedy:
Soone after when my joy to sorrow flits,
I waile and make my woes a Tragedy.
Yet she beholding me with constant° eye,
Unmoved Delights not in my merth nor rue's my smart:
But when I laugh she mocks, and when I cry
She laughs and hardens evermore her hurt.
What then can move her? if nor merth nor mone,°
She is no woman, but a sencelesse stone.

Sonnet 64
Comming to kisse her lyps (such grace I found)
Me seemd I smelt a gardin of sweet flowres
That dainty odours from them threw around,

4. A name for the Big Dipper (after the nymph who, in classical mythology, was transformed into it).
5. Much of the imagery of this sonnet is imitated from the Song of Solomon 4.10-16.
For damzels fit to decke their lovers bowres.
Her lips did smell lyke unto Gillyflowers,\(^6\)
Her ruddy cheeks lyke unto Roses red;
Her snowy browes lyke budded Bellamoures,\(^4\)
Her lovely eyes like Pincks but newly spred,
Her goodly bosome lyke a Strawberry bed.
Her neck lyke to a bounch of Cullambynes;
Her brest lyllies, ere theyr leaves be shed.
Her nipples lyke yong blossomed Jessemynes.\(^8\)
Such fragrant flowres doe give most odorous smell,
But her sweet odour did them all excell.

Sonnet 65
The doubt which ye misdeeme,\(^a\) fayre love, is vaine,
That fondly\(^b\) feare to loose your liberty,
When loosing one, two liberties ye gayne,
And make him bond\(^d\) that bondage erst\(^e\) dyd fly.\(^hound, formerly\)
Sweet be the bands, the which true love doth tye,
Without constraynt or dread of any ill:
The gentle birde feels no captivity
Within her cage, but singes and feeds her fill.
There pride dare not approch, nor discord spill\(^2\)
The league twixt them, that loyal love hath bound;
But simple truth and mutuall good will
Seekes with Sweet peace to salve each others wound.
There fayth\(^f\) doth fearlesse dwell in brasen towre,
And spotlesse pleasure builds her sacred bowre.

Sonnet 67\(^i\)
Lyke as a huntsman after weary chace,
Seeing the game from him escapt away,
Sits downe to rest him in some shady place,
With panting hounds beguiled\(^g\) of their pray:
So after long pursuit and vaine assay,\(^6\)
When I all weary had the chace forsooke,
The gentle deare returnd the selfe-same way,
Thinking to quench her thirst at the next\(^2\) brooke
There she beholding me with mylder looke,
Sought not to fly, but fearlesse still did bide:
Till I in hand her yet halfe trembling tooke,
Strange thing me seemd to see a beast so wyld.
So goodly wonne with her owne will beguyld.

Sonnet 68
Most glorious Lord of lyfe, that on this day,\(^9\) i.e., Easter
Didst make thy triumph over death and sin:

6. Unidentified flower, evidently white.
7. An imitation of Petrarch’s Rima 190, but with a very different ending. Cf. Sir Thomas Wyatt’s adaptation (“Whoso list to hunt”) of the same sonnet, and the prose translation of the Petrarchan original appended to it: p. 595.
And having harrowed hell, didst bring away
Captivity thence captive us to win:
This joyous day, deare Lord, with joy begin,
And grant that we for whom thou diddest dye
Being with thy deare blood clene washt from sin,
May live for ever in felicity.
And that thy love we weighing worthily,
May likewise love thee for the same againe:
And for thy sake that all lyke deare didst buy,
With love may one another entertayne.
So let us love, deare love, lyke as we ought,
Love is the lesson which the Lord us taught.

Sonnet 74
Most happy letters fram’d by skilfull trade,
With which that happy name was first desynd:
The which three times thrise happy hath me made,
With guifts of body, fortune and of mind.
The first my being to me gave by kind,
From mothers womb deriv’d by dew descent,
The second is my sovereigne Queene most kind,
That honour and large richesse to me lent.
The third my love, my lives last ornament,
By whom my spirit out of dust was rysed:
To speake her prayse and glory excellent,
Of all alive most worthy to be praysed.
Ye three Elizabeths for ever live,
That three such graces did unto me give.

Sonnet 75
One day I wrote her name upon the strand,
But came the waves and washed it away:
Agayne I wrote it with a second hand,
But came the tyde, and made my paynes his pray.
"Vayne man," sayd she, "that doest in vaine assay,
A mortall thing so to immortalize,
For I my selve shall lyke to this decay,
And eek° my name bee wyped out lykewise."
"Not so," quod° I, "let baser things devise
To dy in dust, but you shall live by fame:
My verse your vertues rare shall eternize,
And in the heavens wryte your glorious name.
Where whenas death shall all the world subdew,
Our love shall live, and later life renew."

8. In the apocryphal Gospel of Nicodemus, Christ descended into hell and led out into Paradise the righteous who had lived before his time. “Captivity thence captive” (line 4) is a biblical phrase, as in Judges 3:12 and Ephesians 4:8.
9. I.e., Christ bought all people at the same great cost.
1. Cf. John 15:12: "This is my commandment, That ye love one another, as I have loved you."

Sonnet 79

Men call you fayre, and you doe credit it, believe
For that your selfe ye dayly such doe see:
But the trew fayre,° that is the gentle wit,° beauty / intelligence
And vertuous mind, is much more praysd of me.

For all the rest, how ever fayre it be,
Shall turne to nought and loose that glorious hew:" form
But onely that is permanent and free
From frayle corruption, that doth flesh ensee." outlast
That is true beautie: that doth argue prove
To be divine and borne of heavenly seed:
Deriv'd from that fayre Spirit,° from whom al true
And perfect beauty did at first proceed.
He onely fayre, and what he fayre hath made:
All other fayre, lyke flowres, untymely fade.

Epithalamion

Ye learned sisters which have oftentimes
Beene to me syding, others to adorne:
Whom ye thought worthy of your gracefull rymes,
That even the greatest did not greatly scorne

To heare theyr names sung in your simple layes," songs
But joyed in theyr prayse.
And when ye list® your owne mishaps to mourne,
Which death, or love, or fortunes wreck did rayse,
Your string could soone to sadder tenor chose
And teach the woods and waters to lament mood
Your dolefull dreriment.° sorrow
Now lay those sorrowfull complaints aside,
And having all your heads with girland crownd,
Helpe me mine owne loves prayses to resound,
Ne° let the same oP any be envide: nor / by
So Orpheus did for his owne bride,°
So I unto my selfe alone will sing,
The woods shall to me answer and my Eccho ring.

Early before the worlds light giving lampe,
His golden beame upon the hils doth spred,
Having disperst the nights unchearefull dampe,
Doe ye awake, and with fresh lustyhed°
Go to the bowre® of my beloved love,
My truest turtle dove,

1. To write poems in praise of otherson, The "learned sisters" are the Muses.
2. Orpheus, archetypal of the poet in classical antiquity, was famous for his love for his wife, Eurydice.
Bid her awake; for Hymen\(^3\) is awake,
And long since ready forth his maske to move,
With his bright Tead\(^4\) that flames with many a flake,\(^9\)
And many a bachelor to waite on him,
In theyr fresh garments trim.
Bid her awake therefore and soone her dight,\(^0\)
For lo the wished day is come at last,
That shall for al the paynes and sorrowes past,
Pay to her usury\(^6\) of long delight:
And whylst she doth her dight,
Doe ye to her of joy and solace\(^8\) sing,
That all the woods may answer and your Eccho ring.

Bring with you all the Nymphes that you can heare\(^0\)
Both of the rivers and the forestes greene:
And of the sea that neighbours to her neare,
Al with gay girlands goodly wel beseene,\(^8\)
And let them also with them bring in hand,
Another gay girland
For my fayre love of lillyes and of roses,
Bound truelove wize\(^5\) with a blew silke riband.
And let them make great store of bridale poses,\(^0\)
And let them eke\(^8\) bring store\(^0\) of other flowers
To deck the bridale bowers.
And let the ground whereas\(^0\) her foot shall tread,
For feare the stones her tender foot should wrong
Be strewed with fragrant flowers all along,
And diapred lyke the discolord mead.\(^5\)
Which done, doe at her chamber dore awayt,
For she will waken straught.\(^0\)
The whiles doe ye this song unto her sing,
The woods shall to you answer and your Eccho ring.

Ye Nymphes of Mulla\(^6\) which with careful heed,
The silver scaly trouts doe tend full well,
And greedy pikes which use\(^8\) therein to feed,
(Those trouts and pikes all others doo excell)

60
And ye likewise, which keepe the rushy lake,
Where none doo fishes take,
Bynd up the locks the which hang scatterd light,
And in his waters which your mirror make,
Behold your faces as the christall bright,

65
That when you come whereas\(^0\) my love doth lie,
No blemish she may spie.
And eke ye lightfoot mayds which keepe the deere,
That on the hoary mountayne use to towre;\(^7\)
And the wylde wolves which seeke them to devour,

70
With your steele darts\(^8\) doe chace from comming neer,
Be also present heere,
To helpe to decke her and to help to sing,
That all the woods may answer and your Eccho ring.

Wake now my love, awake; for it is time,
The Rosy Morne long since left Tithones bed,
All ready to her silver coche to clyme,
And Phoebus gins to shew his glorious hed.
Hark how the cheerefull birds do chaunt theyr laies
And caroll of loves praise.

The merry Larke hir mattins sings aloft,
The thrush replyes, the Mavis descant playes,
The Ouzell shrills, the Ruddock warbles soft,
So goodly all agree with sweet consent,
To this dayes merriment.

Ah my deere love why doe ye sleepe thus long,
When meeter were that ye should now awake,
T' awayt the comming of your joyous make,
And hearken to the birds lovelearned song,
The deawy leaves among.

For they of joy and pleasance to you sing,
That all the woods them answer and theyr Eccho ring.

My love is now awake out of her dreame,
And her fayre eyes like stars that dimmed were
With darksome cloud, now shew theyr goodly beams
More bright then Hesperus his head doth rere.
Come now ye damzels, daughters of delight,
Helpe quickly her to dight,
But first come ye fayre houres which were begot
In Joves sweet paradice, of Day and Night,
Which doe the seasons of the yeare allot,
And al that ever in this world is fayre
Doe make and still repayre.

And ye three handmayds of the Cyprian Queene,
The which doe still adorne her beauties pride,
Helpe to addorne my beautifullest bride:
And as ye her array, still throw betweene
Some graces to be seene,
And as ye use to Venus, to her sing,
The whiles the woods shal answer and your Eccho ring.

Now is my love all ready forth to come,
Let all the virgins therefore well awayt,
And ye fresh boyes that tend upon her groome
Prepare your selves; for he is comming strayt.
Set all your things in seemely good aray continuously at intervals are accustomed straightway order

8. See Song of Solomon 2.10—13: "Rise up, my love, my fair one, and come away. For, lo, the winter is past, the rain is over and gone; the flowers appear on the earth; the time of the singing of birds is come." In classical myth, Tithonus is the aged husband of Aurora, the dawn.

9. The "Mavis" is the song thrush; the "Ouzell," the blackbird (which sings in England); and the "Ruddock," the European robin. The birds' concert is a convention of medieval love poetry. "Descant": a melody or counterpoint written above a musical theme—a soprano obbligato.

1. The Graces attending on Venus ("Cyprian Queene"), representing brightness, joy, and bloom.
Fit for so joyfull day,
The joyfullst day that ever sunne did see.
Faire Sun, shew forth thy favourable ray,
And let thy liffull heat not fervent be.
For feare of burning her sunshyny face,
Her beauty to disgrace.

O sayrest Phoebus, father of the Muse,
If ever I did honour thee aright,
Or sing the thing, that mote thy mind delight,
Doe not thy servants simple boone refuse,
But let this day let this one day be myne,
Let all the rest be thine.
Then I thy soverayne prayses loud wil sing,
That all the woods shal answer and theyr Eccho ring.

Harke how the Minstrels gin to shrill aloud
Their merry Musick that resounds from far,
The pipe, the tabor, and the trembling Crowde,
That well agree withouten breach or jar.
But most of all the Damzels doe delite,
When they their tymbrels smyte,
And thereunto doe daunce and carrol sweet,
That all the sences they doe ravish quite,
Crying aloud with strong confused noyce,

As if it were one voyce.
Hymen id Hymen, Hymen they do shout,
That even to the heavens theyr shouting shrill
Doth reach, and all the firmament doth fill,
To which the people standing all about,
As in approvance doe thereto applaud
And loud advaunce her laud,
And evermore they Hymen Hymen sing,
That all the woods them answer and theyr Eccho ring.

Loe where she comes along with portly pace
Lyke Phoebe from her chamber of the East,
Arysing forth to run her mighty race,
Clad all in white, that seemes a virgin best.
So well it her beseems that ye would weene
Some angell she had beene.
Her long loose yellow locks lyke golden wyre,
Sпрinckled with perle, and perling flowres a tweene,
Doe lyke a golden mantle her attyre,
And being crowned with a girland greene,
Seeme lyke some mayden Queene.
Her modest eyes abashed to behold
So many gazers, as on her do stare.

2. Phoebus Apollo, god of the sun, was also god of music and poetry, but he was not normally regarded as the father of the Nine Muses (Zeus was).
3. Primitive fiddle. Spenser here designates Irish, not classical, instruments and music for the classical masque or ballet.
4. The name of the god of marriage, used as a conventional exclamation at weddings.
5. Phoebe is the moon, a virgin like the bride; the reference to her anticipates the night.
Upon the lowly ground affixed are.
Ne dare lift up her countenance too bold,
But blush to heare her prayses sung so loud,
So farre from being proud.

Nathlesse doe ye still loud her prayses sing,
That all the woods may answer and your Eccho ring.

Tell me ye merchants daughters did ye see
So fayre a creature in your towne before,
So sweet, so lovely, and so mild as she,
Adorned with beautyes grace and vertues store,
Her goodly eyes lyke Saphyres shining bright,
Her forehead yvory white,
Her cheekes lyke apples which the sun hath rudded,
Her lips lyke cherries charming men to byte,
Her brest like to a bowle of creame uncrudded,
Her necke lyke to a marble towre,
And all her body like a pallace fayre,
Ascending uppe with many a stately stayre,
To honors seat and chastities sweet bowre.

Why stand ye still ye virgins in amaze,
Upon her so to gaze,
Whiles ye forget your former lay to sing,
To which the woods did answer and your Eccho ring.

But if ye saw that which no eyes can see,
The inward beauty of her lively spright,
Garnisht with heavenly guifts of high degree,
Much more then would ye wonder at that sight,
And stand astonisht lyke to those which saw Medusas mazeful hed.
There dwels sweet love and constant chastity,
Unspotted fayth and comely womanhood,
Regard of honour and mild modesty,
There vertue raynes as Queene in royal throne,
And giveth lawes alone.
The which the base affections doe obey,
And yeeld theyr services unto her will,
Ne thought of thing uncomely ever may Thereto approach to tempt her mind to ill.

Had ye once seene these her celestial threasures,
And unrevealed pleasures,
Then would ye wonder and her prayses sing,
That all the woods should answer and your Eccho ring.

Open the temple gates unto my love,
Open them wide that she may enter in.

6. The head, where the higher faculties are. The catalog of qualities is a convention in love poetry (cf. Song of Solomon 4—8).
7. Medusa, one of the Gorgons, had serpents instead of hair (hence a "mazeful hed"): the effect on beholders was to turn them to stone.
8. Cf. Psalm 24.7: "Lift tip your heads, O ye gates; and be ye lift up, ye everlasting doors; and the King of glory shall come in."
And all the postes adorne as doth behave,⁹
And all the pillours deck with girlands trim,
For to recyve this Saynt with honour dew,
That commeth in to you.

With trembling steps and humble reverence,
She commeth in, before th' almighties vew,
Of her ye virgins learne obedience,
When so ye come into those holy places,
To humble your proud faces:

Bring her up to th' high altar, that she may
The sacred ceremonies there partake,
The which do endless matrimony make,
And let the roring Organs loudly play
The praises of the Lord in lively notes,

The whiles with hollow throates
The Choristers the joyous Antheme sing,
That all the woods may answere and theyr Eccho ring.

Behold whiles she before the altar stands
Hearing the holy priest that to her speakes
And blesseth her with his two happy hands,
How the red roses flush up in her cheekes,
And the pure snow with goodly vermilion⁰ stayne,
Like crimsin dyde in grayne,⁰
That even th' Angels which continually,
About the sacred Altare doe remaine,
Forget their service and about her fly,
Ofte peeping in her face that seemes more fayre,
The more they on it stare.

But her sad' eyes still fastened on the ground,
Are governed with goodly modesty,
That suffers not one looke to glaunce awry,
Which may let in a little thought unsownd.
Why blush ye love to give to me your hand,
The pledge of all our band?⁹
The pledge of all our band?
Sing ye sweet Angels, Alleluya sing,
That all the woods may answere and your Eccho ring.

Now al is done; bring home the bride againe,
Bring home the triumph of our victory,
Bring home with you the glory of her gaine,¹

With joyance bring her and with jollity,
Never had man more joyfull day then this,
Whom heaven would heape with blis.
Make feast therefore now all this live long day,
This day for ever to me holy is,

Pour out the wine without restraint or stay,
Poure out to all that woll,°
Poure out to all that woll,°
And sprinkle all the postes and wals with wine,
That they may sweat, and drunken be withall.

Crowne ye God Bacchus\(^9\) with a coronall,\(^9\) god of wine / garland

And Hymen also crowne with wreathes of vine, And let the Graces daunce unto the rest; For they can doo it best: The whiles the maydens doe theyr carroll sing.

To which the woods shall answer and theyr Eccho ring.

Ring ye the bels, ye young men of the towne, And leave your wonted\(^0\) labors for this day: usual

This day is holy; doe ye write it downe, That ye for ever it remember may.

This day the sunne is in his chiefest hight, With Barnaby the bright;\(^2\) From whence declining daily by degrees, He somewhat loseth of his heat and light, When once the Crab\(^3\) behind his back he sees. But for this time it ill ordained was, To chose the longest day in all the yeare, And shortest night, when longest fitter weare: Yet never day so long, but late\(^0\) would passe. at last

Ring ye the bels, to make it weare away, And bonefiers\(^0\) make all day, bontires

And daunce about them, and about them sing: That all the woods may answer, and your Eccho ring.

Ah when will this long weary day have end, And lende me leave to come unto my love?

How slowly do the hours their numbers spend? How slowly does sad Time his feathers move? haste

Hast\(^t\) thee O fayrest Planet to thy home Within the Westerne fome: Thy tyred steedes long since have need of rest.\(^4\) creast

Long though it be, at last I see it gloome, And the bright evening star with golden creast\(^t\) Appeare out of the East. Fayre childe of beauty, glorious lafnpe of love That all the host of heaven in rankes doost lead, And guydest lovers through the nightes dread, How chearefully thou lookest from above, And seemst to laugh atweene thy twinkling light As joying in the sight Of these glad many which for joy doe sing, That all the woods them answer and their Eccho ring.

Now cease ye damsels your delights forepast; Enough is it, that all the day was yours: Now day is doen, and night is nighing fast: Now bring the Bryde into the brydall boures.

3. The constellation Cancer between Gemini and Leo. The sun, passing through the zodiac, leaves the Crab behind toward the end of July.
4. The sun's chariot completes its daily course in the western sea.
Now night is come, now soone her disaray,
And in her bed her lay;
Lay her in lillies and in violets,
And silken courteins over her display,
And odour'd sheetes, and Arras coverlets.
Behold how goodly my faire love does ly
In proud humility;
Like unto Maia, when as Jove her tooke,
In Tempe, lying on the flowry gras,
Twixt sleepe and wake, after she weary was,
With bathing in the Acidalian brooke.
Now it is night, ye damsels may be gon,
And leave my love alone,
And leave likewise youf former lay to sing:
The woods no more shall answere, nor your Eccho ring.
Now welcome night, thou night so long expected,
That long daies labour doest at last defray,
And all my cares, which cruel love collected,
Hast sumd in one, and cancelled for eye:
Spread thy broad wing over my love and me,
That no man may us see,
And in thy sable mantle us enwrap,
From feare of perrill and foule horror free.
Let no false treason seeke us to entrap,
Nor any dread disquiet once annoy
The safety of our joy:
But let the night be calme and quietsome,
Without tempestuous storms or sad a pray.
Lyke as when Jove with fayre Alcmena lay,
When he begot the great Tirynthian groome:
Or lyke as when he with thy selfe did lie,
And begot Majesty.
And let the mayds and yongmen cease to sing:
Ne let the woods them answer, nor theyr Eccho ring.
Let no lamenting cryes, nor dolefull teares,
Be heard all night within nor yet without:
Ne let false whispers, breeding hidden feares,
Brea ke gentle sleepe with misconceived dout.
Let no deluding dreams, nor dreadful sights
Make sudden sad affrights;
Ne let housefyres, nor lightnings helpelesse harms,
Ne let the Fouke, nor other evill sprights,
Ne let mischivous witches with theyr charms,
Ne let hob Goblins, names whose sence we see not,
Fray us with things that be not.

5. The eldest and most beautiful of the seven daughters of Atlas. (They were stellified as the Pleiades.) Jove fathered Mercury on her.
6. The Vale of Tempe in Thessaly (not, however, traditionally the site of Jove’s encounter with Maia).
7. The Acidalian brook is associated with Venus.
8. The mother of Hercules ("the great Tirynthian groome"). Jove made that first night last as long as three.
9. Night. This is Spenser’s own myth.
1. Puck, Robin Goodfellow—here more powerful and evil than Shakespeare made him in A Midsummer Night’s Dream.
Let not the shriech Oule, nor the Storke be heard:
Nor the night Raven that still deadly yels,
Nor damned ghosts cald up with mighty spels,
Nor grisly vultures make us once affeard:
Ne let th' unpleasant Quyre of Frogs still croking
Make us to wish theyr choking.
Let none of these theyr drery accents sing;
Ne let the woods them answer, nor theyr Eccho ring.

But let stil Silence trew night watches keepe,
That sacred peace may in assurance rayne,
And tymely Sleep, when it is tyme to sleepe,
May poure his limbs forth on your pleasant playne,
The whiles an hundred little winged loves, cupids (or amoretti)
Like divers fethered doves,
Shall fly and flutter round about your bed,
And in the secret darke, that none reproves,
To filch away sweet snatches of delight,
Conceald through covert night.
Ye sonnes of Venus, play your sports at will,
For greedy pleasure, careless of your toyes,
Thinks more upon her paradise of joyes,
Than what ye do, albe it good or ill.
All night therefore attend your merry play,
For it will soone be day:
Now none doth hinder you, that say or sing,
Ne will the woods now answer, nor your Eccho ring.

Who is the same, which at my window peepes?
Or whose is that faire face, that shines so bright,
Is it not Cinthia, she that never sleepes,
But walks about high heaven al the night?
O fayrest goddesse, do thou not envy
My love with me to spy:
For thou likewise didst love, though now unthought,
And for a fleece of woll, which privily,
The Latmian shephard once unto thee brought,
His pleasures with thee wrought,
Therefore to us be favorable now;
And sith of wemens labours thou hast charge,
And generation goodly dost enlarge,
Encline thy will t' effect our wishfull vow,
And the chast wombe informe with timely seed,
That may our comfort breed:
Till which we cease our hopefull hap to sing,
Ne let the woods us answer, nor our Eccho ring.

2. The owl and the night raven were birds of ill omen: the work, in Chaucer's Parliament of Fowls, is called an avenger of adultery.
3. Cynthia (or Diana) is goddess of the moon.
4. Endymion, beloved of the moon. The "fleece of wool," however, comes from another story—that of Pan's enticement of the moon.
5. Diana is, as Lucina, patroness of births. The "labours" are, of course, those of childbirth.
390 And thou great Juno, which with awful might
The laws of wedlock still dost patronize,
And the religion* of the faith first plight\(^\text{6}\)
With sacred rites hast taught to solemnize:
And eke\(^\text{7}\) for comfort often called art
Of women in their smart,\(^\text{6}\)
Eternally bind thou this lovely band,\(^\text{6}\)
And all thy blessings unto us impart.

395 Of women in their smart,\(^\text{6}\)
Eternally bind thou this lovely band,\(^\text{6}\)
And thou glad Genius,\(^\text{6}\)
in whose gentle hand,
The bridale bowre and geniall bed remaine,
Without blemish or staine,
And the sweet pleasures of theyr loves delight
With secret ayde doest succour and supply,
Till they bring forth the fruitfull progeny,
Send us the timely fruit of this same night.

400 And thoe fayre Hebe,\(^\text{7}\) and thoe Hymen free,
Grant that it may so be.
Til which we cease your further prayse to sing,
Ne any woods shall answer, nor your Eccho ring.

405 And ye high heavens, the temple of the gods,
In which a thousand torches flaming bright
Doe burne, that to us wretched earthly clods,
In dreadful darknesse lend desired light;
And all ye powers which in the same remayne,
More then we men can fayne,\(^\text{6}\)
Poure out your blessing on us plentiously,
And happy influence upon us raine,
That we may raise a large posterity,
Which from the earth, which they may long possesse,
With lasting happinesse,
Up to your haughty\(^\text{8}\) pallaces may mount,
And for the guerdon\(^\text{8}\) of theyr glorious merit
May heavenly tabernacles there inherit,
Of blessed Saints for to increase the count.
So let us rest, sweet love, in hope of this,
And cease till then our tymely joyes to sing,
The woods no more us answer, nor our Eccho ring.

410 Song made in lieu of many ornaments,
With which my love should duly have bene dect,\(^\text{9}\)
Which cutting off through hasty accidents,
Ye would not stay your dew time to expect,\(^\text{9}\)
But promist both to recompens,
Be unto her a goodly ornament,
And for short time an endlesse moniment.\(^\text{8}\)

6. God of generation and birth. In the next line, "geniall"—having both the usual sense and the sense of "generative"—puns on his name.
7. Goddess of youth and freedom.
8. The envoy (brief final stanza addressed to the poem itself) is traditionally apologetic in tone: the poem is offered as a substitute for presents ("ornaments") that did not arrive in time for the wedding. But this elaborate poem is itself a "goodly ornament," for it stands as a timeless monument of art to the passing day that it celebrates.
SIR WALTER RALEGH
1552-1618

The brilliant and versatile Sir Walter Ralegh was a soldier, courtier, philosopher, explorer and colonist, student of science, historian, and poet. Born to West Country gentry of modest means, Ralegh amassed great wealth thanks to his position at court, leading him to be denounced by some as an upstart and hated by others as a rapacious monopolist. He fought ruthlessly in Ireland and Cadiz, directed the colonization of Virginia, introduced the potato to Ireland and tobacco to Europe, brought Spenser from Ireland to the English court, conducted scientific experiments, led expeditions to Guiana in an unsuccessful effort to find gold, and wrote several reports urging England to challenge Spanish dominance in the New World. He was known for his violent temper, his dramatic sense of life, his extravagant dress, his skepticism in religious matters, his bitter hatred of Spain, and his great favor with Queen Elizabeth, interrupted in 1592 when he seduced, and then married, one of her ladies-in-waiting. His long poem to the queen, The Ocean to Cynthia, remains in manuscript fragments, one of more than five hundred lines. His best-known shorter poems include the reply to Marlowe's "Passionate Shepherd" and "The Lie," an attack on social classes and institutions which itself provoked many replies. His active resistance to printing his poems—in one case he forced a printer to recall a volume and paste a slip of paper over his initials—makes it very difficult to put the copies that circulated in manuscript in any reliable chronological order.

King James suspected Ralegh of opposing his succession and threw him into the Tower of London in 1603 on trumped-up charges of treason; there he remained for the rest of his life save for an ill-fated last voyage to Guiana in 1617, which again failed to discover gold. In prison he wrote his long, unfinished History of the World, which begins with the Creation, emphasizes the providential punishment of evil princes, and projects a treatment of English history—although not of recent events because, he declared, he who follows truth too closely at the heels might get kicked in the teeth. The work was to have been dedicated to Henry, prince of Wales, Ralegh's most powerful friend and supporter, who declared, "Only my father would keep such a bird in a cage." But Henry died in 1612, and Ralegh broke off his narrative at 168 B.C.E. Six years later James, bowing to Spanish pressure, had Ralegh executed on the old treason charge.*

The Nymph's Reply to the Shepherd

If all the world and love were young,
And truth in every shepherd's tongue,
These pretty pleasures might me move
To live with thee and be thy love.

Time drives the flocks from field to fold
When rivers rage and rocks grow cold,
And Philomel* becometh dumb;
The rest complains of cares to come.

The flowers do fade, and wanton fields
To wayward winter reckoning yields;*

A honey tongue, a heart of gall,
Is fancy's spring, but sorrow's fall.

Thy gowns, thy shoes, thy beds of roses,
Thy cap, thy kirtle,° and thy posies
15 Soon break, soon wither, soon forgotten—
In folly ripe, in reason rotten.

'Thy belt of straw and ivy buds,
Thy coral clasps and amber studs,
All these in me no means can move
To come to thee and be thy love.

But could youth last and love still breed,
Had joys no date nor age no need,
Then these delights my mind might move
To live with thee and be thy love.

What is our life?

What is our life? a play of passion;
Our mirth the music of division;
Our mothers' wombs the tiring-houses be
Where we are dressed for this short comedy.

Heaven the judicious sharp spectator is,
That sits and marks still who doth act amiss;
Our graves that hide us from the searching sun
Are like drawn curtains when the play is done.
Thus march we, playing, to our latest rest,
Only we die in earnest—that's no jest.

[Sir Walter Ralegh to His Son]°

Three things there be that prosper up apace
And flourish, whilst they grow asunder far,
But on a day, they meet all in one place,
And when they meet, they one another mar;

And they be these: the wood, the weed,° the wag.
The wood is that which makes the gallow tree;
The weed is that which strings the hangman's bag;°
The wag, my pretty knave, betokeneth thee.

1. A rapid melodic passage; or the music between the acts of a play.
2. Dressing rooms in an Elizabethan theater.
1. The poem has this title in one of the manuscripts in which it appears.
2. i.e., when woven into rope, the hemp secures the hangman's hood ("bag") to the condemned person's neck.
Mark well, dear boy, whilst these assemble not,
Green springs the tree, hemp grows, the wag is wild,
But when they meet, it makes the timber rot,
It frets the halter, and it chokes the child.
Then bless thee, and beware, and let us pray
We part not with thee at this meeting day.

The Lie

Go, soul, the body's guest,
Upon a thankless errand;
Fear not to touch the best;
The truth shall be thy warrant.
Go, since I needs must die,
And give the world the lie.¹

Say to the court, it glows
And shines like rotten wood; i.e., with phosphorescence
Say to the church, it shows
What's good, and doth no good.
If church and court reply,
Then give them both the lie.

Tell potentates they live
Acting by others' action;
Not loved unless they give,
Not strong but by a faction.
If potentates reply,
Give potentates the lie.

Tell men of high condition,
That manage the estate, i.e., others' approval
Their purpose is ambition,
Their practice only hate.
And if they once reply,

Methought I saw the grave where Laura lay

Methought I saw the grave where Laura lay,
Within that temple where the vestal flame

1. A commendatory sonnet to the first three books of The Faerie Queene by Raleigh's friend Spenser. Laura was the lady celebrated in the sonnets of Petrarch (1304—1374).
Was wont to burn; and passing by that way accustomed.,
To see that buried dust of living fame,
Whose tomb fair Love and fairer Virtue kept,
All suddenly I saw the Fairy Queen;
At whose approach the soul of Petrarch wept,
And from thenceforth those graces were not seen, i.e., Love and Virtue
For they this Queen attended; in whose stead
Oblivion laid him down on Laura's hearse.
Hereat the hardest stones were seen to bleed,
And groans of buried ghosts the heavens did pierce;
Where Homer's sprite did tremble all for grief,
And cursed th' accession of that celestial thief.

Nature, that washed her hands in milk
Nature, that washed her hands in milk,
And had forgot to dry them,
Instead of earth took snow and silk,
At Love's request to try them,
If she a mistress could compose
To please Love's fancy out of those.
Her eyes he would should be of light,
A violet breath, and lips of jelly;
Her hair not black, nor overbright,
And of the softest down her belly;
As for her inside he'd have it
Only of wantonness and wit.

At Love's entreaty such a one
Nature made, but with her beauty
She hath framed a heart of stone;
So as Love, by ill destiny,
Must die for her whom Nature gave him,
Because her darling would not save him.

But Time (which Nature doth despise,
And rudely gives her love the lie,
Makes Hope a fool, and Sorrow wise)
His hands do neither wash nor dry;
But being made of steel and rust,
Turns snow and silk and milk to dust.

The light, the belly, lips, and breath,
He dims, discolors, and destroys;
With those he feeds but fills not death,

The discovery of the large, rich, and beautiful Empire of Guiana, with a relation of the great and golden city of Manoa (which the Spaniards call El Dorado)

When we were come to the tops of the first hills of the plains adjoining to the river, we beheld that wonderful breach of waters which ran down Caroni: and might from that mountain see the river how it ran in three parts, above twenty miles off, and there appeared some ten or twelve overfalls in sight, every one as high over the other as a church tower, which fell with that fury, that the rebound of water made it seem as if it had been all covered over with a great shower of rain: and in some places we took it at the first for a smoke that had risen over some great town. For mine own part, I was well persuaded from thence to have returned, being a very ill footman, but the rest were all so desirous to go near the said strange thunder of waters as they drew me on by little and little till we came into the next valley, where we might better discern the same. I never saw a more beautiful country nor more lively prospects, hills so raised here and there over the valleys, the river winding into divers branches, the plains adjoining without bush or stubble, all fair green grass, the ground of hard sand easy to march on either for horse or foot, the deer crossing in every path, the birds towards the evening singing on every tree with a thousand several tunes, cranes and herons of white, crimson, and carnation perching in the river's side, the air fresh with a gentle easterly wind, and every stone that we stooped to take up promised either gold or silver by his complexion. * * * I will promise these things that follow, which I know to be true. Those that are desirous to discover and to see many nations may be satisfied within this river, which bringeth forth so many arms and branches leading to several countries and provinces, above 2000 miles east and west, and 800 miles south and north, and of these, the most either rich in gold or in other merchandises. The common soldier shall here fight for gold, and pay himself, instead of pence, with plates of half a foot broad, whereas he breaketh his bones in other wars for provant and penury. Those commanders and chieftains that shoot at honor and abundance shall find there more rich and beautiful cities, more temples adorned with golden images, more sepulchers filled with treasure, than either Cortez found in Mexico, or Pizarro in Peru: and the shining glory of this conquest will eclipse all those so far extended beams of the Spanish nation. There is no country which yieldeth more pleasure to the inhabitants, either for those common delights of hunting, hawking, fishing, fowling, or the rest, than Guiana doth. * * * Both for health, good air, pleasure, and riches I am resolved it cannot be equalled by any region either in the east or west. Moreover, the country is so healthful, as of an hundred persons and more (which lay without shift most sluttishly, and were every day almost melted with heat in rowing and marching, and suddenly wet again with great showers, and did eat of all sorts of corrupt fruits, and made meals of fresh fish without seasoning, of tortugas, of lagartos or crocodiles, and of all sorts good and bad, without either order or measure, and besides lodged in the open air every night) we lost not any one, nor had one ill disposed to my knowledge, nor found any calentura, or other of those pestilent diseases which dwell in all hot regions, and so near the equinoctial line. Where there is store of gold, it is in effect needless to remember other commodities for trade: but it hath, towards the south part of the river, great quantities of brazil-wood, and diverse berries that dye a most perfect crimson and carnation. * * * All places yield abundance of cotton, of silk, of balsam, and of those kinds most excellent and never known in Europe, of all sorts of gums, of Indian pepper: and what else the countries may afford within the land, we know not, neither had we time to abide the trial, and search. The soil besides is so excellent and so full of rivers, as it will carry sugar, ginger, and all those other commodities which the West Indies have.

 Guiana is a country that hath yet her maidenhead, never sacked, turned, nor wrought, the face of the earth hath not been torn, nor the virtue and salt of the soil spent by manurance, the graves have not been opened for gold, the mines not broken with sledge, nor their images pulled down out of their temples. It hath never been entered by any army of strength, and never conquered or possessed by any Christian prince. It is besides so defensible, that if two forts be builded in one of the provinces which I have seen, the flood setteth in so near the bank, where the channel also lieth, that no ship can pass up but within a pike's length of the artillery, first of the one, and afterwards of the other. *

 Guiana hath but one entrance by the sea (if it hath that) for any vessels of burden: so as whosoever shall first possess it, it shall be found unaccessible for any enemy, except he come in wherries, barges, or canoes, or else in flat-bottomed boats, and if he do offer to enter it in that manner, the woods are so thick two hundred miles together upon the rivers of such entrance, as a mouse cannot sit in a boat unhit from the bank. By land it is more impossible to approach, for it hath the strongest situation of any region under the sun, and is so environed with impassable mountains on every side, as it is impossible to victual any company in the passage: which hath been well proved by the Spanish nation, who since the conquest of Peru have never left five years free from attempting this empire, or discovering some way into it, and yet of three and twenty several gentlemen, knights, and noblemen there was never any that knew which way to lead an army by land, or to conduct ships by sea, anything near the said country. Orellana, of whom the river of Amazones taketh name, was the first, and Don Antonio de Berreo (whom we displanted) the last: and I doubt much, whether he himself or any of his yet know the best way into the said empire. *

The Lie

Go, soul, the body's guest,
Upon a thankless errand;
Fear not to touch the best;
The truth shall be thy warrant.
5 Go, since I needs must die,
And give the world the lie.
Say to the court, it glows
And shines like rotten wood;
Say to the church, it shows
io What's good, and doth no good.
If church and court reply,
Then give them both the lie.
Tell potentates they live
Acting by others' action;
15 Not loved unless they give,
Not strong but by a faction.
If potentates reply,
Give potentates the lie.
Tell men of high condition,
That manage the estate,
20 Their purpose is ambition,
Their practice only hate.
And if they once reply,
Then give them all the lie.
Tell them that brave it most,
They beg for more by spending,

1. "Give the lie": accuse of lying.
In 1496 a Venetian tradesman living in Bristol, John Cabot, was granted a license by Henry VII to sail on a voyage of exploration. In 1497, he reached Newfoundland. Other remarkable feats of seamanship and reconnaissance followed, including what was the Elizabethan Age's supreme maritime achievement: on his ship The Golden Hind, Sir Francis Drake circumnavigated the globe in a three-year voyage from 1577 to 1580 and laid claim to California on behalf of the queen; a few years later (1586—88) a ship commanded by Thomas Cavendish also accomplished a circumnavigation. Though they failed to rival the Spanish and Portuguese in their astonishing national enterprises of exploration and conquest, the range of sixteenth-century English naval ventures, always difficult and dangerous, is extraordinary. Sir Martin Frobisher explored bleak Baffin Island in search of a northwest passage to the Orient; Sir John Davis explored the west coast of Greenland and discovered the Falkland Islands off the coast of Argentina; Sir John Hawkins made large profits by carrying shiploads of black slaves from West Africa for sale in the Caribbean; Sir Walter Ralegh ventured up the Orinoco delta, in what is now Venezuela, in search of the mythical city of El Dorado.

Accounts of these and many other exploits were collected by a clergyman, geographer, and tireless promoter of empire, Richard Hakluyt (1552?—1616), and published as The Principal Navigations, Voyages, Traffics, and Discoveries of the English Nation (1589; expanded three-volume edition 1598—1600). Hakluyt writes that he was incited to undertake his huge editorial labors during a stay in France, where he heard "other nations miraculously extolled for their discoveries and notable enterprises by sea, but the English of all others for their sluggish security and continual neglect of the like attempts, either ignominiously reported or exceedingly condemned." His response was to assemble the records of English voyages "to the most remote and farthest distant quarters of the earth, at any time within the compass of these 1500 years."

"To seek new worlds for gold, for praise, for glory," as Ralegh characterized such enterprises, was not for the faint of heart: Drake, Cavendish, Frobisher, and Hawkins all died at sea, as did huge numbers of those who sailed under their command. Elizabethans who were sensible enough to stay at home could have a few material glimpses of their fellow countrymen's far-reaching voyages. Expeditions brought back native plants (including, most famously, tobacco), animals, cultural artifacts, and, on occasion, some native people, most often seized against their will. There were exhibitions in London of a kidnapped Eskimo with his kayak and of Virginians with their canoes. Most of these miserable captives, violently uprooted and vulnerable to European diseases, quickly perished, but even in death they were evidently valuable property: while the English will not give one small coin "to relieve a lame beggar," one of the characters in The Tempest wryly remarks, "they will lay out ten to see a dead Indian" (2.2.32-33).

But the principal way in which stay-at-homes encountered the rapidly expanding world was through eyewitness accounts of the kind we present here. These accounts were not, on the whole, rhetorically ornate. Travelers' tales had an ancient and well-deserved reputation for exaggeration and outright mendacity; consequently Elizabethan writers strove for the effect of factual directness, simplicity, and trustworthiness. But the encounters they described were so remarkable, calling into question many of their culture's rooted assumptions about human behavior, that their writings often have the mingled wonder, fear, and longing that characterize the most extravagant literary romance.* The greatest Elizabethan writer of romance, Edmund Spenser, acknowledged the affinity in defending his Faerie Land against anyone who might complain that it was unreal:

But let that man with better sense advise,
That of the world least part to us is read:
And daily how through hardy enterprise
Many great regions are discovered,
Which to late age were never mentioned.
Who ever heard of th'Indian Peru?
Or who in venturous vessel measured
The Amazons' huge river, now found true?
Or fruitfullest Virginia who did ever view?

FROBISHER'S VOYAGES TO THE ARCTIC, 1576-78

George Best, a navigator, was captain of a vessel in two of the three voyages led by Martin Frobisher (1535?—1594) to discover a northwest passage to China. On his return from the third voyage, Best published A true discourse of the late voyages of discovery, for the finding of a passage to Cathay. The expeditions, to a remote island dubbed Meta Incognita (the Unknown Boundary, now known as Baffin Island), were extremely arduous and ultimately proved disastrous. The Northwest Passage was not found, and five English sailors were seized by the Eskimos and never recovered. Frobisher kidnapped several Eskimos and brought them back to England, along with a thousand tons of promising-looking ore. The captives caused a sensation in London, but they quickly died; and the ore proved to contain only fool's gold.

From A true discourse of the late voyages of discovery, for the finding of a passage to Cathay by the Northwest, under the conduct of Martin Frobisher

God having blessed us with so happy a landfall,¹ we bare into the straits which run in next hand, and somewhat further up to the northward, and came as near the shore as we might for the ice, and upon the eighteenth day of July our general taking the goldfiners² with him, attempted to go on shore with a small rowing pinnace, upon the small island where the ore was taken up, to prove whether there were any store³ thereof to be found, but he could not get in all that island a piece so big as a walnut, where the first was found. But our men which sought the other islands thereabouts found them all to have good store of the ore, whereupon our general with these good tidings returned aboard about ten of the clock at night, and was joyfully welcomed of the company with a volley of shot. He brought eggs, fowls, and a young seal aboard, which the company had killed ashore, and having found upon those islands gins\textsuperscript{4} set to catch fowl, and sticks new cut, with other things, he well perceived that not long before some of the country people had resorted thither.

Having therefore found those tokens of the people’s access in those parts, and being in his first voyage well acquainted with their subtle and cruel disposition, he provided well for his better safety, and on Friday the nineteenth of July in the morning early, with his best company of gentlemen and soldiers, to the number of forty persons, went on shore, as well to discover the inland and habitation of the people as also to find out some fit harbor for our ships. And passing towards the shore with no small difficulty by reason of the abundance of ice which lay alongst the coast so thick together that hardly any passage through them might be discovered, we arrived at length upon the main of Hall’s greater island,\textsuperscript{5} and found there also as well as in the other small islands good store of the ore. And leaving his boats here with sufficient guard, we passed up into the country about two English miles, and recovered the top of a high hill, on the top whereof our men made a column or cross of stones heaped up of a good height together in good sort, and solemnly sounded a trumpet, and said certain prayers kneeling about the ensign, and honored the place by the name of Mount Warwick, in remembrance of the Right Honorable the Lord Ambrose Dudley, earl of Warwick,\textsuperscript{6} whose noble mind and good countenance\textsuperscript{7} in this, as in all other good actions, gave great encouragement and good furtherance. This done, we retired our companies, not seeing anything here worth further discovery, the country seeming barren and full of ragged mountains, and in most parts covered with snow.

And thus marching towards our boats, we espied certain of the country people on the top of Mount Warwick with a flag wafting\textsuperscript{8} us back again and making great noise, with cries like the mowing of bulls, seeming greatly desirous of conference with us: whereupon the general being therewith better acquainted, answered them again with the like cries, whereat and with the noise of our trumpets they seemed greatly to rejoice, skipping, laughing, and dancing for joy. And hereupon we made signs unto them, holding up two fingers, commanding two of our men to go apart from our companies, whereby they might do the like. So that forthwith two of our men and two of theirs met together a good space from company, neither party having their weapons about them. Our men gave them pins and points\textsuperscript{9} and such trifles as they had. And they likewise bestowed on our men two bow cases and such things as they had. They earnestly desired our men to go up into their country, and our men offered them like kindness aboard our ships, but neither part (as it seemed) admitted or trusted the other’s courtesy. Their manner of traffic is thus: they do use to lay down of their merchandise upon the ground so much as they mean to part withal, and so looking that the other party with whom they make trade should do the like, they themselves do depart, and then if they do like of their mart they come again, and take in exchange the other’s merchandise; otherwise if they like not, they take their own and depart. The day being thus well-near spent, in haste we retired our companies into our boats again, minding forth with to search amongst the coast for some harbor fit for our ships: for the present necessity thereof was much, considering that all this while they lay off and on between the two lands, being continually subject as well to great danger of fleeting ice, which environed them, as to the sudden flaws which the coast seemeth much subject unto. But when the people perceived our departure, with 'great tokens of affection they earnestly called us back again, following us almost to our boats: whereupon our general taking his master with him, who was best acquainted with their manners, went apart unto two of them, meaning, if they could lay sure hold upon them, forcibly to bring them aboard, with intent to bestow certain toys and apparel upon the one, and so to dismiss him with all arguments of courtesy, and retain the other for an interpreter. The general and his master being met with their two companions together, after they had exchanged certain things the one with the other, one of the savages for lack of better merchandise cut off the tail of his coat (which is a chief ornament among them) and gave it unto our general for a present. But he presently upon a watchword given with his master suddenly laid hold upon the two savages. But the ground underfoot being slippery with the snow on the side of the hill, their handfast failed, and their prey escaping ran away and lightly recovered their bow and arrows, which they had hid not far from them behind the rocks. And being only two savages in sight, they so fiercely, desperately, and with such fury assaulted and pursued our general and his master, being altogether unarmed, and not mistrusting their subtlety, that they chased them to their boats, and hurt the general in the buttock with an arrow, who the rather speedily fled back because they suspected a greater number behind the rocks. Our soldiers (which were commanded before to keep their boats) perceiving the danger, and hearing our men calling for shot, came speedily to rescue, thinking there had been a greater number. But when the savages heard the shot of one of our calivers (and yet having first bestowed their arrows), they ran away, our men speedily following them. But a servant of my Lord of Warwick, called Nicholas Conger, a good footman, and uncumbered with any furniture, having only a dagger at his back, overtook one of them, and being a Cornishman and a good wrestler, showed his companion such a Cornish trick that he made his sides ache against the ground for a month after. And so being stayed, he was taken alive and brought away, but the other escaped. Thus with their strange and new prey our men repaired to their boats, and passed from the main to a small island of a mile compass, where they resolved to tarry all night; for even now a sudden storm was grown so great at sea that by no means they could recover their ships. And here every man refreshed himself with a small portion of victuals which was laid into the boats for their dinners, having neither eat nor drunk all the day before.

But because they knew not how long the storm might last, nor how far off the ships might be put to sea, nor whether they should ever recover them again or not, they made great spare of their victuals, as it greatly behooved them:
for they knew full well that the best cheer the country could yield them was rocks and stones, a hard food to live withal, and the people more ready to eat them than to give them wherewithal to eat. And thus keeping very good watch and ward, they lay there all night upon hard cliffs of snow and ice, both wet, cold, and comfortless.

Upon the mainland over against the Countess’s Island we discovered and beheld to our great marvel the poor caves and houses of those country people, which serve them (as it should seem) for their winter dwellings, and are made two fathom underground, in compass round like to an oven, being joined fast one by another, having holes like to a fox or cony berry, to keep and come together. They undertrenched these places with gutters, so that the water falling from the hills above them may slide away without their annoyance: and are seated commonly in the foot of a hill, to shield them better from the cold winds, having their door and entrance ever open towards the south. From the ground upward they build with whales’ bones, for lack of timber, which bending one over another are handsomely compacted in the top together, and are covered over with sealskins, which, instead of tiles, fence them from the rain. In which house they have only one room, having the one half of the floor raised with broad stones a foot higher than the other, whereon strewn moss, they make their nests to sleep in. They defile these dens most filthy with their beastly feeding, and dwell so long in a place (as we think) until, their sluttishness loathing them, they are forced to seek a sweeter air and a new seat, and are (no doubt) a dispersed and wandering nation, as the Tartarians, and live in hordes and troops without any certain abode, as may appear by sundry circumstances of our experience.

Here our captive, being ashore with us to declare the use of such things as we saw, stayed himself alone behind the company, and did set up five small sticks round in a circle one by another, with one small bone placed just in the midst of all: which thing when one of our men perceived, he called us back to behold the matter, thinking that he had meant some charm or witchcraft therein. But the best conjecture we could make thereof was that he would thereby his countrymen should understand that for our five men which they betrayed the last year (whom he signified by the five sticks) he was taken and kept prisoner, which he signified by the bone in the midst. For afterwards when we showed him the picture of his countryman which the last year was brought into England (whose counterfeit we had drawn, with boat and other furniture, both as he was in his own, and also in English apparel), he was upon the sudden much amazed thereat, and beholding advisedly the same with silence a good while, as though he would strain courtesy whether should begin the speech (for he thought him no doubt a lively creature), at length began to question with him, as with his companion, and, finding him dumb and mute, seemed to suspect him, as one disdainful, and would with a little help have grown into choler at the matter, until at last, by feeling and handling, he found him but a deceiving picture. And then with great noise and cries ceased not wondering, thinking that we could make men live or die at our pleasure.

And thereupon calling the matter to his remembrance, he gave us plainly to understand by signs that he had knowledge of the taking of our five men the last year, and confessing the manner of each thing, numbered the five men upon his five fingers and pointed unto a boat in our ship which was like unto that wherein our men were betrayed: and when we made him signs that they were slain and eaten, he earnestly denied, and made signs to the contrary.

DRAKE'S CIRCUMNAVIGATION OF THE GLOBE,
1577-80

The Spanish and Portuguese had been exploring the Pacific long before the great Elizabethan admiral and sometime privateer Francis Drake (ca. 1540—1596) caught sight of its waters in 1573. Drake returned to the Pacific in the course of an epochal journey chronicled in a narrative entitled The famous voyage of Sir Francis Drake into the South Sea, and therehence about the whole Globe of the Earth. The narrative, assembled by Hakluyt from several eyewitness accounts, includes a description of the place Drake called Nova Albion (New England), better known by the name given to it by Spanish explorers, California. Somewhere in the vicinity of what is now San Francisco (perhaps Drake's Bay, on the Point Reyes peninsula), the English believed (or claimed to believe) that the native "king" gave to Drake title to the whole land. The brass plate mentioned in the account has never been found, though a forgery sat for some years in a display case at the University of California, Berkeley.

From The famous voyage of Sir Francis Drake into the South Sea, and therehence about the whole Globe of the Earth, begun in the year of our Lord 1577

The fifth day of June, being in 43 degrees towards the pole arctic,¹ we found the air so cold that our men, being grievously pinched with the same, complained of the extremity thereof, and the further we went, the more the cold increased upon us. Whereupon we thought it best for that time to seek the land, and did so, finding it not mountainous but low plain land, till we came within 38 degrees towards the line.² In which height it pleased God to send us into a fair and good bay, with a good wind to enter the same.

In this bay we anchored, and the people of the country having their houses close by the water's side showed themselves unto us, and sent a present to our general.

When they came unto us, they greatly wondered at the things that we brought, but our general (according to his natural and accustomed humanity) courteously entreated them, and liberally bestowed on them necessary things to cover their nakedness, whereupon they supposed us to be gods, and would not be persuaded to the contrary. The presents which they sent to our general were feathers, and cauls³ of net-work.

¹. I.e., 43° north latitude. The year is 1579.
². The equator. "38 degrees": a latitude a little north of present-day San Francisco.
³. Headdresses.
Their houses are digged round about with earth, and have from the uttermost brims of the circle clefts of wood set upon them, joining close together at the top like a spire steeple, which by reason of that closeness are very warm.

Their beds is the ground with rushes strewed on it, and lying about the house, have the fire in the midst. The men go naked, the women take bulrushes and comb them after the manner of hemp, and thereof make their loose garments, which being knit about their middles, hang down about their hips, having also about their shoulders a skin of deer, with the hair upon it. These women are very obedient and serviceable to their husbands.

After they were departed from us, they came and visited us the second time and brought with them feathers and bags of tobacco for presents; and when they came to the top of the hill (at the bottom whereof we had pitched our tents), they stayed themselves: where one appointed for speaker wearied himself with making a long oration, which done, they left their bows upon the hill and came down with their presents.

In the meantime the women, remaining on the hill, tormented themselves lamentably, tearing their flesh from their cheeks, whereby we perceived that they were about a sacrifice. In the meantime our general with his company went to prayer, and to reading of the Scriptures, at which exercise they were attentive, and seemed greatly to be affected with it: but when they were come unto us, they restored again unto us those things which before we bestowed upon them.

The news of our being there being spread through the country, the people that inhabited round about came down, and amongst them the king himself, a man of a goodly stature and comely personage, with many other tall and warlike men: before whose coming were sent two ambassadors to our general to signify that their king was coming, in doing of which message their speech was continued about half an hour. This ended, they by signs requested our general to send something by their hand to their king, as a token that his coming might be in peace: wherein our general having satisfied them, they returned with glad tidings to their king, who marched to us with a princely majesty, the people crying continually after their manner; and as they drew near unto us, so did they strive to behave themselves in their actions with comeliness.

In the forefront was a man of a goodly personage, who bare the scepter or mace before the king, whereupon hanged two crowns, a less and a bigger, with three chains of a marvelous length. The crowns were made of knit-work wrought artificially with feathers of divers colors; the chains were made of a bonny substance, and few be the persons among them that are admitted to wear them—and of that number also the persons are stinted, as some ten, some twelve, etc. Next unto him which bare the scepter was the king himself, with his guard about his person, clad with cony skins and other skins; after them followed the naked common sort of people, everyone having his face painted, some with white, some with black and other colors, and having in their hands one thing or another for a present, not so much as their children, but they also brought their presents.

In the meantime our general gathered his men together and marched within his fenced place, making against their approaching a very warlike show. They being trooped together in their order, and a general salutation being made, there was presently a general silence. Then he that bare the scepter before the king, being informed by another, whom they assigned to that office, with a manly and lofty voice proclaimed that which the other spake to him in secret, continuing half an hour: which ended, and a general Amen as it were given, the king with the whole number of men and women (the children excepted) came down without any weapon, who descending to the foot of the hill set themselves in order.

In coming towards our bulwarks and tents, the scepter-bearer began a song, observing his measures in a dance, and that with a stately countenance, whom the king with his guard, and every degree of persons following, did in like manner sing and dance, saving only the women, which danced and kept silence. The general permitted them to enter within our bulwark, where they continued their song and dance a reasonable time. When they had satisfied themselves, they made signs to our general to sit down, to whom the king and divers others made several orations, or rather supplications, that he would take their province and kingdom into his hand and become their king, making signs that they would resign unto him their right and title of the whole land and become his subjects. In which to persuade us the better, the king and the rest, with one consent and with great reverence, joyfully singing a song, did set the crown upon his head, enriched his neck with all their chains, and offered unto him many other things, honoring him by the name of Hiob, adding thereunto, as it seemed, a sign of triumph: which thing our general thought not meet to reject, because he knew not what honor and profit it might be to our country. Wherefore in the name and to the use of Her Majesty he took the scepter, crown, and dignity of the said country into his hands, wishing that the riches and treasure thereof might so conveniently be transported to the enriching of her kingdom at home, as it aboundeth in the same.

The common sort of people, leaving the king and his guard with our general, scattered themselves together with their sacrifices among our people, taking a diligent view of every person: and such as pleased their fancy (which were the youngest), they enclosing them about offered their sacrifices unto them with lamentable weeping, scratching, and tearing the flesh from their faces with their nails, whereof issued abundance of blood. But we used signs to them of disliking this, and stayed their hands from force, and directed them upwards to the living God, whom only they ought to worship. They showed unto us their wounds and craved help of them at our hands, whereupon we gave them lotions, plasters, and ointments agreeing to the state of their griefs, beseeching God to cure their diseases. Every third day they brought their sacrifices unto us, until they understood our meaning, that we had no pleasure in them: yet they could not be long absent from us, but daily frequented our company to the hour of our departure, which departure seemed so grievous unto them that their joy was turned into sorrow. They entreated us that being absent we would remember them, and by stealth provided a sacrifice, which we disliked.

Our necessary business being ended, our general with his company traveled up into the country to their villages, where we found herds of deer by 1000 in a company, being most large and fat of body.

We found the whole country to be a warren of a strange kind of conies, their bodies in bigness as be the Barbary conies, their heads as the heads of ours, the feet of a want, and the tail of a rat, being of great length; under her chin is on either side a bag, into the which she gathereth her meat, when she hath filled her belly abroad. The people eat their bodies and make great accompt of their skins, for their king’s coat was made of them.

Our general called this country Nova Albion, and that for two causes: the one in respect of the white banks and cliffs which lie towards the sea; and the other, because it might have some affinity with our country in name, which sometime was so called.

There is no part of earth here to be taken up wherein there is not some probable show of gold or silver. At our departure hence our general set up a monument of our being there, as also of Her Majesty’s right and title to the same, namely a plate nailed upon a fair great post, whereupon was engraven Her Majesty’s name, the day and year of our arrival there, with the free giving up of the province and people into Her Majesty’s hands, together with Her Highness’ picture and arms in a piece of sixpence of current English money under the plate, whereunder was also written the name of our general.

AMADAS AND BARLOWE’S VOYAGE TO VIRGINIA, 1584

The first English voyage to Virginia was commanded by Philip Amadas and Arthur Barlowe. The two captains had been sent forth by Sir Walter Raleigh to discover territories in North America suitable for colonization. In Barlowe’s account, they encountered a people living very close to the blessed state of the inhabitants of the Golden Age celebrated by classical poets like Ovid, a state of simplicity, honesty, generosity, and peace. All the same, when a group of Algonkian hunters suddenly return home, the English colonists immediately reach for their weapons.

From The first voyage made to Virginia

The second of July we found shoal water, which smelt so sweetly and was so strong a smell as if we had been in the midst of some delicate garden abounding with all kind of odoriferous flowers, by which we were assured that the land could not be far distant. And keeping good watch and bearing but slack sail, the fourth of the same month we arrived upon the coast, which we supposed to be a continent and firm land, and we sailed along the same 120 English miles before we could find any entrance, or river issuing into the sea.
The first that appeared unto us we entered, though not without some difficulty, and cast anchor three harquebus-shot within the haven’s mouth, on the left hand of the same. And after thanks given to God for our safe arrival thither, we manned our boats, and went to view the land next adjoining and to take possession of the same in the right of the queen’s most excellent Majesty, as rightful queen and princess of the same, and after delivered the same over to your use, according to Her Majesty’s grant and letters patents, under Her Highness’s Great Seal. Which being performed according to the ceremonies used in such enterprises, we viewed the land about us, being whereas we first landed very sandy and low towards the waterside, but so full of grapes as the very beating and surge of the sea overflowed them. Of which we found such plenty, as well there as in all places else, both on the sand and on the green soil on the hills, as well on every little shrub, as also climbing towards the tops of high cedars, that I think in all the world the like abundance is not to be found. And myself having seen those parts of Europe that most abound, find such difference as were incredible to be written.

We passed from the seaside towards the tops of those hills next adjoining, being but of mean height, and from thence we beheld the sea on both sides, to the north and to the south, finding no end any of both ways. This land lay stretching itself to the west, which after we found to be but an island of twenty leagues long and not above six miles broad. Under the bank or hill whereon we stood, we beheld the valleys replenished with goodly cedar trees, and having discharged our harquebus-shot, such a flock of cranes (the most part white) arose under us, with such a cry redoubled by many echoes, as if an army of men had shouted all together.

This island had many goodly woods, and full of deer, conies, hares, and fowl, even in the midst of summer, in incredible abundance. The woods are not such as you find in Bohemia, Moscovia, or Hyscania, barren and fruitless, but the highest and reddest cedars of the world, far bettering the cedars of the Azores, of the Indies, or of Lybanus, pines, cypress, sassafras, the lentisk or the tree that beareth the mastic, the tree that beareth the rind of black cinnamon, of which Master Winter brought from the Straits of Magellan, and many other of excellent smell and quality.

We remained by the side of this island two whole days before we saw any people of the country. The third day we espied one small boat rowing towards us, having in it three persons. This boat came to the land’s side, four harquebus-shot from our ships; and there two of the people remaining, the third came along the shore side towards us, and we being then all within board, he walked up and down upon the point of the land next unto us. Then the master and the pilot of the admiral, Simon Ferdinando, and the captain, Philip Amadas, myself, and others, rowed to the land; whose coming this fellow attended, never making any show of fear or doubt. And after he had spoken of many things not understood by us, we brought him, with his own good... liking, aboard the ships, and gave him a shirt, a hat, and some other things, and made him taste of our wine and our meat, which he liked very well. And after having viewed both barks he departed and went to his own boat again, which he had left in a little cove or creek adjoining. As soon as he was two bow-shot into the water he fell to fishing, and in less than half an hour he had laden his boat as deep as it could swim, with which he came again to the point of the land, and there he divided his fish into two parts, pointing one part to the ship and the other to the pinnace. Which, after he had (as much as he might) requited the former benefits received, he departed out of our sight.

The next day there came unto us divers boats, and in one of them the king's brother, accompanied with forty or fifty men, very handsome and goodly people, and in their behavior as mannerly and civil as any of Europe. His name was Granganimeo, and the king is called Wingina; the country, Wingandacoa (and now, by Her Majesty, Virginia). The manner of his coming was in this sort: he left his boats all together, as the first man did, a little from the ships by the shore, and came along to the place over against the ships, followed with forty men. When he came to the place, his servants spread a long mat upon the ground, on which he sat down, and at the other end of the mat four others of his company did the like. The rest of his men stood round about him somewhat afar off. When we came to the shore to him, with our weapons, he never moved from his place, nor any of the other four, nor never mistrusted any harm to be offered from us; but, sitting still, he beckoned us to come and sit by him, which we performed. And, being set, he made all signs of joy and welcome, striking on his head and his breast and afterwards on ours, to show we were all one, smiling and making show the best he could of all love and familiarity. After he had made a long speech unto us we presented him with divers things, which he received very joyfully and thankfully. None of his company durst speak one word all the time; only the four which were at the other end spake one in the other's ear very softly.

The king is greatly obeyed, and his brothers and children reverenced. The king himself in person was at our being there sore wounded in a fight which he had with the king of the next country, called Wingiana, and was shot in two places through the body, and once clean through the thigh, but yet he recovered. By reason whereof, and for that he lay at the chief town of the country, being six days' journey off, we saw him not at all.

After we had presented this his brother with such things as we thought he liked, we likewise gave somewhat to the other that sat with him on the mat. But presently he arose and took all from them and put it into his own basket, making signs and tokens that all things ought to be delivered unto him, and the rest were but his servants and followers. A day or two after this we fell to trading with them, exchanging some things that we had for chamois, buff, and deer skins. When we showed him all our packet of merchandise, of all things that he saw a bright tin dish most pleased him, which he presently took up and clapt it before his breast, and after made a hole in the brim thereof and hung it about his neck, making signs that it would defend him against his enemies' arrows. For those people maintain a deadly and terrible war with the people and king adjoining. We exchanged our tin dish for twenty skins, worth twenty crowns or twenty nobles; and a copper kettle for fifty skins, worth fifty crowns. They offered us good exchange for our hatchets and axes, and for knives, and would have given anything for swords; but we would not depart with any. * * *

* * * We found the people most gentle, loving, and faithful, void of guile and treason, and such as live after the manner of the Golden Age. The people only care how to defend themselves from the cold in their short winter, and to feed themselves with such meat as the soil affordeth; their meat is very well sodden, and they make broth very sweet and savory. Their vessels are earthen pots, very large, white, and sweet; their dishes are wooden platters of sweet timber. Within the place where they feed was their lodging, and within that their idol which they worship, of which they speak incredible things. While we were at meat, there came in at the gates two or three men with their bows and arrows from hunting, whom when we espied we began to look one towards another, and offered to reach our weapons. But as soon as she espied our mistrust, she was very much moved, and caused some of her men to run out, and take away their bows and arrows and break them, and withal beat the poor fellows out of the gate again. When we departed in the evening and would not tarry all night, she was very sorry, and gave us into our boat our supper half-dressed, pots and all, and brought us to our boat's side, in which we lay all night, removing the same a pretty distance from the shore. She perceiving our jealousy was much grieved, and sent divers men and thirty women to sit all night on the bank's side by us, and sent us into our boats fine mats to cover us from the rain, using very many words to entreat us to rest in their houses. But because we were few men, and if we had miscarried the voyage had been in very great danger, we durst not adventure anything, although there was no cause of doubt. For a more kind and loving people there cannot be found in the world, as far as we have hitherto had trial.

We brought home also two of the savages, being lusty men, whose names were Wanchese and Manteo.

HARIOT'S REPORT ON VIRGINIA, 1585

Thomas Hariot (1560-1621), mathematician, astronomer, and surveyor in the service of Sir Walter Raleigh, was observing sunspots and using a telescope at about the same time as Galileo; he also made important discoveries in algebra. He accompanied Sir Richard Grenville's expedition to Virginia in 1585 and wrote an account of it intended to promote colonization. He describes the geography, climate, vegetation, wildlife, and, especially, inhabitants of the New World, about whom the English were intensely curious. Reports had begun to circulate in England about tensions with the Algonkian Indians, upon whom the colonists were almost completely dependent for food, and Hariot's brief ethnographic observations sketch the grounds for reassurance that the natives "are not to be feared."

else by ambuscades or some subtle devices. Set battles are very rare, except it fall out where there are many trees, where either part may have some hope of defense, after the delivery of every arrow, in leaping behind some or other.

If there fall out any wars between us and them, what their fight is likely to be, we having advantages against them so many manner of ways, as by our discipline, our strange weapons and devices else, especially ordnance great and small, it may easily be imagined: by the experience we have had in some places, the turning up of their heels against us in running away was their best defense.

In respect of us they are a people poor, and for want of skill and judgment in the knowledge and use of our things, do esteem our trifles before things of greater value. Notwithstanding, in their proper manner (considering the want of such means as we have), they seem very ingenious. For although they have no such tools nor any such crafts, sciences, and arts as we, yet in those things they do, they show excellency of wit. And by how much they upon due consideration shall find our manner of knowledges and crafts to exceed theirs in perfection, and speed for doing or execution, by so much the more is it probable that they should desire our friendship and love, and have the greater respect for pleasing and obeying us. Whereby may be hoped, if means of good government be used, that they may in short time be brought to civility and the embracing of true religion.

Some religion they have already, which although it be far from the truth, yet being as it is, there is hope it may be the easier and sooner reformed.

They believe that there are many gods, which they call mantoac; but of different sorts and degrees, one only chief and great god, which hath been from all eternity. Who, as they affirm, when he purposed to make the world, made first other gods of a principal order to be as means and instruments to be used in the creation and government to follow, and after, the sun, moon, and stars as petty gods, and the instruments of the other order more principal. First, they say, were made waters, out of which by the gods was made all diversity of creatures that are visible or invisible.

For mankind, they say a woman was made first, which, by the working of one of the gods, conceived and brought forth children. And in such sort, they say, they had their beginning. But how many years or ages have passed since, they say they can make no relation, having no letters nor other such means as we to keep records of the particularities of times past, but only tradition from father to son.

They think that all the gods are of human shape, and therefore they represent them by images in the forms of men, which they call kewasowok; one alone is called kewas: them they place in houses appropriate, or temples, which they call machicomuck, where they worship, pray, sing, and make many times offering unto them. In some machicomuck we have seen but one kewas, in some two, and in other some three. The common sort think them to be also gods.

They believe also the immortality of the soul, that after this life as soon as the soul is departed from the body, according to the works it hath done, it is either carried to heaven, the habitacle of gods, there to enjoy perpetual bliss and happiness, or else to a great pit or hole, which they think to be in the furthest parts of their part of the world toward the sunset, there to burn continually. The place they call Popogusso.

For the confirmation of this opinion, they told me two stories of two men that had been lately dead and revived again. The one happened, but few years before our coming into the country, of a wicked man, which having been dead and buried, the next day the earth of the grave being seen to move, was taken up again; who made declaration where his soul had been—that is to say, very near entering into Popogusso, had not one of the gods saved him and gave him leave to return again and teach his friends what they should do to avoid that terrible place of torment. The other happened in the same year we were there, but in a town that was sixty miles from us, and it was told me for strange news that one being dead, buried, and taken up again as the first, showed that although his body had lain dead in the grave, yet his soul was alive and had traveled far in a long broad way, on both sides whereof grew most delicate and pleasant trees, bearing more rare and excellent fruits than ever he had seen before or was able to express, and at length came to most brave and fair houses, near which he met his father that had been dead before, who gave him great charge to go back and show his friends what good they were to do to enjoy the pleasures of that place, which when he had done he should after come again.

What subtlety soever be in the wiroances and priests, this opinion worketh so much in many of the common and simple sort of people that it maketh them have great respect to their governors, and also great care what they do, to avoid torment after death and to enjoy bliss; although notwithstanding there is punishment ordained for malefactors, as stealers, whoremongers, and other sorts of wicked-doers, some punished with death, some with forfeitures, some with beating, according to the greatness of the facts.2

And this is the sum of their religion, which I learned by having special familiarity with some of their priests. Wherein they were not so sure grounded, nor gave such credit to their traditions and stories, but through conversing with us they were brought into great doubts of their own,3 and no small admiration of ours, with earnest desire in many to learn more than we had means, for want of perfect utterance in their language, to express.

Most things they saw with us, as mathematical instruments, sea compasses, the virtue of the lodestone4 in drawing iron, a perspective glass whereby was showed many strange sights, burning glasses, wildfire works,5 guns, books, writing and reading, spring-clocks that seem to go of themselves, and many other things that we had, were so strange unto them, and so far exceeded their capacities to comprehend the reason and means how they should be made and done, that they thought they were rather the works of gods than of men, or at the leastwise they had been given and taught us of the gods. Which made many of them to have such opinion of us, as that if they knew not the truth of God and religion already, it was rather to be had from us whom God so specially loved, than from a people that were so simple as they found themselves to be in comparison of us. Whereupon greater credit was given unto that we spoke of concerning such matters.

Many times and in every town where I came, according as I was able, I made declaration of the contents of the Bible, that therein was set forth the true and only God and his mighty works, that therein was contained the true doctrine of salvation through Christ, with many particularities of miracles and chief points of religion, as I was able then to utter, and thought fit for the time. And although I told them the book materially and of itself was not of any such virtue as I thought they did conceive, but only the doctrine therein contained, yet would many be glad to touch it, to embrace it, to kiss it, to hold it to their breasts and heads, and stroke over all their body with it, to show their hungry desire of that knowledge which was spoken of.

There could at no time happen any strange sickness, losses, hurts, or any other cross unto them, but that they would impute to us the cause or means thereof, for offending or not pleasing us. One other rare and strange accident, leaving others, will I mention before I end, which moved the whole country that either knew or heard of us to have us in wonderful admiration.

There was no town where we had any subtle device practiced against us, we leaving it unpunished or not revenged (because we sought by all means possible to win them by gentleness), but that within a few days after our departure from every such town the people began to die very fast, and many in short space, in some towns about twenty, in some forty, and in one six score, which in truth was very many in respect of their numbers. This happened in no place that we could learn, but where we had been, where they used some practice against us, and after such time. The disease also was so strange that they neither knew what it was nor how to cure it, the like by report of the oldest men in the country never happened before, time out of mind—a thing specially observed by us, as also by the natural inhabitants themselves. Insomuch that when some of the inhabitants which were our friends, and especially the wiroans Wingina, had observed such effects in four or five towns to follow their wicked practices, they were persuaded that it was the work of our God through our means, and that we by him might kill and slay whom we would without weapons, and not come near them. And thereupon when it had happened that they had understanding that any of their enemies had abused us in our journeys, hearing that we had wrought no revenge with our weapons, and fearing upon some cause the matter should so rest, did come and entreat us that we would be a means to our God that they, as others that had dealt ill with us, might in like sort die, alleging how much it would be for our credit and profit, as also theirs, and hoping furthermore that we would do so much at their requests in respect of the friendship we professed them.

Whose entreaties although we showed that they were ungodly, affirming that our God would not subject himself to any such prayers and requests of men—that indeed all things have been and were to be done according to his good pleasure as he had ordained, and that we to show ourselves his true servants ought rather to make petition for the contrary, that they with them might live together with us, be made partakers of his truth, and serve him in righteousness, but notwithstanding in such sort that we refer that, as all other things, to be done according to his divine will and pleasure, and as by his wisdom he had ordained to be best—yet because the effect fell out so suddenly and shortly after according to their desires, they thought nevertheless it came to pass by our means, and that we in using such speeches unto them did but dissemble the matter, and therefore came unto us to give us thanks in their manner, that although we satisfied them not in promise, yet in deeds and effect we had fulfilled their desires.

This marvelous accident in all the country wrought so strange opinions of us that some people could not tell whether to think us gods or men, and the rather because that all the space of their sickness there was no man of ours known to die, or that was specially sick: they noted also that we had no women amongst us, neither that we did care for any of theirs.

Some therefore were of opinion that we were not born of women, and therefore not mortal, but that we were men of an old generation many years past, then risen again to immortality.

Some would likewise seem to prophesy that there were more of our generation yet to come, to kill theirs and take their places, as some thought the purpose was, by that which was already done. Those that were immediately to come after us they imagined to be in the air, yet invisible and without bodies, and that they by our entreaty and for the love of us did make the people to die in that sort as they did, by shooting invisible bullets into them.

To confirm this opinion, their physicians (to excuse their ignorance in curing the disease) would not be ashamed to say, but earnestly make the simple people believe, that the strings of blood that they sucked out of the sick bodies were the strings wherewithal the invisible bullets were tied and cast. Some also thought that we shot them ourselves out of our pieces from the place where we dwelt, and killed the people in any town that had offended us as we listed, how far distant from us soever it were. And other some said that it was the special work of God for our sakes (as we ourselves have cause in some sort to think no less, whatsoever some do or may imagine to the contrary), specially some astrologers, knowing of the eclipse of the sun which we saw the same year before in our voyage thitherward, which unto them appeared very terrible; and also of a comet which began to appear but a few days before the beginning of the said sickness. But to exclude them from being the special causes of so special an accident, there are further reasons than I think fit at this present to be alleged. These their opinions I have set down the more at large, that it may appear unto you that there is good hope they may be brought through discreet dealing and government to the embracing of the truth, and consequently to honor, obey, fear, and love us.

And although some of our company towards the end of the year showed themselves too fierce in slaying some of the people in some towns, upon causes that of our part might easily enough have been borne withal, yet notwithstanding, because it was on their part justly deserved, the alteration of their opinions generally and for the most part concerning us is the less to be doubted. And whatsoever else they may be, by carefulness of ourselves need nothing at all to be feared.

JOHN LYLY
1554-1606

John Lyly was the grandson of William Lily, the author of the standard Latin grammar that every English schoolboy studied. After receiving the M.A. degree at Oxford, Lyly went to London, where his prose romance Euphues (1578) was an instant success. Subsequently, he wrote several elegant, sophisticated plays acted at court by the children’s companies, and served several terms as a member of Parliament, though his hopes of obtaining a lucrative court appointment, such as Master of the Revels, were disappointed.

The title Euphues, taken from the name of that book’s hero, is Greek for “of good natural parts, graceful, witty”; the subtitle, Anatomy of Wit, means something like “analysis of the mental faculties.” The plot of the work involves a young man who leaves university for the carnal temptations of the city, falls in love, betrays his best friend, is in turn betrayed, repents, and thereafter ladies out great quantities of moral wisdom. But the story of the repentant prodigal is distinctly secondary to the prose style which has come to be known as Euphuism. It has two features: an elaborately patterned sentence structure based on comparison and antithesis, and a wealth of ornament including proverbs, incidents from history and poetry, and fanciful similes drawn from contemporary science, classical texts, or the author’s own imagination. Euphuism became a rage for a while, especially at court, though it was criticized by Sidney, parodied by Shakespeare, and mocked by Nashe and Jonson. The style may have been particularly popular among court women; the publisher of Lyly’s Six Court Comedies in 1632 informed his readers that “All our ladies were then his [Euphues’s or Lyly’s] scholars, and the beauty in court who could not parley Euphuism was as little regarded as she which now there speaks not French.” Although it did not last, this highly self-conscious, overwrought style is an example of the Elizabethans’ fascination with ornate language and artifice.*

From Euphues: The Anatomy of Wit

[EUPHUES INTRODUCED]

There dwelt in Athens a young gentleman of great patrimony, and of so comely a personage, that it was doubted whether he were more bound to Nature for the lineaments of his person, or to Fortune for the increase of his possessions. But Nature impatient of comparisons, and as it were disdaining a companion or copartner in her working, added to this comeliness of his body such a sharp capacity of mind, that not only she proved Fortune counterfeit, but was half of that opinion that she herself was only current. This young gallant, of more wit than wealth, and yet of more wealth than wisdom, seeing himself inferior to none in pleasant conceits, thought himself superior to all in honest conditions, insomuch that he deemed himself so apt to all things, that he gave himself almost to nothing, but practicing of those things commonly which are incident to these sharp wits, fine phrases, smooth quipping, merry taunting, using jesting without mean, and abusing mirth without measure. As therefore the sweetest rose hath his prickle, the finest velvet his brack, the fairest flower his bran, so the sharpest wit hath his wanton will, and the holiest head his wicked way. And true it is that some men write and most men believe, that in all perfect shapes, a blemish bringeth rather a liking every way to the eyes, than a loathing any way to the mind. Venus had her mole in her cheek which made her more amiable: Helen her scar on her chin which Paris called cos amoris, the whetsone of love. Aristippus his wart, Lycurgus his wen: So likewise in the disposition of the mind, either virtue is overshadowed with some vice, or vice overcast with some virtue. Alexander valiant in war, yet given to wine. Tully eloquent in his glozes, yet vainglorious: Solomon wise, yet too too wanton: David holy but yet an homicide: none more witty than Euphues, yet at the first none more wicked. The freshest colors soonest fade, the teenest razor soonest turneth his edge, the finest cloth is soonest eaten with moths, and the cambric sooner stained than the coarse canvas: which appeared well in this Euphues, whose wit being like wax apt to receive any impression, and having the bridle in his own hands, either to use the rein or the spur, disdaining counsel, leaving his country, loathing his old acquaintance, thought either by wit to obtain some conquest, or by shame to abide some conflict, and leaving the rule of reason, rashly ran unto destruction. Who preferring fancy before friends, and his present humor before honor to come, laid reason in water being too salt for his taste, and followed unbridled affection, most pleasant for his tooth. When parents have more care how to leave their children wealthy than wise, and are more desirous to have them maintain the name than the nature of a gentleman; when they put gold into the hands of youth, where they should put a rod under their girdle, when instead of awe they make them past grace, and leave them rich executors of goods, and poor executors of godliness, then is it no marvel that the son, being left rich by his father's will, become retchless by his own will.

It hath been an old-said saw, and not of less truth than antiquity, that wit is the better if it be the dearer bought: as in the sequel of this history shall most manifestly appear. It happened this young imp to arrive at Naples (a place of more pleasure than profit, and yet of more profit than piety), the very walls and windows whereof shewed it rather to be the Tabernacle of Venus than the Temple of Vesta. There was all things necessary and in readiness that might either allure the mind to lust or entice the heart to folly, a court more meet for an atheist than for one of Athens, for Ovid than for Aristotle, for a graceless lover than for a godly liver: more fitter for Paris than Hector, and meeter for Flora than Diana.

Here my youth (whether for weariness he could not, or for wantonness... would not, go any further) determined to make his abode: whereby it is evidently seen that the fleetest fish swalloweth the delicatest bait, that the highest soaring hawk traineth to the lure, and that the Wittiest sconce is inveigled with the sudden view of alluring vanities.

Here he wanted no companions which courted him continually with sundry kinds of devices, whereby they might either soak his purse to reap commodity, or soothe his person to win credit, for he had guests and companions of all sorts.

There frequented to this lodging and mansion house as well the spider to suck poison of his fine wit as the bee to gather honey, as well the drone as the dove, the fox as the lamb, as well Damocles to betray him as Damon to be true to him: yet he behaved himself so warily, that he singled his game wisely.

He could easily discern Apollo’s music from Pan his pipe, and Venus’s beauty from Juno’s bravery, and the faith of Laelius from the flattery of Aristippus, he welcomed all but trusted none, he was merry but yet so wary that neither the flatterer could take advantage to entrap him in his talk nor the wisest any assurance of his friendship: who being demanded of one what countryman he was, he answered, ‘What countryman am I not? If I be in Crete, I can lie, if in Greece I can shift, if in Italy I can court it: if thou ask whose son I am also, I ask thee whose son I am not. I can carouse with Alexander, abstain with Romulus, eat with the Epicure, fast with the Stoic, sleep with Endymion, watch with Chrysippus, using these speeches and other like. An old gentleman in Naples seeing his pregnant wit, his eloquent tongue somewhat taunting, yet with delight, his mirth without measure yet not without wit, his sayings vainglorious yet pithy, began to bewail his nurture and to muse at his nature, being incensed against the one as most pernicious, and enflamed with the other as most precious: for he well knew that so rare a wit would in time either breed an intolerable trouble or bring an incomparable treasure to the common weal: at the one he greatly pitied, at the other he rejoiced.

SIR PHILIP SIDNEY
1554-1586

Sir Philip Sidney's face was "spoiled with pimpls," Ben Jonson remarked in 1619, wryly distancing himself from the virtual Sidney cult that had arisen in the years after his death. Knight, soldier, poet, friend, and patron, Sidney seemed to the Elizabethans to embody all the traits of character and personality they admired: he was Castiglione's perfect courtier come to life. When he was killed in battle in the Low Countries at the age of thirty-two, fighting for the Protestant cause against the hated Spanish, all England mourned. Stories, possibly apocryphal, began immediately to circulate about his gallantry on the battlefield—grievously wounded, he gave his water to a dying footsoldier with the words "Thy necessity is yet greater than mine"—and about his astonishing self-composure as he himself lay dying: suffering from his putrifying, gangrenous wound, Sidney composed a song and had it sung by his deathbed. When his corpse was brought back to England for burial, the spectacular funeral procession, one of the most elaborate ever staged, almost bankrupted his father-in-law, Francis Walsingham, the wealthy head of Queen Elizabeth's secret service.

Philip Sidney's father was Sir Henry Sidney, thrice lord deputy (governor) of Ireland, and his mother was a sister of Robert Dudley, earl of Leicester, the most spectacular and powerful of all the queen's favorites. He entered Shrewsbury School in 1564, at the age of ten, on the same day as Fulke Greville, who became his lifelong friend and his biographer. Greville wrote of Sidney, "though I lived with him and knew him from a child, yet I never knew him other than a man—with such staidness of mind, lovely and familiar gravity, as carried grace and reverence above greater years." He attended Oxford but left without taking a degree and completed his education by extended travels on the Continent. There he met many of the most important people of the time, from kings and queens to philosophers, theologians, and poets. In France he witnessed the Massacre of St. Bartholomew's Day, which began in Paris on August 24, 1572, and raged through France for more than a month, as Catholic mobs incited by Queen Catherine de Medicis slaughtered perhaps 50,000 Huguenots (French Protestants). This experience undoubtedly strengthened Sidney's ardent Protestantism, which had been inculcated by his family background and education. In an intense correspondence with his mentor, the Burgundian humanist Hubert Languet, he brooded on how he could help to save Europe from what he viewed as the Roman Catholic menace.

Languet and his associates clearly hoped that this brilliant and wonderfully well-connected young Englishman would be able to steer royal policy toward active intervention in Europe's wars of religion. Yet when he returned to England Sidney found the direct path to heroic action blocked by the caution and hard-nosed realism of Queen Elizabeth and her principal advisers. Though she sent him on some diplomatic missions, the queen clearly regarded the zealous young man with considerable skepticism. As a prominent, well-connected courtier with literary interests, Sidney actively encouraged authors such as Edward Dyer, Greville, and, most important, Edmund Spenser, who dedicated The Shephearde's Calender to him as "the president [chief exemplar] of noblesse and of chevalree." But he clearly longed to be something more than an influential patron of letters. In 1580 his Protestant convictions led him publicly to oppose Queen Elizabeth's projected marriage to the Catholic duke of Anjou. The queen, who hated interference with her diplomatic maneuvers, angrily dismissed Sidney from the court.

He retired to Wilton, the estate of his beloved and learned sister, Mary Herbert, countess of Pembroke, and there he wrote a long, elaborate epic romance in prose called Arcadia. Sidney's claim, made with studied nonchalance, that the work was casually tossed off for his sister's private entertainment is belied by its considerable literary, political, and moral ambitions, qualities that were reinforced and intensified... in the extensive revisions he began to make to it in 1582. Our selection is from this revised version, termed by scholars the New Arcadia.

In addition to Arcadia, which inspired many imitations, including the Urania of Sidney's niece, Lady Mary Wroth, two other influential works by Sidney have had still more lasting importance. One of these, The Defense of Poesy, is the major work of literary criticism produced in the English Renaissance. In this long essay Sidney eloquently defends poetry (his term for all imaginative literature) against its attackers and, in the process, greatly exalts the role of the poet, the freedom of the imagination, and the moral value of fiction. Perhaps Sidney's finest literary achievement is Astrophil and Stella (Starlover and Star), the first of the great Elizabethan sonnet cycles. The principal focus of these sonnets is not a sequence of events or an unfolding relationship. Rather, they explore the lover's state of mind and soul, the contradictory impulses, intense desires, and frustrations that haunt him.

In his guise as a Petrarchan sonneteer, Sidney repeatedly insists that the thought of his beloved drives all more mundane matters from his mind. Yet a number of the sonnets betray a continuing preoccupation with matters of politics and foreign policy. Neither love nor literature could distract Sidney for long from what he took to be his destined role. In 1585 he tried to join Sir Francis Drake's West Indian expedition but was prevented by the queen; instead, she appointed him governor of Flushing in the Netherlands, where as a volunteer and knight-errant he engaged in several vicious skirmishes in the war against Spain. At Zutphen on September 13, 1586, leading a charge against great odds, Sidney was wounded in the thigh, shortly after he had thrown away his thigh armor in an ill-fated chivalric gesture. He died after lingering for twenty-six days.

Sidney called poetry his "unelected vocation," and in keeping with the norms of his class, he did not publish any of his major literary works himself. His ambition, continually thwarted, was to be a man of action whose deeds would affect his country's destiny. Yet he was the author of the most ambitious work of prose fiction, the most important piece of literary criticism, and the most influential sonnet cycle of the Elizabethan Age.*

The Countess of Pembroke's Arcadia

Sidney wrote his epic romance in two forms which scholars have dubbed the Old Arcadia and the New Arcadia. Shortly after the Old Arcadia was completed, in five "books," Sidney began to recast and greatly expand it, but broke off in mid-sentence and left the revision unfinished. This revised fragment, almost three books, is known as the New Arcadia; it was published posthumously in 1590. In 1593 Sidney's sister, the countess of Pembroke, herself a gifted writer, made some small changes to the New Arcadia and the last two books of the Old, stitched them together, and published them as a single text. (The complete Old Arcadia, as Sidney had left it in manuscript, was not rediscovered and published until the twentieth century.) Both Sidney's original version and his revision are full of oracles, princes disguised as shepherd and amazon, mistaken identity, melodramatic incidents, and tangled love situations, but the New Arcadia has a much more labyrinthine, interwoven plot, as well as a more consistently elevated tone of moral and heroic high seriousness. Some episodes are of political interest, and Sidney clearly put into the work more of his serious thought on statecraft (the responsibilities of a king or queen, the evils of rebellion, and the duties of ministers, judges, and advisers of state) than his description of the Arcadia as mere entertainment suggests. Many poems—pastoral eclogues and songs—are interspersed throughout the narrative; they represent Sidney's experiments with diverse lyric kinds and verse forms.

Prior to the chapter reprinted below, Pyrocles, prince of Macedon, has fallen in love with Philoclea, daughter of Basilius and Gynecia, the king and queen of Arcadia. To gain entrance to the royal household, he has disguised himself as a woman, the amazon Zelmane. To his dismay, though, both Basilius and Gynecia (who sees through his disguise) have fallen in love with him.

From The Second Book of the Countess of Pembroke's Arcadia

Chapter 1

In these pastoral pastimes a great number of days were sent to follow their flying predecessors, while the cup of poison (which was deeply tasted of this noble company) had left no sinew of theirs without mortally searching into it; yet never manifesting his venomous work, till once that the night (parting away angry that she could distill no more sleep into the eyes of lovers) had no sooner given place to the breaking out of the morning light and the sun bestowed its beams upon the tops of the mountains, but that the woeful Gynecia (to whom rest was no ease) had left her loathed lodging and gotten herself into the solitary places those deserts were full of, going up and down with such unquiet motions as a grieved and hopeless mind is wont to bring forth. There appeared unto the eyes of her judgment the evils she was like to run into, with ugly infamy waiting upon them: she felt the terrors of her own conscience; she was guilty of a long exercised virtue which made this vice the fuller of deformity. The uttermost of the good she could aspire unto was a mortal wound to her vexed spirits; and lastly, no small part of her evils was that she was wise to see her evils. Insomuch that, having a great while thrown her countenance ghastly about her (as if she had called all the powers of the world to be witness of her wretched estate), at length casting up her watery eyes to heaven:

"O sun," said she, "whose unspotted light directs the steps of mortal mankind, art thou not ashamed to impart the clearness of thy presence to such a dust-creeping worm as I am? O you heavens, which continually keep the course allotted unto you, can none of your influences prevail so much upon the miserable Gynecia as to make her preserve a course so long embraced by her? O deserts, deserts, how fit a guest am I for you, since my heart can people you with wild ravenous beasts, which in you are wanting! O virtue, where dost thou hide thyself? What hideous thing is this which doth eclipse thee? Or is it true that thou wert never but a vain name and no essential thing, which hast thus left thy professed servant when she had most need of thy lovely presence? O imperfect proportion of reason, which can too much foresee and too little prevent! Alas, alas," said she, 'if there were but one hope for all my pains or but one excuse for all my faultiness! But wretch that I am, my torment is beyond all succor, and my evil-deserving doth exceed my evil fortune. For nothing else did my husband take this strange resolution to live so solitarily, for nothing else the winds delivered this strange guest to my country, for nothing else have the destinies reserved my life to this time, but that only I, most wretched I, should become a plague to myself and a shame to woman-kind. Yet if my desire, how unjust soever it be, might take effect, though a thousand deaths followed it and every death were followed with a thousand shames, yet should not my sepulcher receive me without some contentment. But alas, though sure I am that Zelmane is such as can answer my love, yet as sure I am that this disguising must needs come for some foretaken conceit. And then, wretched Gynecia, where canst thou find any small ground-plot for hope to dwell upon? No, no, it is Philoclea his heart is set upon; it is my daughter I have borne to supplant me. But if it be so, the life I have given thee, ungrateful Philoclea, I will sooner with these hands bereave thee of than my birth shall glory she hath bereaved me of my desires. In shame there is no comfort but to be beyond all bounds of shame."

Having spoken thus, she began to make a piteous war with her fair hair, when she might hear not far from her an extremely doleful voice, but so pressed with a kind of whispering note that she could not conceive the words distinctly. But as a lamentable tune is the sweetest music to a woeful mind, she drew thither near-away in hope to find some companion of her misery; and as she paced on she was stopped with a number of trees so thickly placed together that she was afraid she should, with rushing through, stop the speech of the lamentable party which she was so desirous to understand. And therefore sitting her down as softly as she could (for she was now in distance to hear) she might first perceive a lute excellently well played upon, and then the same doleful voice accompanying it with these verses:

In vain, mine eyes, you labor to amend
With flowing tears your fault of hasty sight;
Since to my heart her shape you so did send,
That her I see, though you did lose your light.

In vain, my heart, now you with sight are burned,
With sighs you seek to cool your hot desire;
Since sighs, into mine inward furnace turned,
For bellows serve to kindle more the fire.

Reason in vain, now you have lost my heart,
My head you seek, as to your strongest fort;
Since there mine eyes have played so false a part,
That to your strength your foes have sure resort.

Then since in vain I find were all my strife,
To this strange death I vainly yield my life.

The ending of the song served but for a beginning of new plaints, as if the mind, oppressed with too heavy a burden of cares, was fain to discharge itself of all sides and, as it were, paint out the hideousness of the pain in all sorts of colors. For the woeful person (as if the lute had evil joined with the voice) threw it to the ground with suchlike words:

‘Alas, poor lute, how much art thou deceived to think that in my miseries thou couldst ease my woes, as in my careless times thou wast wont to please my fancies! The time is changed, my lute, the time is changed; and no more did my joyful mind then receive everything to a joyful consideration than my careful mind now makes each thing taste like the bitter juice of care. The evil is inward, my lute, the evil is inward; which all thou dost doth serve but to make me think more freely of, and the more I think, the more cause I find of thinking, but less of hoping. And alas, what is then thy harmony but the sweet-meats of sorrow? The discord of my thoughts, my lute, doth ill agree to the concord of thy strings; therefore be not ashamed to leave thy master, since he is not afraid to forsake himself.'

And thus much spoken, instead of a conclusion was closed up with so hearty a groaning that Gyncia could not refrain to show herself, thinking such griefs could serve fitly for nothing but her own fortune. But as she came into the little arbor of this sorrowful music, her eyes met with the eyes of Zelmane, which was the party that thus had indicted herself of misery, so that either of them remained confused with a sudden astonishment, Zelmane fearing lest she had heard some part of those complaints which she had risen up that morning early of purpose to breathe out in secret to herself. But Gyncia a great while stood still with a kind of dull amazement, looking steadfastly upon her. At length returning to some use of herself, she began to ask Zelmane what cause carried her so early abroad. But, as if the opening of her mouth to Zelmane had opened some great floodgate of sorrow whereof her heart could not abide the violent issue, she sank to the ground with her hands over her face, crying vehemently, "Zelmane, help me, O Zelmane have pity on me!"

Zelmane ran to her, marveling what sudden sickness had thus possessed her; and beginning to ask her the cause of her pain and offering her service to be employed by her, Gyncia opening her eyes wildly upon her, pricked with the flames of love and the torments of her own conscience, "O Zelmane, Zelmane," said she, "dost thou offer me physic, which art my only poison? Or wilt thou do me service, which hast already brought me into eternal slavery?"

Zelmane then knowing well at what mark she shot, yet loth to enter into it, "Most excellent lady," said she, "you were best retire yourself into your lodging, that you the better may pass this sudden fit."

"Retire myself?" said Gyncia, "If I had retired myself into myself when thou (to me unfortunate guest) earnest to draw me from myself, blessed had I been, and no need had I had of this counsel. But now, alas, I am forced to fly to thee for succor whom I accuse of all my hurt, and make thee judge of my cause, who art the only author of my mischief."

Zelmane the more astonished, the more she understood her, "Madam," said she, "whereof do you accuse me that I will not clear myself? Or wherein may I stead you that you may not command me?"

"Alas!" answered Gyncia, "What shall I say more? Take pity of me, O Zelmane, but not as Zelmane, and disguise not with me in words, as I know thou dost in apparel."

Zelmane was much troubled with that word, finding herself brought to this strait. But as she was thinking what to answer her, they might see old Basilius pass hard by them without ever seeing them, complaining likewise of love very freshly, and ending his complaint with this song, love having renewed both his invention and voice:

8. Full of care.
9. Be of use to.
Let not old age disgrace my high desire;
O heavenly soul in human shape contained:
Old wood inflamed doth yield the bravest fire,
When younger doth in smoke his virtue spend,

Ne let white hairs which on my face do grow
Seem to your eyes of a disgraceful hue,
Since whiteness doth present the sweetest show,
Which makes all eyes do homage unto you.

Old age is wise and full of constant truth;
Old age well stayed from ranging humor lives;
Old age hath known whatever was in youth;
Old age o'ercome, the greater honor gives.

And to old age since you yourself aspire,
Let not old age disgrace my high desire,

Which being done, he looked very curiously upon himself, sometimes fetching a little skip as if he had said his strength had not yet forsaken him.

But Zelmane, having in this time gotten some leisure to think for an answer, looking upon Gynecia as if she thought she did her some wrong, 'Madam,' said she, 'I am not acquainted with those words of disguising; neither is it the profession of an Amazon; neither are you a party with whom it is to be used. If my service may please you, employ it, so long as you do me no wrong in misjudging of me.'

'Alas, Zelmane,' said Gynecia, 'I perceive you know full little how piercing the eyes are of a true lover. There is no one beam of those thoughts you have planted in me but is able to discern a greater cloud than you do go in. Seek not to conceal yourself further from me, nor force not the passion of love into violent extremities.'

Now was Zelmane brought to an exigent, when the king, turning his eyes that way through the trees, perceived his wife and mistress together; so that framing the most lovely countenance he could, he came straightway towards them, and at the first word, thanking his wife for having entertained Zelmane, desired her she would now return into the lodge because he had certain matters of estate to impart to the Lady Zelmane. The queen, being nothing troubled with jealousy in that point, obeyed the king's commandment, full of raging agonies, and determinately bent that as she would seek all loving means to win Zelmane, so she would stir up terrible tragedies rather than fail of her intent. And so went she from them to the lodge-ward, with such a battle in her thoughts and so deadly an overthrow given to her best resolutions that even her body (where the field was fought) was oppressed withal, making a languishing sickness wait upon the triumph of passion, which the more it prevailed in her, the more it made her jealous watchful both over her daughter and Zelmane, having ever one of them entrusted to her own eyes.

But as soon as Basilius was rid of his wife's presence, falling down on his knees, "O lady," said he, "which hast only had the power to stir up again those flames which had so long lain dead in me, see in me the power of your beauty, which can make old age come to ask counsel of youth, and a prince unconquered to become a slave to a stranger. And when you see that power of yours, love that at least in me, since it is yours, although of me you see nothing to be loved."

"Worthy prince," answered Zelmane, taking him up from his kneeling, "both your manner and your speech are so strange unto me as I know not how to answer it better than with silence."

"If silence please you," said the king, "it shall never displease me, since my heart is wholly pledged to obey you. Otherwise, if you would vouchsafe mine ears such happiness as to hear you, they shall convey your words to such a mind which is with the humblest degree of reverence to receive them."

"I disdain not to speak to you, mighty prince," said Zelmane, "but I disdain to speak to any matter which may bring my honor into question."

And therewith, with a brave counterfeited scorn she departed from the king, leaving him not so sorry for his short answer as proud in himself that he had broken the matter. And thus did the king, feeding his mind with those thoughts, pass great time in writing verses and making more of himself than he was wont to do, that, with a little help, he would have grown into a pretty kind of dotage.

But Zelmane, being rid of this loving but little loved company, "Alas," said she, "poor Pyrocles, was there ever one but I that had received wrong and could blame nobody, that having more than I desire, am still in want of that I would? Truly, love, I must needs say thus much on thy behalf; thou hast employed my love there where all love is deserved, and for recompense hast sent me more love than ever I desired. But what wilt thou do, Pyrocles? Which way canst thou find to rid thee of thy intricate troubles? To her whom I would be known to, I live in darkness; and to her am revealed from whom I would be most secret. What shift shall I find against the diligent love of Basilius? What shield against the violent passions of Gynecia? And if that be done, yet how am I the nearer to quench the fire that consumes me? Well, well, sweet Philoclea, my whole confidence must be builded in thy divine spirit, which cannot be ignorant of the cruel wound I have received by you."

The Defense of Poesy  In 1579 Sidney found himself the unwilling dedicatee of a small book entitled The School of Abuse. Its author, the playwright-turned-moralist Stephen Gosson, attacked poets and actors from a narrowly Puritan perspective that called into question the morality of any fiction-making. Sidney may have shared in the author's militant Protestantism, but he took a very different, more sympathetic and more complex view of the poet's art. He did not specifically answer Gosson's polemic, but he must have had it in mind when he composed, perhaps in the same year, a major piece of critical prose that was published after his death under two titles, The Defense of Poesy and An Apology for Poetry. Probably written in 1579 though not published until 1595, The Defense of Poesy is an eloquent argument.
for the dignity, social efficacy, and moral value of imaginative literature in verse or prose. Sidney responds to ancient charges against poetic fictions—charges of irresponsibility and unreality—that had been revived in his own time most strenuously by Puritan moralists. In a graceful, if strikingly paradoxical, rhetorical performance, the Defense argues both that the poet, liberated from the world, is free to range "within the zodiac of his own wit" and that poetry actively intervenes in the world and transforms it for the better. After a slyly self-deprecating introduction, Sidney points out the antiquity of poetry, its prestige in the biblical and classical worlds, and its universality; also, he cites the names given to poets—vates, or "prophet," by the Romans and poiētes, or "maker," by the Greeks—as evidence of their ancient dignity. But he bases his defense essentially on the special status of the poetic imagination. While all arts, from astronomy to music to medicine, depend ultimately on nature as their object, poetry, he claims, is uniquely free: "Only the poet, disdaining to be tied to any such subjection, lifted up with the vigor of his own invention, doth grow in effect another nature."

This freedom, Sidney argues, enables the poet to present virtues and vices in a livelier and more affecting way than nature does, teaching, delighting, and moving the reader at the same time. The poet is superior to both the philosopher and the historian, because he is more concrete than the one and more universal than the other. The Defense also refutes Plato's charge that poets are liars by arguing that the poet "nothing affirms, and therefore never lieth," and it denies as well the Platonic claim that poetry arouses base desires. Tragedy, for example, "openeth the greatest wounds," in Sidney's account, "and showeth forth the ulcers that are covered with tissue," thereby making "kings fear to be tyrants." Surveying the English literary scene of his own century, Sidney finds little to praise except for Surrey's lyrics, the moralizing narratives of A Mirror for Magistrates, and Spenser's Shepheardes Calender; the drama he faults for "mingling kings and clowns" and for unrealistic distortions of time and space. (The great, sprawling plays of Marlowe and Shakespeare, plays that triumphantly violated many of Sidney's cherished principles, lay just ahead.) The Defense ends with a mock conjuration and a playful curse, reminders of the magical power of poetry, a power that lurks beneath both Sidney's idealism and his didacticism.

[THE LESSONS OF HORSEMANSHIP]

When the right virtuous Edward Wotton and I were at the Emperor's court together, we gave ourselves to learn horsemanship of John Pietro Pugliano, one that with great commendation had the place of an esquire in his stable. And he, according to the fertileness of the Italian wit, did not only afford us the demonstration of his practice but sought to enrich our minds with the contemplations therein which he thought most precious. But with none I remember mine ears were at any time more loaden, than when (either angered with slow payment, or moved with our learner-like admiration) he exercised his speech in the praise of his faculty. He said soldiers were the noblest estate of mankind, and horsemen the noblest of soldiers. He said they were the masters of war and ornaments of peace, speedy goers and strong abiders, triumphers both in camps and courts. Nay, to so unbelieved a point he proceeded, as that no earthly thing bred such wonder to a prince as to be a good horseman. Skill of government was but a pedanteria in comparison. Then would he add certain praises, by telling what a peerless beast the horse was, the only serviceable courtier without flattery, the beast of most beauty, faithfulness, courage, and such more, that if I had not been a piece of a logician before I came to him I think he would have persuaded me to have wished myself a horse. But thus much at least with his no few words he drave into me, that self-love is better than any gilding to make that seem gorgeous wherein ourselves be parties. Wherein, if Pugliano's strong affection and weak arguments will not satisfy you, I will give you a nearer example of myself, who (I know not by what mischance) in these my not old years and idlest times having slipped into the title of a poet, am provoked to say something unto you in the defense of that my unelected vocation, which if I handle with more good will than good reasons, bear with me, since the scholar is to be pardoned that followeth the steps of his master. And yet I must say that, as I have just cause to make a pitiful defense of poor poetry, which from almost the highest estimation of learning is fallen to be the laughingstock of children, so have I need to bring some more available proofs; since the former is by no man barred of his deserved credit, the silly latter hath had even the names of philosophers used to the defacing of it, with great danger of civil war among the Muses.

[THE POET, POETRY]

* * * Since the authors of most of our sciences were the Romans, and before them the Greeks, let us a little stand upon their authorities, but even so far as to see what names they have given unto this now scorned skill. Among the Romans a poet was called vates, which is as much as a diviner, foreseer, or prophet, as by his conjoined words vaticinium and vaticinari is manifest: so heavenly a title did that excellent people bestow upon this heart-ravishing knowledge. And so far were they carried into the admiration thereof, that they thought in the chanceable hitting upon any such verses great foretokens of their following fortunes were placed. Whereupon grew the word of Sortes Virgilianae, when by sudden opening Virgil's book they lighted upon any verse of his making, whereof the histories of the emperors' lives are full: as of Albinus, the governor of our island, who in his childhood met with this verse and in his age performed it. Which, although it were a very vain and godless superstition, as also it was to think spirits were commanded by such verses—whereupon this word charms, derived of carmina, cometh—so yet serveth it to show the great reverence those wits were held in: and altogether not without ground, since both the oracles of Delphos and Sibylla's prophecies were wholly delivered in verses. For that same exquisite observing of number and measure in the words, and that high flying liberty of conceit proper to the poet, did seem to have some divine force in it.

Arma amens capio nec sat rationis in armis

And may not I presume a little further, to show the reasonableness of this word

And say that the holy David's Psalms are a divine poem? If I do, I shall not do it without the testimony of great learned men, both ancient and modern. But even the name of Psalms will speak for me, which being interpreted, is nothing but songs; then that it is fully written in meter, as all learned hebricians agree, although the rules be not yet fully found; lastly and principally, his handling his prophecy, which is merely poetical: for what else is the awaking his musical instruments, the often and free changing of persons, his notable prosopopoeias, when he maketh you, as it were, see God coming in His majesty, his telling of the beasts' joyfulness and hills leaping, but a heavenly poesy, wherein almost he showeth himself a passionate lover of that unspeakable and everlasting beauty to be seen by the eyes of the mind, only cleared by faith? But truly now having named him, I fear me I seem to profane that holy name, applying it to poetry, which is among us thrown down to so ridiculous an estimation. But they that with quiet judgments will look a little deeper into it, shall find the end and working of it such as, being rightly applied, deserveth not to be scourged out of the Church of God.

But now let us see how the Greeks named it, and how they deemed of it. The Greeks called him a "poet," which name hath, as the most excellent, gone through other languages. It cometh of this word poiein, which is, to make: wherein, I know not whether by luck or wisdom, we Englishmen have met with the Greeks in calling him a maker; which name, how high and incomparable a title it is, I had rather were known by marking the scope of other sciences than by any partial allegation.

There is no art delivered to mankind that hath not the works of nature for his principal object, without which they could not consist, and on which they so depend, as they become actors and players, as it were, of what nature will have set forth. So doth the astronomer look upon the stars, and, by that he seeth, set down what order nature hath taken therein. So doth the geometrician and arithmetician in their diverse sorts of quantities. So doth the musicians in time tell you which by nature agree, which not. The natural philosopher thereon hath his name, and the moral philosopher standeth upon the natural virtues, vices, or passions of man; and follow nature (saith he) therein, and thou shalt not err. The lawyer saith what men have determined; the historian what men have done. The grammarian speaketh only of the rules of speech; and the rhetorician and logician, considering what in nature will soonest prove and persuade, thereon give artificial rules, which still are com-passed within the circle of a question according to the proposed matter.³ The physician weigheth⁴ the nature of man's body, and the nature of things helpful or hurtful unto it. And the metaphysic, though it be in the second and abstract notions, and therefore be counted supernatural, yet doth he indeed build upon the depth of nature. Only the poet, disdaining to be tied to any such subjection, lifted up with the vigor of his own invention, doth grow in effect another nature, in making things either better than nature bringeth forth, or, quite anew, forms such as never were in nature, as the Heroes, Demigods, Cyclops, Chimeras, Furies,⁵ and such like: so as he goeth hand in hand with nature, not enclosed within the narrow warrant of her gifts, but freely ranging only within the zodiac of his own wit.⁶ Nature never set forth the earth in so rich tapestry as divers poets have done; neither with so pleasant rivers, fruitful trees, sweet-smelling flowers, nor whatsoever else may make the too much loved earth more lovely. Her world is brazen, the poets only deliver a golden.⁷

But let those things alone, and go to man—for whom as the other things are, so it seemeth in him her uttermost cunning is employed—and know whether she have brought forth so true a lover as Theagenes, so constant a friend as Pylades, so valiant a man as Orlando, so right a prince as Xenophon's Cyrus,⁸ so excellent a man every way as Virgil's Aeneas. Neither let this be jestingly conceived, because the works of the one be essential, the other in imitation or fiction,⁹ for any understanding knoweth the skill of each artificer standeth in that idea or fore-conceit¹ of the work, and not in the work itself.
And that the poet hath that idea is manifest, by delivering them forth in such excellency as he had imagined them. Which delivering forth also is not wholly imaginative, as we are wont² to say by them that build castles in the air; but so far substantially it worketh, not only to make a Cyrus, which had been but a particular excellency as nature might have done, but to bestow a Cyrus upon the world to make many Cyruses, if they will learn aright why and how that maker made him.

Neither let it be deemed too saucy a comparison to balance the highest point of man's wit with the efficacy of nature; but rather give right honor to the heavenly Maker of that maker, who having made man to His own likeness, set him beyond and over all the works of that second nature;¹ which in nothing he showeth so much as in poetry, when with the force of a divine breath he bringeth things forth surpassing her doings—with no small arguments to the credulous of that first accursed fall of Adam, since our erected wit maketh us know what perfection is, and yet our infected will¹² keepeth us from reaching unto it. But these arguments will by few be understood, and by fewer granted.

world and after death. "Heroes": in the Greek sense, part human, part divine. "Cyclops": one-eyed giants (the correct plural is "Cyclopes") in Homer's Odyssey. "Chimeras": fire-breathing monsters with lion's head, goat's body, and serpent's tail.

Nature's.
8. Cyrus the Great of Persia, exemplary hero of Xenophon's prose romance, the Cyropaedia (4th

Greek romance, Anthippe (5th century C.E.); Pylades, friend of the Greek hero Orestes;
Orlando, hero of Ariosto's Orlando furioso (1516).
9. The works of nature are real ("essential"); those of the poet are fiction.

This much (I hope) will be given me, that the Greeks with some probability of reason gave him the name above all names of learning.

Now let us go to a more ordinary opening of him, that the truth may be the more palpable: and so I hope, though we get not so unmatched a praise as the etymology of his names will grant, yet his very description, which no man will deny, shall not justly be barred from a principal commendation.

Poesy therefore is an art of imitation, for so Aristotle termeth it in the word mimesis—that is to say, a representing, counterfeiting, or figuring forth—to speak metaphorically, a speaking picture—with this end, to teach and delight.

[THREE KINDS OF POETS]

Of this have been three general kinds. The chief, both in antiquity and excellency, were they that did imitate the unconceivable excellencies of God. Such were David in his Psalms; Solomon in his Song of Songs, in his Ecclesiastes, and Proverbs; Moses and Deborah in their Hymns; and the writer of Job: which, beside other, the learned Emanuel Tremellius and Franciscus Junius do entitle the poetical part of the Scripture. Against these none will speak that hath the Holy Ghost in due holy reverence. (In this kind, though in a full wrong divinity, were Orpheus, Amphion, Homer in his Hymns, and many other, both Greeks and Romans.) And this poesy must be used by whosoever will follow St. James’s counsel in singing psalms when they are merry, and I know is used with the fruit of comfort by some, when, in sorrowful pangs of their death-bringing sins, they find the consolation of the never-leaving goodness.

The second kind is of them that deal with matters philosophical, either moral, as Tyrtaeus, Phocylides, Cato, or natural, as Lucretius and Virgil’s Georgics; or astronomical, as Manilius and Pontanus; or historical, as Lucan: which who mislike, the fault is in their judgment quite out of taste, and not in the sweet food of sweetly uttered knowledge.

But because this second sort is wrapped within the fold of the proposed subject, and takes not the course of his own invention, whether they properly be poets or no let grammarians dispute, and go to the third, indeed right poets, of whom chiefly this question ariseth: betwixt whom and these second is such a kind of difference as betwixt the meaner sort of painters, who counterfeit only such faces as are set before them, and the more excellent, who having no law but wit, bestow that in colors upon you which is fittest for the eye to see: as the constant though lamenting look of Lucretia, when she punished in herself another’s fault, wherein he painteth not Lucretia whom he never saw, but painteth the outward beauty of such a virtue. For these third

7. The primary authorities for the commonplace notions that a poem is a "speaking picture" and that the end of poetry is "to teach and delight" are, respectively, Plutarch (ca. 46—ca. 120 C.E.), "How to Study Poetry," 17-18, and Horace (65—8 B.C.E.), Art of Poetry, 343.
8. Two scholars who published a Protestant Latin translation of the Bible in 1579. "Moses and Deborah in their Hymns": see Exodus 15.1 — 18, Deuteronomy 32.1-43; Judges 5.1—31.
1. The Roman Marcus Cato was the author of Disticha de moribus, an immensely popular collection, in verse and prose, of moral maxims. Tyrtaeus and Phocylides were Greek poets.
2. Lucan wrote De bello civili (Pharsalia), an epic poem on the struggle between Caesar and Pompey. Lucretius wrote a philosophical poem De rerum natura (On the Nature of Things). Virgil’s Georgics exalts the life and work of the farmer.
3. Justly entitled to the name.
4. Lower.
5. A notable exemplar of chastity and honor, the Roman matron Lucretia committed suicide after being raped by the son of King Tarquinius Superbus. "Wit": creative imagination.
6. I.e., the right poets.

be they which most properly do imitate to teach and delight, and to imitate borrow nothing of what is, hath been, or shall be; but range, only reined with learned discretion, into the divine consideration of what may be and should be.
These be they that, as the first and most noble sort may justly be termed vates, so these are waited on in the excellentest languages and best understandings with the fore-described name of poets. For these indeed do merely7 make to imitate, and imitate both to delight and teach; and delight, to move men to take that goodness in hand, which without delight they would fly as from a stranger; and teach, to make them know that goodness whereunto they are moved—which being the noblest scope to which ever any learning was directed, yet want there not idle tongues to bark at them.

These be subdivided into sundry more special denominations. The most notable be the heroic,8 lyric, tragic, comic, satiric, iambic, elegiac, pastoral, and certain others, some of these being termed according to the matter they deal with, some by the sorts of verses they liked best to write in; for indeed the greatest part of poets have appared their poetical inventions in that numbrous9 kind of writing which is called verse—indeed but appared, verse being but an ornament and no cause to poetry, since there have been many most excellent poets that never versified, and now swarm many versifiers that need never answer to the name of poets. For Xenophon, who did imitate so excellently as to give us effigiem histi imperii, the portraiture of a just empire, under the name of Cyrus (as Cicero saith of him), made therein an absolute herocical poem. So did Heliodorus in his sugered invention of that picture of love in Theagenes and Chariclea; and yet both these wrote in prose: which I speak to show that it is not rhyming and versing that maketh a poet—no more than a long gown maketh an advocate,1 who though he pleaded in armor should be an advocate and no soldier. But it is that feigning notable images of virtues, vices, or what else, with that delightful teaching, which must be the right describing note to know a poet by: although indeed the senate of poets hath chosen verse as their fittest raiment, meaning, as in matter they passed all in all,2 so in manner to go beyond them: not speaking (table-talk fashion or like men in a dream) words as they chanceably fall from the mouth, but peising3 each syllable of each word by just proportion according to the dignity of the subject.

[POETRY, PHILOSOPHY, HISTORY]

Now therefore it shall not be amiss first to weigh this latter sort of poetry by his works, and then by his parts; and if in neither of these anatomies he be condemnable, I hope we shall obtain a more favorable sentence.4

This purifying of wit—this enriching of memory, enabling of judgment, and enlarging of conceit5—which commonly we call learning, under what name soever it come forth, or to what immediate end soever it be directed, the final end is to lead and draw us to as high a perfection as our degenerate souls, made worse by their clayey lodgings, can be capable of.

This, according to the inclination of the man, bred many-formed6 impressions. For some that thought this felicity principally to be gotten by knowledge, and no knowledge to be so high or heavenly as acquaintance with the stars, gave themselves to astronomy; others, persuading themselves to be demigods if they knew the causes of things, became natural and supernatural philosophers; some an admirable delight drew to music; and some the certainty of demonstration to the mathematica. But all, one and other, having this scope: to know, and by knowledge to lift up the mind from the dungeon of the body to the enjoying his own divine essence.

But when by the balance of experience it was found that the astronomer, looking to the stars, might fall in a ditch, that the inquiring philosopher might be blind in himself, and the mathematician might draw forth a straight line with a crooked heart, then lo, did proof, the overruler of opinions, make manifest that all these are but serving sciences, which, as they have each a private end in themselves, so yet are they all directed to the highest end of the mistress-knowledge, by the Greeks called architectonike, which stands (as I think) in the knowledge of a man's self, in the ethic and politic consideration, with the end of well-doing and not of well-knowing only—even as the saddler's next end is to make a good saddle, but his further end to serve a nobler faculty, which is horsemanship, so the horseman's to soldiery, and the soldier not only to have the skill, but to perform the practice of a soldier. So that, the ending end of all earthly learning being virtuous action, those skills that most serve to bring forth that have a most just title to be princes over all the rest.

Wherein, if we can, show we the poet's nobleness, by setting him before his other competitors. Among whom as principal challengers step forth the moral philosophers, whom, methinketh, I see coming towards me with a sullen gravity, as though they could not abide vice by daylight, rudely clothed for to witness outwardly their contempt of outward things, with books in their hands against glory, whereto they set their names, sophistically speaking against subtlety, and angry with any man in whom they see the foul fault of anger. These men casting largess as they go, of definitions, divisions, and distinctions, with a scornful interrogative do soberly ask whether it be possible to find any path so ready to lead a man to virtue as that which teacheth what virtue is; and teach it not only by delivering forth his very being, his causes and effects, but also by making known his enemy, vice, which must be destroyed, and his cumbersome servant, passion, which must be mastered; by showing the generalities that containeth it, and the specialities that are derived from it; lastly, by plain setting down how it extendeth itself out of the limits of a man's own little world to the government of families and maintaining of public societies.

The historian scarcely giveth leisure to the moralist to say so much, but that he, laden with old mouse-eaten records, authorizing himself (for the most part) upon other histories, whose greatest authorities are built upon the notable foundation of hearsay; having much ado to accord differing writers and to pick truth out of their partiality; better acquainted with a thousand years ago than with the present age, and yet better knowing how this world goeth than how his own wit runneth; curious for antiquities and inquisitive of novelties; a wonder to young folks and a tyrant in table talk, denieth, in a great chafe, that any man for teaching of virtue, and virtuous actions, is comparable to him. "I am testis temporum, lux veritatis, vita memoriae, magistra vitae, nuntia vetustatis." 6 "The philosopher," saith he, "teacheth a disputative virtue, but I do an active. His virtue is excellent in the dangerless Academy of Plato, but mine showeth forth his honorable face in the battles of Marathon, Pharsalia, Poitiers, and Agincourt.7 He teacheth virtue by certain abstract considerations, but I only bid you follow the footing of them that have gone before you. Old-aged experience goeth beyond the fine-witted philosopher, but I give the experience of many ages. Lastly, if he make the songbook, I put the learner's hand to the lute; and if he be the guide, I am the light. Then would he allege you innumerable examples, confirming story by stories, how much the wisest senators and princes have been directed by the credit of history, as Brutus, Alphonsus of Aragon,8 and who not, if need be? At length the long line of their disputation maketh a point in this, that the one giveth the precept, and the other9 the example.

Now, to that which commonly is attributed to the praise of history, in respect of the notable learning is got by marking the success,1 as though therein a man should see virtue exalted and vice punished—truly that commendation is particular to poetry, and far off from history. For indeed poetry ever sets virtue so out in her best colors, making Fortune her well-waiting handmaid, that one must needs be enamored of her. Well may you see Ulysses in a storm,2 and in other hard plights; but they are but exercises of patience and magnanimity, to make them shine the more in the near-following prosperity. And of the contrary part, if evil men come to the stage, they ever go out (as the tragedy writer3 answered to one that misliked the show of such persons) so manacled as they little animate folks to follow them. But the history, being captived to the truth of a foolish world, is many times a terror from well-doing, and an encouragement to unbridled wickedness. For see we not valiant Miltiades rot in his fetters? The just Phocion and the accomplished Socrates put to death like traitors? The cruel Severus live prosperously? The excellent Severus miserably murdered? Sulla and Marius dying in their beds? Pompey and Cicero4 slain then when they would have thought exile a happiness? See we not vir-tuous Cato driven to kill himself,5 and rebel Caesar so advanced that his name yet, after 1600 years, lasteth in the highest honor? And mark but even Caesar's own words of the aforenamed Sulla (who in that only did honestly, to put down his dishonest tyranny), litteras nescivit, as if want of learning caused him to do well. He meant it not by poetry, which, not content with earthly plagues, deviseth new punishments in hell for tyrants, nor yet by philosophy, which teacheth occidens esse? but no doubt by skill in history, for that indeed can afford you Cypselus, Periander, Phalaris, Dionysius, and I know not how many more of the same kennel, that speed well enough in their abominable injustice of usurpation.

I conclude, therefore, that he excelleth history, not only in furnishing the mind with knowledge, but in setting it forward to that which deserveth to be called and accounted good: which setting forward, and moving to well-doing, indeed setteth the laurel crown upon the poets as victorious, not only of the historian, but over the philosopher, howsoever in teaching it may be questionable.?

For suppose it be granted (that which I suppose with great reason may be denied) that the philosopher, in respect of his methodical proceeding, doth teach more perfectly than the poet, yet do I think that no man is so much philophilosophos as to compare the philosopher in moving with the poet. And that moving is of a higher degree than teaching, it may by this appear, that it is well nigh both the cause and effect of teaching. For who will be taught, if he be not moved with desire to be taught? And what so much good doth that teaching bring forth (I speak still of moral doctrine) as that it moveth one to do that which it doth teach? For, as Aristotle saith, it is not gnosis but praxis must be the fruit. And how praxis can be, without being moved to practice, it is no hard matter to consider.

The philosopher showeth you the way, he informeth you of the particularities, as well of the tediousness of the way, as of the pleasant lodging you shall have when your journey is ended, as of the many by-turnings that may divert you from your way. But this is to no man but to him that will read him, and read him with attentive studious painfulness; which constant desire whosoever hath in him, hath already passed half the hardness of the way, and therefore is beholding to the philosopher but for the other half. Nay truly, learned men have learnedly thought that where once reason hath so much overmastered passion as that the mind hath a free desire to do well, the inward light each mind hath in itself is as good as a philosopher's book; since in nature we know it is well to do well, and what is well, and what is evil, although not in the words of art which philosophers bestow upon us; for out of natural conceit the philosophers drew it. But to be moved to do that which we know, or to be moved with desire to know, hoc opus, hie labor est.

Now therein of all sciences (I speak still of human, and according to the human conceit) is our poet the monarch. For he doth not only show the way, but giveth so sweet a prospect into the way, as will entice any man to enter into it. Nay, he doth, as if your journey should lie through a fair vineyard, at the first give you a cluster of grapes, that full of that taste, you may long to

[THE POETIC KINDS]

But I am content not only to decipher him
3 by his works (although works, in commendation or dispraise, must ever hold a high authority), but more narrowly will examine his parts; so that (as in a man) though all together may carry a presence full of majesty and beauty, perchance in some one defectous piece
4 we may find blemish.

Now in his parts, kinds, or species (as you list 5 to term them), it is to be noted that some poesies have coupled together two or three kinds, as the tragical and comical, whereupon is risen the tragi-comical. Some, in the maner, have mingled prose and verse, as Sannazzaro and Boethius.
6 Some have mingled matters heroical and pastoral. But that cometh all to one in this question, for, if severed they be good, the conjunction cannot be hurtful. Therefore, perchance forgetting some and leaving some as needless to be remembered, it shall not be amiss in a word to cite the special kinds, to see what faults may be found in the right use of them.

Is it then the Pastoral poem which is misliked? (For perchance where the hedge is lowest
7 they will soonest leap over.) Is the poor pipe
8 disdained, which sometime out of Meliboeus' mouth can show the misery of people under hard lords or ravening soldiers, and again, by Tityrus, what blessedness is derived to them that lie lowest from the goodness of them that sit highest; 9 sometimes,
under the pretty tales of wolves and sheep, can include the whole considerations of wrong-doing and patience; sometimes show that contentions for trifles can get but a trifling victory: where perchance a man may see that even Alexander and Darius, when they strave who should be cock of this world's dung-hill, the benefit they got was that the after-livers may say

4. Defective part.
5. May choose.

lands were protected by the emperor.

Haec memini et victum frustra contendere Thirsin:
Ex illo Corydon, Corydon est tempore nobis.1

Or is it the lamenting Elegiac; which in a kind heart would move rather pity than blame; who bewails with the great philosopher Heraclitus2 the weakness of mankind and the wretchedness of the world; who surely is to be praised, either for compassionate accompanying just causes of lamentations, or for rightly painting out how weak be the passions of woefulness? Is it the bitter but wholesome Iambic,3 who rubs the galled mind, in making shame the trumpet of villainy, with bold and open crying out against naughtiness? Or the Satiric, who

Omne vafer vitium ridenti tangit amico;5 who sportingly never leaveth till he make a man laugh at folly, and at length ashamed, to laugh at himself, which he cannot avoid without avoiding the folly; who, while circum praecordia ludit,6 giveth us to feel how many headaches a passionate life bringeth us to; how, when all is done,

Est Ulubris, animus si nos non deficit aequus?7

No, perchance it is the Comic, whom naughty play-makers and stagekeepers have justly made odious. To the arguments of abuse I will answer after. Only this much now is to be said, that the comedy is an imitation of the common errors of our life, which he representeth in the most ridiculous and scornful sort that may be, so as it is impossible that any beholder can be content to be such a one. Now, as in geometry the oblique must be known as well as the right, and in arithmetic the odd as well as the even, so in the actions of our life who seeth not the filthiness of evil wanteth8 a great foil to perceive the beauty of virtue. This doth the comedy handle so in our private and domestical matters as with hearing it we get as it were an experience what is to be looked for of a niggardly Demea, of a crafty Davus, of a flattering Gnatho, of a vainglorious Thraso;9 and not only to know what effects are to be expected, but to know who be such, by the signifying badge given them by the comedian.1
And little reason hath any man to say that men learn the evil by seeing it so set out, since, as I said before, there is no man living but, by the force truth hath in nature, no sooner seeth these men play their parts, but wisheth them in pistrinum;2 although perchance the sack of his own faults lie so hidden

1. "This I remember, and how Thyris, vanquished, strove in vain. / From that day it is Corydon, Corydon with us" (Virgil, Eclogue 7.69—70).
2. The great victory of Alexander the Great over Darius of Persia comes to the same thing as Corydon's victory over Thyrsis in a singing contest.
3. An ancient Greek philosopher who lamented that every thing is subject to mutability. "Who": i.e., which.
4. Sidney restricts the elegiac to lamentations: classical poets used elegiac meter for this purpose but also in poems treating love and other topics.
5. Iambic trimeter was first used by Greek poets for direct attacks (as opposed to the wit and ironic indirectness that mark satire).
6. Persius (Satires 1.116) on the satire of Horace, who "probes every fault while making his friends laugh." "Naughtiness": wickedness.
7. "It is at Ulubrae, if a well-balanced mind does not fail us" (an adaptation of Horace, Epistles 1.11.30). Ulubrae was a proverbially uninspiring town surrounded by marshes.
9. Type characters in the Roman comedies of Terence (195—159 B.C.E.), respectively, the harsh father, clever servant, parasite, and braggart. Terence and Plautus (251—204 B.C.E) were the chief classical models for comedy for the Renaissance. "Niggardly": stingy.

behind his back that he seeth not himself dance the same measure;\(^3\) whereto yet nothing can more open his eyes than to find his own actions contemptibly set forth.

So that the right use of comedy will (I think) by nobody be blamed; and much less of the high and excellent Tragedy, that openeth the greatest wounds, and showeth forth the ulcers that are covered with tissue; that maketh kings fear to be tyrants, and tyrants manifest their tyrannical humors; that, with stirring the affects\(^4\) of admiration and commiseration, teacheth the uncertainty of this world, and upon how weak foundations gilden roofs are builded; that maketh us know

\text{Qui sceptr\ae saevus duro imperio regit}

\text{Timet timentes; metus in auctorem redit.}\]^5

But how much it can move, Plutarch yieldeth a notable testimony of the abomina\(^6\) ble tyrant Alexander Phæraus,\(^6\) from whose eyes a tragedy, well made and represented, drew abundance of tears, who without all pity had murdered infinite numbers, and some of his own blood: so as he, that was not ashamed to make matters for tragedies, yet could not resist the sweet violence of a tragedy. And if it wrought no further good in him, it was that he, in despite of himself, withdrew himself from hearkening to that which might mollify his hardened heart. But it is not the tragedy they do dislike; for it were too absurd to cast out so excellent a representation of whatsoever is most worthy to be learned.

Is it the Lyric\(^7\) that most displeaseth, who with his tuned lyre and well-accorded voice giveth praise, the reward of virtue, to virtuous acts; who gives moral precepts, and natural problems; who sometimes raiseth up his voice to the height of the heavens, in singing the lauds of the immortal God? Certainly, I must confess my own barbarousness, I never heard the old song of Percy and Douglas\(^8\) that I found not my heart moved more than with a trumpet; and yet is it sung but by some blind crowder,\(^9\) with no rougher voice than rude style; which, being so evil appareled in the dust and cobwebs of that uncivil age, what would it work trimmed in the gorgeous eloquence of Pindar?\(^1\) In Hungary I have seen it the manner at all feasts, and other such meetings, to have songs of their ancestors' valor, which that right soldierlike nation think one of the chiefest kindlers of brave courage. The incomparable Lacedemonians\(^2\) did not only carry that kind of music ever with them to the field, but even at home, as such songs were made, so were they all content to be singers of them—when the lusty men were to tell what they did, the old men what they had done, and the young what they would do. And where a man may say that Pindar many times praiseth highly victories of small moment, matters

3. In a fable of Aesop, a sack filled with one's own faults is carried (out of sight) on the back, while one filled with the faults of others is carried in front.

5. "He who rules his people with a harsh government. / Fears those who fear him; the fear returns upon its author" (Seneca, Oedipus, lines 705—06).

rather of sport than virtue; as it may be answered, it was the fault of the poet, and not of the poetry, so indeed the chief fault was in the time and custom of the Greeks, who set those toys at so high a price that Philip of Macedon reckoned a horserace won at Olympus among his three fearful felicities. But as the unimitable Pindar often did, so is that kind most capable and most fit to awake the thoughts from the sleep of idleness to embrace honorable enterprises.

There rests the Heroical—whose very name (I think) should daunt all backbiters: for by what conceit can a tongue be directed to speak evil of that which draweth with him no less champions than Achilles, Cyrus, Aeneas, Turnus, Tydeus, and Rinaldo—who doth not only teach and move to a truth, but teacheth and moveth to the most high and excellent truth; who maketh magnanimity and justice shine through all misty tearfulness and foggy desires; who, if the saying of Plato and Tully be true, that who could see virtue would be wonderfully ravished with the love of her beauty—this man sets her out to make her more lovely in her holiday apparel, to the eye of any that will deign not to disdain until they understand. But if anything be already said in the defense of sweet poetry, all concurreth to the maintaining the heroic, which is not only a kind, but the best and most accomplished kind of poetry. For, as the image of each action stirreth and instructeth the mind, so the lofty image of such worthies most inflameth the mind with desire to be worthy, and informs with counsel how to be worthy. Only let Aeneas be worn in the tablet of your memory, how he governeth himself in the ruin of his country; in the preserving his old father, and carrying away his religious ceremonies; in obeying God's commandment to leave Dido, though not only all passionate kindness, but even the human consideration of virtuous gratefulness, would have craved other of him; how in storms, how in sports, how in war, how in peace, how a fugitive, how victorious, how besieged, how besieging, how to strangers, how to allies, how to enemies, how to his own; lastly, how in his inward self, and how in his outward government—and I think, in a mind not prejudiced with a prejudicating humor, he will be found in excellency fruitful, yea, even as Horace saith, melius Chrysippo et Crantore.

But truly I imagine it falleth out with these poet-whippers, as with some good women, who often are sick, but in faith they cannot tell where; so the name of poetry is odious to them, but neither his cause nor effects, neither the sum that contains him, nor the particularities descending from him, give any fast handle to their carping dispraise.

Since then poetry is of all human learning the most ancient and of most fatherly antiquity, as from whence other learnings have taken their beginnings; since it is so universal that no learned nation doth despise it, nor barbarous nation is without it; since both Roman and Greek gave such divine names unto it, the one of prophesying, the other of making, and that indeed that name of making is fit for him, considering that where all other arts retain themselves within their subject, and receive, as it were, their being from it, the poet only bringeth his own stuff, and doth not learn a conceit out of a matter, but maketh matter for a conceit; since neither his description nor end containing any evil, the thing described cannot be evil; since his effects be so good as to teach goodness and to delight the learners; since therein (namely in moral doctrine, the chief of all knowledges) he doth not only far pass the historian, but, for instructing, is well nigh comparable to the philosopher, for moving leaves him behind him; since the Holy Scripture (wherein there is no uncleanness) hath whole parts in it poetical, and that even our Savior Christ vouchsafed to use the flowers of it; since all his kinds are not only in their united forms but in their severed dissections fully commendable; I think (and think I think rightly) the laurel crown appointed for triumphant captains doth worthily (of all other learnings) honor the poet's triumph.

[ANSWERS TO CHARGES AGAINST POETRY]

Now then go we to the most important imputations laid to the poor poets. For aught I can yet learn, they are these. First, that there being many other more fruitful knowledges, a man might better spend his time in them than in this. Secondly, that it is the mother of lies. Thirdly, that it is the nurse of abuse, infecting us with many pestilent desires; with a siren's sweetness drawing the mind to the serpent's tail of sinful fancies (and herein, especially, comedies give the largest field to ear, as Chaucer saith); how, both in other nations and in ours, before poets did soften us, we were full of courage, given to martial exercises, the pillars of manlike liberty, and not lulled asleep in shady idleness with poets' pastimes. And lastly, and chiefly, they cry out with open mouth as if they had overshot Robin Hood, that Plato banished them out of his commonwealth. Truly, this is much, if there be much truth in it.

First, to the first. That a man might better spend his time, is a reason indeed; but it doth (as they say) but petere principium. For if it be as I affirm, that no learning is so good as that which teacheth and moveth to virtue; and that none can both teach and move thereto so much as poetry: then is the conclusion manifest that ink and paper cannot be to a more profitable purpose employed. And certainly, though a man should grant their first assumption, it should follow (methinks) very unwillingly, that good is not good because better is better. But I still and utterly deny that there is sprung out of earth a more fruitful knowledge.

To the second, therefore, that they should be the principal liars, I will answer paradoxically, but truly, I think truly, that of all writers under the sun the poet is the least liar, and, though he would, as a poet can scarcely be a liar. The astronomer, with his cousin the geometrician, can hardly escape, when they take upon them to measure the height of the stars. How often, think you, do the physicians lie, when they aver things good for sicknesses, which afterwards send Charon [7] a great number of souls drowned in a potion before they come to his ferry? And no less of the rest, which take upon them to affirm. Now, for the poet, he nothing affirms, and therefore never lieth. For, as I take it, to lie is to affirm that to be true which is false. So as the other artists, [8] and especially the historian, affirming many things, can, in the cloudy knowledge of mankind, hardly escape from many lies. But the poet (as I said before) never affirmeth. The poet never maketh any circles [9] about your imagination, to conjure you to believe for true what he writes. He citeth not authorities of other histories, but even for his entry [1] calleth the sweet Muses to inspire into him a good invention; in truth, not laboring to tell you what is or is not, but what should or should not be. And therefore, though he recount things not true, yet because he telleth them not for true, he lieth not—without we will say that Nathan lied in his speech before—alleged to David; [2] which as a wicked man durst scarce say, so think I none so simple would say that Aesop lied in the tales of his beasts; for who thinks that Aesop wrote it for actually true were well worthy to have his name chronicled among the beasts he writeth of. What child is there, that, coming to a play, and seeing Thebes written in great letters upon an old door, doth believe that it is Thebes? If then a man can arrive to that child’s age to know that the poets’ persons and doings are but pictures what should be, and not stories what have been, they will never give the lie to things not affirmatively but allegorically and figuratively written.

So that, since the excellencies of it may be so easily and so justly confirmed, and the low-creeping objections so soon trodden down: it not being an art of lies, but of true doctrine; not of effeminateness, but of notable stirring of courage; not of abusing man’s wit, but of strengthening man’s wit; not banished, but honored by Plato: [4] let us rather plant more laurels for to engarland the poets’ heads (which honor of being laureate, whereas besides them only triumphant captains were, is a sufficient authority to show the price they ought to be held in) than suffer the ill-favored breath of such wrong-sayers once to blow upon the clear springs of poesy.

[POETRY IN ENGLAND]

But since I have run so long a career [5] in this matter, methinks, before I give my pen a full stop, it shall be but a little more lost time to inquire why England, the mother of excellent minds, should be grown so hard a stepmother to poets, who certainly in wit ought to pass all other, since all only proceedeth from their wit, being indeed makers of themselves, not takers of others.

wanting estimation is want of desert—taking upon us to be poets in despite of Pallas. 6

Now, wherein we want desert were a thankworthy labor to express; but if I knew, I should have mended myself. But I, as I never desired the title, so have I neglected the means to come by it. Only, overmastered by some thoughts, I yielded an inky tribute unto them. Marry, they that delight in poesy itself should seek to know what they do, and how they do; and especially look themselves in an unflattering glass of reason, if they be inclinable unto it. For poesy must not be drawn by the ears; it must be gently led, or rather it must lead—which was partly the cause that made the ancient-learned affirm it was a divine gift, and no human skill: since all other knowledges lie ready for any that hath strength of wit. A poet no industry can make, if his own genius be not carried into it; and therefore it is an old proverb, orator fit, poeta nascitur. 7

Yet confess I always that as the fertilest ground must be manured, 8 so must the highest-flying wit have a Daedalus 9 to guide him. That Daedalus, they say, both in this and in other, hath three wings to bear itself up into the air of due commendation: that is, art, imitation, and exercise. But these, neither artificial rules nor imitative patterns, we much cumber ourselves withal. Exercise indeed we do, but that very forebackwardly: for where we should exercise to know, we exercise as having known; and so is our brain delivered of much matter which never was begotten by knowledge. For there being two principal parts, matter to be expressed by words and words to express the matter, in neither we use art or imitation rightly. Our matter is quodlibet indeed, though wrongly performing Ovid’s verse.

Quicquid conabor dicere, versus erit; 1 never marshaling it into any assured rank, that almost the readers cannot tell where to find themselves.

Chaucer, undoubtedly, did excellently in his Troilus and Criseyde; of whom, truly, I know not whether to marvel more, either that he in that misty time could see so clearly, or that we in this clear age go so stumblingly after him. Yet had he great wants, 2 fit to be forgiven in so reverent an antiquity. I account the Mirror of Magistrates 3 meetly furnished of beautiful parts, and in the Earl of Surrey’s lyrics many things tasting of a noble birth, and worthy of a noble mind. The Shepherds’ Calendar 4 hath much poetry in his eclogues, indeed worthy the reading, if I be not deceived. (That same framing of his style to an old rustic language I dare not allow, since neither Theocritus in Greek, Virgil in Latin, nor Sannazzaro in Italian did affect it. 5) Besides these I do not remember to have seen but few (to speak boldly) printed that have poetical sinews in them; for proof whereof, let but most of the verses be put in prose, and then ask the meaning, and it will be found that one verse did but beget another, without ordering at the first what should be at the last; which becomes a confused mass of words, with a tingling sound of rhyme, barely accompanied with reason.

Our tragedies and comedies (not without cause cried out against), observing rules neither of honest civility nor skillful poetry—excepting Gorboduc (again, I say, of those that I have seen), which notwithstanding as it is full of stately speeches and well-sounding phrases, climbing to the height of Seneca's style, and as full of notable morality, which it doth most delightfully teach, and so obtain the very end of poesy, yet in truth it is very defectuous in the circumstances, which grieveth me, because it might not remain as an exact model of all tragedies. For it is faulty both in place and time, the two necessary companions of all corporal actions. For where the stage should always represent but one place, and the uttermost time presupposed in it should be, both by Aristotle's precept and common reason, but one day, there is both many days, and many places, inartificially imagined.

But if it be so in Gorboduc, how much more in all the rest, where you shall have Asia of the one side, and Afric of the other, and so many other underkingdoms, that the player, when he cometh in, must ever begin with telling where he is, or else the tale will not be conceived? Now you shall have three ladies walk to gather flowers: and then we must believe the stage to be a garden. By and by we hear news of shipwreck in the same place: and then we are to blame if we accept it not for a rock. Upon the back of that comes out a hideous monster with fire and smoke: and then the miserable beholders are bound to take it for a cave. While in the meantime two armies fly in, represented with four swords and bucklers: and then what hard heart will not receive it for a pitched field?

Now, of time they are much more liberal: for ordinary it is that two young princes fall in love; after many traverses, she is got with child, delivered of a fair boy; he is lost, groweth a man, falls in love, and is ready to get another child; and all this in two hours' space: which, how absurd it is in sense, even sense may imagine, and art hath taught, and all ancient examples justified—and at this day, the ordinary players in Italy will not err in. Yet will some bring in an example of Eunuchus in Terence, that containeth matter of two days, yet far short of twenty years. True it is, and so was it to be played in two days, and so fitted to the time it set forth. And though Plautus have in one place done amiss, let us hit with him, and not miss with him.

But they will say: How then shall we set forth a story which containeth both many places and many times? And do they not know that a tragedy is tied to the laws of poesy, and not of history; not bound to follow the story, but having liberty either to feign a quite new matter or to frame the history to the most tragical conveniency? Again, many things may be told which cannot be showed, if they know the difference betwixt reporting and representing. As, for example, I may speak (though I am here) of Peru, and in speech digress from that to the description of Calicut; but in action I cannot represent it without Pacolet's horse; and so was the manner the ancients took, by some Nuntius to recount things done in former time or other place. Lastly, if they will represent a history, they must not (as Horace saith) begin ab ovo; but they must come to the principal point of that one action which they will represent.

By example this will be best expressed. I have a story of young Polydorus, delivered for safety's sake, with great riches, by his father Priam to Polymnestor, king of Thrace, in the Trojan war time; he, after some years, hearing the overthrow of Priam, for to make the treasure his own, murdereth the child; the body of the child is taken up by Hecuba; she, the same day, findeth a sleight to be revenged most cruelly of the tyrant. Where now would one of our tragedy writers begin, but with the delivery of the child? Then should he sail over into Thrace, and so spend I know not how many years, and travel numbers of places. But where doth Euripides? Even with the finding of the body, leaving the rest to be told by the spirit of Polydorus. This need no further to be enlarged; the dullest wit may conceive it.

But besides these gross absurdities, how all their plays be neither right tragedies nor right comedies, mingling kings and clowns, not because the matter so carrieth it, but thrust in the clown by head and shoulders to play a part in majestical matters with neither decency nor discretion, so as neither the admiration and commiseration, nor the right sportfulness, is by their mongrel tragi-comedy obtained. I know Apuleius did somewhat so, but that is a thing recounted with space of time, not represented in one moment; and I know the ancients have one or two examples of tragi-comedies, as Plautus hath Amphitruo; but, if we mark them well, we shall find that they never, or very daintily, match hornpipes and funerals. So falleth it out that, having indeed no right comedy, in that comical part of our tragedy, we have nothing but scurrility, unworthy of any chaste ears, or some extreme show of doltishness, indeed fit to lift up a loud laughter, and nothing else: where the whole tract of a comedy should be full of delight, as the tragedy should be still maintained in a well-raised admiration.

But our comedians think there is no delight without laughter; which is very wrong, for though laughter may come with delight, yet cometh it not of delight, as though delight should be the cause of laughter; but well may one thing breed both together. Nay, rather in themselves they have, as it were, a kind of contrariety: for delight we scarcely do but in things that have a conveniency to ourselves or to the general nature; laughter almost ever cometh of things most disproportioned to ourselves and nature. Delight hath a joy in it, either permanent or present. Laughter hath only a scornful tickling.

1. Sidney regards English tragicomedy as violating the rhetorical precept of decorum. But earlier (p. 963) he had, in principle, approved of mixed genres.
2. Effect proper to comedy, as "admiration and commiseration" are proper to tragedy.
4. Amphitruo is tragicomic only in that it contains gods and heroes; otherwise it is pure comedy.
5. Merry tunes for country dances. "Mark them well": inspect them carefully.
6. Agreement, correspondence.
For example, we are ravished with delight to see a fair woman, and yet are far from being moved to laughter; we laugh at deformed creatures, wherein certainly we cannot delight. We delight in good chances, we laugh at mischances: we delight to hear the happiness of our friends, or country, at which he were worthy to be laughed at that would laugh; we shall, contrarily, laugh sometimes to find a matter quite mistaken and go down the hill against the bias in the mouth of some such men—as for the respect of them one shall be heartily sorry, he cannot choose but laugh, and so is rather pained than delighted with laughter.

Yet deny I not but that they may go well together. For as in Alexander's picture well set out we delight without laughter, and in twenty mad antics we laugh without delight; so in Hercules, painted with his great beard and furious countenance, in a woman's attire, spinning at Omphale's commandment, it breedeth both delight and laughter: for the representing of so strange a power in love procureth delight, and the scornfulness of the action stirreth laughter. But I speak to this purpose, that all the end of the comical part be not upon such scornful matters as stir laughter only, but, mixed with it, that delightful teaching which is the end of poesy. And the great fault even in that point of laughter, and forbidden plainly by Aristotle, is that they stir laughter in sinful things, which are rather execrable than ridiculous, or in miserable, which are rather to be pitied than scorned. For what is it to make folks gape at a wretched beggar and a beggarly clown; or, against law of hospitality, to jest at strangers, because they speak not English so well as we do? What do we learn, since it is certain

Nil habet infelix paupertas durius in se,
Quam quod ridiculos homines facit?9

But rather, a busy loving courtier and a heartless threatening Thraso; a self-wise-seeming schoolmaster; an awry-transformed traveler. These, if we saw walk in stage names, which we play naturally, therein were delightful laughter, and teaching delightfulness—as in the other, the tragedies of Buchanan1 do justly bring forth a divine admiration.

But I have lavished out too many words of this play matter. I do it because, as they are excelling parts of poesy, so is there none so much used in England, and none can be more pitifully abused; which, like an unmannerly daughter showing a bad education, causeth her mother Poesy's honesty to be called in question.

Other sort of poetry almost have we none, but that lyrical kind of songs and sonnets: which, Lord, if He gave us so good minds, how well it might be employed, and with how heavenly fruit, both private and public, in singing the praises of the immortal beauty: the immortal goodness of that God who giveth us hands to write and wits to conceive; of which we might well want words, but never matter; of which we could turn our eyes to nothing, but we should ever have new-budding occasions. But truly many of such writings as come under the banner of irresistible love, if I were a mistress, would never persuade me they were in love: so coldly they apply fiery speeches, as men that had rather read lovers' writings—and so caught up certain swelling phrases which hang together like a man that once told my father that the wind was at northwest and by south, because he would be sure to name winds enough—than that in truth they feel those passions, which easily (as I think) may be bewrayed\(^3\) by that same forcibleness or \textit{energia} (as the Greeks call it) of the writer. But let this be a sufficient though short note, that we miss the right use of the material point of poesy.

\textit{Now of versifying there are two sorts, the one ancient, the other modern: the ancient marked the quantity of each syllable, and according to that framed his verse; the modern, observing only number\(^4\) (with some regard of the accent), the chief life of it standeth in that like sounding of the words, which we call rhyme. Whether of these be the more excellent, would bear many speeches: the ancient (no doubt) more fit for music, both words and time observing quantity, and more fit lively to express diverse passions, by the low or lofty sound of the well-weighed syllable; the latter likewise, with his rhyme, striketh a certain music to the ear, and, in fine, since it doth delight, though by another way, it obtains the same purpose: there being in either sweetness, and wanting\(^5\) in neither majesty. Truly the English, before any vulgar language I know, is fit for both sorts. For, for the ancient, the Italian is so full of vowels that it must ever be cumbered with elisions: the Dutch\(^7\) so, of the other side, with consonants, that they cannot yield the sweet sliding, fit for a verse; the French in his whole language hath not one word that hath his accent in the last syllable saving two, called \textit{antepenultima}; and little more hath the Spanish, and therefore very gracelessly may they use dactyls.\(^8\) The English is subject to none of these defects. Now for the rhyme, though we do not observe quantity, yet we observe the accent very precisely, which other languages either cannot do, or will not do so absolutely. That \textit{caesura}, or breathing place in the midst of the verse, neither Italian nor Spanish have, the French and we never almost fail of. Lastly, even the very rhyme itself, the Italian cannot put it in the last syllable, by the French named the masculine rhyme, but still in the next to the last, which the French call the female, or the next before that, which the Italians term \textit{sdrucciola}. The example of the former is \textit{buono}: \textit{suono}, of the \textit{sdrucciola} \textit{a femina}: \textit{semina}. The French, of the other side, hath both the male, as \textit{bon}: \textit{son}, and the female, as \textit{plaise}: \textit{taise}, but the \textit{sdrucciola} \textit{he hath not}: where the English hath all three, as \textit{due}: \textit{true}, \textit{father}: \textit{rather}, \textit{motion}: \textit{potion}\(^9\)—with much more which might be said, but that already I find the triflingness of this discourse is much too much enlarged.

\textbf{[CONCLUSION]}

So that since the ever-praiseworthy Poesy is full of virtue-breeding delightfulness, and void of no gift that ought to be in the noble name of learning; since the blames laid against it are either false or feeble; since the cause why

4. Classical 'quantity' meant the length or duration of syllables. Moderns simply count the 'number' of syllables.
5. Lacking. 'In fine': in conclusion.
6. The common or 'vulgar' people spoke the vernacular languages, whereas the learned could speak and write Latin.
7. German.
8. 'Dactyls': see (as for \textit{caesura}, below) the 'Literary Terms' appendix to this volume. Because of the accent patterns in French and Spanish, those languages cannot make good use of this poetic foot.

it is not esteemed in England is the fault of poet-apes, not poets; since, lastly, our tongue is most fit to honor poesy, and to be honored by poesy; I conjure you all that have had the evil luck to read this ink-wasting toy of mine, even in the name of the nine Muses, no more to scorn the sacred mysteries of poesy; no more to jest at the name of poets, as though they were next inheritors to fools; no more to jest at the reverent title of a rhymer; but to believe, with Aristotle, that they were the ancient treasurers of the Grecians' divinity; to believe, with Bembus, that they were first bringers-in of all civility; to believe, with Scaliger, that no philosopher's precepts can sooner make you an honest man than the reading of Virgil; to believe, with Clauserus, the translator of Cornutus, that it pleased the heavenly Deity, by Hesiod and Homer, under the veil of fables, to give us all knowledge, logic, rhetoric, philosophy natural and moral, and quid non? to believe, with me, that there are many mysteries contained in poetry, which of purpose were written darkly, lest by profane wits it should be abused; to believe, with Landino, that they are so beloved of the gods that whatsoever they write proceeds of a divine fury; lastly, to believe themselves, when they tell you they will make you immortal by their verses. Thus doing, your name shall flourish in the printers' shops; thus doing, you shall be of kin to many a poetical preface; thus doing, you shall be most fair, most rich, most wise, most all, you shall dwell upon superlatives; thus doing, though you be libertinus patre natus, you shall suddenly grow Herculea proles, Si quid mea carmina possunt; thus doing, your soul shall be placed with Dante's Beatrice, or Virgil's Anchises. But if (fie of such a but) you be born so near the dull-making cataract of Nilus that you cannot hear the planet-like music of poetry; if you have so earth-creeping a mind that it cannot lift itself up to look to the sky of poetry, or rather, by a certain rustical disdain, will become such a mome as to be a Momus of poetry; then, though I will not wish unto you the ass's ears of Midas, nor to be driven by a poet's verses, as Bubonax was, to hang himself, nor to be rhymed to death, as is said to be done in Ireland; yet thus much curse I must send you, in the behalf of all poets, that while you live, you live in love, and never get favor for lacking skill of a sonnet; and, when you die, your memory die from the earth for want of an epitaph.

3. Because you are unable to write a sonnet.
Sidney was a jealous protector of his privacy. "I assure you before God," he had written once in an angry letter to his father's private secretary, Molyneux, "that if ever I know you do so much as read any letter I write to my father, without his commandment or my consent, I will thrust my dagger into you. And trust to it, for I speak it in earnest." Yet in Astrophil and Stella he seems to hold up a mirror to every nuance of his emotional being. For its original coterie audience, Sidney's sonnet sequence must have been an elaborate game of literary masks, psychological risk-taking, and open secrets. The loosely linked succession of 108 sonnets and eleven songs, with its dazzling display of technical virtuosity, provides tantalizing glimpses of identifiable characters and, still more, a sustained and remarkably intimate portrait of the poet's inner life.

Much biographical speculation has centered on Sidney's ambiguous relationship with Penelope Devereux, the supposed original of Stella. A marriage between the two had been proposed in 1576 and was talked about for some years, but in 1581 she married Lord Robert Rich, and two years later Sidney also married. (At their high social rank, marriages were negotiated in the interests of the powerful families involved, not of the individuals.) Some of the sonnets contain sly puns on the name Rich, and it seems likely that there are autobiographical elements in the shadowy narrative sketched by the work. At the same time, however, the "plot" of the sequence, full of trials, setbacks, much suffering on the part of the lover and occasional encouragement on the part of the lady, is highly conventional, derived from Petrarch and his many Italian, French, and Spanish imitators.

Poets in this tradition undertook to produce an anatomy of love, displaying its shifting and often contradictory states: hope and despair, tenderness and bitterness, exultation and modesty, bodily desire and spiritual transcendence. Petrarch had deployed a series of ingenious metaphors to describe these states, but by Sidney's time the metaphors—love as a freezing fire, the beloved's glance as an arrow striking the lover's heart, and so forth—had through endless repetition become familiar and predictable, less a revelation than a role. Sidney, in the role of Astrophil, protests that he uses no standard conventional phrases, that his verse is original and comes from his heart. This protest is itself conventional, and yet Sidney manages to infuse his sonnets with an extraordinary vigor and freshness. Certain of the sonnets have, within their narrow fourteen-line bounds, the force of the drama: "Fly, fly, my friends, I have my death-wound, fly" or "What, have I thus betrayed my liberty?" Others, in their grappling with insistent desire, have the probing, psychological resonance of private confession: "With what sharp checks I in myself am shent" or "Who will in fairest book of Nature know." Still others ask crucial questions about the whole project of self-representation: "Stella oft sees the very face of woe." Virtually all of them manifest the exceptional energia—forcibleness—that Sidney, in The Defense of Poesy, says is the key ingredient of good poetry.

From Astrophil and Stella

1. One of six sonnets in the sequence written in hexameters.
I sought fit words to paint the blackest face of woe,
Studying inventions fine, her wits to entertain,
Oft turning others' leaves, to see if thence would flow
Some fresh and fruitful showers upon my sunburned brain.

But words came halting forth, wanting Invention's stay;
Invention, Nature's child, fled step-dame Study's blows,
And others' feet still seemed but strangers in my way.
Thus great with child to speak, and helpless in my throes,
Biting my trewand pen, beating myself for spite,
"Fool," said my Muse to me, "look in thy heart and write."

Not at first sight, nor with a dribbled shot
Love gave the wound, which while I breathe will bleed,
But known worth did in mine of time proceed,
Till by degrees it had full conquest got.

I saw and liked, I liked but loved not,
I loved, but straight did not what Love decreed;
At length to Love's decrees, I, forced, agreed,
Yet with repining at so partial lot.

Now even that footstep of lost liberty
Is gone, and now like slave-born Muscovite,
I call it praise to suffer tyranny;
And now employ the remnant of my wit,
To make myself believe that all is well,
While with a feeling skill I paint my hell.

It is most true that eyes are formed to serve
The inward light, and that the heavenly part
Ought to be king, from whose rules who do swerve,
Rebels to Nature, strive for their own smart.

It is most true, what we call Cupid's dart
An image is, which for ourselves we carve;
And, fools, adore in temple of our heart,
Till that good god make church and churchman starve.

True, that true beauty virtue is indeed,
Whereof this beauty can be but a shade,
Which elements with mortal mixture breed;
True, that on earth we are but pilgrims made,
And should in soul up to our country move:
True, and yet true that I must Stella love.
Some lovers speak, when they their muses entertain,
Of hopes begot by fear, of wot° not what desires,
Of force of heavenly beams infusing hellish pain,
Of living deaths, dear wounds, fair storms, and freezing fires;

Some one his song in Jove and Jove's strange tales attires,
Broidered with bulls and swans, powdered with golden rain;
Another humbler wit to shepherd's pipe retires,
Yet hiding royal blood full oft in rural vein.

To some a sweetest plaint a sweetest style affords,
While tears pour out his ink, and sighs breathe out his words,
I can speak what I feel, and feel as much as they,
But think that all the map of my state I display,
When trembling voice brings forth that I do Stella love.

When Nature made her chief work, Stella's eyes,
In color black why wrapped she beams so bright?
Would she in beamy® black, like painter wise,
Frame daintiest luster, mixed of shades and light?

Or did she else that sober hue devise,
In object® best to knit and strength® our sight,
Lest if no veil those brave gleams did disguise,
They sun-like should more dazzle than delight?

Or would she her miraculous power show,
That whereas black seems beauty's contrary,
She even in black doth make all beauties flow?
Both so and thus: she, minding® Love should be Placed ever there, gave him this mourning weed,
To honor all their deaths, who for her bleed.

Queen Virtue's court, which some call Stella's face,
Prepared by Nature's chiefest furniture,ì
Hath his front® built of alabaster® pure;
Gold is the covering of that stately place.

The door, by which sometimes comes forth her Grace,
Red porphir® is, which lock of pearl makes sure;
Whose porches rich (which name of cheeks endure),
Marble mixed red and white do interlace.
The windows now through which this heavenly guest
Looks o'er the world, and can find nothing such.
Which dare claim from those lights the name of best,

1. I.e., embroidered with mythological figures. Jove courted Europa in the shape of a bull; Leda, as a swan; and Danae, as a golden shower.
2. I.e., in pastoral allegory. By convention, a pastoral poet pipes his songs on an oaten or reed pipe.
3. Parodying the overuse of the word sweet in love complaints, with allusion to the very musical dolce stil nuovo (sweet new style) associated with Dante and his Italian contemporaries.
5. Porphyry, an ornamental red or purple stone.
Of touch they are that without touch doth touch,
Which Cupid's self from Beauty's mine did draw:
Of touch they are, and poor I am their straw.

Reason, in faith thou art well served, that still Wouldst brabling* be with sense and love in me:
I rather wished thee climb the Muses' hill,\(^7\)
Or reach the fruit of Nature's choicest tree,\(^8\)
Or seek heaven's course, or heaven's inside to see.
Why shouldst thou toil our thorny soil to till?
Leave sense, and those which sense's objects be:
Deal thou with powers of thoughts, leave love to will.
Rut thou wouldst needs fight both with love and sense,
With sword of wit,° giving wounds of dispraise,
Till downright blows did foil thy cunning fence:°
For soon as they strake thee with Stella's rays, Reason thou kneel'dst, and offeredst straight° to prove
By reason good, good reason her to love.

15
You that do search for every purling spring
Which from the ribs of old Parnassus flows,
And every flower,\(^1\) not sweet perhaps, which grows
Near therabout, into your poesy\(^2\) wring;
You that do dictionary's method bring
Into your rhymes, running in rattling rows;
You that poor Petrarch's long-deceased woes
With new-born sighs and denizened wit° do sing;
As do bewray a want of inward touch,\(^3\)
And sure at length stolen goods do come to light.
But if (both for your love and skill) your name
You seek to nurse at fullest breasts of Fame,
Stella behold, and then begin to endite.°

16
In nature apt to like when I did see
Beauty's, which were of many carats fine,
My boiling sprites\(^4\) did thither soon incline,
And, Love, I thought that I was full of thee:

But finding not those restless flames in me,
Which others said did make their souls to pine,
I thought those babes of some pin's hurt did whine,

By my love judging what love's pain might be,
But while I thus with this young lion played,
Mine eyes (shall I say cursed or blessed) beheld Stella; now she is named, need more be said?
In her sight I a lesson new have spelled,
I now have learned love right, and learned even so,
As who by being poisoned doth poison know.

With what sharp checks\(^4\) I in myself am shent,\(^5\)
When into Reason's audit I do go,
And by just counts myself a bankrupt\(^6\) know
Of all those goods, which heaven to me hath lent;
Unable quite to pay even Nature's rent,
Which unto it by birthright I do owe;
And which is worse, no good excuse can show,
But that my wealth I have most idly spent.

My youth doth waste, my knowledge brings forth toys,
My wit\(^7\) doth strive those passions to defend,
Which for reward spoil it with vain annoys.
I see my course to lose myself doth bend:
I see and yet no greater sorrow take,
Than that I lose no more for Stella's sake.

Fly, fly, my friends, I have my death-wound, fly;
Who like a thief hid in dark bush doth lie
Till bloody bullet get him wrongful prey.
So tyrant\(^8\) he no fitter place could spy,
Nor so fair level\(^9\) in so secret stay,
As that sweet black\(^6\) which veils the heav'nly eye;
There himself with his shot he close\(^6\) doth lay.
Poor passenger,\(^8\) pass now thereby I did,
And stay'd, pleas'd with the prospect of the place,
While that black hue from me the bad guest hid;
But straight I saw motions of lightning grace,
And then descried\(^6\) the glist'ren\(^6\) of his dart;
But ere I could fly thence, it pierc'd my heart.

Your words, my friend (right healthful caustics),\(^4\) blame
My young mind marred, whom Love doth windlass\(^9\) so,
That mine own writings like bad servants show
My wits quick in vain thoughts, in virtue lame;

That Plato I read for nought, but if he tame
Such coltish gyres,\(^7\) that to my birth I owe Nobler desires, least\(^6\) else that friendly foe,
Great Expectation, wear a train of shame.
For since mad March great promise made of me,
Dig deep with learning’s spade; now tell me this,
Hath this world ought\(^8\) so fair as Stella is?\(^a\)

Because I oft, in dark abstracted guise,
Seem most alone in greatest company,
With dearth of words, or answers quite awry,
To them that would make speech of speech arise,
They deem, and of their doom\(^3\) the rumor flies,
That poison foul of bubbling pride doth lie
So in my swelling breast that only I\(^1\)
Fawn on myself, and others do despise.
Yet pride, I think, doth not my soul possess,
Which looks too oft in his unflatt’ring glass;
But one worse fault, ambition, I confess,
That makes me oft my best friends overpass,
Unseen, unheard, while thought to highest place
Bends all his powers, even unto Stella’s grace.

You that with allegory’s curious frame\(^6\)
Of others’ children changelings use to make,
With me those pains, for God’s sake, do not take;
I list not\(^5\) dig so deep for brazen fame.
When I say Stella, I do mean the same
Princess of beauty for whose only sake
The reins of love I love, though never slack,
And joy therein, though nations count it shame.
I beg no subject to use eloquence,
Nor in hid ways do guide philosophy;
Look at my hands for no such quintessence,
But know that I in pure simplicity
Breathe out the flames which burn within my heart,
Love only reading unto me this art.

With how sad steps, O Moon, thou climbst the skies,
How silently, and with how wan a face!

8. I.e., I don’t ask for a topic simply as an excuse to display my rhetorical skills.
9. The mysterious “fifth element” of matter (supplementary to earth, air, fire, and water), which alchemists labored to extract.
What, may it be that even in heavenly place
That busy archer\textsuperscript{1} his sharp arrows tries?

Sure, if that long-with-love-acquainted eyes
Can judge of love, thou feel'st a lover's case;
I read it in thy looks: thy languished grace,
To me that feel the like, thy state describes.\textsuperscript{2}

Then even of fellowship, O Moon, tell me,
Is constant love deemed there but want of wit?\textsuperscript{3}
Are beauties there as proud as here they be?
Do they above love to be loved, and yet
Those lovers scorn whom that love doth possess?
Do they call virtue there ungratefulness?\textsuperscript{4}

I might (unhappy word), O me, I might,
And then would not, or could not, see my bliss:
Till now, wrapped in a most infernal night,
I find how heav'nly day, wretch, I did miss.

Heart, rend thyself, thou dost thyself but right:
No lovely Paris made thy Helen his:\textsuperscript{5}
No force, no fraud robbed thee of thy delight;
Nor Fortune of thy fortune author is;
But to myself myself did give the blow,
While too much wit\textsuperscript{6} (forsooth) so troubled me,
That I respects for both our sakes must show:\textsuperscript{7}
And yet could not by rising morn foresee
How fair a day was near. O punished eyes,
That I had been more foolish, or more wise!

Come, let me write. "And to what end?" To ease
A burdened heart. "How can words ease, which are
The glasses\textsuperscript{8} of thy daily vexing care?"
Oft cruel fights well pictured forth do please.

"Art not ashamed to publish thy disease?"
Nay, that may breed my fame, it is so rare.
"But will not wise men think thy words fond ware?"\textsuperscript{9}
Then be they close,\textsuperscript{10} and so none shall displease.
"What idler thing, than speak and not be hard?"\textsuperscript{11}
Peace, foolish wit; with wit my wit is marred.
Thus while I write I doubt\textsuperscript{12} to write, and weep;
My harms on Ink's poor loss; perhaps some find
Stella's great powers, that so confuse my mind.

\textsuperscript{1} I.e., is the lady's ingratitude considered virtue in heaven (as here)? Also, is the lover's virtue (fidelity) considered distasteful in heaven (as here)?

\textsuperscript{2} The sonnet seems to allude to the abortive scheme to betroth Sidney to Penelope Devereux in 1576, when she was about thirteen, he twenty-one.

\textsuperscript{3} I.e., Astrophil did not lose Stella to a more attractive rival, as Menelaus lost Helen of Troy to Paris.

\textsuperscript{4} I.e., he thought he was acting in the best interests of both.

\textsuperscript{5} Let them (my words) be kept private.

My mouth doth water, and my breast doth swell,
My tongue doth itch, my thoughts in labor be:
Listen then, lordings, with good ear to me,
For of my life I must a riddle tell.

Towards Aurora’s court a nymph doth dwell,6
Rich in all beauties which man’s eye can see,
Beauties so far from reach of words, that we
Abase her praise, saying she doth excel:
Rich in the treasure of deserved renown,
Rich in the riches of a royal heart,
Rich in those gifts which give th’eternal crown;
Who though most rich in these and every part,
Which make the patents7 of true worldly bliss,
Hath no misfortune, but that Rich she is.

39

Come sleep! O sleep the certain knot of peace,
The baiting place8 of wit,9 the balm of woe,
The poor man’s wealth, the prisoner’s release,
Th’indifferent impartial judge between the high and low;

With shield of proof shield me from out the throng
Of those fierce darts Despair at me doth throw:
I will good tribute pay if thou do so.

Take thou of me smooth pillows, sweetest bed,
A chamber deaf to noise and blind to light,
A rosy garland, and a weary head:3
And if these things, as being thine by right,
Move not thy heavy grace, thou shalt in me
Livelier than elsewhere Stella’s image see.

41

Having this day my horse, my hand, my lance
Guided so well that I obtained the prize,
Both by the judgment of the English eyes
And of some sent from that sweet enemy France:3

Horsemen my skill in horsemanship advance:
Townfolks my strength; a daintier judge applies
His praise to sleight,10 which from good use doth rise;
Some lucky wits impute it but to chance;
Others, because of both sides I do take

My blood from them who did excel in this,
Think Nature me a man of arms did make.
How far they shoot awry! The true cause is,
Stella looked on, and from her heavenly face
Sent forth the beams which made so fair my race.

45

Stella oft sees the very face of woe
Painted in my beclouded stormy face,
But cannot skill to pity' my disgrace,
Not though thereof the cause herself she know.

Yet hearing late a fable which did show,
Of lovers never known, a grievous case,
Pity thereof got in her breast such place
That, from that sea derived, tears' spring did flow.

Alas, if fancy, drawn by imaged things,
Though false, yet with free scope more grace
Than servant's wrack, where new doubts honor brings,
Then think, my dear, that you in me do read
Of lover's ruin some sad tragedy:
I am not I; pity the tale of me.

What, have I thus betrayed my liberty?
Can those black beams such burning marks engrave
In my free side? or am I born a slave,
Whose neck becomes such yoke of tyranny?

Or want I sense to feel my misery?
Or sprite, disdain of such disdain to have?
Who for long faith, though daily help I crave,
May get no alms but scorn of beggary.

Virtue awake! Beauty but beauty is;
I may, I must, I can, I will, I do
Leave following that which it is gain to miss.
Let her go. Soft, but here she comes. Go to,
Unkind, I love you not. O me, that eye
Doth make my heart give to my tongue the lie.

I on my horse, and Love on me doth try
Our horsemanship, while by strange work I prove
A horseman to my horse, a horse to Love;
And now man's wrongs in me, poor beast, descry.

4. Sidney's father and grandfather and his maternaunalcles, the earls of Leicester and Warwick, cause of it.

6. I.e., than the ruin of her lover ('servant'), caused by the new scruples ('doubts') her honor brings up.
8. An emphatic expression, like 'I tell you.'
Are humbled thoughts, which bit of reverence move,
Curbed in with fear, but with gilt bosse° above gold studs
Of hope, which makes it seem fair to the eye.
The wand° is will; thou, fancy, saddle art, whip
Girt fast by memory; and while I spur
My horse, he spurs with sharp desire my heart;
He sits me fast,° however I do stir,
And now hath made me to his hand so right
That in the manage,° myself takes delight.

52

A strife is grown between Virtue and Love,
While each pretends° that Stella must be his: claims
Her eyes, her lips, her all, saith Love, do this, since they do wear his badge;° most firmly prove.
But Virtue thus that title doth disprove:
That Stella (O dear name) that Stella is,
That virtuous soul, sure heir of heavenly bliss;
Not this fair outside, which our hearts doth move.
And therefore, though her beauty and her grace
Be Love's indeed, in Stella's self he may
By no pretence claim any manner° place.
Well, Love, since this demur° our suit° doth stay,
Let Virtue have that Stella’s self; yet thus,
That Virtue but° that body grant to us.

53

In martial sports I had my cunning° tried,
And yet to break more staves° did me address; skill
While with the people’s shouts, I must confess,
Youth, luck, and praise even filled my veins with pride.
When Cupid, having me his slave descried° discerned
In Mars’s livery;° prancing in the press,° through “What now, Sir Fool,” said he, “I would no less;”° nearby
Look here, I say,” I looked, and Stella spied,
Who hard by° made a window send forth light.
My heart then quaked, then dazzled were mine eyes,
One hand forgot to rule,° th’ other to govern the horse fight.
Nor trumpets’ sound I heard, nor friendly cries;
My foe came on, and beat the air for me,°
Till that her blush taught me my shame to see.

54

Because I breathe not love to everyone,
Nor do not use set colors for to wear,°

I.e., you, Fancy (imagination), are the saddle.
Training or handling of a horse.
Device or livery worn to identify someone’s eke, Cupid’s) servants.
“Courtship,” in addition to the legal meaning.
The uniform that identifies the servants belonging to a nobleman’s household; here, to Mars, god of war.
5. I.e., I want no less (service from you).
6. Struck the empty air instead of me.
7. Am not accustomed to wear colors associated with a particular woman.
Nor nourish special locks of vowed hair,\footnote{I.e., lovelocks: long, flowing locks characteristic of amorous courtiers.}
Nor give each speech a full point\footnote{Final punctuation, period.}
of a groan,
The courtly nymphs, acquainted with the moan
Of them who in their lips Love’s standard\footnote{True badge, livery.} bear,
“What, he?” say they of me, “now I dare swear
He cannot love; no, no, let him alone!”
And think so still, so\footnote{Go on thinking so, provided only that.}
Stella know my mind.
Profess indeed I do not Cupid’s art;
But you, fair maids, at length this true shall find,
That his right badge\footnote{True badge, livery.}
is but worn in the heart:
Dumb swans, not chatt’ring pies,\footnote{Prove to be (true) lovers.}
do lovers prove;
They love indeed, who quake to say they love.

Fie, school of Patience, fie, your lesson is Far far too long to learn it without book:\footnote{By memory}
What, a whole week without one piece of look,\footnote{Forget}
And think I should not your large precepts miss?\footnote{Lack}
When I might read those letters fair of bliss,
Which in her face teach virtue, I could brook\footnote{By memory}
Somewhat thy leaden counsels, which I took
As of a friend that meant not much amiss.
But now that I, alas, do want\footnote{Concern with self}
she sight,
What, dost thou think that I can ever take
In thy cold stuff a phlegmatic\footnote{Apathetic} delight?
No, Patience, if thou wilt my good, then make
Her come and hear with patience my desire,
And then with patience bid me bear my fire.

Oft with true sighs, oft with uncalled tears,
Now with slow words, now with dumb eloquence
I Stella’s eyes assail, invade her ears;
But this at last is her sweet-breathed defence:
That who indeed infelt affection bears,
So captives to his saint both soul and sense
That, wholly hers, all selfness\footnote{In the sense of eminently learned scholar.} he forbears;
Thence his desires he learns, his life’s course thence.
Now since her chaste mind hates this love in me,
With chastened mind I straight must shew\footnote{Show}
that she
Shall quickly me from what she hates remove.
O Doctor\footnote{Otherwise}
Cupid, thou for me reply,
Driven else\footnote{Unless I stop loving} to grant by angel’s sophistry,
That I love not, without I leave to love.\footnote{Otherwise}

O joy, too high for my low style to show,
0 bliss, fit for a nobler state than me!
Envy, put out thine eyes, lest thou do see
What oceans of delight in me do flow.

5 My friend, that oft saw through all masks my woe,
Come, come, and let me pour myself on thee:
Gone is the winter of my misery;
My spring appears: O see what here doth grow.
For Stella hath, with words where faith doth shine,
Of her high heart given me the monarchy:
I, I, O I may say that she is mine.
And though she give but thus conditionly
This realm of bliss, while virtuous course I take,
No kings be crowned but* they some covenants6 make.

Who will in fairest book of Nature know
How Virtue may best lodged in beauty be,
Let him but learn of Love to read in thee,
Stella, those fair lines, which true goodness show.

There shall he find all vices' overthrow.
Not by rude force, but sweetest sovereignty
Of reason, from whose light those night-birds' fly;
That inward sun in thine eyes shineth so.

And not content to be Perfection's heir
Who mark2 in thee what is in thee most fair.
So while thy beauty draws the heart to love,
As fast thy Virtue bends that love to good;
"But, ah," Desire still cries, 'give me some food.'

Desire, though thou my old companion art,
And oft so clings to my pure Love that I
One from the other scarcely can descry, 4
While each doth blow the fire of my heart,

Now from thy fellowship I needs must part:
Venus is taught with Dian's wings to fly; 9
I must no more in thy sweet passions lie;
Virtue's gold now must head my Cupid's dart.
Service and honor, wonder with delight,
Fear to offend, will worthy to appear,1
Care shining in mine eyes, faith in my sprite: 4

6. Solemn coronation oaths taken by English monarchs, promising to protect the laws and the people.
7. The owl, for example, was an emblem of various vices.
8. I.e., her virtue, which is fairer even than her beauty.
9. Diana, goddess of the moon and patron of chastity; Venus, goddess of beauty and love, mother of Cupid.
1. The phrase can mean either "the wish to appear worthy" or "desire that is worthy to appear [i.e., not shameful]."
These things are left me by my only dear;
But thou, Desire, because thou wouldst have all,
Now banished art. But yet alas how shall?

I never drank of Aganippe well,
Nor ever did in shade of Tempe sit;
And Muses scorn with vulgar brains to dwell;
Poor layman I, for sacred rites unfit.

Some do I hear of Poets’ fury tell,
But God wot, wot not what they mean by it;
And this I swear by blackest brook of hell,
I am no pick-purse of another’s wit.

How falls it then that with so smooth an ease
My thoughts I speak, and what I speak doth flow
In verse, and that my verse best wits doth please?
Guess we the cause. “What, is it thus?” Fie no.

“Or so?” Much less. “How then?” Sure thus it is:
My lips are sweet, inspired with Stella’s kiss.

O kiss, which dost those ruddy gems impart,
Or gems, or fruits of new-found Paradise,
Breathing all bliss and sweet’ning to the heart,
Teaching dumb lips a nobler exercise!

O kiss, which souls, even souls, together ties
By links of love, and only nature’s art,
How fain would I paint thee to all men’s eyes,
Or of thy gifts at least shade out some part.

But she forbids, with blushing words, she says
She builds her fame on higher-seated praise.
But my heart burns, I cannot silent be.
Then since (dear life) you fain would have me peace,

And I, mad with delight, want wit to cease,
Stop you my mouth with still still kissing me.

Fourth Song

Only joy, now here you are,
Fit to hear and ease my care;
Let my whispering voice obtain
Sweet reward for sharpest pain:
Take me to thee, and thee to me.  "No, no, no, no, my dear, let be."

2. Valley beside Mount Olympus, sacred to Apollo, the god of poetry. “Aganippe well”: fountain at the foot of Mount Helicon in Greece, sacred to the Muses.
3. The most binding of all oaths were those sworn by the river Styx.
4. A kiss he stole from Stella when he caught her napping (Song 2).
5. You want me to be silent.
6. Lack the mental faculties.
7. Like Petrarch, Sidney intersperses songs (eleven of them) in his sequence, thereby extending its emotional range. Some of them incorporate Stella’s voice. This song appears between sonnets 85 and 86.
Night hath closed all in her cloak,
Twinkling stars love-thoughts provoke,
Danger hence good care doth keep,

Jealousy itself doth sleep:
Take me to thee, and thee to me.
"No, no, no, no, my dear, let be."

Better place no wit can find,
Cupid's yoke to loose or bind;

These sweet flowers on fine bed, too,
Us in their best language woo:
Take me to thee, and thee to me.
"No, no, no, no, my dear, let be."

This small light the moon bestows
Serves thy beams but to disclose,
So to raise my hap° more high;

Fear not else, none can us spy:
Take me to thee, and thee to me.
"No, no, no, no, my dear, let be."

That you heard was but a mouse,
Dumb sleep holdeth all the house;
Yet asleep methinks they say,
"Young folks, take time while you may."

Take me to thee, and thee to me.
"No, no, no, no, my dear, let be."

Niggard° Time threats, if we miss
This large offer of our bliss,

Long stay° ere he grant the same;
Sweet, then, while each thing doth frame,°

Take me to thee, and thee to me.
"No, no, no, no, my dear, let be."

Your fair mother is abed,
Candles out, and curtains spread;
She thinks you do letters write:

Write, but first let me indite.°
Take me to thee, and thee to me.
"No, no, no, no, my dear, let be."

Sweet, alas, why strive you thus?
Concord better fitteth us.

Leave to Mars the force of hands,
Your power in your beauty stands:
Take me to thee, and thee to me.
"No, no, no, no, my dear, let be."

Woe to me, and do you swear
Me to hate? But I forbear.
Cursed be my destines° all,
That brought me so high to fall:
Soon with my death I will please thee.
"No, no, no, no, my dear, let be."

When I was forced from Stella ever dear,
Stella, food of my thoughts, heart of my heart,
Stella, whose eyes make all my tempests clear,
By iron laws of duty to depart,

Alas, I found that she with me did smart;¹
I saw that tears did in her eyes appear;
I saw that sighs her sweetest lips did part,
And her sad words my sadded sense did hear.

For me, I wept to see pearls scattered so,
I sighed her sighs, and wailed for her woe,
Yet swam in joy, such love in her was seen.
Thus while th' effect most bitter was to me,
And nothing than the cause more sweet could be,
I had been¹ vexed, if vexed I had not been. i.e., would have been

Now that of absence the most irksome night
With darkest shade doth overcome my day,
Since Stella's eyes, wont² to give me my day,
Leaving my hemisphere, leave me in night,

Each day seems long, and longs for long-stayed³ night;
The night, as tedious, woos th' approach of day.
Tired with the dusty toils of busy day,
Languished with horrors of the silent night,
Suffering the evils both of the day and night,

While no night is more dark than is my day,
Nor no day hath less quiet than my night.
With such bad mixture of my night and day
That, living thus in blackest winter night,
I feel the flames of hottest summer day.

Stella, while now by Honor's cruel might
I am from⁴ you, light of my life, mis-led,
And that fair you, my sun, thus overspread
With absence' veil, I live in Sorrow's night,

If this dark place yet shew,⁵ like candlelight,
Some beauty's piece,⁶ as amber-colored head,
Milk hands, rose cheeks, or lips more sweet, more red,
Or seeing jets,⁷ black, but in blackness bright,
They please I do confess, they please mine eyes;

Dear, therefore be not jealous over me,
If you hear that they seem my heart to move:
Not them, O no, but you in them I love.

Grief, find the words; for thou hast made my brain
So dark with misty vapors which arise
From out thy heavy mold,⁰ that in-bent° eyes
Can scarce discern the shape of mine own pain.

Do thou, then (for thou canst), do thou complain
For my poor soul, which now that sickness tries⁰
Which even to sense, sense of itself denies,³
Though harbingers⁴ of Death lodge there his train.

As of a caitiff worthy so to die,
Yet wail thyself, and wail with causeful⁰ tears,
That though in wretchedness thy life doth lie,
Yet grow'rt more wretched than thy nature bears,
By being placed in such a wretch as I.

"Who is it that this dark night
Underneath my window plaineth?"
It is one who from thy sight
Being (ah) exiled, disdaineth
Every other vulgar° light.

"Why, alas, and are you he?
Be not yet those fancies changed?°
Dear, when you find change in me,
Though from me you be estranged,
Let my change to ruin be.

"Well, in absence this will die;
Leave° to see, and leave to wonder.°
Absence sure will help, if I
Can learn how myself to sunder

So strangely (alas) thy works in me prevail,
That in my woes for thee thou art my joy,

Fulke Greville came from a wealthy family, was educated at Shrewsbury and Cambridge, and was a successful courtier under Elizabeth I, James I, and Charles I. Greville, who never married, wrote some conventional heterosexual verse, but his most passionate expressions of love were for his friend Sir Philip Sidney, whose death in 1586 he never ceased to mourn. Greville refused to publish any of his own work, but he brought out the 1590 version of Sidney's Arcadia and wrote his friend's biography. Greville began a sonnet cycle, Caelica, in the manner of Sidney's Astrophil and Stella, but the later poems in the sequence are in a very different style, somber, brooding, and philosophical. He also wrote long philosophical verse treatises and several politically charged closet dramas (plays meant to be read, not acted on stage). His vision of the human condition is perhaps best summed up in bleak verses from one of these dramas, Mustapha:

O wearisome condition of humanity!
Born under one law, to another bound;
Vainly begot and yet forbidden vanity;
Created sick, commanded to be sound.

The end of Greville's life was grimly in keeping with his pessimism: he was stabbed to death by a long-time servant.*

From Caelica

In night when colors all to black are cast,
Distinction lost, or gone down with the light,
The eye a watch to inward senses placed,
Not seeing, yet still having power of sight,

Gives vain alarums to the inward sense,

Where fear stirred up with witty tyranny
Confounds all powers and thorough self-offense

Doth forge and raise impossibility:

Such as in thick depriving darknesses

Proper reflections of the error be,
And images of self-confusednesses,
Which hurt imaginations only see;
And from this nothing seen tells news of devils,
Which but expressions be of inward evils.

MARY (SIDNEY) HERBERT,
COUNTESS OF PEMBROKE
1562-1621

When her brother, the celebrated courtier and author Philip Sidney, died in 1586, Mary Sidney, the countess of Pembroke, became the custodian not only of his writings but also of his last name. Though her marriage in 1577 to Henry Herbert, the second earl of Pembroke, represented a great social advance for her family—her offspring would no longer be members of the gentry but rather would be among the nation's tiny hereditary nobility—yet throughout her life the countess of Pembroke held onto her identity as a Sidney.

She had good reason to do so. The Sidneys were celebrated for their generous support of poets, clergymen, alchemists, naturalists, scientists, and musicians. The Pembroke country estate, Wilton, quickly became a gathering place for thinkers who enjoyed the countess's patronage and shared her staunch Protestant convictions and her literary interests. Books, pamphlets, and scores of poems were dedicated in the 1590s and thereafter to her, as well as to her brother Robert (his country house, Penshurst, is praised in a well-known poem by Ben Jonson). Nicholas Breton and Samuel Daniel in particular benefited from her support, as did her niece, goddaughter, and frequent companion, Mary Wroth.

In one of the dedicatory poems to Salve Deus Rex Judaeorum, Aemilia Lanyer praises Mary Sidney not only for her generosity toward poets but also for those "works that are more deep and more profound." These include her translation of Robert Garnier's neoclassical French tragedy Antonius and a prose translation of the religious tract A Discourse of Life and Death by the French Protestant Philippe de Mornay. Her translation of Petrarch's Triumph of Death was the first in English to maintain the original terza rima (a particularly challenging rhyme scheme for an English ver-sifier). Although translation was considered an especially appropriate genre for women to work in, it is a mistake to assume that Mary Sidney's efforts as a poet are merely derivative: Elizabethans understood that translation offered the opportunity not only for the display of linguistic and technical skills but also for the indirect expression of personal and political concerns. Mary Sidney also expressed these concerns more directly: among her original poems was a powerful elegy for her brother Philip and a short pastoral entertainment for Queen Elizabeth.

Mary Sidney was best known for having prepared a composite edition of Philip Sidney's Arcadia and for contributing the larger number (107) of the verse translations of the 150 biblical psalms that her brother had begun. Her very free renderings re-create the psalms as English poems, using an amazing variety of stanzaic and metrical patterns and some strikingly effective images. Widely circulated in manuscript, this influential collection was an important bridge between the many metrical paraphrases of psalms in this period and the works of the great religious lyric poets of the seventeenth century, especially George Herbert. Donne's poem Upon the Translation of the Psalms by Sir Philip Sidney and the Countess of Pembroke His Sister testifies to that importance: "They tell us why, and teach us how to sing."

With lies it woundeth.

Thy will all vices loves,
Virtue neglected.

Not words from cursed thee,
But gulfs* are poured;
Gulfs wherein daily be
Good men devoured.

Think'st thou to bear it* so?

God shall displace thee;
God shall thee overthrow,

25 Lo, lo, the wretched wight,
    Who, God disdaining,
    His mischief made his might,
    His guard his gaining.

I as an olive tree
30 Still green shall flourish:
    God's house the soil shall be
    My roots to nourish.

My trust on his true love
35 Shall never thence remove,
    Never see ending.

Thee will I honor still,
40 Lord, for this justice;
    There fix my hopes I will
    Where thy saints' trust is.

Thy saints trust in thy name,
45 Therein they joy them:
    Protected by the same,
    Nought can annoy them.

Psalm 139

O Lord, in me there lieth nought
    But to thy search revealed lies:
    For when I sit
    Thou markest it;

No less thou notest when I rise;
    Yea, closest closet of my thought
    Hath open windows to thine eyes.

Thou walkest with me when I walk;
    When to my bed for rest I go,
    I find thee there,
    And everywhere:
    Not youngest thought in me doth grow,
    No, not one word I cast to talk
    But yet unuttered thou dost know.

If forth I march, thou goest before,
    If back I turn, thou com'st behind:
    So forth nor back
    Thy guard I lack,
    Nay on me too thy hand I find.

Well I thy wisdom may adore,
        But never reach with earthy mind.
To shun thy notice, leave thine eye,
O whither might I take my way?
   To starry sphere?
25
   Thy throne is there.
   To dead men's undelightsome stay?
There is thy walk, and there to lie
   Unknown in vain I should assay.
O sun, whom light nor flight can match,
30  Suppose thy lightful flightful wings
   Thou lend to me,
   And I could flee
As far as thee the ev'ning brings:
   Even led to west he would me catch,
   Nor should I lurk with western things.
Do thou thy best, O secret night,
35  In sable veil to cover me:
   Thy sable veil
   Shall vainly fail;
   With day unmasked my night shall be,
   For night is day and darkness light,
   O father of all lights, to thee.
Each inmost piece in me is thine:
40  While yet I in my mother dwelt,
   All that me clad
   From thee I had.
   Thou in my frame hast strangely dealt:
Needs in my praise thy works must shine,
   So inly them my thoughts have felt.
Thou, how my back was beam-wise laid,
45  And raft'ring of my ribs, dost know;
   Know'st every point
   Of bone and joint,
   How to this whole these parts did grow,
   In brave embroid'ry fair arrayed,
   Though wrought in shop both dark and low.
Nay fashionless, ere form I took,
50  Thy all and more beholding eye
   My shapeless shape
   Could not escape:
   All these, with times appointed by,
Ere one had being, in the book
   Of thy foresight enrolled did lie.
My God, how I these studies prize,
55  That do thy hidden workings show!
   Whose sum is such

No sum so much:
Nay, summed as° sand they sumless grow.
I lie to sleep, from sleep I rise.
Yet still° in thought with thee I go.

My God, if thou but one° wouldst kill,
Then straight would leave my further chase
This cursed brood
Inured to blood,
Whose graceless taunts at thy disgrace
Have aimed oft, and hating still
Would with proud lies thy truth outface.

Hate not I them, who thee do hate?
Thine, Lord, I will the censure be.

Detest I not
The cankered knot
Whom I against thee banded see?
O Lord, thou know'st in highest rate
I hate them all as foes to me.

Search me, my God, and prove my heart,
Examine me, and try° my thought;
And mark in me
If ought there be
That hath with cause their anger wrought.

If not (as not) my life's each part,
Lord, safely guide from danger brought.

Samuel Daniel was a gifted, learned, and deeply thoughtful writer. A poet, playwright, historian, and translator, he was a member of the circle of Mary Sidney, countess of Pembroke, whose son he tutored, and he later held various offices in the household of James I's queen, Anne of Denmark. He wrote tragedies, court masques, a historical epic called The Civil Wars Between the Two Houses of Lancaster and York, a prose History of England, several fine verse epistles, one of the best Elizabethan sonnet sequences, Delia, and a verse dialogue on the purpose of writing poetry, Musophilus. One of the speakers in this dialogue prophetically imagines a time in which the English language, seemingly so marginal, will be spoken in the New World, the "yet unformed Occident":

And who, in time, knows whither we may vent
The treasure of our tongue, to what strange shores
This gain of our best glory shall be sent?
Daniel's lyrics are marked by clarity, restraint, and quiet eloquence. His Defense of Rhyme (1603), an answer to Thomas Campion's objections to the use of rhyme as contrary to classical precedents, defends native English traditions in poetry. His Jacobean writings often implicitly criticize James's reign. Accused of sedition in his tragedy Philetas (1604), he successfully defended himself by citing his classical sources.*

From Delia

When men shall find thy flower, thy glory pass,
And thou, with careful brow sitting alone,
Received hast this message from thy glass,\(^9\)
That tells thee truth, and says that all is gone.

5 Fresh shalt thou see in me the wounds thou madest,
Though spent thy flame, in me the heat remaining;
I that have loved thee thus before thou fadest,
My faith shall wax, when thou art in thy waning.
The world shall find this miracle in me,

10 That fire can burn when all the matter's spent;
Then what my faith hath been thyself shall see,
And that thou wast unkind thou mayst repent.
Thou mayst repent that thou hast scorned my tears,
When winter snows upon thy golden hairs.

Care-charmer Sleep, son of the sable Night,
Brother to Death,\(^1\) in silent darkness born,
Relieve my languish and restore the light;
With dark forgetting of my cares, return.

5 And let the day be time enough to mourn
The shipwreck of my ill-adventured youth;
Let waking eyes suffice to wail their scorn
Without the torment of the night's untruth.
Cease, dreams, th' imagery of our day desires,

10 To model forth the passions of the morrow;
Never let rising sun approve\(^2\) you liars,
To add more grief to aggravate\(^6\) my sorrow.
Still let me sleep, embracing clouds in vain,
And never wake to feel the day's disdain.

Let others sing of knights and paladins\(^2\)
In aged accents and untimely\(^5\) words,

Paint shadows in imaginary lines

2. Renowned champions, especially those associated with the court of Charlemagne.
Which well the reach of their high wits records;

But I must sing of thee, and those fair eyes
Authentic shall my verse in time to come,
When yet th' unborn shall say, 'Lo where she lies,
Whose beauty made him speak that else was dumb.'
These are the arks, the trophies I erect,
That fortify thy name against old age;
And these thy sacred virtues must protect Against the dark and time's consuming rage.
Though th' error of my youth they shall discover,
Suffice they show I lived and was thy lover.

MICHAEL DRAYTON
1563–1631

Michael Drayton was born about a year before Shakespeare and in the same county, Warwickshire. He had a long career as poet, extending from the early 1590s until well into the seventeenth century. He collaborated on plays, wrote scriptural paraphrases, pastorals, odes, poetic epistles, verse legends, and a historical epic called The Barons' Wars. His self-styled masterpiece is Poly-Olbion, a thirty-thousand-line historical-geographical poem celebrating all the counties of England and Wales. He made a significant contribution as well to the period's vogue for sonnets, publishing a sequence called Idea's Mirror (1594) that, following substantial revision, he republished as Idea. It was in fact Drayton's standard practice to revise and add to his poems in each new edition, so that one can trace his response to shifting fashions, his rethinking of his antiquarian fascinations, and his development from an Elizabethan to a seventeenth-century poet.*

From Idea
To the Reader of These Sonnets

Into these loves who but for passion looks,
At this first sight here let him lay them by,
And seek elsewhere, in turning other books
Which better may his labor satisfy.

No farfetched sigh shall ever wound my breast,
Love from mine eye a tear shall never wring,
Nor in Ah me's my whining sonnets dressed;
A libertine, fantastically I sing.
My verse is the true image of my mind,

Ever in motion, still desiring change;

1. Capriciously. "Libertine": one who follows his own inclinations.
And as thus to variety inclined,
So in all humors* sportively I range;
My muse is rightly of the English strain,
That cannot long one fashion entertain.

How many paltry, foolish, painted things,
That now in coaches trouble every street,
Shall be forgotten, whom no poet sings,
Ere they be well wrapped in their winding sheet?*

Where® I to thee eternity shall give,
When nothing else remaineth of these days,
And queens hereafter shall be glad to live
Upon the alms of thy superfluous praise.

Virgins and matrons, reading these my rhymes,
Shall be so much delighted with thy story
That they shall grieve they lived not in these times
To have seen thee, their sex’s only glory;
So shalt thou fly above the vulgar® throng,
Still to survive in my immortal song.

_1619_

Since there's no help, come, let us kiss and part;
Nay, I have done, you get no more of me,
And I am glad, yea glad with all my heart
That thus so cleanly I myself can free.

Shake hands forever, cancel all our vows,
And when we meet at any time again,
Be it not seen in either of our brows
That we one jot of former love retain.

Now at the last gasp of Love’s latest breath,
When, his pulse falling, Passion speechless lies,
When Faith® is kneeling by his bed of death,
And Innocence is closing up his eyes;
Now if thou wouldst, when all have given him over,
From death to life thou mightst him yet recover.

Ode. To the Virginian Voyage®

You brave heroic minds,
Worthy your country’s name.

1. The expedition of the Virginia Company was ordered in April 1606; its mission was to establish Jamestown, England’s first permanent settlement in the New World. Three ships set out in December, after Drayton’s poem was published.

Drayton was the first English author to attempt a careful imitation of the classical ode, taking as his principal model the odes of the Roman poet Horace.
ODE. To THE VIRGINIAN VOYAGE / 1001

That honor still pursue,
Go, and subdue.

Whilst loit'ring hinds
Lurk here at home, with shame.

Britons, you stay too long;
Quickly aboard bestow you,
And with a merry gale
Swell your stretched sail,
With vows as strong
As the winds that blow you.

Your course securely steer,
West and by south forth keep,

Rocks, lee shores, nor shoals,
When Aeolus' scowls,
You need not fear,
So absolute the deep.

And cheerfully at sea,
Success you still entice,
To get the pearl and gold,
And ours to hold,
Virginia,
Earth's only paradise,

Where nature hath in store
Fowl, venison, and fish,
And the fruitful'st soil
Without your toil
Three harvests more,
All greater than your wish.

And the ambitious vine
Crowsn with his purple mass,
The cedar reaching high
To kiss the sky,
The cypress, pine,
And useful sassafras.

To whose the Golden Age
Still nature's laws doth give,
No other cares that tend,
But them to defend
From winter's age,
That long there doth not live.

2. In Greek mythology, the god who controls the winds.
3. The sassafras tree (native to North America), its bark useful both as a flavoring and as a source of oil.
4. In classical mythology, the first and best of the Four Ages of Man. For Arthur Golding's translation of Ovid's famous passage on them, see p. 704.
Whenas the luscious smell
Of that delicious land,
Above the seas that flows,
The clear wind throws,
Your hearts to swell
Approaching the dear strand,
In kenning of the shore,
Thanks to God first given,
O you, the happi’st men,
Be frolic then.
Let cannons roar,
Frighting the wide heaven.

And in regions far
Such heroes bring ye forth
As those from whom we came,
And plant our name
Under that star
Not known unto our north.

And as there plenty grows
Of laurel everywhere,
Apollo’s sacred tree,
You it may see
A poet’s brows
To crown, that may sing there.

Thy voyages attend,
Industrious Hakluyt,
Whose reading shall inflame
Men to seek fame,
And much commend
To after times thy wit.

5. Richard Hakluyt (1553—1616), geographer and author of The Principal Navigations, Voyages, Traffics, and Discoveries of the English Nation (1589; 1598—1600). Drayton evidently pronounced his name with three syllables: Hack-loo-it.

CHRISTOPHER MARLOWE
1564-1593

The son of a Canterbury shoemaker, Christopher Marlowe was born two months before William Shakespeare. In 1580 he went to Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, on a scholarship that was ordinarily awarded to students preparing for the ministry. He held the scholarship for the maximum time, six years, but did not take holy orders. Instead, he began to write plays. When he applied for his Master of Arts degree in 1587, the university was about to deny it to him on the ground that he intended to go abroad to join the dissident English Catholics at Rheims. But the Privy Council intervened and requested that because Marlowe had done the queen "good service"— evidently as some kind of secret agent—he be granted his degree at the next commencement. "It is not Her Majesty's pleasure," the government officials added, "that anyone employed as he had been in matters touching the benefit of his country should be defamed by those that are ignorant in the affairs he went about." Although much sensational information about Marlowe has been discovered in modern times, we are still largely "ignorant in the affairs he went about." The likeliest possibility is that he served as a spy or agent provocateur against English Catholics who were conspiring to overthrow the Protestant regime.

Before he left Cambridge, Marlowe had certainly written his tremendously successful play Tamburlaine and perhaps also, in collaboration with his younger Cambridge contemporary Thomas Nashe, the tragedy of Dido, Queen of Carthage.
Tamburlaine dramatizes the exploits of a fourteenth-century Mongol warrior who rose from humble origins to conquer a huge territory that extended from the Black Sea to Delhi. In some sixteenth-century chronicles, Tamburlaine is represented as God's scourge, the instrument of divine wrath. In Marlowe's play there are few if any glimpses of a transcendent design. His hero is the vehicle for the expression of boundless energy and ambition, the impulse to strive ceaselessly for absolute dominance.
Yet Tamburlaine's conquests are achieved not only by force of arms, but also by his extraordinary mastery of language, his "high astounding terms." The English theater audience had never before heard such resonant, immensely energetic blank verse.
The great period of Elizabethan drama was launched by what Ben Jonson called "Marlowe's mighty line."

From the time of his first theatrical success, when he was twenty-three, Marlowe had only six years to live. They were not calm years. In 1589 he was involved in a brawl with one William Bradley, in which the poet Thomas Watson intervened and killed Bradley. Both poets were jailed, but Watson got off on a plea of self-defense, and Marlowe was released. In 1591 Marlowe was living in London with the playwright Thomas Kyd, who later, under torture, gave information to the Privy Council accusing him of atheism and treason. On May 30, 1593, an informer named Bichard Baines submitted a note to the Council which, on the evidence of Marlowe's own alleged utterances, branded him with atheism, sedition, and homosexuality. Four days later, at an inn in the London suburb of Deptford, Marlowe was killed by a dagger thrust, purportedly in an argument over the bill. Modern scholars have discovered that the murderer and the others present in the room at the inn had connections to the world of spies, double agents, and swindlers to which Marlowe himself was in some way linked. Those who were arrested in connection with the murder were briefly held and then quietly released.

On the bare surface, Marlowe's tragic vision seems for the most part religiously and socially conventional. Tamburlaine at last suffers divine retribution and death at the end of the sequel, Tamburlaine Part II; the central character of The Jew of Malta is a monstrous anti-Semitic caricature; Doctor Faustus and Edward II (which treats the tragic fate of a homosexual king) demonstrate the destruction that awaits those who rebel against God or violate the official moral order. Yet there is a force at work in these plays that relentlessly questions and undermines conventional morality. The crime for which Tamburlaine is apparently struck down is the burning of the Muslim Koran; the Jew of Malta turns out to be, if anything, less ruthless and hypocritical than his Christian counterparts; and Edward II's life of homoerotic indulgence seems innocent in comparison with the cynical and violent dealings of the corrupt rebels who turn against him. In a way that goes far beyond the demands of moral instruction, Marlowe seems to revel in the depiction of flamboyant transgression, physical abjection, and brutal punishment. Whether as a radical pursuit of absolute liberty or an expression of sheer destructive negativity, Marlowe's plays, written in the turbulent years before his murder at the age of twenty-nine, have continued to fascinate and disturb readers and audiences.*

Hero and Leander  Marlowe’s mythological erotic poem is a free and original treatment of a classic tale about two ill-fated lovers. The story derives from a version by the Alexandrian poet Musaeus (fifth century C.E.), but in its blend of poignancy and irony Hero and Leander is closer to that of the Roman poet Ovid, who briefly recounts the story in two epistles of his Heroides and who refers to it in one of his Elegies, which Marlowe translated.

Hero and Leander is a rich and elusive poem: it is comic, erotic, decorative, cruel; now swiftly narrative, now digressive, playful, and yet, in a light way, philosophical. The characters are evidently not intended to be consistent or psychologically credible; they inhabit a World of fancy, of strange contrasts between innocence and the wild riot of amorous intrigues among the gods that is Ovid’s subject matter. Hero is paradoxically a nun vowed to chastity and a devotee of Venus, the love goddess; Leander is both a sharp, sophisticated seducer and an incredibly innocent novice in sex. The deadpan asides, with their irony, hyperbole, and cynicism mingling with exuberant delight in the body’s instinctual freedom, heighten the poem’s elusiveness, its cunning evasion of all fixed categories.

Hero and Leander cannot be precisely dated. Marlowe’s translations of Ovid, to which Hero and Leander is closely related in spirit, are generally thought to be work of the later 1580s. But Marlowe may alternatively have been participating in a vogue for brief erotic epics (epyllia, as they are sometimes called) that dates from the early 1590s when Shakespeare composed his contribution to the genre, Venus and Adonis. Hero and Leander was entered in the Stationers’ Register (a list of forthcoming titles) on September 28, 1593, four months after the poet’s death, but the earliest known edition was not published until 1598.

Marlowe left his poem unfinished; George Chapman, the playwright and translator of Homer, undertook to complete it. Chapman’s moralizing, weightily philosophical continuation, which divides the poem into “sestiads” (named after Sestos, where Hero lived), was published shortly after Marlowe’s fragment. The work is printed here without Chapman’s additions.

On Hellespont, guilty of true-loves’ blood,
In view and opposite, two cities stood,
Sea-borderers, disjoined by Neptune’s might;
The one Abydos, the other Sestos hight. *

At Sestos Hero dwelt; Hero the fair,
Whom young Apollo courted for her hair,
And offered as a dower his burning throne,
Where she should sit for men to gaze upon.
The outside of her garments were of lawn,
The lining purple silk, with gilt stars drawn;
Her wide sleeves green, and bordered with a grove of

- A kind of fine linen or thin cambric,
Where Venus in her naked glory strove
To please the careless and disdainful eyes
Of proud Adonis, that before her lies;²

15 Her kirtle blue, whereon was many a stain,
Made with the blood of wretched lovers slain.³
Upon her head she ware a myrtle wreath,
From whence her veil reached to the ground beneath.
Her veil was artificial flowers and leaves,

20 Whose workmanship both man and beast deceives;
Many would praise the sweet smell as she passed,
When 'twas the odor which her breath forth cast;
And there for honey, bees have sought in vain,
And, beat from thence, have lighted there again.

25 About her neck hung chains of pebble-stone,
Which, lightened⁴ by her neck, like diamonds shone.
She ware no gloves, for neither sun nor wind
Would burn or parch her hands, but to her mind⁵
Or° warm or cool them, for they took delight
Bo° To play upon those hands, they were so white.
Buskins⁶ of shells all silvered used she,
And branched with blushing coral to the knee,
Where sparrows perched, of hollow pearl and gold,
Such as the world would wonder to behold;

35 Those with sweet water oft her handmaid fills,
Which, as she went,⁷ would chirrup through the bills.
Some say, for her the fairest Cupid pined,
And looking in her face, was strooken blind.
But this is true: so like was one the other,
40 As he imagined Hero was his mother;⁸
i.e., Venus
And oftentimes into her bosom flew,
About her naked neck his bare arms threw,
And laid his childish head upon her breast,
And with still¹⁰ panting rocked, there took his rest.

45 So lovely fair was Hero, Venus' nun,⁹
As Nature wept, thinking she was undone,
Because she took more from her than she left
And of such wondrous beauty her bereft;
Therefore, in sign her° treasure suffered wrack,¹⁰
i.e., Nature's / destruction
Since Hero's time hath half the world been black.

50 Amorous Leander, beautiful and young,
(Whose tragedy divine Musaeus¹¹ sung)
Dwelt at Abydos; since him dwelt there none
For whom succeeding times make greater moan.

55 His dangling tresses that were never shorn,
Had they been cut and unto Colchos borne,

² Venus's love for the young hunter Adonis and his death in a boar hunt are recounted by Ovid and by Shakespeare in Venus and Adonis.
³ The extravagant claim is made that many "wretched lovers" had committed suicide at her feet because Hero would not have them.
⁴ The connotations of these two words are contradictory. Hero is a maiden in attendance at the temple of Venus, who is, of course, the goddess of love.
⁵ The author of the Greek poem on which Hero and Leander is remotely based. Though he lived in late antiquity (ca. 5th century C.E.), he was sometimes confused with a legendary early Musaeus, supposed son of Orpheus—hence Marlowe calls him "divine."
Wroud have allured the vent'rous youth of Greece to hazard more than for the Golden Fleece.
Fair Cynthia wished his arms might be her sphere;
Grief makes her pale, because she moves not there.
His body was as straight as Circe's wand;
Jove might have sipped out nectar from his hand.
Even as delicious meat is to the taste,
So was his neck in touching, and surpassed
The white of Pelops' shoulder. I could tell ye
How smooth his breast was, and how white his belly,
And whose immortal fingers did imprint
That heavenly path, with many a curious dint,
That runs along his back; but my rude pen
Can hardly blazon forth the loves of men,
Much less of powerful gods; let it suffice
That my slack muse sings of Leander's eyes,
Those orient cheeks and lips, exceeding his
That leapt into the water for a kiss
Of his own shadow, and despising many,
Died ere he could enjoy the love of any.
Had wild Hippolytus' Leander seen,
Enamored of his beauty had he been;
His presence made the rudest peasant melt,
That in the vast uplandish country dwelt;
The barbarous Thracian soldier, moved with nought,
Was moved with him, and for his favor sought.
Some swore he was a maid in man's attire,
For in his looks were all that men desire:
A pleasant smiling cheek, a speaking eye,
A brow for love to banquet royally;
And such as knew he was a man, would say,
"Leander, thou art made for amorous play;
Why art thou not in love, and loved of all?"
The men of wealthy Sestos every year,
For his sake whom their goddess held so dear,
Rose-cheeked Adonis, kept a solemn feast.
Thither resorted many a wandering guest
To meet their loves; such as had none at all
Came lovers home from this great festival;
For every street, like to a firmament,
Glistened with breathing stars, who, where they went,
Frighted the melancholy earth, which deemed Eternal heaven to burn, for so it seemed
As if another Phaeton had got
The guidance of the sun's rich chariot.
But, far above the loveliest, Hero shined,

6. "Colchos": the country in Asia where the Argonauts ("the vent'rous youth of Greece") found the Golden Fleece.
7. The wand with which Circe, in the Odyssey, turned men into beasts.
8. Pelops, according to Ovid, had a shoulder of ivory.
9. An allusion to Narcissus.
10. Like Adonis, he preferred hunting to love.
2. A son of the sun god, he drove his father's chariot erratically across the sky and almost burned up the world.
And stole away th’ enchanted gazer’s mind;
For like sea nymphs’ inveigling harmony,
So was her beauty to the standers by.

Nor that night-wandering pale and watery star
(When yawning dragons draw her thirling car
From Latmos’ mount up to the gloomy sky,
Where, crowned with blazing light and majesty,
She proudly sits) more over-rules the flood
Than she the hearts of those that near her stood.

Even as when gaudy nymphs pursue the chase,
Wretched Ixion’s shaggy-footed race,
Incensed with savage heat, gallop amain
From steep pine-bearing mountains to the plain,
So ran the people forth to gaze upon her,
And all that viewed her were enamored on her.
And as in fury of a dreadful fight,
Their fellows being slain or put to flight,
Poor soldiers stand with fear of death dead-strooken,
So at her presence all, surprised and tooken,
Await the sentence of her scornful eyes;
He whom she favors lives, the other dies.

There might you see one sigh, another rage,
And some, their violent passions to assuage,
Compile sharp satires; but alas, too late,
For faithful love will never turn to hate.

And many, seeing great princes were denied,
Pined as they went, and thinking on her, died.

On this feast day, oh, cursed day and hour!
Went Hero thorough Sestos, from her tower
To Venus’ temple, where unhappily,
As after chanced, they did each other spy.

So fair a church as this had Venus none;
The walls were of discolored jasper stone,
Wherein was Proteus carved, and o’erhead
A lively vine of green sea-agate spread,
Where, by one hand, light-headed Bacchus hung,
And with the other, wine from grapes out-wrung.

Of crystal shining fair the pavement was;
The town of Sestos called it Venus’ glass;
There might you see the gods in sundry shapes,
Committing heady riots, incest, rapes:
For know that underneath this radiant floor
Was Danae’s statue in a brazen tower,
Jove slyly stealing from his sister’s bed
To dally with Idalian Ganymed,
And for his love Europa bellowing loud.

3. Latmos was the mountain where the moon visited her lover, Endymion. Thirling: flying like a spear.
4. The centaurs, fathered by Ixion on a cloud. For his presumption in loving Juno, Ixion was chained to a wheel, hence “wretched.”
5. A sea god, who could change his shape at will.
6. God of wine and revelry.
7. Juno’s; she was Jove’s wife. Danae, imprisoned in a tower, was visited by Jove in the form of a shower of gold.
8. To abduct Europa, Jove took the form of a “bellowing” bull. Ganymed: a beautiful youth whom Jove kidnapped from Mount Ida, hence “Idalian.”
150 And tumbling with the rainbow in a cloud;⁹
Blood-quaffing Mars heaving the iron net
Which limping Vulcan and his Cyclops set;¹
Love kindling fire to burn such towns as Troy;
Sylvanus weeping for the lovely boy²
155 That now is turned into a cypress tree,
Under whose shade the wood-gods love to be.
And in the midst a silver altar stood;
There Hero sacrificing turtles' blood,
Vailed to the ground, veiling her eyelids close,
160 And modestly they opened as she rose;
Thence flew love's arrow with the golden head,⁴
And thus Leander was enamored.
Stone still he stood, and evermore he gazed,
Till with the fire that from his countenance blazed,
165 Relenting Hero's gentle heart was strook;
Such force and virtue hath an amorous look.
It lies not in our power to love or hate,
For will in us is overruled by fate.
When two are stripped, long ere the course⁶ begin
We wish that one should lose, the other win;
And one especially do we affect
Of two gold ingots, like in each respect.
The reason no man knows, let it suffice,
What we behold is censured by our eyes.
175 Where both deliberate, the love is slight;
Who ever loved, that loved not at first sight?⁵
He kneeled, but unto her devoutly prayed.
Chaste Hero to herself thus softly said,
"Were I the saint he worships, I would hear him,"
180 And as she spake those words, came somewhat near him.
He started up; she blushed as one ashamed,
Wherewith Leander much more was inflamed.
He touched her hand; in touching it she trembled:
Love deeply grounded hardly is dissembled.
185 These lovers spokesy the touch of hands;
True love is mute, and oft amazed stands.
Thus while dumb signs their yielding hearts entangled,
The air with sparks of living fire was spangled,
And Night, deep drenched in misty Acheron,⁶
190 Heaved up her head, and half the world upon Breathed darkness forth. (Dark night is Cupid's day.)
And now begins Leander to display
Love's holy fire, with words, with sighs and tears,
Which like sweet music entered Hero's ears,
195 And yet at every word she turned aside

9. Jove as Jupiter Pluvius, god of rain, frolicking with Iris, goddess of the rainbow. But no such tryst is found in classical mythology.
1. Vulcan used a net to trap Venus (his wife) and Mars, "blood-quaffing" god of war, in the act of love.
2. Cyparissus, beloved of the wood god Sylvanus.
3. Turtledoves, symbolic of constancy in love.
4. The "golden head" of some of Cupid's arrows produced love; he had others, of lead, that produced dislike.
5. Shakespeare quotes this famous line in As You Like It (3.5.83).
6. One of the rivers of Hades.
And always cut him off as he replied.
At last, like to a bold sharp sophister, he
With cheerful hope thus he accosted her:
"Fair creature, let me speak without offense;
I would my rude words had the influence
To lead thy thoughts as thy fair looks do mine;
Then shouldst thou be his prisoner, who is thine.
Be not unkind and fair—misshapen stuff
Are of behavior boisterous and rough.
O shun me not, but hear me ere you go;
God knows I cannot force love, as you do.
My words shall be as spotless as my youth,
Full of simplicity and naked truth.
This sacrifice, whose sweet perfume descending
From Venus' altar to your footsteps bending,
Doth testify that you exceed her far.
To whom you offer and whose nun you are.
Why should you worship her? Her you surpass
As much as sparkling diamonds flaring glass.
A diamond set in lead his worth retains;
A heavenly nymph, beloved of human swains,
Receives no blemish but oftentimes more grace;
Which makes me hope, although I am but base—
Base in respect of thee, divine and pure—in comparison with Dutiful service may thy love procure;
And I in duty will excel all other,
As thou in beauty dost exceed Love's mother.

Nor heaven, nor thou, were made to gaze upon;
As heaven preserves all things, so save thou one.
A stately builded ship, well rigged and tall,
The ocean maketh more majestical:
Why vowest thou then to live in Sestos here,
Who on Love's seas more glorious wouldst appear?
Like untuned golden strings all women are,
Which, long time lie untouched, will harshly jar.
Vessels of brass, oft handled, brightly shine;
What difference betwixt the richest mine
And basest mold, but use? for both not used
Are of like worth. Then treasure is abused
When misers keep it; being put to loan,
In time it will return us two for one.
Rich robes themselves and others do adorn;
Neither themselves nor others, if not worn.
Who builds a palace and rams up the gate
Shall see it ruinous and desolate.
Ah, simple Hero, learn thyself to cherish;
Lone women, like to empty houses, perish.
Less sins the poor rich man that starves himself
In heaping up a mass of drossy pelf, wealth

7. Sophist, person skilled in arguments, especially specious ones.
8. I.e., instruments not played will be out of tune and harsh.
Than such as you: his golden earth remains,
Which after his decease some other gains.
But this fair gem, sweet in the loss alone,
When you fleet hence can be bequeathed to none.
Or if it could, down from th' enameled\(^6\) sky
All heaven would come to claim this legacy,
And with intestine\(^8\) broils the world destroy
And quite confound Nature's sweet harmony.
Well therefore by the gods decreed it is,
We human creatures should enjoy that bliss.

One is no number;\(^9\) maids are nothing then
Without the sweet society of men.
Wilt thou live single still? One shalt thou be,
Though never-singling Hymen\(^1\) couple thee.
Wild savages, that drink of running springs,
Think water far excels all earthly things;
But they that daily taste neat\(^*\) wine despise it.
Virginity, albeit\(^8\) some highly prize it,
Compared with marriage, had you tried them both,
Differs as much as wine and water doth.

Think water far excels all earthly things;
But they that daily taste neat\(^*\) wine despise it.
Virginity, albeit\(^8\) some highly prize it,
Compared with marriage, had you tried them both,
Differs as much as wine and water doth.

This idol which you term Virginity,
Is neither essence,\(^8\) subject to the eye—
No, nor to any one exterior sense;
Nor hath it any place of residence,
Nor is't of earth or mold\(^6\) celestial,
Or capable of any form at all.

Of that which hath no being do not boast:
Things that are not at all are never lost.
Men foolishly do call it virtuous:
What virtue is it that is born with us?\(^4\)
Much less can honor be ascribed thereto:
Honor is purchased by the deeds we do.
Believe me, Hero, honor is not won
Until some honorable deed be done.
Seek you for chastity, immortal fame,
And know that some have wronged Diana's name?\(^5\)
Whose name is it, if she be false or not,
So she be fair, but some vile tongues will blot?
But you are fair, ay, me! so wondrous fair,
So young, so gentle, and so debonair,\(^6\)
As Greece will think, if thus you live alone,
Some one or other keeps you as his own.
Then, Hero, hate me not, nor from me fly
To follow swiftly-blasting\(^8\) infamy.

9. A traditional concept, going back to Aristotle.
1. God of marriage. 'Never-singling': i.e., one who never separates, but always joins.
2. For the impression that makes metal ('bullion') into a coin.
3. Ancient philosophers, like Aristotle.
4. i.e., a virtue is not a virtue unless it is acquired.
5. i.e., no fame for chastity is secure. Even Diana, goddess of chastity, has been slandered.
Perhaps thy sacred priesthood makes thee loath.
Tell me, to whom madest thou that heedless oath?"

295 "To Venus," answered she, and as she spake,
Forth from those two tralucent cisterns brake
A stream of liquid pearl, which down her face
Made milk-white paths wherein the gods might trace
To Jove's high court. He thus replied: "The rites
In which Love's beauteous empress most delights
Are banquets, Doric music, midnight revel,
Plays, masques, and all that stern age counteth evil.
Thee as a holy idiot doth she scorn;
For thou, in vowing chastity, hast sworn
To rob her name and honor, and thereby
Commit'st a sin far worse than perjury—
Even sacrilege against her Deity,
Through regular and formal purity.
To expiate which sin, kiss and shake hands;
Such sacrifice as this Venus demands."
Thereat she smiled and did deny him so
As, put off thereby, yet might he hope for more.
Which makes him quickly reinforce his speech
And her in humble manner thus beseech:

315 "Though neither gods nor men may thee deserve,
Yet for her sake whom you have vowed to serve,
Abandon fruitless, cold Virginity,
The gentle Queen of Love's sole enemy.
Then shall you most resemble Venus' nun,
When Venus' sweet rites are performed and done.
Flint-breasted Pallas' joys in single life,
But Pallas and your mistress are at strife.
Love, Hero, then, and be not tyrannous,
But heal the heart that thou hast wounded thus,
Nor stain thy youthful years with avarice;
Fair fools delight to be accounted nice.
The richest corn dies, if it be not reaped;
Beauty alone is lost, too warily kept."
These arguments he used, and many more,
Wherewith she yielded, that was won before.
Hero's looks yielded, but her words made war:
Women are won when they begin to jar.
Thus, having swallowed Cupid's golden hook,
The more she strived, the deeper was she strook.
Yet, evilly feigning anger, strove she still
And would be thought to grant against her will.
So having paused a while, at last she said:
"Who taught thee rhetoric to deceive a maid?
Aye me, such words as these should I abhor,
And yet I like them for the orator."

With that, Leander stooped to have embraced her,

6. A solemn, military mode. Leander would more appropriately have said "Lydian" (as in Milton's "L'Allegro," line 136); Lydian music was soft and sensual.
7. Athena, a rival goddess, usually portrayed in armor.
8. I.e., by hoarding the treasure of her beauty.
But from his spreading arms away she cast her,
And thus bespake him: "Gentle youth, forbear
To touch the sacred garments which I wear.

"Upon a rock, and underneath a hill,
Far from the town, where all is whist\(^6\) and still,
Save that the sea, playing on yellow sand,
Sends forth a rattling murmur to the land,
Whose sound allures the golden Morpheus\(^9\)

In silence of the night to visit us,
My turret stands, and there, God knows, I play
With Venus' swans and sparrows\(^1\) all the day.
A dwarfish beldame\(^0\) bears me company,
That hops about the chamber where I lie
And spends the night, that might be better spent,
In vain discourse and apish\(^0\) merriment.
Come thither." As she spake this, her tongue tripped,
For unawares "Come thither" from her slipped;
And suddenly her former color changed

And here and there her eyes through anger ranged.
And like a planet, moving several\(^0\) ways,\(^2\)
At one self\(^0\) instant, she, poor soul, assays
Loving, not to love at all, and every part
Strove to resist the motions of her heart;

And hands so pure, so innocent, nay, such
As might have made heaven stoop to have a touch,
Did she uphold to Venus, and again
Vowed spotless chastity, but all in vain.
Cupid beat down her prayers with his wings;

Her vows above the empty air he flings.
All deep enraged, his sinewy\(^0\) bow he bent,
And shot a shaft that burning from him went,
Wherewith she, strooken, looked so dolefully
As made Love sigh to see his tyranny.

And as she wept, her tears to pearl he turned,
And wound them on his arm, and for her mourned.
Then towards the palace of the Destinies,\(^9\)
Laden with languishment and grief, he flies,
And to those stern nymphs humbly made request

Both might enjoy each other and be blessed.
But with a ghastly dreadful countenance,
Threatening a thousand deaths at every glance,
They answered Love, nor would vouchsafe\(^0\) so much
As one poor word, their hate to him was such.

Harken a while, and I will tell you why:
Heaven's winged herald, Jove-born Mercury,
The selfsame day that he asleep had laid
Enchanted Argus,\(^3\) spied a country maid

9. God of sleep. "Golden slumbers" was a common expression.
1. Venus was often portrayed in a chariot drawn by swans, and sparrows were associated with her because of their traditional lechery.
2. In Ptolemaic astronomy each planet moved in its own orbit or sphere but was also carried along in the motion of the surrounding spheres.
3. Mercury (or Hermes), the messenger god with winged feet, put to sleep Argus, the hundred-eyed monster whom Juno had placed as a guard over Io, with whom her husband Jupiter was in love.
Whose careless hair, instead of pearl t’ adorn it,
Glistened with dew, as one that seemed to scorn it;\(^4\)
Her breath as fragrant as the morning rose,
Her mind pure, and her tongue untaught to glose.\(^5\)
Yet proud she was, for lofty pride that dwells
In towered courts is oft in shepherds’ cells;\(^6\)
And too-too well the fair vermilion knew,
And silver tincture of her cheeks, that drew
The love of every swain. On her, this god
Enamored was, and with his snaky rod\(^5\)
Did charm her nimble feet and made her stay;
The while upon a hillock down he lay,
And sweetly on his pipe began to play,
And with smooth speech, her fancy to assay,\(^6\)
Till in his twining arms he locked her fast,
As shepherds do, her on the ground he laid,
And tumbling in the grass, he often strayed
Beyond the bounds of shame, in being bold
To eye those parts which no eye should behold;
And, like an insolent commanding lover,
Boasting his parentage, would needs discover
The way to new Elysium; but she,
Whose only dower was her chastity,
Having striven in vain, was now about to cry
And crave the help of shepherds that were nigh.
Herewith he stayed his fury,\(^7\) and began
To give her leave to rise. Away she ran;
After went Mercury, who used such cunning
As she, to hear his tale, left off her running.
Maids are not won by brutish force and might,
But speeches full of pleasure and delight.
And knowing Hermes courted her, was glad
That she such loveliness and beauty had
As could provoke his liking, yet was mute,
And neither would deny nor grant his suit.
Still vowed he love; she, wanting\(^8\) no excuse
To feed him with delays, as women use,\(^9\)
Or thirsting after immortality
(All women are ambitious naturally),
Imposed upon her lover such a task
As he ought not perform, nor yet she ask.
A draft of flowing nectar she requested,
Wherewith the king of gods and men is feasted.
He, ready to accomplish what she willed,
Stole some from Hebe (Hebe Jove’s cup filled)
Which being known (as what is hid from Jove?)
He inly stormed and waxed more furious
Than for the fire filched by Prometheus,
And thrusts him down from heaven. He, wandering here,

4. I.e., pearl or other jewelry.
5. The caduceus (now the symbol of medicine).
In mournful terms, with sad and heavy cheer, Complained to Cupid. Cupid, for his sake, To be revenged on Jove did undertake; And those on whom heaven, earth, and hell relies (I mean the adamantine Destinies) He wounds with love and forced them equally To dote upon deceitful Mercury. They offered him the deadly fatal knife That shears the slender threads of human life; At his fair feathered feet the engines laid Which th' earth from ugly Chaos' den upweighed. These he regarded not, but did entreat That Jove, usurper of his father's seat, Might presently be banished into hell And aged Saturn in Olympus dwell. They granted what he craved, and once again Saturn and Ops began their golden reign. Murder, rape, war, lust, and treachery Were with Jove closed in Stygian empery. But long this blessed time continued not; As soon as he his wished purpose got, He, reckless of his promise, did despise The love of th' everlasting Destinies. They seeing it, both Love and him abhorred, And Jupiter unto his place restored. And but that Learning, in despite of Fate, Will mount aloft and enter heaven gate, And to the seat of Jove itself advance, Hermes had slept in hell with Ignorance. Yet as a punishment they added this, That he and Poverty should always kiss. And to this day is every scholar poor; Gross gold from them runs headlong to the boor. Likewise the angry sisters, thus deluded, To venge themselves on Hermes, have concluded That Midas' brood shall sit in Honor's chair, To which the Muses' sons are only heir. And fruitful wits that inaspiring are Shall discontent run into regions far;

6. Of extreme hardness (so called because the Destinies' decrees were irrevocable).
7. According to classical mythology, the Fates spun and cut the thread that measures each human life.
8. The Fates also controlled the supports that had held up ("upweighed") the earth since it arose out of Chaos, the yawning abyss from which all things came.
9. The story in lines 451—64 may be summarized as follows: Mercury scorns the gifts offered by the Fates but asks instead that Jove be dethroned (Jove had overthrown his father, Saturn, who ruled heaven during the Golden Age). Mercury persuades the Fates to reverse this revolution, so Saturn and his wife, Ops, return to Olympus and Jove is thrown down into "Stygian empery" (line 458), or Hades. During the Golden Age there was no murder, rape, war, lust, or treachery; these came in with Jove, so when he is sent to Hades they go with him. But this second Golden Age did not last long, because once he got what he wanted, Mercury forgot the Destinies and they restored Jove.
1. Marlowe invents the myth that Mercury, the god of learning, would have slept in hell with Ignorance were it not that Learning is so divine that it always mounts up, even to heaven, the "seat of Jove." But it was not beyond the Fates' power to make Learning and Poverty go together, which they decreed in revenge for Mercury's neglect.
2. The rich, because everything Midas touched turned to gold; also the stupid, because Midas, judging a musical contest between Apollo and Pan, preferred the latter, against all sensible opinion.
3. Not ambitious for riches or power.
And few great lords in virtuous deeds shall joy,
But be surprised with every garish toy,"
And still\ enrich the lofty servile clown\
Who, with encroaching guile, keeps learning down.
Then muse not\ Cupid's suit no better sped,
Seeing in their loves the Fates were injured.

By this, sad Hero, with love unacquainted,
Viewing Leander's face, fell down and fainted.
He kissed her and breathed life into her lips,
Wherewith, as one displeased, away she trips.
Yet as she went, full often looked behind,
And many poor excuses did she find
To linger by the way, and once she stayed
And would have turned again, but was afraid
In offering parley to be counted light.\
So on she goes, and in her idle flight
Her painted fan of curled plumes let fall,
Thinking to train\ Leander therewithal.
He, being a novice, knew not what she meant,
But stayed, and after her a letter sent,
Which joyful Hero answered in such sort
As he had hope to scale the beauteous fort
Wherein the liberal Graces\ locked their wealth,
And therefore to her tower he got by stealth.
Wide open stood the door; he need not climb,
And she herself before the pointed\ time
Had spread the board,\ with roses strewed the room,
And oft looked out, and mused\ he did not come.
At last he came; O who can tell the greeting
These greedy lovers had at their first meeting?
He asked, she gave, and nothing was denied;
Both to each other quickly were affied.\
Look how\ their hands, so were their hearts united,
And what he did, she willingly requited.
(Sweet are the kisses, the embracements sweet,
When like desires and affections meet,
For from the earth to heaven is Cupid raised
Where fancy is in equal balance peised.)\
Yet she this rashness suddenly repented
And turned aside and to herself lamented,
As if her name and honor had been wrongdoing
By being possessed of him for whom she longed.
Ay, and she wished, albeit not from her heart,
That he would leave her turret and depart.
The mirthful god of amorous pleasure smiled
To see how he this captive nymph beguiled.\
For hitherto he did but fan the fire
And kept it down that it might mount the higher.
Now waxed he jealous\ lest his love abated,
Fearing her own thoughts made her to be hated.
Therefore unto him hastily she goes

4. Three goddesses, embodying aspects of beauty.
And, like light Salmacis,\(^5\) her body throws
Upon his bosom where, with yielding eyes,
She offers up herself a sacrifice
To slake his anger, if he were displeased.
O what god would not therewith be appeased?

Like Aesop’s cock,\(^6\) this jewel he enjoyed,
And as a brother with his sister toyed,
Supposing nothing else was to be done,
Now he her favor and good will had won.
But know you not that creatures wanting sense\(^7\)
lacking intelligence
By nature have a mutual appetite,\(^7\)
And wanting organs to advance a step,
Moved by love’s force, unto each other leap?
Much more in subjects having intellect
Some hidden influence breeds like effect.

Albeit Leander, rude\(^8\) in love and raw,
Long dallying with Hero, nothing saw
That might delight him more, yet he suspected
Some amorous rites or other were neglected.
Therefore unto his body, hers he clung;
She, fearing on the rushes\(^8\) to be flung,
Strived with redoubled strength; the more she strived,
The more a gentle, pleasing heat revived,
Which taught him all that elder lovers know.
And now the same gan so to scorch and glow,
She, with a kind of granting, put him by it,
And, ever as he thought himself most nigh it,
Like to the tree of Tantalus,\(^9\) she fled,
And, seeming lavish, saved her maidenhead.

Ne’er king more sought to keep his diadem
Than Hero this inestimable gem.
Above our life we love a steadfast friend;
Yet, when a token of great worth we send,
No marvel then, though Hero would not yield
So soon to part from that she dearly held.
Jewels being lost are found again, this never;
'Tis lost but once, and once lost, lost forever.
Now had the Morn espied her lover’s steeds,\(^1\)
Whereat she starts, puts on her purple weeds,\(^9\)
And, red for anger that he stayed so long,
All headlong throws herself the clouds among.

And now Leander, fearing to be missed,
Embraced her suddenly, took leave, and kissed;
Long was he taking leave, and loath to go,

5. An amorous nymph in Ovid’s Metamorphoses.
6. In Aesop’s fable, a cock, scratching in the barnyard, uncovers a jewel but prefers a barleycorn to it.
7. Attraction, as iron to a magnet.
8. Reeds used as carpeting in Elizabethan homes.
9. Tantalus was punished in Hades by constantly reaching for fruit from a tree that eluded him and by trying to drink water that also escaped him.
1. The horses that pull the chariot of the sun.
And kissed again, as lovers use\(^*\) to do. Sad Hero wrung him by the hand and wept, Saying, "Let your vows and promises be kept."

Then, standing at the door, she turned about, As loath to see Leander going out. And now the sun that through th’ horizon peeps, As pitying these lovers, downward creeps, So that in silence of the cloudy night, Though it was morning, did he take his flight. But what the secret trusty night concealed, Leander’s amorous habit\(^{\dagger}\) soon revealed. With Cupid’s myrtle\(^{2}\) was his bonnet\(^{\ddagger}\) crowned; About his arms the purple riband\(^{\ddagger\ddagger}\) wound Wherewith she wreathed her largely spreading hair; Nor could the youth abstain but he must wear The sacred ring wherewith she was endowed When first religious chastity she vowed; Which made his love through Sestos to be known, And thence unto Abydos sooner blown Than he could sail, for incorporeal Fame, Whose weight consists in nothing but her name, Is swifter than the wind, whose tardy plumes Are reeking water and dull earthly fumes.\(^{3}\) Home when he came, he seemed not to be there, But like exiled air thrust from his sphere, Set in a foreign place, and straight from thence, Alcides-like,\(^{4}\) by mighty violence He would have chased away the swelling main That him from her unjustly did detain. Like as the sun in a diameter\(^{5}\) Fires and inflames objects removed far, And heateth kindly, shining lat’rally,\(^{6}\) So beauty sweetly quickens when ’tis nigh, But being separated and removed, Burns where it cherished, murders where it loved. Therefore, even as an index to a book, So to his mind was young Leander’s look. O none but gods have power their love to hide: Affection by the count’nance is descried.\(^{6}\) The light of hidden fire itself discovers, And love that is concealed betrays\(^{8}\) poor lovers. His secret flame apparently\(^{9}\) was seen; Leander’s father knew where he had been, And for the same mildly rebuked his son, Thinking to quench the sparkles new begun. But love, resisted once, grows passionate, And nothing more than counsel lovers hate. For as a hot, proud horse highly disdains

2. A plant sacred to Venus or Cupid, symbolic of love.
3. I.e., fame is as incorporeal as mist or smoke.
4. Like Hercules, with brute force.
5. I.e., shining straight down at noon.
6. I.e., when it is lower in the sky. The idea is that the sun, paradoxically, causes harm only when it appears to be farthest away (at the zenith). Beauty, Marlowe goes on to claim, works the same way.
To have his head controlled, but breaks the reins,
Spits forth the ringled^2 bit, and with his hooves
Checks^3 the submissive ground; so he that loves,
The more he is restrained, the worse he fares.

What is it now but mad Leander dares??
"O Hero, Hero!" thus he cried full oft,
And then he got him to a rock aloft,
Where, having spied her tower, long stared he on
And prayed the narrow toiling Hellespont

To part in twain, that he might come and go;
But still the rising billows answered "No!"
With that he stripped him to the ivory skin,
And crying, "Love, I come!" leapt lively in.
Whereat the sapphire-visaged god^8 grew proud.

And made his capering Triton^9 sound aloud;
Imagining that Ganymed,^1 displeased,
Had left the heavens, therefore on him seized.
Leander strived; the waves about him wound
And pulled him to the bottom, where the ground
Was strewed with pearl, and in low coral groves
Sweet singing mermaids sported with their loves
To spurn in careless sort^6 the shipwreck treasure;
For here the stately azure palace stood

Where kingly Neptune and his train abode.
The lusty god embraced him, called him love,
And swore he never should return to Jove.
But when he knew it was not Ganymed,
For under water he was almost dead,
He heaved him up, and looking on his face,
Beat down the bold waves with his triple mace,^2
Which mounted up, intending to have kissed him,
And fell in drops like tears because they missed him.
Leander being up, began to swim,
And, looking back, saw Neptune follow him;
Whereat aghast, the poor soul gan to cry,
"O let me visit Hero ere I die!"
The god put Helle's bracelet^3 on his arm,
And swore the sea should never do him harm.

He clapped his plump cheeks, with his tresses played,
And, smiling wantonly, his love bewrayed.^0
He watched his arms, and as they opened wide,
At every stroke betwixt them he would slide
And steal a kiss, and then run out and dance

And, as he turned, cast many a lustful glance
And throw him gaudy toys to please his eye,
And dive into the water and there pry

7. I.e., what is there now Leander dares not do?
8. The primary sense is probably "became sexually aroused."
1. Ganymede, a beautiful boy taken by Jove to be his cupbearer.
2. The three-pronged fork carried by Neptune.
3. Helle was the daughter of King Athamas of Thebes. To escape a cruel stepmother, she fled on a winged, golden-limbed ram but fell off into the Hellespont, which was named for her. Marlowe apparently invented the detail of the bracelet.
Upon his breast, his thighs, and every limb,
And up again and close beside him swim,
"You are deceived; I am no woman, I."
Thereat smiled Neptune, and then told a tale
How that a shepherd, sitting in a vale,
Played with a boy so lovely fair and kind,
As for his love both earth and heaven pined;
That of the cooling river durst not drink,
Lest water nymphs should pull him from the brink;
And when he sported in the fragrant lawns,
Goat-footed satyrs and up-staring fawns
Would steal him thence. Ere half this tale was done
"Ay me!" Leander cried, 'th' enamored sun
That now should shine on Thetis' glassy bower
Descends upon my radiant Hero's tower.
O that these tardy arms of mine were wings!
And as he spake, upon the waves he springs.
Neptune was angry that he gave no ear,
And in his heart revenging malice bare.
He flung at him his mace, but as it went
He called it in, for love made him repent.
The mace returning back, his own hand hit,
As meaning to be venged for darting it.
When this fresh bleeding wound Leander viewed,
His color went and came, as if he rued
The grief which Neptune felt. In gentle breasts
Relenting thoughts, remorse, and pity rests;
And who have hard hearts and obdurate minds
But vicious, harebrained, and illiterate rustics?
The god, seeing him with pity to be moved,
Thereon concluded that he was beloved.
(Love is too full of faith, too credulous,
With folly and false hope deluding us.)
Wherefore Leander's fancy to surprise,
To the rich ocean for gifts he flies.
'Tis wisdom to give much; a gift prevails
When deep persuading oratory fails.
By this time Leander, being near the land,
Cast down his weary feet and felt the sand.
Breathless albeit he were, he rested not Till to the solitary tower he got,
And knocked and called; at which celestial noise
The longing heart of Hero much more joys
Than nymphs and shepherds when the timbrel rings,
Or crooked dolphin when the sailor sings.
She stayed not for her robes, but straight arose
And, drunk with gladness, to the door she goes;
Where, seeing a naked man, she screeched for fear

4. Woodland spirits, who prophesied by looking up to the heavens.
5. I.e., the sea; Thetis was a sea nymph, mother of the hero Achilles.
6. "Crooked" because of the undulating path of the dolphin in the water. The musician Arion was saved from drowning by a dolphin charmed by his music.
(Such sights as this to tender maids are rare)
And ran into the dark herself to hide.
Rich jewels in the dark are soonest spied.

Unto her was he led, or rather drawn
By those white limbs which sparkled through the lawn.\textsuperscript{9}
The nearer that he came, the more she fled,
And, seeking refuge, slipped into her bed.
Whereon Leander sitting, thus began,

Through numbing cold, all feeble, faint, and wan:
"If not for love, yet, love, for pity's sake
Me in thy bed and maiden bosom take;
At least vouchsafe\textsuperscript{6} these arms some little room,
Who, hoping to embrace thee, cheerly\textsuperscript{8} swum.

This head was beat with many a churlish billow,
And therefore let it rest upon thy pillow."
Herewith affrighted Hero shrunk away
And in her lukewarm place Leander lay;
Whose lively heat, like fire from heaven fet,\textsuperscript{4}
Would animate gross clay, and higher set
The drooping thoughts of base declining souls
Than dreary\textsuperscript{5} Mars' carousing nectar bowls.
His hands he cast upon her like a snare;
She, overcome with shame and sallow fear,
Like chaste Diana when Actaeon\textsuperscript{7} spied her,
Being suddenly betrayed, dived down to hide her,
And as her silver body downward went,
With both her hands she made the bed a tent,
And in her own mind thought herself secure,
O'ercast with dim and darksome coverture.
And now she lets him whisper in her ear,
Flatter, entreat, promise, protest, and swear;
Yet ever as he greedily assayed\textsuperscript{2}
To touch those dainties, she the Harpy\textsuperscript{8} played,
And every limb did, as a soldier stout,
Defend the fort and keep the foeman out.
For though the rising ivory mount he scaled,
Which is with azure circling lines empaled,\textsuperscript{9}
Much like a globe (a globe may I term this,
By which love sails to regions full of bliss),
Yet there with Sisyphus\textsuperscript{9} he toiled in vain,
Till gentle parley did the truce obtain.\textsuperscript{1}
Wherein Leander on her quivering breast,
Breathless spoke something, and sighed out the rest;
Which so prevailed, as he, with small ado,
Enclosed her in his arms and kissed her, too.

\textsuperscript{7} A hunter who happened on Diana bathing. She turned him into a stag, and he was killed by his own hounds.
\textsuperscript{8} A monster, half-bird, half-woman, who snatchest away banquets in Virgil's \textit{Aenid} and Shakespeare's \textit{Tempest}.
\textsuperscript{9} Condemned in Hades endlessly to roll a stone uphill.

1. In both the authoritative early printings of the poem (1598), the lines here numbered 775—84 follow at this point (that is, they precede the lines here numbered 763—74). Like almost all modern editors, though, we have adopted the rearrangement first made in 1910 by Tucker Brooke, in his edition of Marlowe's Works. The original order, Brooke thought, did not make good sense; he hypothesized that two sheets of Marlowe's manuscript had been accidentally reversed by the time (five years after his death) the poem was printed. Students may, though, want to read the passage both ways and make up their own minds as to which order is preferable.
And every kiss to her was as a charm,
And to Leander as a fresh alarm,
So that the truce was broke, and she, alas,
Poor silly maiden, at his mercy was.
But deaf and cruel, where he means to prey,
Even as a bird which in our hands we wring
Forth plungeth and oft flutters with her wing.
She trembling strove; this strife of hers, like that
Which made the world, another world begat
Of unknown joy. Treason was in her thought,
And cunningly to yield herself she sought.
Seeming not won, yet won she was, at length.
(In such wars women use but half their strength.)
Leander now, like Theban Hercules,
Entered the orchard of th' Hesperides,
Whose fruit none rightly can describe but he
That pulls or shakes it from the golden tree.
And now she wished this night were never done,
And sighed to think upon th' approaching sun,
For much it grieved her that the bright daylight
Should know the pleasure of this blessed night,
And them like Mars and Erycine displayed,
Both in each other's arms chained as they laid.
Again she knew not how to frame her look
Or speak to him who in a moment took
That which so long so charily she kept;
And fain by stealth away she would have crept
And to some corner secretly have gone,
Leaving Leander in the bed alone.
But as her naked feet were whipping out,
He on the sudden clungd her so about
That mermaid-like unto the floor she slid:
One half appeared, the other half was hid.
Thus near the bed she blushing stood upright;
And from her countenance behold ye might
A kind of twilight break, which through the hair,
As from an orient cloud, glims here and there,
And round about the chamber this false morn
Brought forth the day before the day was born.
So Hero's ruddy cheek Hero betrayed,
And her all naked to his sight displayed,
Whence his admiring eyes more pleasure took
Than Dis
On heaps of gold fixing his look.
By this Apollo's golden harp began
To sound forth music to the Ocean,
Which watchful Hesperus no sooner heard
But he the day's bright-bearing car prepared,

3. One of Hercules' labors was to get the golden apples of the Hesperides, guarded by a dragon.
4. A name for Venus, who was caught in bed with Mars by her husband, Vulcan, who cast a fine chain net over them.
5. Pluto, god of the underworld and of wealth.
6. The evening star; one would expect Lucifer, the morning star.

And with his flaring beams mocked ugly Night
Till she, o'ercome with anguish, shame, and rage,
Danged down to hell her loathsome carriage.

The Passionate Shepherd to His Love

Come live with me and be my love,
And we will all the pleasures prove
That valleys, groves, hills, and fields,
Woods, or steepy mountain yields.

And we will sit upon the rocks,
Seeing the shepherds feed their flocks,
By shallow rivers to whose falls
Melodious birds sing madrigals.

And I will make thee beds of roses
And a thousand fragrant posies,
A cap of flowers, a kirtle
Embroidered all with leaves of myrtle;

A gown made of the finest wool
Which from our pretty lambs we pull;
Fair lined slippers for the cold,
With buckles of the purest gold;

A belt of straw and ivy buds,
With coral clasps and amber studs:
And if these pleasures may thee move,
Come live with me, and be my love.

The shepherd swains shall dance and sing
For thy delight each May morning:
If these delights thy mind may move,
Then live with me and be my love.

Melodious birds sing madrigals.

And I will make thee beds of roses
And a thousand fragrant posies,
A cap of flowers, and a kirtle
Embroidered all with leaves of myrtle;

A gown made of the finest wool
Which from our pretty lambs we pull;
Fair lined slippers for the cold,
With buckles of the purest gold;

A belt of straw and ivy buds,
With coral clasps and amber studs:
And if these pleasures may thee move,
Come live with me, and be my love.

The shepherd swains shall dance and sing
For thy delight each May morning:
If these delights thy mind may move,
Then live with me and be my love.

Doctor Faustus

Marlowe's major dramas, Tamburlaine, The Jew of Malta, and Doctor Faustus, all portray heroes who passionately seek power—the power of rule, the power of money, and the power of knowledge, respectively. Each of the heroes is

1. This pastoral lyric of invitation is one of the most famous of Elizabethan songs, and a few lines from it are sung in Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windso. Many poets have written replies to it, the best known of which is by Sir Walter Raleigh
(p. 917). Go to Norton Literature Online for a recitation of Marlowe's poem.
an overreacher, striving to get beyond the conventional boundaries established to contain the human will.

Unlike Tamburlaine, whose aim and goal is "the sweet fruition of an earthly crown," and Barabas, the Jew of Malta, who lusts for "infinite riches in a little room," Faustus seeks the mastery and voluptuous pleasure that come from forbidden knowledge. To achieve his goal Faustus must make—or chooses to make—a bargain with Lucifer. This is an old folklore motif, but it would have been taken seriously in a time when belief in the reality of devils was almost universal. The story's power over its original audience is vividly suggested by the numerous accounts of uncanny events at performances of the play: strange noises in the theater or extra devils who suddenly appeared among the actors on stage, causing panic.

In the opening soliloquy, Marlowe's Faustus bids farewell to each of his studies—logic, medicine, law, and divinity—as something he has used up. He turns instead to black magic, but the devil exacts a fearful price in exchange: the eternal damnation of Faustus's soul. Faustus aspires to be more than a man: "A sound magician is a mighty god," he declares. His fall is caused by the same pride and ambition that caused the fall of the angels in heaven and of humankind in the Garden of Eden. But it is characteristic of Marlowe that he makes this aspiration nonetheless magnificent.

The immediate source of the play is a German narrative called, in its English translation, The History of the Damnable Life and Deserved Death of Doctor John Faustus. That source supplies Marlowe's drama with the scenes of horseplay and low practical joking that contrast so markedly with the passages of huge ambition. It is quite possible that these comic scenes are the work of a collaborator; but no other Elizabethan could have written the first scene (with its brilliant representation of the insatiable aspiring mind of the hero), the ecstatic address to Helen of Troy, or the searing scene of Faustus's last hour. And though compared with these celebrated passages the comic scenes often seem crude, they too contribute to the overarching vision of Faustus's fate: the half-trivial, half-daring exploits, the alternating states of bliss and despair, the questions that are not answered and the answers that bring no real satisfaction, the heroic wanderings that lead nowhere.

Marlowe's play exists in two very different forms: the A text (1604) and the much longer B text (1616), which probably incorporates additions by other hands and which has also been revised to conform to the severe censorship statutes of 1606. We use Roma Gill's edition, based on the A text. Following the play are parallel versions of a key scene that will enable the reader to compare the two texts.

Prologue

[Enter Chorus.]

Chorus Not marching now in fields of Thrasimene,
Where Mars\(^1\) did mate\(^2\) the Carthaginians,
Nor sporting in the dalliance of love,
In courts of kings where state\(^3\) is overturned,
Nor in the pomp of proud audacious deeds,
Intends our Muse to vaunt his heavenly verse:
Only this (Gentlemen) we must perform,
The form of Faustus' fortunes good or bad.
To patient judgments we appeal our plaud,\(^4\)
And speak for Faustus in his infancy:
Now is he born, his parents base of stock,
In Germany, within a town called Rhodes;
Of riper years to Wittenberg\(^4\) he went,
Whereas\(^5\) his kinsmen chiefly brought him up.
So soon he profits in divinity,\(^6\)
The fruitful plot of scholarism graced,
That shortly he was graced with doctor's name,\(^5\)
Excelling all, whose sweet delight disputes\(^6\)

\(^1\) Mars: God of war. The battle of Lake Trasimene (217 B.C.E.) was one of the Carthaginian leader Hannibal's great victories.

\(^2\) mate: To encounter in battle.

\(^3\) state: Political power.

\(^4\) plaud: Applause.

\(^5\) Rhodes: Roda, or Stadtroda, in Germany.

\(^6\) divinity: Referring to formal disputations, academic exercises that took the place of examinations.
In heavenly matters of theology.

20 Till, swollen with cunning,6 of a self-conceit,
His waxen wings did mount above his reach,
And melting heavens conspired his overthrow.7
For falling to a devilish exercise,
And glutted more with learning's golden gifts,
25 He surfeits upon cursed necromancy.6
Nothing so sweet as magic is to him,
Which he prefers before his chiefest bliss.8
And this the man7 that in his study sits. [Exit.]
Such is the subject of the Institute,
And universal body of the law:
This study fits a mercenary drudge
Who aims at nothing but external trash!
Too servile and illiberal for me.
When all is done, divinity is best:
Jerome's Bible,¹ Faustus, view it well:
Stipendium peccati mors est:² ha! Stipendium, etc.
The reward of sin is death? That's hard.
Si pecasse negamus, fallimur, et nulla est in nobis Veritas.¹
If we say that we have no sin,
We deceive ourselves, and there's no truth in us.
Why then belike⁴ we must sin,⁵
And so consequently die.
Ay, we must die an everlasting death.
What doctrine call you this? Che sara, sara
What will be, shall be! Divinity, adieu!
These metaphysics⁶ of magicians,
And necromantic books are heavenly!
Lines, circles, schemes, letters, and characters!
Ay, these are those that Faustus most desires.
O what a world of profit and delight,
Of power, of honor, of omnipotence
Is promised to the studious artisan!⁴
All things that move between the quiet⁵ poles
Shall be at my command: emperors and kings
Are but obeyed in their several⁶ provinces,
Nor can they raise the wind, or rend the clouds;
But his dominion that exceeds in this
Stretcheth as far as doth the mind of man:
A sound magician is a mighty god.
Here Faustus, try thy brains to gain a deity.

[Enter Wagner.]

Wagner, commend me to my dearest friends,
The German Valdes and Cornelius,
Request them earnestly to visit me.
Wagner. I will, sir. [Exit.]

Faustus. Their conference will be a greater help to me
Than all my labors, plod I ne'er so fast.

[Enter the Good Angel and the Evil Angel.]

Good Angel. O Faustus, lay that damned book aside,
And gaze not on it, lest it tempt thy soul,
And heap God's heavy wrath upon thy head:
Read, read the Scriptures; that is blasphemy.
Evil Angel. Go forward, Faustus, in that famous art,

Wherein all nature's treasury is contained:
Be thou on earth as Jove⁵ is in the sky,
Lord and commander of these elements.

[Exeunt.]

2. Romans 6.23. But Faustus reads only half of the Scripture verse: "For the wages of sin is death; but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord."
3. 1 John 1.8 (translated in the following two lines).
4. A practitioner of an art; here, necromancy.
5. God—a common substitution in Elizabethan drama.
FAUSTUS. How am I glutted with conceit of this! shall I make spirits fetch me what I please, resolve me of all ambiguities, perform what desperate enterprise I will? I'll have them fly to India for gold, Ransack the ocean for orient pearl, and search all corners of the new-found world for pleasant fruits and princely delicacies. I'll have them read me strange philosophy, and tell the secrets of all foreign kings; I'll have them wall all Germany with brass, and make swift Rhine circle fair Wittenberg. I'll have them fill the public schools with silk, wherewith the students shall be bravely clad. I'll levy soldiers with the coin they bring, and chase the Prince of Parma from our land, and reign sole king of all our provinces.

Yea, stranger engines for the brunt of war Than was the fiery keel at Antwerp's bridge, I'll make my servile spirits to invent. Come German Valdes and Cornelius, and make me blest with your sage conference.

[Enter Valdes and Cornelius.] Valdes, sweet Valdes, and Cornelius, know that your words have won me at the last to practise magic and concealed arts; yet not your words only, but mine own fantasy, that will receive no object for my head, but ruminates on necromantic skill. Philosophy is odious and obscure, roth law and physic are for petty wits; divinity is basest of the three, unpleasant, harsh, contemptible, and vile. 'Tis magic, magic that hath ravished me. Then, gentle friends, aid me in this attempt, and I, that have with concise syllogisms gravelled the pastors of the German church, and made the flowering pride of Wittenberg swarm to my problems, as the infernal spirits on sweet Musaeus when he came to hell, Will be as cunning as Agrippa was, whose shadows made all Europe honor him.

VALDES. Faustus, these books, thy wit, and our experience shall make all nations to canonize us. As Indian Moors obey their Spanish lords,
SO shall the spirits of every element
Be always serviceable to us three.
Like lions shall they guard us when we please,
Like Almaine rutters with their horsemen's staves,
Or Lapland giants trotting by our sides;
Sometimes like women, or unwedded maids,
Shadowing more beauty in their airy brows
Than in the white breasts of the Queen of Love.
From Venice shall they drag huge argosies,
And from America the golden fleece
That yearly stuffs old Philip's treasury,
If learned Faustus will be resolute.

As thou to live, therefore object it not.

The miracles that magic will perform
Will make thee vow to study nothing else.
He that is grounded in astrology,
Enriched with tongues, well seen in minerals,
Hath all the principles magic doth require:
Then doubt not, Faustus, but to be renowned
And more frequented for this mystery
Than heretofore the Delphian oracle.
The spirits tell me they can dry the sea,
And fetch the treasure of all foreign wrecks,
Ay, all the wealth that our forefathers hid
Within the massy entrails of the earth.
Then tell me, Faustus, what shall we three want?

Nothing, Cornelius. O this cheers my soul!

Then haste thee to some solitary grove,
And bear wise Bacon's and Abanus' works,
The Hebrew Psalter, and New Testament;
And whatsoever else is requisite
We will inform thee ere our conference cease.

Valdes, first let him know the words of art,
And then, all other ceremonies learned.

Then come and dine with me, and after meat
We'll canvass every quiddity thereof:
For ere I sleep, I'll try what I can do.

This night I'll conjure, though I die therefore.

SCENE 2

[Enter two scholars.]

I wonder what's become of Faustus, that was wont to make our schools ring with sic probo.
2 SCHOLAR. That shall we know; for see, here comes his boy.¹

SCHOLAR. How now sirra, where's thy master?

WAGNER. God in heaven knows.

2 SCHOLAR. Why, dost not thou know?

WAGNER. Yes I know, but that follows not.

1 SCHOLAR. Go to sirra, leave your jesting, and tell us where he is.

WAGNER. That follows not necessary by force of argument, that you, being licentiates,² should stand upon't; therefore acknowledge your error, and be attentive.

2 SCHOLAR. Why, didst thou not say thou knew'st?

WAGNER. Have you any witness on't?

1 SCHOLAR. Yes sirra, I heard you.

WAGNER. Ask my fellow if I be a thief.

2 SCHOLAR. Well, you will not tell us.

WAGNER. Yes sir, I will tell you; yet if you were not dunces you would never ask me such a question. For is not he corpus naturale? And is not that mobile?² Then wherefore should you ask me such a question? But that I am by nature phlegmatic,¹ slow to wrath, and prone to lechery—to love I would say—it were not for you to come within forty foot of the place of execution,³ although I do not doubt to see you both hanged the next sessions. Thus having triumphed over you, I will set my countenance like a precisian,⁴ and begin to speak thus: Truly my dear brethren, my master is within at dinner with Valdes and Cornelius, as this wine, if it could speak, it would inform your worships. And so the Lord bless you, preserve you, and keep you, my dear brethren, my dear brethren. [Exit.]

1 SCHOLAR. Nay then, I fear he is fallen into that damned art, for which they two are infamous through the world.

2 SCHOLAR. Were he a stranger, and not allied to me, yet should I grieve for him. But come, let us go and inform the Rector,⁷ and see if he by his grave counsel can reclaim him.

1 SCHOLAR. Ay, but I fear me nothing can reclaim him.

2 SCHOLAR. Yet let us try what we can do. [Exeunt.]

SCENE 3

[Enter Faustus to conjure.]

FAUSTUS. Now that the gloomy shadow of the earth,

Longing to view Orion's drizzling look,⁵

Leaps from th'antarctic world unto the sky,

And dims the welkin⁶ with her pitchy breath,

Faustus, begin thine incantations,

And try if devils will obey thy hest,⁷

Seeing thou hast prayed and sacrificed to them.

Within this circle⁸ is Jehovah's name,

¹. Poor student acting as servant to earn his living.
². Graduate students.
³. Corpus naturale et mobile ("matter natural and movable") was a scholastic definition of the subject matter of physics. Wagner is here parodying the language of learning at the university.
⁴. Dominated by the phlegm, one of the four humors of medieval and Renaissance medicine and psychology.
⁵. The dining room.
⁶. The constellation Orion appears at the beginning of winter. The phrase is a reminiscence of Virgil.
⁷. The magic circle drawn on the ground, within which the magician would be safe from the spirits he conjured.

http://englishworld20111.wordpress.com/
Forward and backward anagrammatized;
Th’abbreviated names of holy saints,
Figures of every adjunct to the heavens,
And characters of signs and erring stars,¹
By which the spirits are enforced to rise.

Then fear not Faustus, but be resolute,
And try the uttermost magic can perform.

Sint mihi dei Acherontis propitii! Valeat numen triplex Jehovae!
Ignici, aerii, aquatici, terreni spiritus salvetel Orientis princeps, Bel-
zebub inferni ardentis monarcha, et Demogorgon, propitiamus vos ut
apparcat et surgat Mephastophilis. Quid tu moraris? Per Jehovam,

Then fear not Faustus, but be resolute,
And try the uttermost magic can perform.

Sint mihi dei Acherontis propitii! Valeat numen triplex Jehovae!
Ignici, aerii, aquatici, terreni spiritus salvetel Orientis princeps, Bel-
zebub inferni ardentis monarcha, et Demogorgon, propitiamus vos ut
apparcat et surgat Mephastophilis. Quid tu moraris? Per Jehovam,

Then fear not Faustus, but be resolute,
And try the uttermost magic can perform.

Sint mihi dei Acherontis propitii! Valeat numen triplex Jehovae!
Ignici, aerii, aquatici, terreni spiritus salvetel Orientis princeps, Bel-
zebub inferni ardentis monarcha, et Demogorgon, propitiamus vos ut
apparcat et surgat Mephastophilis. Quid tu moraris? Per Jehovam,

Then fear not Faustus, but be resolute,
And try the uttermost magic can perform.

Sint mihi dei Acherontis propitii! Valeat numen triplex Jehovae!
Ignici, aerii, aquatici, terreni spiritus salvetel Orientis princeps, Bel-
zebub inferni ardentis monarcha, et Demogorgon, propitiamus vos ut
apparcat et surgat Mephastophilis. Quid tu moraris? Per Jehovam,
Therefore the shortest cut for conjuring
Is stoutly to abjure\(^1\) the Trinity,
And pray devoutly to the prince of hell.

FAUSTUS 55
So Faustus hath already done, and holds this principle:

There is no chief but only Belzebub,
To whom Faustus doth dedicate himself.
This word damnation terrifies not him,
For he confounds hell in Elysium:

FAUSTUS 60
His ghost be with the old philosophers.\(^6\)
But leaving these vain trifles of men’s souls,
Tell me, what is that Lucifer thy lord?

MEPHASTOPHILIS
Arch-regent and commander of all spirits.

FAUSTUS 65
Was not that Lucifer an angel once?

MEPHASTOPHILIS
Yes Faustus, and most dearly loved of God.

FAUSTUS HOW
comes it then that he is prince of devils?

MEPHASTOPHILIS
O, by aspiring pride and insolence,
For which God threw him from the face of heaven.

FAUSTUS
And what are you that live with Lucifer?

TO Mephastophilis
Unhappy spirits that fell with Lucifer,
Conspired against our God with Lucifer,
And are forever damned with Lucifer.

FAUSTUS 70
Where are you damned?

MEPHASTOPHILIS
In hell.

FAUSTUS 75
How comes it then that thou art out of hell?

MEPHASTOPHILIS
Why this is hell, nor am I out of it.
Think’st thou that I, who saw the face of God,
And tasted the eternal joys of heaven,
Am not tormented with ten thousand hells

In being deprived of everlasting bliss?\(^7\)

FAUSTUS 80
O Faustus, leave these frivolous demands,\(^9\)
Which strike a terror to my fainting soul.

FAUSTUS 85
What, is great Mephastophilis so passionate
For being deprived of the joys of heaven?

Learn thou of Faustus manly fortitude,
And scorn those joys thou never shall possess.
Go bear these tidings to great Lucifer,
Seeing Faustus hath incurred eternal death
By desperate thoughts against Jove’s deity:

FAUSTUS 90
Say, he surrenders up to him his soul
So he will spare him four and twenty years,
Letting him live in all voluptuousness,
Having thee ever to attend on me,
To give me whatsoever I shall ask,

To tell me whatsoever I demand,
To slay mine enemies, and aid my friends,
And always be obedient to my will.

FAUSTUS 95
Go, and return to mighty Lucifer,
And meet me in my study at midnight
And then resolve me of thy master’s mind.\(^4\)

MEPHASTOPHILIS
I will, Faustus.
[Exeunt.]

---

\(^1\) repudiate

\(^6\) Faustus considers hell to be the Elysium of the classical philosophers, not the Christian hell of torment.

\(^7\) This is the punishment of loss of God’s presence, which is supposed to be the greatest torment of hell.

\(^9\) i.e., give me his decision.
FAUSTUS

Had I as many souls as there be stars,
I'd give them all for Mephastophilis.
By him I'll be great emperor of the world,
And make a bridge through the moving air
To pass the ocean with a band of men;
I'll join the hills that bind the Afric shore,
And make that land continent to Spain,
And both contributory to my crown,
The emperor shall not live but by my leave,
Nor any potentate of Germany.
Now that I have obtained what I desire,
I'll live in speculation of this art
Till Mephastophilis return again.

[Exit.]

SCENE 4

[Enter Wagner and the Clown.]

WAGNER Sirra boy, come hither.

CLOWN How, boy? Zounds, boy! I hope you have seen many boys with such pickadevants as I have. Boy, quotha!

WAGNER Tell me sirra, hast thou any comings in?

CLOWN Ay, and goings out too; you may see else.

WAGNER Alas poor slave, see how poverty jesteth in his nakedness!
The villain is bare, and out of service, and so hungry that I know he would give his soul to the devil for a shoulder of mutton, though it were blood raw.

CLOWN HOW, my soul to the devil for a shoulder of mutton though
'twere blood raw? Not so good friend; by'rlady, I had need have it well roasted, and good sauce to it, if I pay so dear.

WAGNER Well, wilt thou serve me, and I'll make thee go like qui mihi discipidus?

CLOWN How, in verse?

WAGNER NO sirra; in beaten silk and stavesacre.

CLOWN HOW, how, knavesacre? Ay I thought that was all the land his father left him! Do ye hear, I would be sorry to rob you of your living.

WAGNER Sirra, I say in stavesacre.

CLOWN Oho, oho, stavesacre! Why then belike, if I were your man,
I should be full of vermin.

WAGNER So thou shalt, whether thou be'st with me or no. But sirra, leave your jesting, and bind your self presently unto me for seven years, or I'll turn all the lice about thee into familiars, and they shall tear thee in pieces.

CLOWN DO you hear, sir? You may save that labor: they are too familiar with me already—sounds, they are as bold with my flesh as if they had paid for my meat and drink.

9. The Holy Roman Emperor.
1. Not a court jester (as in some of Shakespeare's plays) but an older stock character, a rustic buff-foon.
2. Says he. The point of the clown's retort is that he is a man and wears a beard. "Zounds": an oath, meaning "God's wounds." "Pickadevants": small, pointed beards.
3. Income, but the clown then puns on the literal meaning.
4. I.e., if you don't believe me.
5. Out of a job.
6. An oath. "by Our Lady."
7. "You who are my pupil!" (the opening phrase of a poem on how students should behave, from Lily's Latin Grammar, ca. 1509). Wagner means "like a proper servant of a learned man."
8. A preparation from delphinium seeds, used for killing vermin.
9. Wordplay, here and below.
1. Familiar spirits, demons. "Bind your self": i.e., as apprentice. "Presently": immediately.
30 WAGNER Well, do you hear, sirra? Hold, take these guilders.\(^2\)
CLOWN Gridirons; what be they?
WAGNER Why, French crowns.\(^4\)
CLOWN 'Mass, but for the name of French crowns a man were as good have as many English counters!\(^6\) And what should I do with these?
35 WAGNER Why, now, sirra, thou art at an hour's warning whencesoever or wheresoever the devil shall fetch thee.
CLOWN No, no, here take your gridirons again.
WAGNER Truly I'll none of them.
40 CLOWN Truly but you shall.
WAGNER Bear witness I gave them him.
CLOWN Bear witness I give them you again.
WAGNER Well, I will cause two devils presently to fetch thee away.

Baliol\(^5\) and Belcher!
45 CLOWN Let your Baliol and your Belcher come here, and I'll knock\(^6\) them, they were never so knocked since they were devils! Say I should kill one of them, what would folks say? 'Do ye see yonder tall fellow in the round slop? He has killed the devil!' So I should be called 'Kildevil!' all the parish over.

[Enter two devils, and the clown runs up and down crying.]
50 WAGNER Baliol and Belcher, spirits, away! [Exeunt devils.]

CLOWN What, are they gone? A vengeance on them! They have vile long nails. There was a he devil and a she devil. I'll tell you how you shall know them: all he devils has horns, and all she devils has clefts and cloven feet.
55 WAGNER Well sirra, follow me.
CLOWN But do you hear? If I should serve you, would you teach me to raise up Banios and Belcheos?
WAGNER I will teach thee to turn thyself to anything, to a dog, or a cat, or a mouse, or a rat, or anything.
60 CLOWN HOW! A Christian fellow to a dog, or a cat, a mouse, or a rat? No, no sir, if you turn me into anything, let it be in the likeness of a little pretty frisking flea, that I may be here, and there, and everywhere. O I'll tickle the pretty wenches' plackets! I'll be amongst them, i'faith.\(^8\)
65 WAGNER Well sirra, come.
CLOWN But, do you hear, Wagner . . . ?
WAGNER HOW! Baliol and Belcher!
CLOWN O Lord I pray, sir, let Banio and Belcher go sleep.
WAGNER Villain, call me Master Wagner; and let thy left eye be diametarily fixed upon my right heel, with quasi vestigias nostras insister.\(^9\) [Exit.]

CLOWN God forgive me, he speaks Dutch fustian!\(^1\) Well, I'll follow him, I'll serve him; that's flat.

[Exit.]

SCENE 5

[Enter Faustus in his study.]

FAUSTUS NOW Faustus, must thou needs be damned,

2. Coins.
3. French crowns, legal tender in England at this period, were easily counterfeited.
5. Probably a corruption of Belial.
9. A pedantic way of saying "Follow my footsteps." "Diametarily": diametrically.
1. Gibberish.
And canst thou not be saved.

What boots it then to think of God or heaven?

Away with such vain fancies, and despair,

Despair in God, and trust in Belzebub.

Now go not backward: no, Faustus, be resolute;

Why wavest thou? O, something soundeth in mine ears:

"Abjure this magic, turn to God again."

Ay, and Faustus will turn to God again.

To God? He loves thee not:

The god thou servest is thine own appetite,

Wherein is fixed the love of Belzebub.

To him I'll build an altar and a church,

And offer lukewarm blood of newborn babes.

[Enter GOOD ANGEL and EVIL.]

GOOD ANGEL Sweet Faustus, leave that execrable art.

FAUSTUS Contrition, prayer, repentance: what of them?

GOOD ANGEL O they are means to bring thee unto heaven.

EVIL ANGEL Rather illusions, fruits of lunacy,

That makes men foolish that do trust them most.

GOOD ANGEL Sweet Faustus, think of heaven, and heavenly things.

EVIL ANGEL No Faustus, think of honor and of wealth. [Exeunt.]

FAUSTUS Of wealth!

Why, the signory of Emden shall be mine,

When Mephostophilis shall stand by me.

What god can hurt thee, Faustus? Thou art safe,

Cast no more doubts. Come, Mephostophilis,

And bring glad tidings from great Lucifer.

Is't not midnight? Come, Mephostophilis:

Vent, vent, Mephostophile!

[Enter MEPHASTOPHILIS.]

Now tell, what says Lucifer thy lord?

MEPHASTOPHILIS That I shall wait on Faustus whilst he lives,

So he will buy my service with his soul.

MEPHASTOPHILIS Already Faustus hath hazarded that for thee.

FAUSTUS But Faustus, thou must bequeath it solemnly,

And write a deed of gift with thine own blood,

For that security craves great Lucifer.

If thou deny it, I will back to hell.

FAUSTUS Stay, Mephostophilis, and tell me,

What good will my soul do thy lord?

MEPHASTOPHILIS Enlarge his kingdom.

FAUSTUS Is that the reason he tempts us thus?

MEPHASTOPHILIS Solamen miseris socios habuisse doloris.

FAUSTUS Have you any pain that tortures others?

MEPHASTOPHILIS As great as have the human souls of men.

But tell me Faustus, shall I have thy soul?

And I will be thy slave and wait on thee,

And give thee more than thou hast wit to ask.

FAUSTUS Ay Mephostophilis, I give it thee.

MEPHASTOPHILIS Then stab thine arm courageously,

And bind thy soul, that at some certain day
Great Lucifer may claim it as his own,
And then be thou as great as Lucifer.

FAUSTUS LO
Mephistophilis, for love of thee,
I cut my arm, and with my proper own blood
Assure my soul to be great Lucifer's,
Chief lord and regent of perpetual night.

View here the blood that trickles from mine arm,
And let it be propitious for my wish.

Mephistophilis
But Faustus, thou must write it
In manner of a deed of gift.

FAUSTUS
Ay, so I will; but, Mephistophilis,
My blood congeals and I can write no more.

Mephistophilis
I'll fetch thee fire to dissolve it straight. [Exit.]

FAUSTUS
What might the staying of my blood portend?
Is it unwilling I should write this bill?
Why streams it not, that I may write afresh:
"Faustus gives to thee his soul"? Ah, there it stayed!
Why should'st thou not? Is not thy soul thine own?
Then write again: "Faustus gives to thee his soul."

[Enter Mephistophilis with a chafers of coals.]

Mephistophilis
Here's fire, come Faustus, set it on.

FAUSTUS SO
, now the blood begins to clear again.

Now will I make an end immediately.

Mephistophilis
O what will not I do to obtain his soul!

FAUSTUS
Consummatum est, this bill is ended,
And Faustus hath bequeathed his soul to Lucifer.

But what is this inscription on mine arm?
Homo fugal.° Whither should I fly?
If unto God, he'll throw me down to hell;
My senses are deceived, here's nothing writ;
I see it plain, here in this place is writ,
Homo fugal! Yet shall not Faustus fly.

Mephistophilis
I'll fetch him somewhat to delight his mind. [Exit.]
[Enter with devils, giving crowns and rich apparel to Faustus, and dance, and then depart.]

FAUSTUS
Speak, Mephistophilis, what means this show?

Mephistophilis
Nothing, Faustus, but to delight thy mind withal,
And to show thee what magic can perform.

FAUSTUS
But may I raise up spirits when I please?

Mephistophilis
Ay, Faustus, and do greater things than these.

FAUSTUS
Then there's enough for a thousand souls!
Here, Mephistophilis, receive this scroll,
A deed of gift of body and of soul:
But yet conditionally, that thou perform
All articles prescribed between us both.

Mephistophilis
Faustus, I swear by hell and Lucifer
To effect all promises between us made.

FAUSTUS
Then hear me read them. On these conditions following:

First, that Faustus may be a spirit,° inform and substance.
Secondly, that Mephistophilis shall be his servant, and at his command.

——

5. "It is finished": a blasphemy, because these are the words of Christ on the Cross (John 19.30).
6. I.e., have the supernatural powers of a spirit.
Thirdly, that Mephistophilis shall do for him, and bring him whatso-

10 ever.

Fourthly, that he shall be in his chamber or house invisible.

Lastly, that he shall appear to the said John Faustus at all times, in what form or shape soever he please.

15 I, John Faustus of Wittenberg, doctor, by these presents, do give both body and soul to Lucifer, Prince of the East, and his minister Mephastophilos; and furthermore grant unto them that, four and twenty years being expired, the articles above-written inviolate, full power to fetch or carry the said John Faustus, body and soul, flesh, blood, or goods, into their habitation wheresoever.

110 By me John Faustus.

MEPHASTOPHILIS Speak, Faustus: do you deliver this as your deed?

FAUSTUS Ay, take it; and the devil give thee good on’t.

MEPHASTOPHILIS Now, Faustus, ask what thou wilt.

FAUSTUS First will I question with thee about hell:

MEPHASTOPHILIS Within the bowels of these elements,

Where we are tortured and remain for ever.

120 Hell hath no limits, nor is circumscribed

In one self place; for where we are is hell,

And where hell is, there must we ever be.

And to conclude, when all the world dissolves,

And every creature shall be purified,

125 All places shall be hell that is not heaven.

FAUSTUS Come, I think hell’s a fable.

MEPHASTOPHILIS Ay, think so still, till experience change thy mind.

FAUSTUS Why? think’st thou then that Faustus shall be damned?

MEPHASTOPHILIS Ay, of necessity, for here’s the scroll

130 Wherein thou hast given thy soul to Lucifer.

FAUSTUS Ay, and body too; but what of that?

Think’st thou that Faustus is so fond to imagine

That after this life there is any pain?

135 Tush, these are trifles and mere old wives’ tales.

MEPHASTOPHILIS But Faustus, I am an instance to prove the contrary;

For I am damned, and am now in hell.

FAUSTUS How, now in hell? Nay, and this be hell, I’ll willingly be damned here! What? walking, disputing, etc. . . But leaving off

140 this, let me have a wife, the fairest maid in Germany, for I am wanton and lascivious, and cannot live without a wife.

MEPHASTOPHILIS How, a wife? I prithee Faustus, talk not of a wife.8

FAUSTUS Nay sweet Mephistophilis, fetch me one, for I will have 145 one.

MEPHASTOPHILIS Well, thou wilt have one; sit there till I come.

I’ll fetch thee a wife in the devil’s name. [Exit.]

[Enter with a DEVIL dressed like a woman, with fireworks. ]

MEPHASTOPHILIS Tell, Faustus, how dost thou like thy wife?

FAUSTUS A plague on her for a hot whore!

MEPHASTOPHILIS Tut, Faustus, marriage is but a ceremonial toy;

7. Legal articles.
8. Mephistophilis cannot produce a wife for Faustus because marriage is a sacrament.
If thou lovest me, think no more of it.

I'll cull thee out the fairest courtesans
And bring them every morning to thy bed:
She whom thine eye shall like, thy heart shall have,
Be she as chaste as was Penelope,
As wise as Saba, or as beautiful

As was bright Lucifer before his fall.
Hold, take this book, peruse it thoroughly:
The iterating of these lines brings gold;
The framing of this circle on the ground
Brings whirlwinds, tempests, thunder and lightning.

Pronounce this thrice devoutly to thyself,
And men in armor shall appear to thee,
Ready to execute what thou desirest.

FAUSTUS Thanks, Mephastophilis, yet fain would I have a book wherein I might behold all spells and incantations, that I might raise up spirits when I please.

MEPHASTOPHILIS Here they are in this book. [There turn to them.]

FAUSTUS NOW would I have a book where I might see all characters and planets of the heavens, that I might know their motions and dispositions.

MEPHASTOPHILIS Here they are too. [Turn to them.]

FAUSTUS Nay, let me have one book more, and then I have done, wherein I might see all plants, herbs, and trees that grow upon the earth.

MEPHASTOPHILIS Here they be.

FAUSTUS O thou art deceived!

MEPHASTOPHILIS Tut, I warrant thee.

FAUSTUS When I behold the heavens, then I repent,
And curse thee, wicked Mephastophilis,
Because thou hast deprived me of those joys.

MEPHASTOPHILIS Why Faustus,
Think'st thou that heaven is such a glorious thing?
I tell thee 'tis not half so fair as thou,
Or any man that breathes on earth.

FAUSTUS How prov'st thou that?

MEPHASTOPHILIS It was made for man, therefore is man more excellent.

FAUSTUS If it were made for man,'twas made for me:
I will renounce this magic, and repent.

[Enter GOOD ANGEL and EVIL ANGEL.]

GOOD ANGEL Faustus, repent, yet God will pity thee.

EVIL ANGEL Thou art a spirit, God cannot pity thee.

FAUSTUS Who buzzeth in mine ears I am a spirit?
Be I a devil, yet God may pity me.
Ay, God will pity me if I repent.

EVIL ANGEL Ay, but Faustus never shall repent. [Exeunt.]

FAUSTUS My heart's so hardened I cannot repent!

Scarce can I name salvation, faith, or heaven,
But fearful echoes thunders in mine ears,
'Faustus, thou are damned'; then swords and knives,
Poison, guns, halters, and envenomed steel
Are laid before me to dispatch myself:
And long ere this I should have slain myself,
Hadh not sweet pleasure conquered deep despair.
Have I not made blind Homer sing to me
Of Alexander's love, and Oenon's death?
And hath not he that built the walls of Thebes
With ravishing sound of his melodious harp?
Made music with my Mephistophilis?
Why should I die then, or basely despair?
I am resolved! Faustus shall ne'er repent.
Come, Mephistophilis, let us dispute again,
And argue of divine astrology.
Tell me, are there many heavens above the moon?
Are all celestial bodies but one globe,
As is the substance of this centr ical earth?

Mephistophilis As are the elements, such are the spheres,
Mutually folded in each other's orb.
And, Faustus, all jointly move upon one axletree
Whose termine is termed the world's wide pole,
Nor are the names of Saturn, Mars, or Jupiter
Feigned, but are erring stars.

Faustus But tell me, have they all one motion, both situ et tempore?

Mephistophilis All jointly move from east to west in four-and-twenty hours upon the poles of the world, but differ in their motion upon the poles of the zodiac.

Faustus Tush, these slender trifles Wagner can decide!

Mephistophilis Ay.

Faustus How many heavens or spheres are there?

Mephistophilis Nine: the seven planets, the firmament, and the empyreal heaven.

Faustus Well, resolve me then in this question: why have we not conjunctions, oppositions, aspects, eclipses, all at one time, but in some years we have more, in some less?

Mephistophilis Per inaequalem motum respectu totius.

2. Alexander is another name for Paris, the lover of Oenone; later he deserted her and abducted Helen, causing the Trojan War. Oenone refused to heal the wounds Paris received in battle, and when he died of them, she killed herself in remorse.

3. The legendary musician Amphion, whose harp caused stones, of themselves, to form the walls of Thebes.

4. Faustus asks whether all the apparently different heavenly bodies form really "one globe" like the earth. Mephistophilis answers that like the elements, which are separate but combined, the heavenly bodies are separate but their spheres are enfolded and they move on one axletree.

5. It is appropriate to give individual names to Saturn, Mars, Jupiter, and the other planets—which are called wandering, or "erring" stars. The fixed stars were in the eighth sphere (the firmament, or crystalline sphere).

6. "In position and in time."

7. The common axletree on which all the spheres revolve.

8. An angel, or intelligence, thought to be the source of motion in each sphere.

9. The ninth sphere was the immovable empyreal.

1. "Oppositions": when two planets are most remote. "Conjunctions": the apparent joinings of two planets.

2. "Because of their unequal movements in respect of the whole."
FAUSTUS  Well, I am answered. Tell me who made the world?
Mephistophilis  I will not.
FAUSTUS  Sweet Mephistophilis, tell me.
Mephistophilis  Move not, for I will not tell thee.
FAUSTUS  Villain, have I not bound thee to tell me anything?
Mephistophilis  Ay, that is not against our kingdom: but this is. Think thou on hell, Faustus, for thou art damned.
FAUSTUS  Think, Faustus, upon God, that made the world.
Mephistophilis  Remember this. [Exit.]
FAUSTUS  Ay, go accursed spirit, to ugly hell, Tis thou hast damned distressed Faustus' soul: Is't not too late?

[Enter Good Angel and Evil.]

Evil Angel  Too late.
Good Angel  Never too late, if Faustus will repent.
Evil Angel  If thou repent, devils shall tear thee in pieces.
Good Angel  Repent, and they shall never graze thy skin.

[Exeunt.]

FAUSTUS  Ah Christ my Savior! seek to save Distressed Faustus' soul!

[Enter Lucifer, Belzebub, and Mephistophilis.]

Lucifer  Christ cannot save thy soul, for he is just. There's none but I have interest in the same.
FAUSTUS  O who art thou that look'st so terrible?
Lucifer  I am Lucifer, and this is my companion prince in hell.
FAUSTUS  O Faustus, they are come to fetch away thy soul!
Lucifer  We come to tell thee thou dost injure us. Thou talk'st of Christ, contrary to thy promise. Thou should'st not think of God; think of the devil, And his dam too.
FAUSTUS  Nor will I henceforth: pardon me in this, And Faustus vows never to look to heaven, Never to name God, or to pray to him, To burn his Scriptures, slay his ministers, And make my spirits pull his churches down.
Lucifer  Do so, and we will highly gratify thee. Faustus, we are come from hell to show thee some pastime; sit down, and thou shalt see all the Seven Deadly Sins appear in their proper shapes.
FAUSTUS  That sight will be as pleasing unto me as Paradise was to Adam, the first day of his creation.
Lucifer  Talk not of Paradise, nor creation, but mark this show; talk of the devil and nothing else. Come away.
[Enter the Seven Deadly Sins.]

Now Faustus, examine them of their several names and dispositions.

FAUSTUS  What art thou, the first?
PRIDE  I am Pride: I disdain to have any parents. I am like to Ovid's flea, I can creep into every corner of a wench: sometimes like a periwig, I sit upon her brow; or like a fan of feathers, I kiss her lips. Indeed I do — what do I not! But fie, what a scent is here? I'll not 3. Mother. "The devil and his dam" was a common colloquial expression. 4. Pride, avarice, lust, anger, gluttony, envy, and sloth, called deadly because they lead to spiritual death. All other sins are said to grow out of them (cf. the procession of the Seven Deadly Sins in Spenser's The Faerie Queene 1.4, stanzas 16—37). 5. A salacious medieval poem "Carmen de Pulice" (Song of the Flea) was attributed to Ovid.
speak another word, except the ground were perfumed and covered with cloth of arras. 6

FAUSTUS What art thou, the second?

COVETOUSNESS I am Covetousness, begotten of an old churl in an old leathern bag; and might I have my wish, I would desire that this house, and all the people in it, were turned to gold, that I might lock you up in my good chest. O my sweet gold!

FAUSTUS What art thou, the third?

WRATH I am Wrath. I had neither father nor mother: I leaped out of a lion’s mouth when I was scarce half an hour old, and ever since I have run up and down the world, with this case of rapiers, wounding myself when I had nobody to fight withal. I was born in hell—and look to it, for some of you shall be my father.

FAUSTUS What art thou, the fourth?

ENY I am Envy, begotten of a chimney-sweeper and an oyster-wife. I cannot read, and therefore wish all books were burnt; I am lean with seeing others eat—O that there would come a famine through all the world, that all might die, and I live alone; then thou should’st see how fat I would be! But must thou sit and I stand? Come down, with a vengeance!

FAUSTUS Away, envious rascal! What art thou, the fifth?

GLUTTONY Who, I sir? I am Gluttony. My parents are all dead, and the devil a penny they have left me but a bare pension, and that is thirty meals a day and ten bevers—7 a small trifle to suffice nature. O, I come of a royal parentage: my grandfather was a gammon8 of bacon, my grandmother a hogshead of claret wine; my godfathers were these: Peter Pickled-Herring, and Martin Martlemas-Beer.9 O but my godmother! She was a jolly gentlewoman, and well-beloved in every good town and city; her name was Mistress Margery March-Beer.1 Now, Faustus, thou hast heard all my progeny;2 wilt thou bid me to supper?

FAUSTUS No, I'll see thee hanged; thou wilt eat up all my victuals.

GLUTTONY Then the devil choke thee!

FAUSTUS Choke thyself, Glutton. What art thou, the sixth?

SLOTH I am Sloth; I was begotten on a sunny bank, where I have lain ever since—and you have done me great injury to bring me from thence. Let me be carried thither again by Gluttony and Lechery. I'll not speak another word for a king’s ransom.

FAUSTUS What are you, Mistress Minx, the seventh and last?

LECHERY Who, I sir? I am one that loves an inch of raw mutton better than an ell of fried stockfish;3 and the first letter of my name begins with Lechery.

LUCIFER Away! To hell, to hell!  [Exeunt the SINS.]

FAUSTUS Now Faustus, how dost thou like this?

FAUSTUS O this feeds my soul!

LUCIFER Tut, Faustus, in hell is all manner of delight.

FAUSTUS O might I see hell, and return again, how happy were I then!

LUCIFER Thou shalt; I will send for thee at midnight. In meantime,

6. Arras in Flanders exported fine cloth used for tapestry hangings. "Except": unless.
7. Snacks.
8. The lower side of pork, including the leg.
9. Meat, salted to preserve it during the winter, was prepared around Martinmas (November 11).

1. A rich ale, made in March.
2. Lineage.
take this book, peruse it thoroughly, and thou shalt turn thyself into what shape thou wilt.

FAUSTUS

Great thanks, mighty Lucifer; this will I keep as chary as my life.

LUCIFER

Farewell, Faustus; and think on the devil.

FAUSTUS

Farewell, great Lucifer; come, Mephastophilis.

[Exeunt OMNES.]

---

Scene 6

[Enter ROBIN the ostler with a book in his hand.]

ROBIN

O this is admirable! here I ha' stolen one of Doctor Faustus' conjuring books, and I'faith I mean to search some circles for my own use: now will I make all the maidens in our parish dance at my pleasure stark naked before me, and so by that means I shall see more than ere I felt or saw yet.

[Enter RAFE calling ROBIN.]

RAFE

Robin, prithee come away, there's a gentleman tarries to have his horse, and he would have his things rubbed and made clean. He keeps such a chafing with my mistress about it, and she has sent me to look thee out. Prithee, come away,

ROBIN

Keep out, keep out; or else you are blown up, you are dismembered, Rafe. Keep out, for I am about a roaring piece of work.

RAFE

Why Robin, what book is that?

ROBIN

What book? Why the most intolerable book for conjuring that ere was invented by any brimstone devil.

RAFE

Canst thou conjure with it?

ROBIN

I can do all these things easily with it: first, I can make thee drunk with 'hipocras at any tavern in Europe for nothing, that's one of my conjuring works.

RAFE

Our master parson says that's nothing.

ROBIN

True, Rafe! And more, Rafe, if thou hast any mind to Nan Spit, our kitchen maid, then turn her and wind her to thy own use, as often as thou wilt, and at midnight.

RAFE

O brave Robin! Shall I have Nan Spit, and to mine own use? On that condition I'll feed thy devil with horsebread as long as he lives, of free cost.

ROBIN

NO more, sweet Rafe; let's go and make clean our boots which lie foul upon our hands, and then to our conjuring in the devil's name.

[Exeunt.]

---

Chorus 2

[Enter WAGNER solus.]

WAGNER

Learned Faustus,

To know the secrets of astronomy

---

4. Carefully.
5. Hostler, stablehand.
6. Magicians' circles, but with a sexual innuendo.
7. Scolding.
8. Dangerous.
9. That is, Robin intends to give his master horns—cuckold him.
1. i.e., bear his weight, or bear him a child.
2. Irresistible.
3. Robin's pronunciation of hippocras, a spiced wine.
Graven in the book of Jove's high firmament,
Did mount himself to scale Olympus' top.

Being seated in a chariot burning bright,
Drawn by the strength of yoked dragons' necks.
He now is gone to prove cosmography,
And, as I guess, will first arrive at Rome
To see the pope, and manner of his court,
And take some part of holy Peter's feast,
That to this day is highly solemnized.

[Exit Wagner.]

SCENE 7

[Enter Faustus and Mephistophilis.]

FAUSTUS Having now, my good Mephistophilis,
Passed with delight the stately town of Trier,
Environed round with airy mountain tops,
With walls of flint, and deep entrenched lakes,
Not to be won by any conquering prince;
From Paris next, coasting the realm of France,
We saw the river Main fall into Rhine,
Whose banks are set with groves of fruitful vines;
Then up to Naples, rich Campania,
With buildings fair and gorgeous to the eye,
The streets straight forth, and paved with finest brick,
Quarters the town in four equivalents;
There saw we learned Maro's golden tomb,
The way he cut, an English mile in length,
Through a rock of stone in one night's space.
From thence to Venice, Padua, and the rest,
In midst of which a sumptuous temple stands
St. Mark's in Venice

MEPHASTOPHILIS Thus hitherto hath Faustus spent his time.

20 But tell me now, what resting place is this?
Hast thou, as erst I did command,
Conducted me within the walls of Rome?

MEPHASTOPHILIS Faustus, I have; and because we will not be unprovided, I have taken up his holiness' privy chamber for our use.

25 FAUSTUS I hope his holiness will bid us welcome.

MEPHASTOPHILIS Tut, 'tis no matter, man, we'll be bold with his good cheer.\footnote{Entertainment.}

And now, my Faustus, that thou may'st perceive
What Rome containeth to delight thee with,

30 Know that this city stands upon seven hills
That underprop the groundwork of the same;
Just through the midst runs flowing Tiber's stream,
With winding banks, that cut it in two parts;
Over the which four stately bridges lean,

35 That makes safe passage to each part of Rome.
Upon the bridge called Ponte Angelo

5. The home of the gods in Greek mythology.
6. To test the accuracy of maps.
7. St. Peter's feast is June 29.
8. Treves (in Prussia).
9. Virgil's. In medieval legend the Roman poet Virgil was considered a magician whose powers produced a tunnel on the promontory of Postilippo at Naples, near his tomb.
Erected is a castle passing strong,²
Within whose walls such store of ordnance are
And double cannons, framed of carved brass,
As match the days within one complete year—
Besides the gates and high pyramids⁶
Which Julius Caesar brought from Africa.

FAUSTUS  NOW by the kingdoms of infernal rule,
Of Styx, Acheron, and the fiery lake
Of ever-burning Phlegethon,² I swear
That I do long to see the monuments
And situation of bright-splendent Rome.
Come therefore, let’s away.

MEPHASTOPHILIS  Nay, Faustus, stay. I know you’d fain see the pope,
And take some part of holy Peter’s feast,
Where thou shalt see a troop of bald-pate friars,
Whose sumnum bonum⁴ is in belly-cheer.

FAUSTUS  Well, I am content to compass then some sport,
And by their folly make us merriment.

Then charm me that I may be invisible, to do what I please unseen of any whilst I stay in Rome.

MEPHASTOPHILIS [casts a spell on him].  So Faustus, now do what thou cross, thou shalt not be discerned.

[Sound a sennet; enter the POPE and the CARDINAL OF LORRAINE to the banquet, with friars attending.]

POPE  My lord of Lorraine, will’t please you draw near.

FAUSTUS  Fall to; and the devil choke you and you spare.

POPE  How now, who’s that which spake? Friars, look about.

FRIAR  Here’s nobody, if it like your holiness.

POPE  My lord, here is a dainty dish was sent to me from the bishop of Milan.

FAUSTUS  I thank you, sir.  [Snatch it.]

POPE  How now, who’s that which snatched the meat from me? Will no man look? My lord, this dish was sent me from the cardinal of Florence.

FAUSTUS  You say true? I’ll have’t.  [Snatch it.]

POPE  What, again! My lord, I’ll drink to your grace.

FAUSTUS  I’ll pledge⁴ your grace.  [Snatch the cup.]

LORRAINE  My lord, it may be some ghost newly crept out of purgatory come to beg a pardon of your holiness.

POPE  It may be so; friars; prepare a dirge⁶ to lay the fury of this ghost.

Once again my lord, fall to.  [The POPE crosseth himself.]

FAUSTUS  What, are you crossing of your self? Well, use that trick no more, I would advise you.

[Cross again.]

FAUSTUS  Well, there’s the second time; aware the third! I give you fair warning.

[Cross again, and FAUSTUS hits him a box of the ear, and they all run away.]
FAUSTUS. Come on, Mephistophilis, what shall we do?

MEPHASTOPHILIS. Nay, I know not; we shall be cursed with bell, book, and candle.²

FAUSTUS. How! Bell, book, and candle; candle, book, and bell, Forward and backward, to curse Faustus to hell.

Anon you shall hear a hog grunt, a calf bleat, and an ass bray, Because it is St. Peter's holy day.

[Enter all the FRIARS to sing the Dirge.]

1 FRIAR. Come brethren, let's about our business with good devotion. [Sing this.]

Cursed be he that stole away His Holiness' meat from the table.

Maledicat Dominus.³

Cursed be he that struck His Holiness a blow on the face.

Maledicat Dominus.

Cursed be he that took Friar Sandelo a blow on the pate.

Maledicat Dominus.

Cursed be he that disturbeth our holy dirge.

Maledicat dominus.

Et omnes sancti.⁴ Amen.

[Beat the FRIARS, and fling fireworks among them, and so Exeunt.]

SCENE 8

[Enter ROBIN and RAFE with a silver goblet.]

ROBIN. Come, Rafe, did not I tell thee we were forever made by this Doctor Faustus' book? Ecce signum!⁵ Here's a simple purchase for horsekeepers: our horses shall eat no hay as long as this lasts.

[Enter the VINTNER.]

RAFE. But Robin, here comes the vintner.

5 ROBIN. Hush, I'll gull him supernaturally! Drawer,⁶ I hope all is paid; God be with you. Come, Rafe.

VINTNER. Soft, sir, a word with you. I must yet have a goblet paid from you ere you go.

ROBIN. I, a goblet, Rafe? I, a goblet? I scorn you: and you are but a... I, a goblet? Search me.

VINTNER. I mean so, sir, with your favor. [Searches ROBIN.]

ROBIN. HOW say you now?

VINTNER. I must say somewhat to your fellow; you, sir!

RAFE. Me, sir? Me, sir? Search your fill. Now sir, you may be ashamed to burden honest men with a matter of truth.

VINTNER. [searches RAFE] Well, tone of you hath this goblet about you.

ROBIN. YOU lie, drawer; 'tis afore me. Sirs you, I'll teach ye to impeach⁷ honest men; [to RAFE] stand by. [to the VINTNER] I'll scour you for a goblet—stand aside, you were best—I charge you in the name of Belzebub—look to the goblet, Rafe!

VINTNER. What mean you, sirra?

ROBIN. I'll tell you what I mean: [he reads] Sanctobulorum Periphras-

² The traditional paraphernalia for cursing and excommunication.
³ "May the Lord curse him."
⁴ "And all the saints (also curse him)."
⁵ "Behold the proof."
⁷ The actor might ad lib abuse at this point.
⁸ Accuse.
ticon—nay, I'll tickle you, vintner—look to the goblet, Rafe—Poly pragmos Belseboram framanto pacostiphos tostis Mephastophilis, &c."

[Enter MEPHASTOPHILIS: sets squibs at their backs: they run about.]

VINTNER O nomine Domine! What mean'st thou, Robin? Thou hast no goblet.

RAFE Peccatum peccatorum Here's thy goblet, good vintner.

ROBIN Misericordia pro nobis What shall I do? Good devil, forgive me now, and I'll never rob thy library more.

[Enter to them MEPHASTOPHILIS.]

MEPHASTOPHILIS Vanish, villains, th'one like an ape, another like a bear, the third an ass, for doing this enterprise. [Exit VINTNER.]

Monarch of hell, under whose black survey Great potentates do kneel with awful fear; Upon whose altars thousand souls do lie; How am I vexed with these villains' charms! From Constantinople am I hither come, Only for pleasure of these damned slaves.

ROBIN HOW, from Constantinople? You have had a great journey! Will you take sixpence in your purse to pay for your supper, and be gone?

MEPHASTOPHILIS Well, villains, for your presumption, I transform thee into an ape, and thee into a dog; and so begun!

ROBIN HOW, into an ape? That's brave: 'll have fine sport with the boys; I'll get nuts and apples enow.

RAFE And I must be a dog.

ROBIN I'faith, thy head will never be out of the potage pot.

[Exeunt.]

CHORUS 3

[Enter CHORUS.]

CHORUS When Faustus had with pleasure ta'en the view Of rarest things, and royal courts of kings, He stayed his course, and so returned home; Where such as bare his absence but with grief— I mean his friends and nearest companions— Did gratulate his safety with kind words. And in their conference of what befell, Touching his journey through the world and air, They put forth questions of astrology, Which Faustus answered with such learned skill, As they admired and wondered at his wit. Now is his fame spread forth in every land: Among the rest the emperor is one, Carolus the Fifth, at whose palace now Faustus is feasted 'mongst his noblemen.

1. Firecrackers. Evidently Mephistophilis is on stage only long enough to set off the firecrackers and is not seen by Robin, Rafe, or the vintner. He then reenters at line 32.
2. "In the name of the Lord"; the Latin invocations are used in swearing.
3. "Sin of sins!"
4. "Have mercy on us!"
6. Porridge.
7. L.e., Wagner.
8. The Holy Roman Emperor Charles V (reigned 1519-56).
What there he did in trial of his art I leave untold: your eyes shall see performed. [Exit.]

SCENE 9

[Enter Emperor, Faustus, and a Knight, with Attendants.]

Emperor: Master Doctor Faustus, I have heard strange report of thy knowledge in the black art, how that none in my empire, nor in the whole world, can compare with thee for the rare effects of magic. They say thou hast a familiar spirit, by whom thou canst accomplish what thou list! This therefore is my request: that thou let me see some proof of thy skill, that mine eyes may be witnesses to confirm what mine ears have heard reported. And here I swear to thee, by the honor of mine imperial crown, that whatever thou dost, thou shalt be in no ways prejudiced or endangered.

Knight [aside]: Faith, he looks much like a conjuror.

Faustus: My gracious sovereign, though I must confess myself far inferior to the report men have published, and nothing answerable to the honor of your imperial majesty, yet for that love and duty binds me thereunto, I am content to do whatsoever your majesty shall command me.

Emperor: Then Doctor Faustus, mark what I shall say. As I was sometime solitary set within my closet, sundry thoughts arose about the honor of mine ancestors—how they had won by prowess such exploits, got such riches, subdued so many kingdoms, as we that do succeed, or they that shall hereafter possess our throne, shall (I fear me) never attain to that degree of high renown and great authority. Amongst which kings is Alexander the Great, chief spectacle of the world’s pre-eminence: The bright shining of whose glorious acts Lightens the world with his reflecting beams; As when I hear but motion made of him, It grieves my soul I never saw the man. If therefore thou, by cunning of thine art, Canst raise this man from hollow vaults below, Where lies entombed this famous conqueror, And bring with him his beauteous paramour, Both in their right shapes, gesture, and attire They used to wear during their time of life, Thou shalt both satisfy my just desire And give me cause to praise thee whilst I live.

Faustus: My gracious lord, I am ready to accomplish your request, so far forth as by art and power of my spirit I am able to perform.

Knight [aside]: ’Faith, he’s just nothing at all.

Faustus: But such spirits as can lively resemble Alexander and his paramour shall appear before your grace, in that manner that they best lived in, in their most flourishing estate: which I doubt not shall sufficiently content your imperial majesty.

EMPEROR Go to, master doctor, let me see them presently.4

KNIGHT Do you hear, master doctor? You bring Alexander and his paramour before the emperor!

FAUSTUS How then, sir?

KNIGHT 'Ifaith, that's as true as Diana turned me to a stag.

FAUSTUS No sir; but when Actaeon died, he left the horns5 for you! Mephastophilis, begone! [Exit Mephastophilis.]

KNIGHT Nay, and7 you go to conjuring I'll be gone. [Exit Knight.]

FAUSTUS I'll meet with7 you anon for interrupting me so. Here they are, my gracious lord. [Enter Mephistophilis with Alexander and his paramour.]

EMPEROR Master doctor, I heard this lady, while she lived, had a wart or mole in her neck; how shall I know whether it be so or no?

FAUSTUS Your highness may boldly go and see. [The emperor examines the lady's neck.]

EMPEROR Sure, these are no spirits, but the true substantial bodies of those two deceased princes. [Exit Alexander (and his paramour).]

FAUSTUS Will's please your highness now to send for the knight that was so pleasant with me here of late?

EMPEROR One of you call him forth. [Enter the knight with a pair of horns on his head.]

EMPEROR How now, sir knight? Why, I had thought thou hadst been a bachelor, but now I see thou hast a wife that not only gives thee horns but makes thee wear them! Feel on thy head.

KNIGHT Thou damned wretch and execrable8 dog, detestable Bred in the concave of some monstrous rock, How dar'st thou thus abuse a gentleman? Villain, I say, undo what thou hast done.

FAUSTUS O not so fast, sir, there's no haste but good. Are you remembered8 how you crossed me in my conference with the emperor? I think I have met with you for it.

EMPEROR Good master doctor, at my entreaty release him; he hath done penance sufficient.

FAUSTUS My gracious lord, not so much for the injury he offered me here in your presence as to delight you with some mirth, hath Faustus worthily requited this injurious knight; which being all I desire, I am content to release him of his horns. And, sir knight, hereafter speak well of scholars: Mephastophilis, transform him straight.9 Now, my good lord, having done my duty, I humbly take my leave.

EMPEROR Farewell, master doctor; yet ere you go, expect from me a bounteous reward. [Exit Emperor (and his attendants).]

FAUSTUS Now, Mephistophilis, the restless course That time doth run with calm and silent foot,

Shortening my days and thread of vital life,
Calls for the payment of my latest years;
Therefore, sweet Mephastophilis, let us make haste to Wittenberg.

Mephistophilis: What, will you go on horseback or on foot?

Faustus: Nay, till I am past this fair and pleasant green, I'll walk on foot.

SCENE 10

[Enter a Horse-courser.]

Horse-courser: I have been all this day seeking one Master Fustian: 'mass, see where he is! God save you, master doctor.

Faustus: What, horse-courser: you are well met.

Horse-courser: Do you hear, sir; I have brought you forty dollars for your horse.

Faustus: I cannot sell him so: if thou lik'st him for fifty, take him.

Horse-courser: Alas sir, I have no more. I pray you speak for me.

Mephistophilis: I pray you let him have him; he is an honest fellow, and he has a great charge—neither wife nor child.

Faustus: Well, come, give me your money; my boy will deliver him to you. But I must tell you one thing before you have him: ride him not into the water. Ride him over hedge or ditch, or where thou wilt, but not into the water.

Horse-courser: Why sir, will he not drink of all waters?

Faustus: O yes, he will drink of all waters, but ride him not into the water. Ride him over hedge or ditch, or where thou wilt, but not into the water.

Horse-courser: Well sir. Now am I made man forever: I'll not leave my horse for forty! If he had but the quality of hey ding ding, hey ding ding, I'd make a brave living on him! He has a buttock as slick as an eel. Well, God by, sir; your boy will deliver him me. But bark ye sir, if my horse be sick, or ill at ease, if I bring his water to you, you'll tell me what it is?

[Exit Horse-courser.]

Faustus: Away, you villain! What, dost think I am a horse-doctor? What art thou, Faustus, but a man condemned to die?

Thy fatal time doth draw to final end.
Despair doth drive distrust unto my thoughts:
Confound these passions with a quiet sleep.
Tush, Christ did call the thief upon the cross; Then rest thee, Faustus, quiet in conceit.

[Enter Horse-courser all wet, crying.]

Horse-courser: Alas, alas, Doctor Fustian, quoth 'a: 'mass, Doctor Lopus was never such a doctor! H'as given me a purgation, h'as purged me of forty dollars! I shall never see them more. But yet, like an ass as I was, I would not be ruled by him; for he bade me I should ride him into no water. Now I, thinking my horse had had some rare quality that he would not have had me known of, I, like a vent'rous youth, rid him into the deep pond at the town’s end. I was no sooner in the middle of the pond, but my horse vanished away, and I sat upon a bottle of hay, never so near drowning in my life! But I’ll seek out my doctor, and have my forty dollars again, or I’ll make it the dearest horse. O, yonder is his snipper-snapper! Do you hear, you hey-pass, where’s your master?

Mephistophilis Why, sir, what would you? You cannot speak with him.

Horse-Courser But I will speak with him.

Mephistophilis Why, he’s fast asleep; come some other time.

Horse-Courser I’ll speak with him now, or I’ll break his glass-windows about his ears.

Mephistophilis I tell thee, he has not slept eight nights.

Horse-Courser And he has not slept these eight weeks I’ll speak with him.

Mephistophilis Why, thou seest he hears thee not.

Horse-Courser So ho ho; so ho ho. [Halloo in his ear.] No, will you not wake? I’ll make you wake ere I go. [Pull him by the leg, and pull it away.] Alas, I am undone! What shall I do?

Faustus O my leg, my leg! Help, Mephistophilis! Call the officers! My leg, my leg!

Mephistophilis Come villain, to the constable.

Horse-Courser O Lord, sir! Let me go, and I’ll give you forty dollars more.

Mephistophilis Where be they?

Horse-Courser I have none about me: come to my ostry and I’ll give them you.

Mephistophilis Begone quickly!

[Horse-Courser runs away.]

Faustus What, is he gone? Farewell he: Faustus has his leg again, and the horse-courser—I take it—a bottle of hay for his labor! Well, this trick shall cost him forty dollars more.

[Enter Wagner.]

Wagner Sir, the duke of Vanholt doth earnestly entreat your company.

Faustus The duke of Vanholt! An honorable gentleman, to whom I must be no niggard of my cunning. Come, Mephistophilis, let’s away to him.

Scene II

[Faustus and Mephistophilis return to the stage. Enter to them the Duke and the Duchess; the Duke speaks.]

Duke Believe me, master doctor, this merriment hath much pleased me.

Faustus My gracious lord, I am glad it contents you so well: but it

DUCHESS Thanks, good master doctor; and for I see your courteous intent to please me, I will not hide from you the thing my heart desires. And were it now summer, as it is January and the dead of winter, I would desire no better meat than a dish of ripe grapes.

FAUSTUS Alas madam, that's nothing! Mephastophilis, begone! [Exit MEPHASTOPHILIS.] Were it a greater thing than this, so it would content you, you should have it. [Enter MEPHASTOPHILIS with the grapes.] Here they be, madam; will's please you taste on them?

DUKE Believe me, master doctor, this makes me wonder above the rest: that being in the dead time of winter, and in the month of January, how you should come by these grapes?

FAUSTUS If it like your grace, the year is divided into two circles over the whole world, that when it is here winter with us, in the contrary circle it is summer with them, as in India, Saba,7 and farther countries in the east; and by means of a swift spirit that I have, I had them brought hither, as ye see. How do you like them, madam; be they good?

DUCHESS Believe me, master doctor, they be the best grapes that ere I tasted in my life before.

FAUSTUS I am glad they content you so, madam.

DUKE Come madam, let us in, where you must well reward this learned man for the great kindness he hath showed to you.

DUCHESS And so I will, my lord; and whilst I live, rest beholding for this courtesy.

unto you.

FAUSTUS

Gentlemen, for that I know your friendship is unfeigned,
And Faustus' custom is not to deny
The just requests of those that wish him well,
You shall behold that peerless dame of Greece,
No otherways for pomp and majesty
Than when Sir Paris crossed the seas with her
And brought the spoils to rich Dardania.¹

Be silent then, for danger is in words.

[Music sounds, and Helen passeth over the stage.]

SCHOLAR

Too simple is my wit to tell her praise,
Whom all the world admires for majesty.

SCHOLAR

No marvel though the angry Greeks pursued
With ten years' war the rape of such a queen,
Whose heavenly beauty passeth all compare.

SCHOLAR

Since we have seen the pride of Nature's works
And only paragon of excellence,
Let us depart; and for this glorious deed
Happy and blest be Faustus evermore.

FAUSTUS

Gentlemen farewell; the same I wish to you.

[Exeunt Scholars.]

[Enter an OLD MAN.]

OLD MAN

Ah Doctor Faustus, that I might prevail
To guide thy steps unto the way of life,
By which sweet path thou mayst attain the goal
That shall conduct thee to celestial rest.

Break heart, drop blood, and mingle it with tears,
Tears falling from repentant heaviness
Of thy most vile and loathsome filthiness,
The stench whereof corrupts the inward soul
With such flagitious² crimes of heinous sins,
As no commiseration may expel
But mercy, Faustus, of thy savior sweet,
Whose blood alone must wash away thy guilt.

FAUSTUS

Where art thou, Faustus? Wretch, what hast thou done!
Damned art thou, Faustus, damned; despair and die!
Hell calls for right, and with a roaring voice
Says, "Faustus, come: thine hour is come!"

And Faustus will come to do thee right.

OLD MAN

Ah stay, good Faustus, stay thy desperate steps!
I see an angel hovers o'er thy head
And with a vial full of precious grace
Offers to pour the same into thy soul!
Then call for mercy, and avoid despair.

FAUSTUS

Ah my sweet friend, I feel thy words
To comfort my distressed soul;
Leave me awhile to ponder on my sins.

OLD MAN

I go, sweet Faustus; but with heavy cheer,³
Fearing the ruin of thy hopeless soul.

FAUSTUS

Accursed Faustus, where is mercy now?
I do repent, and yet I do despair:
Hell strives with grace for conquest in my breast!
What shall I do to shun the snares of death?

MEPHASTOPHILIS
Thou traitor, Faustus: I arrest thy soul
For disobedience to my sovereign lord.
Revolt, or I'll in piecemeal tear thy flesh.

FAUSTUS
Sweet Mephastophilis, entreat thy lord
To pardon my unjust presumption;
And with my blood again I will confirm
My former vow I made to Lucifer.

MEPHASTOPHILIS
Do it then quickly, with unfeigned heart,
Lest greater danger do attend thy drift.

FAUSTUS
Torment, sweet friend, that base and crooked age
That durst dissuade me from thy Lucifer,
With greatest torments that our hell affords.

MEPHASTOPHILIS
His faith is great, I cannot touch his soul,
But what I may afflict his body with
I will attempt—which is but little worth.

FAUSTUS
One thing, good servant, let me crave of thee,
To glut the longing of my heart's desire:
That I might have unto my paramour
That heavenly Helen which I saw of late,
Whose sweet embraces may extinguish clean
These thoughts that do dissuade me from my vow:
And keep mine oath I made to Lucifer.

MEPHASTOPHILIS
Faustus, this, or what else thou shalt desire,
Shall be performed in twinkling of an eye.

[Enter HELEN.]

FAUSTUS
Was this the face that launched a thousand ships,
And burnt the topless towers of Ilium?
Sweet Helen, make me immortal with a kiss:
Her lips sucks forth my soul, see where it flies!

Here will I dwell, for heaven be in these lips,
And all is dross that is not Helena!
[Enter OLD MAN]

I will be Paris, and for love of thee,
Instead of Troy shall Wittenberg be sacked;
And I will combat with weak Menelaus,
And wear thy colors on my plumed crest:
Yes, I will wound Achilles in the heel,
And then return to Helen for a kiss.

Clad in the beauty of a thousand stars,
Brighter art thou than flaming Jupiter
When he appeared to hapless Semele;
More lovely than the monarch of the sky
In wanton Arethusa's azured arms;

And none but thou shalt be my paramour.

[Exeunt (FAUSTUS and HELEN).]

8. Turn back (to your allegiance to Lucifer).
9. Immeasurably high; matchless.
1. Achilles could only be wounded in his heel—where he was shot by Paris.
2. A Theban girl, loved by Jupiter and destroyed by the fire of his lightning when he appeared to her in his full splendor.
3. Arethusa was the nymph of a fountain, as well as the fountain itself; she excited the passion of the river god Alpheus, who was by some accounts related to the sun.
OLD MAN    Accursed Faustus, miserable man,
That from thy soul exclu'dst the grace of heaven
And fliest the throne of His tribunal seat!

[Enter the DEVILS.]

Satan begins to sift me with his pride,
As in this furnace God shall try my faith.

My faith, vile hell, shall triumph over thee!
Ambitious fiends, see how the heavens smiles
At your repulse, and laughs your state to scorn.
Hence hell, for hence I fly unto my God.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE 13

[Enter FAUSTUS with the SCHOLARS.]

FAUSTUS    Ah, gentlemen!

1 SCHOLAR  What ails Faustus?

FAUSTUS    Ah, my sweet chamber-fellow, had I lived with thee, then had I lived still; but now I die eternally. Look, comes he not, comes he not?

2 SCHOLAR  What means Faustus?

3 SCHOLAR  Belike he is grown into some sickness by being oversolitary.

1 SCHOLAR  If it be so, we'll have physicians to cure him; 'tis but a surfeit:
never fear, man.

FAUSTUS    A surfeit of deadly sin, that hath damned both body and soul.

2 SCHOLAR  Yet Faustus, look up to heaven; remember God's mercies are infinite.

FAUSTUS    But Faustus' offense can ne'er be pardoned! The serpent that tempted Eve may be saved, but not Faustus. Ah gentlemen, hear me with patience, and tremble not at my speeches, though my heart pants and quivers to remember that I have been a student here these thirty years—O would I had never seen Wittenberg, never read book—and what wonders I have done, all Wittenberg can witness—yea, all the world; for which Faustus hath lost both Germany and the world—yea, heaven itself—heaven, the seat of God, the throne of the blessed, the kingdom of joy; and must remain in hell forever—hell, ah, hell forever! Sweet friends, what shall become of Faustus, being in hell forever?

3 SCHOLAR  Yet Faustus, call on God.

FAUSTUS    On God, whom Faustus hath abjured? On God, whom Faustus hath blasphemed? Ah my God—I would weep, but the devil draws in my tears! gush forth blood, instead of tears—yea, life and soul! O, he stays my tongue! I would lift up my hands, but see, they hold them, they hold them!

ALL    Who, Faustus?

FAUSTUS    Lucifer and Mephastophilis! Ah gentlemen, I gave them my soul for my cunning.

35 ALL    God forbid!

FAUSTUS    God forbade it indeed, but Faustus hath done it: for the vain pleasure of four-and-twenty years hath Faustus lost eternal joy

4. To test me with his strength.
5. Indigestion caused by overeating.
and felicity. I writ them a bill with mine own blood, the date is expired, the time will come, and he will fetch me.

1 SCHOLAR Why did not Faustus tell us of this before, that divines might have prayed for thee?

FAUSTUS Oft have I thought to have done so, but the devil threatened to tear me in pieces if I named God, to fetch both body and soul, if I once gave ear to divinity; and now 'tis too late. Gentlemen, away, lest you perish with me!

2 SCHOLAR O what shall we do to save Faustus?

3 SCHOLAR God will strengthen me. I will stay with Faustus.

1 SCHOLAR Tempt not God, sweet friend, but let us into the next room, and there pray for him.

FAUSTUS Ay, pray for me, pray for me; and what noise soever ye hear, come not unto me, for nothing can rescue me.

2 SCHOLAR Pray thou, and we will pray, that God may have mercy upon thee.

FAUSTUS Gentlemen, farewell. If I live till morning, I'll visit you; if not, Faustus is gone to hell.

ALL Faustus, farewell. [Exeunt scholars.]

[The clock strikes eleven.]

FAUSTUS Ah Faustus,

Now hast thou but one bare hour to live,
And then thou must be damned perpetually.
Stand still, you ever-moving spheres of heaven,
That time may cease, and midnight never come.
Fair Nature's eye, rise, rise again, and make Perpetual day, or let this hour be but
A year, a month, a week, a natural day,
That Faustus may repent and save his soul.
O lente, lente currite noctis equi~
The stars move still, time runs, the clock will strike,
The devil will come, and Faustus must be damned.
O I'll leap up to my God! Who pulls me down?
See, see where Christ's blood streams in the firmament!
One drop would save my soul, half a drop: ah my Christ—
Ah, rend not my heart for naming of my Christ;
Yet will I call on him—O spare me, Lucifer!
Where is it now? 'Tis gone: and see where God
Stretcheth out his arm, and bends his ireful brows!
Mountains and hills, come, come and fall on me,
And hide me from the heavy wrath of God.
No, no?
Then will I headlong run into the earth:
Earth, gape! O no, it will not harbor me.
You stars that reigned at my nativity,
Whose influence hath allotted death and hell,
Now draw up Faustus like a foggy mist
Into the entrails of yon laboring cloud,
That when you vomit forth into the air
My limbs may issue from your smoky mouths.
So that my soul may but ascend to heaven.

[The watch strikes.]
Ah, half the hour is past: 'twill all be past anon.
O God, if thou wilt not have mercy on my soul,
Yet for Christ's sake, whose blood hath ransomed me,
Impose some end to my incessant pain:
Let Faustus live in hell a thousand years,
A hundred thousand, and at last be saved.
O no end is limited to damned souls!
Why wert thou not a creature wanting\(e\) soul?
Or why is this immortal that thou hast?
Ah, Pythagoras'\(^9\) metempsychosis\(^9\)—were that true,
This soul should fly from me, and I be changed
Unto some brutish beast:
All beasts are happy, for when they die,
Their souls are soon dissolved in elements;
But mine must live still\(b\) to be plagued in hell.
Cursed be the parents that engendered me:
No, Faustus, curse thy self, curse Lucifer,
That hath deprived thee of the joys of heaven.
[The clock striketh twelve.]
O it strikes, it strikes! Now body, turn to air,
Or Lucifer will bear thee quick\(c\) to hell.
[Thunder and lightning.]
O soul, be changed into little water drops,
And fall into the ocean, ne'er be found,
My God, my God, look not so fierce on me!
[Enter devils.]
Adders and serpents, let me breathe awhile!
Ugly hell gape not! Come not, Lucifer!
I'll burn my books—ah, Mephastophilis!
[Exeunt with him.]

Epilogue

[Enter CHORUS.]
Cut is the branch that might have grown full straight,
And burned is Apollo's laurel bough,\(^1\)
That sometime grew within this learned man.
Faustus is gone! Regard his hellish fall,
Whose fiendful fortune\(^d\) may exhort the wise
Only to wonder at\(^d\) unlawful things:
Whose deepness doth entice such forward wits\(^d\)
To practice more than heavenly power permits.

[Exit.]

Terminat hora diem, terminat author opus.\(^3\)

8. Faustus wants to be drawn up into a cloud, which would compact his body into a thunderbolt
so that his soul, thus purified, might ascend to heaven.
The Two Texts of Doctor Faustus

The following excerpts enable readers to compare a sample passage (from Scene 12) of the A text (1604) with the corresponding passage of the B text (1616). (On the two texts, see above, p. 1023.) Here the differences in tone and content in the two versions of the Old Man’s speech may signal different attitudes toward the finality of Faustus’s damnation.

Doctor Faustus, B Text

[Enter an OLD MAN]

OLD MAN  O gentle Faustus, leave this damned art,
This magic that will charm thy soul to hell
And quite bereave thee of salvation.
Though thou hast now offended like a man,
Do not persevere in it like a devil.
Yet, yet, thou hast an amiable soul,
If sin by custom grow not into nature.
Then, Faustus, will repentance come too late;
Then thou art banished from the sight of heaven.
No mortal can express the pains of hell.
It may be this my exhortation
Seems harsh and all unpleasant; let it not,
For, gentle son, I speak it not in wrath
Or envy of thee, but in tender love
And pity of thy future misery.
And so have hope that this my kind rebuke,
Checking thy body, may amend thy soul.
FAUSTUS  Where art thou, Faustus? Wretch, what hast thou done?
Hell claims his right, and with a roaring voice
Says, 'Faustus, come; thine hour is almost come';
And Faustus now will come to do thee right.

[MEPHISTOPHELES gives him a dagger.]

OLD MAN  O stay, good Faustus, stay thy desperate steps.
I see an angel hover o'er thy head,
And with a vial full of precious grace
Offers to pour the same into thy soul.
Then call for mercy and avoid despair.
FAUSTUS  O friend, I feel thy words
To comfort my distressed soul.
Leave me a while to ponder on my sins.
OLD MAN  Faustus, I leave thee, but with grief of heart,
Fearing the enemy of thy hapless soul.
FAUSTUS  Accursed Faustus, wretch, what hast thou done?
I do repent, and yet I do despair.
Hell strives with grace for conquest in my breast.
What shall I do to shun the snares of death?
MEPHISTOPHELES  Thou traitor, Faustus, I arrest thy soul
For disobedience to my sovereign lord.
Revolts, or I'll in piecemeal tear thy flesh.

Turn back (to your allegiance to Lucifer).
William Shakespeare was born in the small market town of Stratford-on-Avon in April (probably April 23) 1564. His father, a successful glovemaker, landowner, moneylender, and dealer in agricultural commodities, was elected to several important posts in local government but later suffered financial and social reverses, possibly as a result of adherence to the Catholic faith. Shakespeare almost certainly attended the free Stratford grammar school, where he could have acquired a reasonably impressive education, including a respectable knowledge of Latin, but he did not proceed to Oxford or Cambridge. There are legends about Shakespeare's youth but no documented facts. Some scholars are tempted to associate him with "William Shakeshafte," a young actor attached to a recusant Catholic circle in Lancashire around 1581; one of Shakespeare's former Stratford schoolmasters belonged to this circle. But the first unambiguous record we have of his life after his christening is that of his marriage in 1582, at age eighteen, to Anne Hathaway, eight years his senior. A daughter, Susanna, was born six months later, in 1583, and twins, Hamnet and Judith, in 1585. We possess no information about his activities for the next seven years, but by 1592 he was in London as an actor and apparently already well known as a playwright, for a rival dramatist, Robert Greene, refers to him resentfully in A Groatsworth of Wit as "an upstart crow, beautified with our feathers."

At this time, there were several companies of professional actors in London and in the provinces. What connection Shakespeare had with one or more of them before 1592 is conjectural, but we do know of his long and fruitful connection with the most successful troupe, the Lord Chamberlain's Men, who later, when James I came to the throne, became the King's Men. Shakespeare not only acted with this company but eventually became a leading shareholder and the principal playwright. Then as now, making a living in the professional theater was not easy: competition among the repertory companies was stiff, civic officials and religious moralists regarded playacting as a sinful, time-wasting nuisance and tried to ban it altogether, government officials exercised censorship over the contents of the plays, and periodic outbreaks of bubonic plague led to temporary closing of the London theaters. But Shakespeare's company, which included some of the most famous actors of the day, nonetheless thrived and in 1599 began to perform in the Globe, a fine, open-air theater that the company built for itself on the south bank of the Thames. The company also performed frequently at court and, after 1608, at Blackfriars, an indoor London theater. Already by 1597 Shakespeare had so prospered that he was able to purchase New Place, a handsome house in Stratford; he could now call himself a gentleman, as his father had (probably with the financial assistance of his successful playwright son) been granted a coat of arms the previous year. Shakespeare's wife and daughters (his son, Hamnet, having died in 1596) resided in Stratford, while the playwright, living in rented rooms in London, pursued his career. Shortly after writing The Tempest (ca. 1611), he retired from direct involvement in the theater and returned to Stratford. In March 1616, he signed his will; he died a month later, leaving the bulk of his estate to his daughter Susanna. To his wife of thirty-four years, he left "my second best bed."

Shakespeare began his career as a playwright, probably in the early 1590s, by writing comedies and history plays. The earliest of these histories, generally based on accounts of English kings written by Raphael Holinshed and other sixteenth-century chroniclers, seem theatrically vital but crude, as does an early attempt at tragedy, Titus Andronicus. But Shakespeare quickly moved on to create by the later 1590s a sequence of profoundly searching and ambitious history plays—Richard II, the first and second parts of Henry IV, and Henry V—which together explore the death throes of feudal England and the birth of the modern nation-state ruled by a charismatic monarch. In the same years he wrote a succession of romantic comedies (The Merchant of Venice, The Merry Wives of Windsor, Much Ado About Nothing, As You Like It, http://englishworld20111.wordpress.com/Twelfth Night) Whose poetic richness and emotional complexity remain unmatched.

Twelfth Night was probably written in the same year as Hamlet (ca. 1601), which initiated an outpouring of great tragic dramas: Othello, King Lear, Macbeth, Antony and Cleopatra, and Coriolanus. These plays, written from 1601 to 1607, seem to mark a major shift in sensibility, an existential and metaphysical darkening that many readers think must have originated in personal anguish. Whatever the truth of this speculation—and we have no direct, personal testimony either to support or to undermine it—there appears to have occurred in the same period a shift as well in Shakespeare's comic sensibility. The comedies written between 1601 and 1604, Troilus and Cressida, All's Well That Ends Well, and Measure for Measure, are sufficiently different from the earlier comedies—more biting in tone, more uneasy with comic conventions, more ruthlessly questioning of the values of the characters and the resolutions of the plots—to have led some modern scholars to classify them as "problem plays" or "dark comedies." Another group of plays, among the last that Shakespeare wrote, seem similarly to define a distinct category, Pericles, Cymbeline, The Winter's Tale, and The Tempest, written between 1608 and 1611, when Shakespeare had developed a remarkably fluid, dream-like sense of plot and a poetic style that could veer, apparently effortlessly, from the tortured to the ineffably sweet, are now commonly known as the "romances." These plays share an interest in the moral and emotional life less of the adolescents who dominate the earlier comedies than of their parents. The "romances" are deeply concerned with patterns of loss and recovery, suffering and redemption, despair and renewal. They have seemed to many critics to constitute a self-conscious conclusion to a career that opened with histories and comedies and passed through the dark and tormented tragedies.

Shakespeare himself apparently had no interest in preserving for posterity the sum of his writings, let alone in clarifying the chronology of his works or in specifying which plays he wrote alone and which with collaborators. He wrote plays for performance by his company, and his scripts existed in his own handwritten manuscripts or in scribal copies, in playhouse prompt books, and probably in pirated texts based on shorthand reports of a performance or on reconstructions from memory by an actor or spectator. None of these manuscript versions has survived. Eighteen of his plays were published during his lifetime in the small-format, inexpensive books called quartos; to these were added eighteen other plays, never before printed, in the large, expensive folio volume of Mr. William Shakespeares Comedies, Histories, and Tragedies (1623), published seven years after his death. This First Folio, edited by two of his friends and fellow actors, John Heminges and Henry Condell, is prefaced by a poem of Ben Jonson's, in which Shakespeare is hailed, presciently, as "not of an age, but for all time."

That Shakespeare is "for all time" does not mean that he did not also belong to his own age. It is possible to see where Shakespeare adapted the techniques of his contemporaries and where, crucially, he differed from them. Shakespeare rarely invented the plots of his dramas, preferring to work, often quite closely, with stories he found ready-made in histories, novellas, narrative poems, or other plays. The religious mystery plays and the allegorical morality plays still popular during his childhood taught him that dramas worth seeing must get at something central to the human condition, that they should embody as well as narrate the crucial actions, and that they could reach not only a coterie of the educated elite but also the great mass of ordinary people. From these and other theatrical models, Shakespeare learned how to construct plays around the struggle for the soul of a protagonist, how to create theatrically compelling and subversive figures of wickedness, and how to focus attention on his characters' psychological, moral, and spiritual lives, as well as on their outward behavior.

The authors of the morality plays thought that they could enhance the broad impact they sought to achieve by stripping their characters of all incidental distinguishing traits and getting to their essences. They thought that their audiences would thereby not be distracted by the irrelevant details of individual identities. Shakespeare grasped that the spectacle of human destiny was in fact vastly more compelling when it was attached not to generalized abstractions but to particular people, people whom he realized with an unprecedented intensity of individuation: not Youth but Viola, not Everyman but Lear. No other writer of his time was able to create and enter into the interior worlds of so many characters, conveying again and again a sense of unique and irreducible selfhood. In the plays of Shakespeare’s brilliant contemporary Marlowe, the protagonist overwhelms virtually all of the other characters; in Shakespeare, by contrast, even relatively minor characters—Maria in Twelfth Night, for example, or the fool in King Lear—make astonishingly powerful claims on the audience’s attention. The Romantic critic William Hazlitt observed that Shakespeare had the power to multiply himself marvelously. His plays convey the sense of an inexhaustible imaginative generosity.

Shakespeare was singularly alert to the fantastic vitality of the English language. His immense vocabulary bears witness to an uncanny ability to absorb terms from a wide range of pursuits and to transform them into intimate registers of thought and feeling. He had a seemingly boundless capacity to generate metaphors, and he was virtually addicted to word play. Double-meanings, verbal echoes, and submerged associations ripple through every passage, deepening the reader’s enjoyment and understanding, though sometimes at the expense of a single clear sense. The eighteenth-century critic Samuel Johnson complained with some justice that the quibble, the pun, was "the fatal Cleopatra for which Shakespeare lost the world and was content to lose it." For the power that continually discharges itself throughout his plays and poems, at once constituting and unsettling everything it touches, is the polymorphous power of language.

Anachronism is rarely a concern for Shakespeare. His ancient Romans throw their caps into the air and use Christian oaths: to this extent he pulled everything he touched into his contemporary existence. But at the same time he was not a social realist; other writers in this period are better at conveying the precise details of the daily lives of shoemakers, alchemists, and judges. The settings of his plays—"Illyria" in Twelfth Night, for example, or ancient Britain in King Lear—were for Shakespeare not realistic representations of particular historical times and places but rather imaginative displacements into alternative worlds that remain strangely familiar.

Though on occasion he depicts ghosts, demons, and other supernatural figures, the universe Shakespeare conjures up seems resolutely human-centered and secular: the torments and joys that most deeply matter are found in this world, not in the next. Attempts to claim him for one or another religious system have proven unconvincing, as have attempts to assign him a specific political label. Activists and ideologues of all political stripes have viewed him as an ally: he has been admiringly quoted by kings and by revolutionaries, by fascists, liberal democrats, socialists, republicans, and communists. At once an agent of civility and an agent of subversion, Shakespeare seems to have been able to view society simultaneously as an insider and as an outsider. His plays can be interpreted and performed—with deep conviction and compelling power—in utterly contradictory ways. The centuries-long accumulation of these interpretations and performances, far from exhausting Shakespeare’s aesthetic appeal, seems only to have enhanced its perennial freshness.*

*Sonnets In Elizabethan England aristocratic patronage, with the money, protection, and prestige it alone could provide, was probably a professional writer’s most important asset. This patronage, or at least Shakespeare’s quest for it, is most visible in his dedication in 1593 and 1594 of his narrative poems, Venus and Adonis and The Rape of Lucrece, to the wealthy young nobleman Henry Wriothesley, earl of Southampton. What return the poet got for his exquisite offerings is unknown. We do know that among wits and gallants the narrative poems won Shakespeare a fine reputation as an immensely stylish and accomplished poet. This reputation was enhanced as well by manuscript circulation of his sonnets, which were mentioned admiringly in print more than ten years before they were published in 1609 (apparently without his personal supervision and perhaps without his consent).

Shakespeare’s sonnets are quite unlike the other sonnet sequences of his day, notably in his almost unprecedented choice of a beautiful young man (rather than a lady) as the principal object of praise, love, and idealizing devotion and in his portrait of a dark, sensuous, and sexually promiscuous mistress (rather than the usual chaste and aloof blond beauty). Nor are the moods confined to what the Renaissance thought were those of the despairing Petrarchan lover: they include delight, pride, melancholy, shame, disgust, and fear. Shakespeare’s sequence suggests a story, although the details are vague, and there is even doubt whether the sonnets as published are in an order established by the poet himself. Certain motifs are evident: an introductory series (1 to 17) celebrates the beauty of a young man and urges him to marry and beget children who will bear his image. The subsequent long sequence (18 to 126), passionately focused on the beloved young man, develops as a dominant motif the transience and destructive power of time, countered only by the force of love and the permanence of poetry. The remaining sonnets focus chiefly on the so-called Dark Lady as an alluring but degrading object of desire. Some sonnets (like 144) intimate a love triangle involving the speaker, the male friend, and the woman; others take note of a rival poet (sometimes identified as George Chapman or Christopher Marlowe). The biographical background of the sonnets has inspired a mountain of speculation, but very little of it has any factual support.

Though there are many variations, Shakespeare’s most frequent rhyme scheme in the sonnets is \( abab\ cdcd\ efef\ gg \). This so-called Shakespearean pattern often (though not always) calls attention to three distinct quatrains (each of which may develop a separate metaphor), followed by a closing couplet that may either confirm or pull sharply against what has gone before. Startling shifts in direction may occur in lines other than the closing ones; consider, for example, the twists and turns in the opening lines of sonnet 138: "When my love swears that she is made of truth, / I do believe her, though I know she lies." Shakespeare’s sonnets as a whole are strikingly intense, conveying a sense of high psychological and moral stakes. They are also remarkably dense, written with a daunting energy, concentration, and compression. Often the main idea of the poem may be grasped quickly, but the precise movement of thought and feeling, the links among the shifting images, the syntax, tone, and rhetorical structure prove immensely challenging. These are poems that famously reward rereading.

To the Only Begetter of These Ensuing Sonnets
Mr. W. H. All Happiness and That Eternity Promised By Our Ever-Living Poet Wisheth The Well-Wishing Adventurer in Setting Forth T. T.1

1. This odd dedication bears the initials of the publisher, Thomas Thorpe. The W. H. addressed here may or may not be the male friend addressed in sonnets 1 to 126. Leading candidates for that role are Henry Wriothesley, earl of Southampton, the dedicatee of Venus and Adonis (1593) and The
From fairest creatures we desire increase,
That thereby beauty's rose might never die,
But as the riper should by time decease,
His tender heir might bear his memory;

But thou, contracted to thine own bright eyes,
Feed'st thy light's flame with self-substantial fuel
Making a famine where abundance lies,
Thyself thy foe, to thy sweet self too cruel.

Thou that art now the world's fresh ornament
And only herald to the gaudy spring,
Within thine own bud buriest thy content
And, tender churl, mak'st waste in niggarding.

Pity the world, or else this glutton be,
To eat the world's due, by the grave and thee.

Look in thy glass and tell the face thou viewest
Now is the time that face should form another,
Whose fresh repair if now thou not renewest,
Thou dost beguile the world, unbless some mother.

For where is she so fair whose uneared womb
Disdains the tillage of thy husbandry?
Or who is he so fond will be the tomb
Of his self-love, to stop posterity?

Thou art thy mother's glass, and she in thee
Calls back the lovely April of her prime;
So thou through windows of thine age shalt see,
Despite of wrinkles, this thy golden time.

But if thou live rememb'red not to be,
Die single, and thine image dies with thee.

When I do count the clock that tells the time
And see the brave day sunk in hideous night,
When I behold the violet past prime
And sable curls all silvered o'er with white,

When lofty trees I see barren of leaves,
Which erst from heat did canopy the herd
And summer's green all girded up in sheaves
Borne on the bier with white and bristly beard:

Then of thy beauty do I question make
Rape of Lucrece (1594), and William Herbert, earl of Pembroke, a dedicatee of the First Folio. But there is no hard evidence to support these or other suggested identifications of the male friend or of the so-called Dark Lady; these sonnet personages may or may not have had real-life counterparts.

Since all the sonnets save two were first published in 1609, we do not repeat the date after each one. Numbers 138 and 144 were first published in 1599, in a verse miscellany called The Passionate Pilgrim.

2. Betrothed, also withdrawn into.
3. Of your own substance.
4. Principal, with overtones of single, solitary.
5. What you contain (potential for fatherhood), also what would content you (marriage and fatherhood).
7. I.e., by willfully dying without issue.
That thou among the wastes of time must go,
Since sweets and beauties do themselves forsake,
And die as fast as they see others grow,
And nothing 'gainst Time's scythe can make defense
Save breed, to brave him when he takes thee hence.

When I consider every thing that grows
Holds in perfection but a little moment;
That this huge stage presenteth nought but shows
Whereon the stars in secret influence comment;
When I perceive that men as plants increase,
Cheered and checked even by the selfsame sky,
Vaunt in their youthful sap, at height decrease,
And wear their brave state out of memory;
Then the conceit of this inconstant stay
Sets you most rich in youth before my sight,
Where wasteful Time debateth with Decay
To change your day of youth to sullied night,
And all in war with Time for love of you,
As he takes from you, I ingraft you new.

Shall I compare thee to a summer's day?
Thou art more lovely and more temperate:
Though winds do shake the darling buds of May,
And summer's lease hath all too short a date;
Sometime too hot the eye of heaven shines,
And often is his gold complexion dimmed;
And every fair from fair sometime declines,
By chance or nature's changing course untrimmed.
But thy eternal summer shall not fade,
Nor lose possession of that fair thou ow'st;
Nor shall death brag thou wander'st in his shade,
When in eternal lines to time thou grow'st:
So long as men can breathe or eyes can see,
So long lives this, and this gives life to thee.

Devouring Time, blunt thou the lion's paws,
And make the earth devour her own sweet brood;
Pluck the keen teeth from the fierce tiger's jaws,
And burn the long-lived phoenix in her blood;

8. Defy. 'Breed': offspring.
9. The stars secretly affect human actions.
'Shows': (1) appearances, (2) performances.
1. Encouraged and reproached or stopped.
2. Exult, display themselves.
3. Wear their showy splendor out and are forgotten.
4. (1) Fights, (2) joins forces.
5. Renew by grafting, implant beauty again (by my verse).
7. I.e., the poem. The boast of immortality for one's verse was a convention going back to the Greek and Roman classics.
8. In full vigor of life (a hunting term). The phoenix was a mythical bird that lived five hundred years, then died in flames to rise again from its ashes.
Make glad and sorry seasons as thou fleet'st,
And do whate'er thou wilt, swift-footed Time,
To the wide world and all her fading sweets,
But I forbid thee one most heinous crime:
O carve not with thy hours my love's fair brow,
Nor draw no lines there with thine antique pen;
Him in thy course untainted do allow,
For beauty's pattern to succeeding men.
Yet do thy worst, old Time: despite thy wrong,
My love shall in my verse ever live young.

A woman's face with Nature's own hand painted
Hast thou, the master mistress of my passion;
A woman's gentle heart but not acquainted
With shifting change as is false women's fashion;
An eye more bright than theirs, less false in rolling,
Gilding the object whereupon it gazeth;
A man in hue all hues in his controlling,
Which steals men's eyes and women's souls amazeth.
And for a woman wert thou first created,
Till Nature as she wrought thee fell a-doting,
And by addition me of thee defeated,
By adding one thing to my purpose nothing.
But since she pricked thee out for women's pleasure,
Mine be thy love, and thy love's use their treasure.

As an unperfect actor on the stage
Who with his fear is put beside his part,
Or some fierce thing replete with too much rage
Whose strength's abundance weakens his own heart,
So I, for fear of trust, forget to say
The perfect ceremony of love's rite.
And in mine own love's strength seem to decay,
O'er-charged with burden of mine own love's might.
And dumb presagers of my speaking breast,
Who plead for love, and look for recompense
More than that tongue that more hath more expressed.
O learn to read what silent love hath writ;
To hear with eyes belongs to love's fine wit.

9. (1) Old, (2) fantastic (antic).
1. (1) Undeñiled, (2) untouched by a weapon (a term from jousting).
2. I.e., not made up with cosmetics.
3. (1) Strong feeling, (2) poem.
4. "Hue" probably means appearance or form. In the first edition, "hues" is spelled "Hews," which some have taken as indicating a pun on a proper name. It has also been suggested that "man in" is a copyist's or compositor's misreading of "maiden."
5. (1) Crazy, (2) infatuated.
7. (1) Sexual enjoyment, (2) interest (as in usury).
8. The first edition has "right," suggesting love's due as well as love's ritual ("rite").
9. More than that (rival) speaker who has more often said more.
When, in disgrace with Fortune and men's eyes,
I all alone beweep my outcast state,
And trouble deaf heaven with my bootless cries,
And look upon myself and curse my fate,
Wishing me like to one more rich in hope,
Featured like him, like him with friends possessed,
Desiring this man's art and that man's scope,
With what I most enjoy contented least;
Yet in these thoughts myself almost despising,
Haply I think on thee, and then my state
Like to the lark at break of day arising
From sullen earth) sings hymns at heaven's gate;
For thy sweet love remembered such wealth brings
That then I scorn to change my state with kings.

When to the sessions of sweet silent thought
I summon up remembrance of things past,
I sigh the lack of many a thing I sought,
And with old woes new wail my dear time's waste:
Then can I drown an eye (unused to flow)
For precious friends hid in death's dateless night,
And weep afresh love's long since canceled woe,
And moan the expense of many a vanished sight:
Then can I grieve at grievances foregone,
And heavily from woe to woe tell o'er
The sad account of fore-bemoaned moan,
Which I new pay as if not paid before.
But if the while I think on thee, dear friend,
All losses are restored and sorrows end.

Full many a glorious morning have I seen
Flatter the mountain tops with sovereign eye,
Kissing with golden face the meadows green,
Gilding pale streams with heavenly alchemy;
Anon permit the basest clouds to ride
With ugly rack on his celestial face,
And from the forlorn world his visage hide,
Stealing unseen to west with this disgrace.
Even so my sun one early morn did shine
With all triumphant splendor on my brow;
But out, alack, he was but one hour mine;
The region cloud hath masked him from me now

1. I.e., I wish I had one man's looks, another man's friends.
2. Condition, state of mind; but in line 14 there is a pun on state meaning chair of state, throne.
3. Sittings of court. "Summon up" (next line) continues the metaphor.
Yet him for this my love no whit disdaineth:
Suns of the world may stain° when heaven's sun staineth.

35
No more be grieved at that which thou hast done:
Roses have thorns, and silver fountains mud.
And loathsome canker° lives in sweetest bud.
All men make faults, and even I in this,
Authorizing thy trespass with compare,
Myself corrupting, salving thy amiss,
Excusing thy sins more than thy sins are;
For to thy sensual fault I bring in sense—
Thy adverse party is thy advocate—
And 'gainst myself a lawful plea commence.
Such civil war is in my love and hate,
That I an accessory needs must be
To that sweet thief which sourly robs from me.

55
Not marble, nor the gilded monuments
Of princes, shall outlive this powerful rhyme;
Rut you shall shine more bright in these contents
Than unswept stone, besmeared with sluttish time.°

5 When wasteful war shall statues overturn,
And broils° root out the work of masonry,
Nor Mars his° sword nor war's quick fire shall burn
The living record of your memory.

10  'Gainst death and all-oblivious enmity
Shall you pace forth; your praise shall still find room
Even in the eyes of all posterity
That wear this world out to the ending doom.°

So, till the judgment that yourself arise,°
You live in this, and dwell in lovers' eyes.

60
Like as the waves make towards the pebbled shore,
So do our minutes hasten to their end;
Each changing place with that which goes before,
In sequent toil all forwards do contend.°

5  Nativity, once in the main° of light,
Crawls to maturity, wherewith being crowned,
Crooked eclipses 'gainst his glory fight,
And Time that gave doth now his gift confound.
Time doth transfix the flourish set on youth

4. I.e., than in a stone tomb or effigy that time wears away and covers with dust. "Sluttish": slovenly.
5. The enmity of oblivion, of being forgotten.
SONNETS / 1067

10 And delves the parallels in beauty's brow,
    Feeds on the rarities of nature's truth,
And nothing stands but for his scythe to mow.
And yet to times in hope my verse shall stand,
Praising thy worth, despite his cruel hand.

62
Sin of self-love possesseth all mine eye,
And all my soul, and all my every part;
And for this sin there is no remedy,
It is so grounded inward in my heart.

5 Methinks no face so gracious is as mine,
    No shape so true, no truth of such account,
And for myself mine own worth do define
As I all other in all worths surmount.

10 Beated and chapped with tanned antiquity,
    Mine own self-love quite contrary I read;
'Tis thee, my self, that for myself I praise,
Painting my age with beauty of thy days.

65
Since brass, nor stone, nor earth, nor boundless sea,
But sad mortality o'ersways their power,
How with this rage shall beauty hold a plea,
Whose action is no stronger than a flower?

O how shall summer's honey breath hold out
Against the wrackful siege of batt'ring days,
When rocks impregnable are not so stout,
Nor gates of steel so strong, but Time decays?
O fearful meditation! where, alack,
Shall Time's best jewel from Time's chest lie hid?
Or what strong hand can hold his swift foot back?
Or who his spoil of beauty can forbid?
O none, unless this miracle have might,
That in black ink my love may still shine bright.

71
No longer mourn for me when I am dead
Than you shall hear the surly sullen bell
Give warning to the world that I am fled
From this vile world, with vilest worms to dwell:

Nay, if you read this line, remember not
The hand that writ it; for I love you so,

8. Digs the parallel furrows (wrinkles). "Transfix the flourish": remove the embellishment. To "flourish" is also to blossom.
9. I.e., because there is neither.
1. I.e., from being coffered up by Time.
2. The bell was tolled to announce the death of a member of the parish—one stroke for each year of his or her life.
That I in your sweet thoughts would be forgot,
If thinking on me then should make you woe.
Oh, if, I say, you look upon this verse

When I perhaps compounded am with clay,
Do not so much as my poor name rehearse;
But let your love even with my life decay;
Lest the wise world should look into your moan,
And mock you with me after I am gone.

That time of year thou mayst in me behold
When yellow leaves, or none, or few, do hang Upon those boughs which shake against the cold,
Bare ruined choirs, where late the sweet birds sang.

In me thou seest the twilight of such day
As after sunset fadeth in the west;
Which by and by black night doth take away,
Death's second self that seals up all in rest.

In me thou seeest the glowing of such fire
That on the ashes of his youth doth lie,
As the deathbed whereon it must expire,
Consumed with that which it was nourished by.

This thou perceiv'st, which makes thy love more strong,
To love that well, which thou must leave ere long.

But be contented; when that fell arrest
Without all bail shall carry me away,
My life hath in this line some interest,
Which for memorial still shall stay.

When thou reviewest this, thou dost review
The very part was consecrate to thee.
The earth can have but earth, which is his due;
My spirit is thine, the better part of me.

So then thou hast but lost the dregs of life,
The prey of worms, my body being dead,
The coward conquest of a wretch's knife,
Too base of thee to be remembered.

The worth of that is that which it contains,
And that is this, and this with thee remains.

O, how I faint when I of you do write,
Knowing a better spirit doth use your name,
And in the praise thereof spends all his might,
To make me tongue-tied, speaking of your fame!
But since your worth, wide as the ocean is,
The humble as the proudest sail doth bear,
My saucy bark, inferior far to his,
On your broad main doth willfully appear.
Your shallowest help will hold me up afloat
Whilst he upon your soundless, deep doth ride;
Or, being wrecked, I am a worthless boat,
He of tall building and of goodly pride.
Then if he thrive and I be cast away,
The worst was this: my love was my decay.

My tongue-tied milse in manners holds her still While comments of your praise, richly compiled,
Reserve thy character with golden quill
And precious phrase by all the muses filed.
I think good thoughts whilst other write good words,
And like unlettered clerk still cry 'Amen'
To every hymn that able spirit affords
In polished form of well-refined pen.
Hearing you praised I say 'Tis so,'tis true,
And to the most of praise add something more;
Rut that is in my thought, whose love to you,
Though words come hindmost, holds his rank before.
Then others for the breath of words respect,
Me for my dumb thoughts, speaking in effect.

Farewell: thou art too dear for my possessing,
And like enough thou know'st thy estimate.
The charter of thy worth gives thee releasing;
My bonds in thee are all determinate.
For how do I hold thee but by thy granting,
And for that riches where is my deserving?
The cause of this fair gift in me is wanting,
And so my patent back again is swerving.
Thy self thou gav'st, thy own worth then not knowing,
Or me, to whom thou gav'st it, else mistaking;
So thy great gift, upon misprision growing,
Comes home again, on better judgment making.
Thus have I had thee as a dream doth flatter:
In sleep a king, but waking no such matter.

So shall I live supposing thou art true,
Like a deceived husband; so love's face

1. Tall, strong build.
2. 'Like ... hymn': like an illiterate parish clerk reflectively approve (cry 'Amen' after) every poem
3. (1) Expensive, (2) beloved,
   ('hymn') of praise.
May still seem love to me, though altered new—
Thy looks with me, thy heart in other place.

For there can live no hatred in thine eye;
Therefore in that I cannot know thy change.
In many's looks the false heart's history
Is writ in moods and frowns and wrinkles strange;\(^4\)
But heaven in thy creation did decree

That in thy face sweet love should ever dwell;
Whate'er thy thoughts or thy heart's workings be,
Thy looks should nothing thence but sweetness tell.
How like Eve's apple doth thy beauty grow\(^6\)
If thy sweet virtue answer not thy show!\(^5\)

They that have power to hurt and will do none,
That do not do the thing they most do show;\(^6\)
Who, moving others, are themselves as stone,
Unmoved, cold, and to temptation slow;
They rightly do inherit heaven's graces
And husband nature's riches from expense;
They are the lords and owners of their faces,
Others but stewards of their excellence.
The summer's flower is to the summer sweet,
Though to itself it only live and die,
But if that flower with base infection meet,
The basest weed outbraves\(^8\) his dignity:

For sweetest things turn sourest by their deeds;
Lilies that fester smell far worse than weeds.

How like a winter hath my absence been
From thee, the pleasure of the fleeting year!
What freezings have I felt, what dark days seen!
What old December's bareness everywhere!
And yet this time removed\(^8\) was summer's time,
The teeming autumn, big with rich increase,
Bearing the wanton burthen of the prime,\(^9\)
Like widowed wombs after their lords' decease;
Yet this abundant issue\(^7\) seemed to me

But hope of orphans and unfathered fruit;
For summer and his pleasures wait on thee,
And, thou away, the very birds are mute;
Or, if they sing, 'tis with so dull a cheer\(^9\)
That leaves look pale, dreading the winter's near.

5. Does not correspond to your appearance.
6. Seem to do, or seem capable of doing.
7. I.e., they do not squander nature's gifts.
8. I.e., when I was absent.
9. Spring, which has engendered the lavish crop ("wanton burthen") that autumn is now left to bear.
From you have I been absent in the spring,
When proud-pied April, dressed in all his trim,
Hath put a spirit of youth in everything,
That heavy Saturn laughed and leapt with him.
Yet nor the lays of birds, nor the sweet smell
Of different flowers in odor and in hue,
Could make me any summer's story tell,
Or from their proud lap pluck them where they grew;
Nor did I wonder at the lily's white,
Nor praise the deep vermilion in the rose;
They were but sweet, but figures of delight,
Drawn after you, you pattern of all those.
Yet seemed it winter still, and, you away,
As with your shadow I with these did play.

Let not my love be called idolatry,
Nor my beloved as an idol show,
Since all alike my songs and praises be
To one, of one, still such, and ever so.
Kind is my love today, tomorrow kind,
Still constant in a wondrous excellence.
Therefore my verse, to constancy confined,
One thing expressing, leaves out difference.
"Fair, kind, and true" is all my argument,
"Fair, kind, and true" varying to other words,
And in this change is my invention spent.
Three themes in one, which wonderous scope affords.
Which three till now never kept seat in one.

When in the chronicle of wasted time
I see descriptions of the fairest wights,
And beauty making beautiful old rhyme
In praise of ladies dead and lovely knights,
5 Then, in the blazon of sweet beauty's best,
Of hand, of foot, of lip, of eye, of brow,
I see their antique pen would have expressed
Even such a beauty as you master now.
So all their praises are but prophecies
Of this our time, all you prefiguring;
And, for they looked but with divining eyes,
They had not skill enough your worth to sing:
For we, which now behold these present days,
Have eyes to wonder, but lack tongues to praise.

1. Magnificent in many colors.
2. And in varying the words alone my inventiveness is expended.
3. Catalog of excellencies.
4. Because ('for') they were able only ('but') to foresee prophetically.
Not mine own fears, nor the prophetic soul
Of the wide world dreaming on things to come;¹
Can yet the lease of my true love control,
Supposed as forfeit to a confined doom.⁶

The mortal moon hath her eclipse endured,
And the sad augurs mock their own presage;⁷
Incertainties now crown themselves assured,
And peace⁸ proclaims olives of endless age.

Now with the drops of this most balmy time
My love looks fresh, and death to me subscribes,⁰
Since, spite of him, I'll live in this poor rhyme,
While he insults o'er dull and speechless tribes:
And thou in this shalt find thy monument,
When tyrants' crests and tombs of brass are spent.⁰

Alas, 'tis true I have gone here and there
And made myself a motley to the view,
Gored mine own thoughts, sold cheap what is most dear,
Made old offenses of affections new.

Most true it is that I have looked on truth
Askance and strangely; but, by all above,
These blenches gave my heart another youth,
And worse essays' proved thee my best of love.

Now all is done, have what shall have no end:
'Mine appetite I never more will grind
On newer proof,
A god in love, to whom I am confined.
Then give me welcome, next my heaven the best,
Even to thy pure and most most loving breast.

Let me not to the marriage of true minds
Admit impediments;¹ love is not love
Which alters when it alteration finds,
Or bends with the remover to remove:
O, no, it is an ever-fixed mark,⁴
That looks on tempests and is never shaken;

¹. This sonnet refers to contemporary events and the prophecies, common in Elizabethan almanacs, of disaster.
². I.e., can yet put an end to my love, which I thought doomed to early forfeiture.
³. The "mortal moon" is probably Queen Elizabeth; her "eclipse" could be either her death (March 1603) or, perhaps, her "climacteric" year, her sixty-third (thought meaningful because the product of two "significant" numbers, 7 and 9), which ended in September 1596. The sober astrologers ("sad augurs") now ridicule their own predictions ("presage") of catastrophe, because they turned out to be false.
⁴. Trials of worse relationships.
⁵. Perhaps referring to the peace treaty signed with Spain by Elizabeth's successor, James I, or, if the sonnet refers to the time of Elizabeth's climacteric, to an earlier treaty between England and France.
⁶. Obliquely or asquint, and coldly (like a stranger). "Gored" (line 3): wounded, pierced.
⁷. From the Anglican marriage service: "If either of you do know any impediment why ye may not be lawfully joined together . . ."
It is the star to every wand’ring bark,
Whose worth’s unknown, although his highth be taken.
Love’s not Time’s fool, though rosy lips and cheeks
Within his bending sickle’s compass come;
Love alters not with his brief hours and weeks,
But bears it out even to the edge of doom.
If this be error and upon me proved,
I never writ, nor no man ever loved.

O thou, my lovely boy, who in thy power
Dost hold Time’s fickle glass, his sickle, hour;
Thy lovers withering as thy sweet self grow’st;
As thou goest onwards still will pluck thee back,
She keeps thee to this purpose, that her skill
May Time disgrace and wretched minutes kill.
Yet fear her, O thou minion of her pleasure,
She may detain, but not still keep, her treasure!
Her audit (though delayed) answered must be,
And her quietus is to render thee.

In the old age black was not counted fair,
Or, if it were, it bore not beauty’s name;
But now is black beauty’s successive heir,
And beauty slandered with a bastard shame;
For since each hand hath put on nature’s power,
Fairing the foul with art’s false borrowed face,
Sweet beauty hath no name, no holy bower,
But is profaned, if not lives in disgrace.
Therefore my mistress’ brows are raven black,
Her eyes so suited, and they mourners seem
At such who, not born fair, no beauty lack,
Slandring creation with a false esteem:
Yet so they mourn, becoming of their woe,
That every tongue says beauty should look so.

How oft when thou, my music, music play’st
Upon that blessed wood whose motion sounds
With thy sweet fingers when thou gently sway’st
The wavy concord that mine ear confounds,

Do I envy those jacks\(^5\) that nimble leap
To kiss the tender inward of thy hand,
Whilst my poor lips, which should that harvest reap,
At the wood's boldness by thee blushing stand.
To be so tickled they would change their state
And situation\(^6\) with those dancing chips,
O'er whom thy fingers walk with gentle gait,
Making dead wood more blessed than living lips.
Since saucy jacks\(^7\) so happy are in this,
Give them thy fingers, me thy lips to kiss.

Th' expense of spirit in a waste of shame
Is lust in action;\(^9\) and till action, lust
Is perjured, murd'rous, bloody, full of blame,
Savage, extreme, rude,\(^8\) cruel, not to trust;
Enjoyed no sooner but despised straight:\(^9\)
Past reason hunted; and no sooner had,
Past reason hated, as a swallowed bait,
On purpose laid to make the taker mad:
Mad in pursuit, and in possession so;
Had, having, and in quest to have, extreme;
A bliss in proof\(^9\) and proved, a very woe;
Before, a joy proposed; behind, a dream.
All this the world well knows; yet none knows well
To shun the heaven that leads men to this hell.

My mistress' eyes are nothing like the sun;\(^1\)
Coral is far more red than her lips' red;
If snow be white, why then her breasts are dun;
If hairs be wires, black wires grow on her head.
I have seen roses damasked,\(^9\) red and white,
But no such roses see I in her cheeks;
And in some perfumes is there more delight
Than in the breath that from my mistress reeks.
I love to hear her speak, yet well I know
That music hath a far more pleasing sound;
I grant I never saw a goddess go;\(^6\)
My mistress, when she walks, treads on the ground.
And yet, by heaven, I think my love as rare\(^9\)
As any she belied\(^9\) with false compare.

7. With a quibble on the sense "impertinent fellows."
8. The word order here is inverted and slightly obscures the meaning. Lust, when put into action, expends "spirit" (life, vitality; also semen) in a "waste" (desert; also with a pun on waist) of shame.
9. A bliss during the experience.
1. An anti-Petrarchan sonnet. All of the details commonly attributed by other Elizabethan sonneteers to their ladies (for example, in Spenser's Amoretti 64, p. 904) are here denied to the poet's mistress.

Whoever hath her wish, thou hast thy Will, and Will to boot, and Will in overplus; More than enough am I that vex thee still, to thy sweet will making addition thus. Wilt thou, whose will is large and spacious, And in abundance addeth to his store, So thou being rich in Will add to thy Will One will of mine to make thy large Will more. Let no unkind, no fair beseechers kill; Think all but one, and me in that one Will.

138
When my love swears that she is made of truth, I do believe her, though I know she lies, That she might think me some untutored youth, Unlearned in the world's false subtleties. Thus vainly thinking that she thinks me young, Although she knows my days are past the best, Simply I credit her false-speaking tongue: On both sides thus is simple truth suppressed. And wherefore say not I that I am old? Oh, love's best habit is in seeming trust, And age in love loves not to have years told. Therefore I lie with her and she with me, And in our faults by lies we flattered be.

144
Two loves I have of comfort and despair, Which like two spirits do suggest me still: The better angel is a man right fair, The worser spirit a woman colored ill. To win me soon to hell, my female evil Tempteth my better angel from my side, And would corrupt my saint to be a devil, Wooing his purity with her foul pride. And whether that my angel be turned fiend

3. (1) Wishes, (2) carnal desire, (3) the male and female sexual organs, (4) a lover—Shakespeare?—named Will. This is one of several sonnets punning on the word.
4. I.e., do not kill with unkindness any of your wooers.
5. With the obvious sexual pun (as also in lines 13-14). "Made of truth": (1) is utterly honest, (2) is faithful.
6. Shakespeare was thirty-five or younger when he wrote this sonnet (it first appeared in The Passionate Pilgrim, 1599).
7. I have two beloved, one bringing me comfort and the other despair.
8. (1) Vanity, (2) sexuality.
10 Suspect I may, yet not directly tell;
But being both from me, both to each friend,
I guess one angel in another's hell.
Yet this shall I ne'er know, but live in doubt,
Till my bad angel fire my good one out.¹

Poor soul, the center of my sinful earth,
Lord of these rebel powers that thee array,²
Why dost thou pine within and suffer dearth,
Painting thy outward walls so costly gay?
Why so large cost, having so short a lease,
Dost thou upon thy fading mansion spend?
Shall worms, inheritors of this excess,
Eat up thy charge?
Then, soul, live thou upon thy servant's loss,
Arid let that pine to aggravate thy store;
Buy terms divine in selling hours of dross;
Within be fed, without be rich no more.
So shalt thou feed on death, that feeds on men,
And death once dead, there's no more dying then.

My love is as a fever, longing still⁰
For that which longer nurseth the disease,
Feeding on that which doth preserve the ill,
Th' uncertain sickly appetite to please.
My reason, the physician to my love,
Angry that his prescriptions are not kept,
Hath left me, and I desperate now approve Desire is death, which physic did except.
Past cure I am, now reason is past care,
And frantic mad with evermore unrest;
My thoughts and my discourse as madmen's are,
At random from the truth, vainly expressed:
For I have sworn thee fair, and thought thee bright,
Who art as black as hell, as dark as night.

In loving thee thou know'st I am forsworn,
But thou art twice forsworn to me love swearing:

3. An emendation. The 1609 edition repeats the last three words of line 1. Other suggestions are "Thrall to," "Starved by," "Pressed by," and leaving the repetition but dropping "that thee" in line 2.
4. The rebellious body that clothes you.
5. (1) Your expense; (2) the thing you were responsible for (i.e., the body).
6. Let "that" (i.e., the body) deteriorate to increase ("aggravate") the soul's riches ("thy store").
8. (1) Nourishes, (2) takes care of.
9. (1) Desire for food, (2) lust.
10. I.e., I learn by experience that desire, which rejected reason's medicine, is death.
1. I.e., medical care (of me). The line is a version of the proverb "past cure, past care."
2. Wide of the mark and senselessly uttered.
3. I.e., am breaking loving vows to another.
In act thy bed-vow° broke, and new faith torn to husband (or lover)

In vowing new hate after new love bearing.°

But why of two oaths' breach do I accuse thee

When I break twenty? I am perjured most,
For all my vows are oaths but to misuse° thee,
And all my honest faith in thee is lost.

For I have sworn deep oaths of thy deep kindness,

Oaths of thy love, thy truth, thy constancy,
And to enlighten thee gave eyes to blindness,
Or made them swear against the thing they see.

For I have sworn thee fair—more perjured eye°
(punning on ‘I’)
To swear against the truth so foul a lie.

Twelfth Night

Women did not perform on the English public stage during Shakespeare's lifetime; all the great women's roles in Elizabethan and Jacobean plays, from Juliet and Lady Macbeth to the duchess of Malfi, were written to be performed by trained adolescent boys. These boy actors were evidently extraordinarily skillful, and the audiences were sufficiently immersed in the conventions both of theater and of social life in general to accept gesture, makeup, and above all dress as a convincing representation of femininity. Twelfth Night, or What You Will, written for Shakespeare's all-male company, plays brilliantly with these conventions. The comedy depends upon an actor's ability to transform himself, through costume, voice, and gesture, into a young noblewoman, Viola, who transforms herself, through costume, voice, and gesture, into a young man, Cesario. The play's delicious complications follow from the emotional tangles that these transformations engender, unsettling fixed categories of sexual identity and social class and allowing characters to explore emotional territory that a culture officially hostile to same-sex desire and cross-class marriage would ordinarily have ruled out of bounds. In Twelfth Night conventional expectations repeatedly give way to a different mode of perceiving the world.

Shakespeare wrote Twelfth Night around 1601. He had already written such comedies as A Midsummer Night's Dream, Much Ado About Nothing, and As You Like It, with their playful, subtly ironic investigations of the ways in which heterosexual couples are produced out of the murkier crosscurrents of male and female friendships; as interesting, perhaps, he had probably just recently completed Hamlet, with its unprecedented exploration of mourning, betrayal, antic humor, and tragic isolation. Twelfth Night would prove to be, in the view of many critics, both the most nearly perfect and in some sense the last of the great festive comedies. Shakespeare returned to comedy later in his career but always with more insistent overtones of bitterness, loss, and grief. There are dark notes in Twelfth Night as well—the countess Olivia is in mourning for her brother, Viola thinks that her brother too is dead, Antonio believes that he has been betrayed by the man he loves, Duke Orsino threatens to kills Cesario—but these notes are swept up in a giddy, carnivalesque dance of illusion, disguise, folly, and clowning.

The complex tonal shifts of Shakespeare's comedy are conveyed in part by the pervasive music and in part by the constant oscillation between blank verse and prose. Generally, the characters in the main, romantic plot speak in the more elevated, aristocratic, and dignified register of verse, while the comic subplot proceeds in prose. Yet these formal distinctions between serious and comic, high and low, are frequently

5. The object of the 'new faith' followed by 'new hate' could be either the speaker's young friend or the speaker himself.
6. And to make you fair (or give you insight). I looked blindly on your failings (or pretended to see what I couldn't).
The play's subtitle, What You Will, underscores the celebratory spirit associated with Twelfth Night, the Feast of the Epiphany (January 6), that in Elizabethan England marked the culminating night of the traditional Christmas revels. In the time-honored festivities associated with the midwinter season, a rigidly hierarchical social order that ordinarily demanded deference, sobriety, and strict obedience to authority temporarily gave way to raucous rituals of inversion: young boys were crowned for a day as bishops and carried through the streets in mock religious processions, abstemiousness was toppled by bouts of heavy drinking and feasting, and the spirit of parody, folly, and misrule reigned briefly in places normally reserved for stern-faced moralists and sober judges. The fact that these festivities were associated with Christian holidays—the Epiphany marked the visit of the Three Kings to Bethlehem to worship the Christ child—did not altogether obscure the continuities with pagan winter rituals such as the Roman Saturnalia, with its comparably explosive release from everyday discipline into a disorderly realm of belly laughter and belly cheer. Puritans emphasized these continuities in launching a fierce attack on the Elizabethan festive calendar and its whole ethos, just as they attacked the theater for what they saw as its links with paganism, idleness, and sexual license. Elizabethan and Jacobean authorities in the church and the state had their own concerns about idleness and subversion, but they generally protected and patronized both festive ritual and theater on the ground that these provided a valuable release from tensions that might otherwise prove dangerous. Sobriety, piety, and discipline were no doubt admirable virtues, but most human beings were not saints. "Dost thou think because thou art virtuous," the drunken Sir Toby asks the censorious steward Malvolio, "there shall be no more cakes and ale?" (2.3.107—08).

Fittingly, the earliest firm record of a performance of Twelfth Night, as noted in the diary of John Manningham, was "at our feast" in the Middle Temple (one of London's law schools) in February 1602. Manningham noted cannily the comedy's resemblance to Shakespeare's earlier play on twins, The Comedy of Errors, as well as to the Roman playwright Plautus's Menaechmi and to an early-sixteenth-century Italian comedy, Gl'ingannati (The Deceived). Shakespeare also drew upon an English story, Barnabe Riche's tale of Apollonitis and Silla in Riche His Farewell to the Military Profession (1581), which was in turn based on French and Italian sources. There is, however, little precedent, in Riche or in any of the known sources, for the aspect of Twelfth Night that Manningham found particularly memorable and that has continued to delight audiences: the gulling of Malvolio.

Malvolio (in Italian, "ill will") is explicitly linked to those among Shakespeare's contemporaries most hostile to the theater and to such holidays as Twelfth Night: "Sometimes," says the Lady Olivia's gentlewoman Maria, "he is a kind of puritan" (2.3.131). Shakespeare does not hide the cruelty of the treatment to which Malvolio is subjected—"He hath been most notoriously abused" (5.1.375), says Olivia—nor does he shrink from showing the audience other disagreeable qualities in Olivia's kinsman Sir Toby Belch and his companions. But while the close of the comedy seems to embrace these failings in a tolerant, amused aristocratic recognition of human folly, it can find no place for Malvolio's blend of puritanism and social-climbing.

Malvolio is scapegoated for indulging in a fantasy that colors several of the key relationships in Twelfth Night: the fantasy of winning the favor, and ultimately the hand, of the noble and wealthy aristocrats who reign over the social world of the play. The beautiful heiress Olivia, mistress of a great house, is a glittering prize that lures not only Malvolio but also the foolish Sir Andrew and the elegant, imperious Duke Orsino. In falling in love with the duke's graceful messenger (and, as she thinks she has done, in marrying him), Olivia seems to have made precisely the kind of match that had fueled Malvolio's social-climbing imagination. As it turns out, the match is not between unequals: "Be not amazed," the duke tells her when she realizes that she... has married someone she scarcely knows. "Right noble is his blood" (5.1.263). The social order then has not been overturned: as in a carnival, when the disguises are removed, the revelers resume their "proper," socially and sexually approved positions.

Yet there is something irreducibly odd about the marriages with which Twelfth Night ends. Sir Toby has married the lady's maid Maria as a reward for devising the plot against Malvolio. Olivia has entered into a "contract of eternal bond of love" (5.1.153) with someone whose actual identity is only revealed to her after the marriage is sealed. The strangeness of the bond between virtual strangers is matched by the strangeness of Orsino's instantaneous decision to marry Cesario—as soon as "he" can become Viola by changing into women's clothes. Shakespeare conspicuously chooses not to stage this return to conventionality.

Part of the quirky delight of the play's conclusion depends upon the resilient hopefulness of its central character, Viola, a hopefulness that is linked to her improvisatory boldness, eloquent tongue, and keen wit. These qualities link her to the fool Feste, who does not have a major part in the comedy's plot, but who occupies a place at its imaginative center. Viola seems to acknowledge this place in paying handsome tribute to Feste's intelligence: "This fellow is wise enough to play the fool. / And to do that well craves a kind of wit" (3.1.59—60). His wit often takes the form of a perverse literalism that slyly calls attention to the play's repeated confounding of such simple binaries as male and female, outside and inside, role and reality. Feste is irresponsible, vulnerable, and dependent, but he also understands, as he teasingly shows Olivia, that it is foolish to bewail forever a loss that cannot be recovered. And he understands that it is important to take such pleasures as life offers and not to wait: "In delay there lies no plenty," he sings, "Then come kiss me, sweet and twenty. / Youth's a stuff will not endure" (2.3.48—50). There is in this wonderful song, as in all of his jests, a current of sadness. Feste knows, as the refrain of the last of his songs puts it, that "the rain it raineth every day" (5.1.388). His counsel is for "present mirth" and "present laughter" (2.3.46). This is, of course, the advice of a fool. But do the Malvolios of the world have anything wiser to suggest?

VIOLA - What country, friends, is this?
CAPTAIN This is Illyria, lady.

VIOLA And what should I do in Illyria?
My brother, he is in Elysium.²
Perchance he is not drowned. What think you sailors?
CAPTAIN It is perchance that you yourself were saved.

VIOLA O my poor brother! — and so perchance may he be.
CAPTAIN True, madam, and to comfort you with chance,³
Assure yourself, after our ship did split,
When you and those poor number saved with you
Hung on our driving boat,⁴ I saw your brother,
Most provident in peril, bind himself —
Courage and hope both teaching him the practice —
To a strong mast that lived upon the sea,
Where, like Arion⁵ on the dolphin’s back,
I saw him hold acquaintance with the waves
So long as I could see.

VIOLA [giving money] For saying so, there’s gold.
Mine own escape unfoldeth to my hope,
Whereto thy speech serves for authority,⁶
The like of him.⁷ Know’st thou this country?

CAPTAIN Ay, madam, well, for I was bred and born
Not three hours’ travel from this very place.

VIOLA Who governs here?
CAPTAIN A noble duke, in nature
As in name.

VIOLA What is his name?
CAPTAIN Orsino.

VIOLA Orsino. I have heard my father name him.
He was a bachelor then.

CAPTAIN And so is now, or was so very late,"⁸
For but a month ago I went from hence,
And then ’twas fresh in murmur⁹ — as, you know,
What great ones do the less will prattle of —
That he did seek the love of fair Olivia.

And might not be delivered to the world
Till I had made mine own occasion mellow,
What my estate is.

CAPTAIN
That were hard to compass,
Because she will admit no kind of suit,
No, not the Duke's.

VIOLA
There is a fair behavior in thee, captain,
And though that nature with a beauteous wall
Doth oft close in pollution, yet of thee
I will believe thou hast a mind that suits
With this thy fair and outward character.
I pray thee—and I'll pay thee bounteously—

Thou shalt present me as an eunuch to him.
It may be worth thy pains, for I can sing,
And speak to him in many sorts of music
That will allow me very worth his service.
What else may hap, to time I will commit.
Only shape thou thy silence to my wit.

Be you his eunuch, and your mute I'll be.

8. Appearance (suggesting moral qualities).
9. That perhaps may be fitting to my purpose. "Form": shape.
1. Castrati (hence, "eunuchs") were prized as male sopranos; the disguise would have explained Viola's feminine voice. Viola (or perhaps Shakespeare) seems to have changed plans: she presents herself instead as a young page.
2. In Turkish harems, eunuchs served as guards and were assisted by "mutes" (usually servants whose tongues had been cut out).
these boots too; an° they be not, let them hang themselves in their own straps.

Maria That quaffing and drinking will undo you. I heard my lady talk of it yesterday, and of a foolish knight that you brought in one night here to be her wooer.

Sir Toby Who, Sir Andrew Aguecheek?

Maria Ay, he.

Sir Toby He's as tall a man as any's in Illyria.

Maria What's that to th' purpose?

Sir Toby Why, he has three thousand ducats a year.

Maria Ay, but he'll have but a year in all these ducats. He's a very fool, and a prodigal.

Sir Toby Fie that you'll say so! He plays o'th' viol-de-gamboys, and speaks three or four languages word for word without book, and hath all the good gifts of nature.

Maria He hath indeed, almost natural, for besides that he's a fool, he's a great quarreller, and but that he hath the gift of a coward to allay the gust he hath in quarrelling, 'tis thought among the prudent he would quickly have the gift of a grave.

Sir Toby By this hand, they are scoundrels and substractors that say so of him. Who are they?

Maria They that add, moreover, he's drunk nightly in your company.

Sir Toby With drinking healths to my niece. I'll drink to her as long as there is a passage in my throat and drink in Illyria. He's a coward and a coistre that will not drink to my niece till his brains turn o'th' toe, like a parish top. What wench, Castiliano, vulgo, for here comes Sir Andrew Agueface.

Enter Sir Andrew [Aguecheek]

Sir Andrew Sir Toby Belch! How now, Sir Toby Belch?

Sir Toby Sweet Sir Andrew.

Sir Andrew [to Maria] Bless you, fair shrew.

Maria And you too, sir.

Sir Toby Accost, Sir Andrew, accost.

Sir Andrew What's that?

Sir Toby My niece's chambermaid.

Sir Andrew Good Mistress Accost, I desire better acquaintance.

Maria My name is Mary, sir.

Sir Andrew Good Mistress Mary Accost.

4. Any (man who) is. "Tall": brave; worthy. (Maria takes it in the modern sense of height.)

5. I.e., 'll spend his fortune in a year.

6. A facetious corruption of "viola da gamba," a bass violin held between the knees.

7. Idiots and fools were called "naturals."

8. Corruption of "detractors." (In reply, Maria puns on "subtract" as "subtract").

9. Variously interpreted, but may mean "Speak of the devil," since Castilians were considered devilish, and vulgo refers to the common tongue. "Parish top": parishes kept large tops that were spun by whipping them, for the parisioners' amusement and exercise.

1. Andrew possibly confuses "shrew" (ill-tempered woman) with "mouse," an endearment.

2. Address (her); originally a naval term meaning "go alongside; greet."

3. Lady-in-waiting; not a menial servant, but a gentlewoman in attendance on a great lady.

http://englishworld20111.wordpress.com/
SIR TOBY  You mistake, knight. "Accost" is front her, board her, woo her, assail her.
SIR ANDREW  By my troth, I would not undertake her in this company. Is that the meaning of "accost"?
MARIA  Fare you well, gentlemen.
SIR TOBY  An thou let part so, Sir Andrew, would thou mightst never draw sword again.
SIR ANDREW  An you part so, mistress, I would I might never draw sword again. Fair lady, do you think you have fools in hand?
MARIA  Sir, I have not you by th' hand.
SIR ANDREW  Morty, but you shall have, and here's my hand.
MARIA  [taking his hand] Now sir, thought is free. I pray you, bring your hand to th' buttery-bar, and let it drink.
SIR ANDREW  Wherefore, sweetheart? What's your metaphor?
MARIA  It's dry, sir.
SIR ANDREW  Why, I think so. I am not such an ass but I can keep my hand dry. But what's your jest?
MARIA  A dry jest, sir.
SIR ANDREW  Are you full of them?
MARIA  Ay, sir, I have them at my fingers' ends. Marry, now I let go your hand I am barren.
SIR TOBY  O knight, thou lackest a cup of canary.
SIR ANDREW  Never in your life, I think, unless you see canary put me down. Methinks sometimes I have no more wit than a Christian or an ordinary man has; but I am a great eater of beef, and I believe that does harm to my wit.
SIR TOBY  No question.
SIR ANDREW  An I thought that, I'd forswear it. I'll ride home tomorrow, Sir Toby.
SIR TOBY  Pourquoi, why?
SIR ANDREW  What is "Pourquoi"? Do, or not do? I would I had bestowed that time in the tongues that I have in fencing, dancing, and bear-baiting. O, had I but followed the arts!
SIR TOBY  Then hadst thou had an excellent head of hair.
SIR ANDREW. Why, would that have mended my hair?

SIR TOBY. Past question, for thou seest it will not curl by nature.8

SIR ANDREW. But it becomes me well enough, does't not?

SIR TOBY. Excellent, it hangs like flax on a distaff, and I hope to see a housewife1 take thee between her legs and spin it off.2

SIR ANDREW. Faith, I'll home tomorrow, Sir Toby. Your niece will not be seen, or if she be, it's four to one she'll none of me. The Count himself here hard by woos her.

SIR TOBY. She'll none o'th' Count. She'll not match above her degree,0 neither in estate,3 years, nor wit, I have heard her swear't. Tut, there's life in't,4 man.

SIR ANDREW. I'll stay a month longer. I am a fellow o'th' strangest mind o'th' world. I delight in masques and revells sometimes altogether.

SIR TOBY. Art thou good at these kickshawses,5 knight?

SIR ANDREW. As any man in Illyria, whatsoever he be, under the degree of my betters; and yet I will not compare with an old man.6

SIR TOBY. What is thy excellence in a galliard,7 knight?

SIR ANDREW. Faith, I can cut a caper.8

SIR TOBY. And I can cut the mutton to't.

SIR ANDREW. And I think I have the back-trick9 simply as strong as any man in Illyria.

SIR TOBY. Wherefore are these things hid? Wherefore have these gifts a curtain1 before 'em? Are they like to take dust, like Mistress Mall's2 picture? Why dost thou not go to church in a galliard, and come home in a coranto?3 My very walk should be a jig. I would not so much as make water but in a cinquepace.4 What dost thou mean? Is it a world to hide virtues in? I did think by the excellent constitution of thy leg it was formed under the star of a galliard.5

SIR ANDREW. Ay, 'tis strong, and it does indifferent6 well in a divers-colored stock.9 Shall we set about some revels?

SIR TOBY. What shall we do else—were we not born under Taurus?6

SIR ANDREW. Taurus? That's sides and heart.

SIR TOBY. No, sir, it is legs and thighs: let me see thee caper.

8. To contrast with Andrew's "arts" (line 90).
9. In spinning, flax would hang in long, thin, yellowish strings on the "distaff," a pole held between the knees.

3. Status; possessions.
4. Proverbial: "While there's life, there's hope."
5. Trifles; trivialities (from the French quelque chose).

9. Probably a dance movement, a kick of the foot behind the body (also suggesting sexual prowess, with later reference to "mutton" as "prostitute").
1. Used to protect paintings from dust.
2. Like "Mel[ly]." "Mall" was a nickname for "Mary."
3. An even more rapid dance than the galliard.
4. Galliard, or, more properly, the steps joining the figures of the dance; punning on "sink," as in "sewer."
5. Astrological influences favorable to dancing.
6. The astrological sign of the bull was usually thought to govern the neck and throat (appropriate to heavy drinkers).
Enter VALENTINE, and VIOLA [as Cesario] in man’s attire

VALENTINE If the Duke continue these favors towards you, Cesario, you are like to be much advanced. He hath known you but three days, and already you are no stranger.

VIOLA You either fear his humor or my negligence, that you call in question the continuance of his love. Is he inconstant, sir, in his favors?

VALENTINE No; believe me.

Enter DUKE, CURIO, and attendants

VIOLA I thank you. Here comes the Count.

ORSINO Who saw Cesario, ho?

VIOLA On your attendance, my lord, here.

ORSINO [to CURIO and attendants] Stand you a while aside

Thou know’st no less but all. I have unclasped than everything to thee the book even of my secret soul.

Therefore, good youth, address thy gait unto her, go

Be not denied access, stand at her doors,

And tell them there thy fixed foot shall grow take root till thou have audience.

VIOLA Sure, my noble lord, if she be so abandoned to her sorrow as it is spoke, she never will admit me.

ORSINO Be clamorous, and leap all civil bounds, rather than make unprofited return.

VIOLA Say I do speak with her, my lord, what then?

ORSINO Ó then unfold the passion of my love, surprise her with discourse of my dear faith. It shall become thee well to act my woes— she will attend it better in thy youth than in a nuncio’s of more grave aspect messenger’s / appearance

VIOLA I think not so, my lord.

ORSINO Dear lad, believe it;

For they shall yet believe thy happy years thus far

That say thou art a man. Diana’s lip is not more smooth and rubious; thy small pipe ruby red voice

Is as the maiden’s organ, shrill and sound, and all is semblative a woman’s part. like

I know thy constellation is right apt for this affair. [To CURIO and attendants] Some four or five attend him.

All if you will, for I myself am best

2. Capture by unexpected attack.

3. High-pitched and uncracked.

4. Nature and abilities (as supposedly determined by the stars).
When least in company. [To VIOLA] Prosper well in this And thou shalt live as freely as thy lord, To call his fortunes thine.

VIOLA I'll do my best To woo your lady—[aside] yet a barful strife⁵— Who'er I woo, myself would be his wife. Exeunt

1.5 •Enter MARIA, and [FESTE, the] clown
MARIA Nay, either tell me where thou hast been or I will not open my lips so wide as a bristle may enter in' way of thy excuse. My lady will hang thee for thy absence.
FESTE Let her hang me. He that is well hanged in this world needs to fear no colors.²
MARIA Make that good.⁰ explain that
FESTE He shall see none to fear.
MARIA A good lenten⁸ answer. I can tell thee where that saying was born, of "I fear no colors."
FESTE Where, good Mistress Mary?
MARIA In the wars,⁴ and that may you be bold to say in your foolery.
FESTE Well, God give them wisdom that have it; and those that are fools, let them use their talents.⁵
MARIA Yet you will be hanged for being so long absent, or to be turned away⁶—is not that as good as a hanging to you?
FESTE Many a good hanging prevents a bad marriage;⁷ and for turning away, let summer bear it out."⁹
MARIA You are resolute then?
FESTE Not so neither, but I am resolved on two points.⁰
MARIA That if one break, the other will hold; or if both break, your gaskins⁵ fall.
FESTE Apt, in good faith, very apt. Well, go thy way. If Sir Toby would leave drinking thou wert as witty a piece of Eve's flesh⁸ as any in Illyria.
MARIA Peace, you rogue, no more o' that. Here comes my lady. Make your excuse wisely, you were best.⁰ [Exit]

[Enter Lady OLIVIA, with MALVOLIO and attendants]
FESTE [aside] Wit,⁶ a'nt' be thy will, put me into good fooling! Those wits that think they have thee do very oft prove fools, and I that am sure I lack thee may pass for a wise man. For what says Quinapalus?⁵—"Better a witty fool than a foolish wit." [TO OLIVIA] God bless thee, lady.

5. An undertaking full of impediments.
1.⁵ Location: Olivia's house.
2. The name is used only once, at 2.4.1 1.
3. Proverbial for "fear nothing." "Colors": worldly deceptions, with puns on 'collars' as 'hangman's nooses' and 'cholers' as 'anger.'
4. Thin or meager (like Lenten fare).
5. "Colors" in line 9 refers to military flags.
6. Alluding to the parable of the talents, Matthew 25. The comic implication is that a fool should strive to increase his measure of folly. Since "fowl" and "fowl" had similar pronunciations, there may also be a play on 'talents/falcons.'
7. Dismissed; also, perhaps, turned off or hanged.
8. Woman. Feste may imply both that Maria and Toby would make a good match and that Maria is as witty as Toby is sober.
9. Intelligence, which is often contrasted with will.
1. Feste frequently invents his own authorities.
OLIVIA [to attendants] Take the fool away.

FESTE Do you not hear, fellows? Take away the lady.

OLIVIA Go to, you're a dry fool. I'll no more of you. Besides, you grow dishonest.

FESTE Two faults, madonna, that drink and good counsel will amend, for give the dry fool drink, then is the fool not dry; bid the dishonest man mend himself: if he mend, he is no longer dishonest; if he cannot, let the tailor mend him. Anything that's mended is but patched. Virtue that transgresses is but patched with sin, and sin that amends is but patched with virtue. If that this simple syllogism will serve, so. If it will not, what remedy? As there is no true cuckold but calamity, so beauty's a flower. The lady bade take away the fool, therefore I say again, take her away.

OLIVIA Sir, I bade them take away you.

FESTE Misprision in the highest degree! Lady, "Caculus non facit monachum"—that's as much to say as I wear not motley in my brain. Good madonna, give me leave to prove you a fool.

OLIVIA Can you do it?

FESTE Dexteriously, good madonna.

OLIVIA Make your proof.

FESTE I must catechize you for it, madonna. Good my mouse of virtue, answer me.

OLIVIA Well, sir, for want of other idleness I'll bide your proof.

FESTE Good madonna, why mournest thou?

OLIVIA Good fool, for my brother's death.

FESTE I think his soul is in hell, madonna.

OLIVIA I know his soul is in heaven, fool.

FESTE The more fool, madonna, to mourn for your brother's soul, being in heaven. Take away the fool, gentlemen.

OLIVIA What think you of this fool, Malvolio? Doth he not mend?

MALVOLIO Yes, and shall do till the pangs of death shake him. Infirmity, that decays the wise, doth ever make the better fool.

FESTE God send you, sir, a speedy infirmity for the better increasing your folly. Sir Toby will be sworn that I am no fox, but he will not pass his word for twopence that you are no fool.

OLIVIA How say you to that, Malvolio?

MALVOLIO I marvel your ladyship takes delight in such a

http://englishworld20111.wordpress.com/
barren rascal. I saw him put down the other day with an ordinary fool that has no more brain than a stone. Look you now, he's out of his guard already. Unless you laugh and minister occasion to him, he is gagged. I protest I take these wise men that crow so at these set kind of fools no better than the fools' zanies.

Olivia: O, you are sick of self-love, Malvolio, and taste with a distempered appetite. To be generous, guiltless, and of free disposition is to take those things for birdbolts that you deem cannon bullets. There is no slander in an allowed fool, though he do nothing but rail; nor no railing in a known discreet man, though he do nothing but reprove.

Feste: Now Mercury indue thee with leasing, for thou speakest well of fools.

Maria: Madam, there is at the gate a young gentleman much desires to speak with you.

Olivia: From the Count Orsino, is it?

Maria: I know not, madam. 'Tis a fair young man, and well attended.

Olivia: Who of my people hold him in delay?

Maria: Sir Toby, madam, your kinsman.

Olivia: Fetch him off, I pray you, he speaks nothing but madman. Fie on him. Go you, Malvolio. If it be a suit from the Count, I am sick, or not at home—what you will to dismiss it.

Maria: Sir Toby, madam, your kinsman.

Olivia: Cousin, cousin, how have you come so early by this lethargy?

Sir Toby: Lechery? I defy lechery. There's one at the gate.

Olivia: Ay, marry, what is he?

Sir Toby: Let him be the devil an' he will, I care not. Give me faith, say I. Well, it's all one. with the talent of tactful lying.
OLIVIA What’s a drunken man like, fool?
FESTE Like a drowned man, a fool, and a madman—one draught above heat\(^7\) makes him a fool, the second mads him, and a third drowns him.
OLIVIA Go thou and seek the coroner, and let him sit o” hold an inquest for my coz,” for he's in the third degree of drink, he's drowned. Go look after him.
FESTE He is but mad yet, madonna, and the fool shall look to the madman. [Exit]

MALVOLIO Madam, yon young fellow swears he will speak with you. I told him you were sick—he takes on him to understand so much, and therefore\(^6\) comes to speak with you. I told him you were asleep—he seems to have a foreknowledge of that too, and therefore comes to speak with you. What is to be said to him, lady? He’s fortified against any denial.
OLIVIA Tell him he shall not speak with me.
MALVOLIO He's been told so, and he says he'll stand at your door like a sheriff's post,\(^8\) and be the supporter to a bench, but he'll speak with you.
OLIVIA What kind o’ man is he?
MALVOLIO Why, of mankind.\(^0\)
OLIVIA What manner of man?
MALVOLIO Of very ill manner: he'll speak with you, will you or no.
OLIVIA Of what personage\(^9\) and years is he?
MALVOLIO Not yet old enough for a man, nor young enough for a boy; as a squash\(^9\) is before 'tis a peascod, or a codling\(^8\) when 'tis almost an apple. 'Tis with him in standing water\(^9\) between boy and man. He is very well-favored,\(^9\) and he speaks very shrewishly.\(^9\) One would think his mother's milk were scarce out of him.
OLIVIA Let him approach. Call in my gentlewoman. [Exit]
MALVOLIO Gentlewoman, my lady calls. [Exit]

OLIVIA Give me my veil. Come, throw it o'er my face. We'll once more hear Orsino's embassy.

VIOLA The honorable lady of the house, which is she?
OLIVIA Speak to me, I shall answer for her. Your will.
VIOLA Most radiant, exquisite, and unmatchable beauty.—I pray you, tell me if this be the lady of the house, for I never saw her. I would be loath to cast away\(^0\) my speech, for besides that it is excellently well penned, I have taken great pains to con\(^9\) it. Good beauties, let me sustain\(^9\) no scorn; I am very 'countable,\(^0\) even to the least sinister usage.\(^1\)

9. An undeveloped pea pod.
1. To the slightest discourteous treatment.
OLIVIA Whence came you, sir?

VIOLA I can say little more than I have studied, \( ^7 \) and that question's out of my part. Good gentle one, give me modest assurance if you be the lady of the house, that I may proceed in my speech.

OLIVIA Are you a comedian? \( ^8 \)

VIOLA No, my profound heart; \( ^3 \) and yet—by the very fangs of malice I swear—I am not that I play. Are you the lady of the house?

OLIVIA If I do not usurp myself, I am.

VIOLA Most certain if you are she you do usurp yourself, for what is yours to bestow is not yours to reserve. But this is from my commission. \( ^9 \) I will on with my speech in your praise, and then show you the heart of my message.

OLIVIA Come to what is important in't, I forgive you the praise.

VIOLA Alas, I took great pains to study it, and 'tis poetical.

OLIVIA It is the more like to be feigned, I pray you keep it in. I heard you were saucy \( ^6 \) at my gates, and allowed your approach rather to wonder at you than to hear you. If you be not mad, be gone. If you have reason, \( ^8 \) be brief. Tis not that time of moon with me to make one in so skipping a dialogue. \( ^5 \)

MARIA Will you hoist sail, sir? Here lies your way.

VIOLA No, good swabber, I am to hull here a little longer.

[To OLIVIA] Some mollification for your giant, \( ^7 \) sweet lady. Tell me your mind, I am a messenger. \( ^8 \)

OLIVIA Sure, you have some hideous matter to deliver when the courtesy \( ^6 \) of it is so fearful. Speak your office. \( ^9 \)

VIOLA It alone concerns your ear. I bring no overture of war, no taxation of homage. \( ^9 \) I hold the olive in my hand. My words are as full of peace as matter. \( ^6 \)

OLIVIA Yet you began rudely. What are you? What would you?

VIOLA The rudeness that hath appeared in me have I learned from my entertainment. \( ^9 \) What I am and what I would are as secret as maidenhead; \( ^6 \) to your ears, divinity; to any others', profanation.

OLIVIA [to MARIA and attendants] Give us the place alone, we will hear this divinity. \( ^5 \) [Exeunt MARIA and attendants]

VIOLA Most sweet lady—

OLIVIA A comfortable doctrine, and much may be said of it. Where lies your text?

VIOLA In Orsino's bosom.

3. My most wise lady; upon my soul.
4. Counterfeit; inappropriate.
5. I am not lunatic enough to take part in so flighty a conversation. (Lunacy was thought to be influenced by the phases of the moon.)
6. To lie unanchored with lowered sails.
7. Mythical giants guarded ladies; here, also mocking Maria's diminutive size. "Some . . . for": please pacify.
8. From Orsino; Olivia pretends she understands him to mean a king's messenger, or a messenger-at-arms, employed on important state affairs.
9. Demand for dues paid to a superior.
OLIVIA

In his bosom? In what chapter of his bosom?

VIOLA

To answer by the method, in the first of his heart.

OLIVIA

O, I have read it. It is heresy. Have you no more to say?

VIOLA

Good madam, let me see your face.

OLIVIA

Have you any commission from your lord to negotiate with my face? You are now out of your text. But we will draw the curtain and show you the picture.

[She unveils]

Look you, sir, such a one I was this present. Is't not well done?

VIOLA

Excellently done, if God did all.

OLIVIA

'Tis in grain, sir, 'twill endure wind and weather.

VIOLA

'Tis beauty truly blent, whose red and white Nature's own sweet and cunning hand laid on.

Lady, you are the cruellest she alive

If you will lead these graces to the grave

And leave the world no copy.

OLIVIA

O sir, I will not be so hardhearted. I will give out divers schedules of my beauty. It shall be inventoried and every particle and utensil labelled to my will, as, item, two lips, indifferent red; item, two grey eyes, with lids to them; item, one neck, one chin, and so forth.

Were you sent hither to praise me?

VIOLA

I see you what you are, you are too proud,

But if you were the devil, you are fair.

My lord and master loves you. O, such love Could be but requited even if you were crowned The nonpareil of beauty.

OLIVIA

How does he love me?

VIOLA

With adorations, fertile tears,

With groans that thunder love, with sighs of lire.

OLIVIA

Your lord does know my mind, I cannot love him.

Yet I suppose him virtuous, know him noble,

Of great estate, of fresh and stainless youth,

In voices well divulged, free, learned, and valiant,

And in dimension and the shape of nature

A gracious person; but yet I cannot love him.

He might have took his answer long ago.

VIOLA

If I did love you in my master's flame,

With such a suff'ring, such a deadly life,

In your denial I would find no sense,

I would not understand it.

OLIVIA

Why, what would you?
VIOLA Make me a willow\(^2\) cabin at your gate
And call upon my soul within the house,
Write loyal cantons of contemned\(^6\) love,
And sing them loud even in the dead of night;
Halloo\(^3\) your name to the reverberate\(^6\) hills,
And make the babbling gossip of the air\(^4\)
Cry out "Olivia!" O, you should not rest
Between the elements of air and earth
But\(^6\) you should pity me.

OLIVIA You might do much.
What is your parentage?

VIOLA Above my fortunes, yet my state\(^6\) is well.
I am a gentleman.

OLIVIA Get you to your lord.
I cannot love him. Let him send no more,
Unless, perchance,\(^9\) you come to me again
To tell me how he takes it. Fare you well.
I thank you for your pains. [Offering a purse] Spend this for me.

VIOLA I am no fee'd post,\(^9\) lady. Keep your purse.
My master, not myself, lacks recompense.
Love make his heart of flint that you shall love,\(^5\)
And let your fervor, like my master's, be Placed in contempt. Farewell, fair cruelty.

OLIVIA "What is your parentage?"
'Above my fortunes, yet my state is well.
I am a gentleman.' I'll be sworn thou art.
'Thy tongue, thy face, thy limbs, actions, and spirit
Do give thee five-fold blazon.\(^6\) Not too fast. Soft,\(^6\) soft—
Unless the master were the man.\(^7\) How now?
Even so quickly may one catch the plague?
Methinks I feel this youth's perfections
With an invisible and subtle stealth
To creep in at mine eyes. Well, let it be.
What ho, Malvolio.

Enter MALVOLIO

MALVOLIO Here, madam, at your service.

OLIVIA Run after that same peevish messenger
The County's\(^6\) man. He left this ring behind him,
Would 1° or not. Tell him I'll none of it.
Desire him not to flatter with\(^6\) his lord,
Nor hold him up with hopes. I am not for him.
If that the youth will come this way tomorrow,
I'll give him reasons for't. Hie thee," Malvolio.

MALVOLIO Madam, I will. Exit [at one door]

OLIVIA I do I know not what, and fear to find

Enter ANTONIO and SEBASTIAN

ANTONIO Will you stay no longer, nor will you not that I go with you?

SEBASTIAN By your patience, no. My stars shine darkly¹ over me. The malignancy of my fate² might perhaps dis-temper³ yours, therefore I shall crave of you your leave that I may bear my evils alone. It were a bad recompense for your love to lay any of them on you.

ANTONIO Let me yet know of you whither you are bound.

SEBASTIAN No, sooth,⁴ sir. My determinate⁵ voyage is mere extravagancy.⁶ But I perceive in you so excellent a touch of modesty⁷ that you will not extort from me what I am willing to keep in. Therefore it charges me in manner⁸ the rather to express⁹ myself. You must know of me then, Antonio, my name is Sebastian, which I called Rod-erigo. My father was that Sebastian of Messaline¹⁰ whom I know you have heard of. He left behind him myself and a sister, both born in an¹¹ hour. If the heavens had been pleased, would we had so ended. But you, sir, altered that, for some hour before you took me from the breach¹² of the sea was my sister drowned.

ANTONIO Alas the day!

SEBASTIAN A lady, sir, though it was said she much resem-bled me, was yet of many accounted beautiful. But though I could not with such estimable¹³ wonder over-far believe that, yet thus far I will boldly publish¹⁴ her: she bore a mind that envy¹⁵ could not but call fair. She is drowned already, sir, with salt water, though I seem to drown her remembrance again with more.

ANTONIO Pardon me, sir, your bad entertainment.⁵

SEBASTIAN O good Antonio, forgive me your trouble.

ANTONIO If you will not murder me⁶ for my love, let me be your servant.

SEBASTIAN If you will not undo what you have done—that is, kill him whom you have recovered⁷—desire it not. Fare ye well at once. My bosom is full of kindness,⁸ and I am yet⁹ so near the manners of my mother¹⁰ that upon the least occasion more mine eyes will tell tales of me.¹¹ I am bound to the Count Orsino's court. Farewell. ⁸

1. Forebodingly; unfavorably.
2. Evil influence of the stars; "malignancy" also sig-nifies a deadly disease.
3. Therefore courtesy requires.
4. Possibly Messina, Sicily.
5. Your poor reception; your inhospitality.
6. I.e., murder him by insisting that they part.
7. I.e., so near woman's readiness to weep.
8. I.e., my eye too great a flatterer for my mind.
TWELFTH NIGHT 1.2 / 1095

ANTONIO The gentleness of all the gods go with thee! I have many enemies in Orsino's court. Else would I very shortly see thee there. But come what may, I do adore thee so That danger shall seem sport, and I will go. Exit

Enter VIOLA as Cesario, and MALVOLIO, at several doors

MALVOLIO Were not you ev'n now with the Countess Olivia?

VIOLA Even now, sir, on a moderate pace, I have since arrived but hither. Were not you ev'n now with the Countess Olivia?

MALVOLIO [offering a ring] She returns this ring to you, sir. You might have saved me my pains to have taken it away yourself. She adds, moreover, that you should put your lord into a desperate assurance she will none of him. And one thing more: that you be never so hardy to come again in his affairs, unless it be to report your lord's taking of this. Receive it so.

VIOLA She took the ring of me. I'll none of it.

MALVOLIO Come, sir, you peevishly threw it to her, and her will is it should be so returned.

[He throws the ring down]

VIOLA [picking up the ring] I left no ring with her. What means this lady? Fortune forbid my outside have not charmed her. She made good view of me, indeed so much that straight methought her eyes had lost her tongue, For she did speak in starts, distractedly. She loves me, sure. The cunning of her passion invites me in this churlish messenger. None of my lord's ring! Why, he sent her none. I am the man. If it be so—as 'tis—Poor lady, she were better love a dream! Disguise, I see thou art a wickedness Wherein the pregnant enemy does much. How easy is it for the proper false In women's waxy hearts to set their forms! Alas, our frailty is the cause, not we, For such as we are made of, such we be. How will this fadge? My master loves her dearly, And I, poor monster, fond as much on him, And she, mistaken, seems to dote on me.

2.2 Location: Between Olivia's house and Orsino's palace.

1. Reception of this (rejection).
2. Viola pretends to believe Olivia's story. "Of": from.
3. i.e., the man with whom she has fallen in love.
4. The devil. "Pregnant": teeming with ideas.
5. Handsome, but deceitful (men).
6. To impress their images on women's affections (as a seal stamps its image in wax).
7. For being made of frail flesh, we are frail.
8. Since she is both man and woman.
What will become of this? As I am man,
My state is desperate for my master's love.
As I am woman, now, alas the day,
What thriftless sighs shall poor Olivia breathe!
O time, thou must untangle this, not I.
It is too hard a knot for me t'untie.

[Exit]

Enter SIR TOBY and SIR ANDREW

SIR TOBY  Approach, Sir Andrew. Not to be abed after midnight is to be up betimes, and diligere, thou knowest.

SIR ANDREW  Nay, by my troth, I know not; but I know to be up late is to be up late.

SIR TOBY  A false conclusion. I hate it as an unfilled can.
To be up after midnight and to go to bed then is early; so that to go to bed after midnight is to go to bed betimes. Does not our lives consist of the four elements?

SIR ANDREW  Faith, so they say, but I think it rather consists of eating and drinking.

SIR TOBY  Thou'rt a scholar; let us therefore eat and drink. Marian, I say, a stoup of wine.

Enter [FESTE, the clown]

SIR ANDREW  Here comes the fool, i'faith.

FESTE  How now, my hearts. Did you never see the picture of "we three"?

SIR TOBY  Welcome, ass. Now let's have a catch.

SIR ANDREW  By my troth, the fool has an excellent breast. I had rather than forty shillings I had such a leg, and so sweet a breath to sing, as the fool has. In sooth, thou wast in very gracious fooling last night, when thou spokest of Pigrogromitus, of the Vapians passing the equinoctial of Queubus. 'Twas very good, i'faith. I sent thee sixpence for thy leman. Hadst it?

FESTE  I did impetico thy gratility; for Malvolio's nose is no whipstock. My lady has a white hand, and the Myrmidons are no bottle-ale houses.

SIR ANDREW  Excellent! Why, this is the best fooling, when all is done. Now a song.

SIR TOBY  [to FESTE]  Come on, there is sixpence for you. Let's have a song.

SIR ANDREW  [to FESTE]  There's a testril of me, too. If one knight give a —

FESTE  Would you have a love-song, or a song of good life?

2.3  Location: Olivia's house.

1. Part of a Latin proverb, meaning "to rise at dawn (is most healthy)."
2. The four elements, thought to make up all matter, were earth, air, fire, and water.
3. A trick picture portraying two fools' or ass' heads, the third being the viewer.
4. Round: a simple song for several voices.
6. Comic jargon for "impocket (or impetticoat) your gratuity."
7. Perhaps it is the sheer inscrutability of Feste's foolery that so impresses Sir Andrew (line 28). "Whipstock": handle of a whip. "Bottle-ale houses": cheap taverns.
8. Sir Andrew's version of "testril" (sixpence).
9. In the First Folio, "give a" appears at the end of a justified line; an omission is possible.
A love-song, a love-song.

Ay, ay. I care not for good life.

O mistress mine, where are you roaming?
O stay and hear, your true love's coming,
That can sing both high and low.
Trip no further, pretty sweeting.
Journeys end in lovers meeting,
Every wise man's son doth know.¹

Excellent good, i'faith.

Good, good.

What is love? 'Tis not hereafter,
Present mirth hath present laughter.
What's to come is still² unsure.
In delay there lies no plenty,
Then come kiss me, sweet and twenty.³
Youth's a stuff will not endure.

A mellifluous voice, as I am true knight.

A contagious breath.²

Very sweet and contagious, i'faith.

To hear by the nose, it is dulcet in contagion.³
But shall we make the welkin⁴ dance indeed? Shall we rouse the night-owl in a catch that will draw three souls out of one weaver?⁵ Shall we do that?

An* you love me, let's do't. I am dog* at a catch.

By'r Lady, sir, and some dogs will catch well.

Most certain. Let our catch be "Thou knave,"

"Hold thy peace, thou knave,"骑士. I shall be constrained in't to call thee knave, knight.

'Tis not the first time I have constrained one to call me knave. Begin, fool. It begins "Hold thy peace."

I shall never begin if I hold my peace.

'Good, i'faith. Come, begin.

[They sing the] catch.

What a caterwauling do you keep here! If my lady have not called up her steward Malvolio and bid him turn you out of doors, never trust me.

My lady's a Cathayan,⁶ we are politicians,⁶ Mal-volio's a Peg-o'-Ramsey,' and 'Three merry men be we.'
Am not I consanguineous?⁷ Am I not of her blood? Tilly-

¹ The words of the song are not certainly Shakespere's; they fit the tune of an instrumental piece printed in Thomas Morley's First Book of Consort Lessons (1599). "Wise man's son": wise men were thought to have foolish sons.
² Catchy voice; with a play on "disease-causing air.”
³ If one could hear through the nose, the sound would be sweetly ("dulcet") infectious.
⁴ Weavers were traditionally addicted to psalm singing, so to move them with popular catches would be a great triumph. Music was said to be able to draw the soul from the body.
⁵ The words of the catch are "Hold thy peace, I prithee hold thy peace, thou knave.” Each singer repeatedly calls the others knaves and tells them to stop singing.
⁶ Chinese; but also ethnocentric slang for "trickster" or "cheat."
⁷ Name of a dance and popular song; here, used con-temptuously.
⁸ A blood relative (of Olivia’s). "Three . . . we": refrain of a popular song.
vally—"lady! "There dwelt a man in Babylon, lady, lady."

FESTE  Beshrew me, the knight's in admirable fooling.

SIR ANDREW  Ay, he does well enough if he be disposed, and so do I, too. He does it with a better grace, but I do it more natural.¹

SIR TOBY  "O' the twelfth day of December"—

MARIA  For the love o' God, peace.

Enter MALVOLIO

MALVOLIO  My masters, are you mad? Or what are you? Have you no wit,² manners, nor honesty,³ but to gabble like tinkers at this time of night? Do ye make an alehouse of my lady's house, that ye squeak out your coziers'⁴ catches without any mitigation⁵ of voice? Is there no respect of place, persons, nor time in you?

SIR TOBY  We did keep time, sir, in our catches. Sneck up!°

MALVOLIO  Sir Toby, I must be round with you. My lady bade me tell you that though she harbors you as her kinsman she's nothing allied to your disorders. If you can separate yourself and your misdemeanors you are welcome to the house. If not, an it would please you to take leave of her she is very willing to bid you farewell.

SIR TOBY  "Farewell, dear heart, since I must needs be gone.'

MARIA  Nay, good Sir Toby.

FESTE  "His eyes do show his days are almost done.'

MALVOLIO  Is't even so?

SIR TOBY  "But I will never die."

FESTE  "Sir Toby, there you lie."

MALVOLIO  This is much credit to you.

SIR TOBY  "Shall I bid him go?"

FESTE  "What an if you do?" ²

SIR TOBY  "Shall I bid him go, and spare not?"

FESTE  "O no, no, no, no, you dare not."

SIR TOBY  Out o' tune, sir, ye lie. [To MALVOLIO] Art any more than a steward? Dost thou think because thou art virtuous there shall be no more cakes and ale?⁵

FESTE  Yes, by Saint Anne, and ginger² shall be hot i'th' mouth, too.

SIR TOBY  Thou'rt i'th' right. [To MALVOLIO] Go, sir, rub your chain with crumbs. [To MARIA] A stoup of wine, Maria.

MALVOLIO  Mistress Mary, if you prized my lady's favor at any thing more than contempt you would not give

---

9. The opening and refrain of a popular song.
1. Effortlessly; but unconsciously playing on the sense of natural as "fool" or "idiot."
2. Snatch of a ballad; or possibly a drunken version of "twelfth day of Christmas," that is, Twelfth Night.
3. Without any abating or softening.
4. Part of another song that Sir Toby and Feste adapt for the occasion.
5. Traditionally associated with church festivals and therefore disliked by Puritans.
6. Used to spice ale. Saint Anne was the mother of the Virgin; the oath would be offensive to Puritans, who attacked her cult.
7. Clean your steward's chain; mind your own business.
means for this uncivil rule. She shall know of it, by this hand.

Maria: Go shake your ears.

Sir Andrew: 'Twere as good a deed as to drink when a man's a-hungry to challenge him the field and then to break promise with him, and make a fool of him.

Sir Toby: Do't, knight. I'll write thee a challenge, or I'll deliver thy indignation to him by word of mouth.

Maria: Sweet Sir Toby, be patient for tonight. Since the youth of the Count's was today with my lady she is much out of quiet. For Monsieur Malvolio, let me alone with him. If I do not gull him into a nayword and make him a common recreation, do not think I have wit enough to lie straight in my bed. I know I can do it.

Sir Toby: Possess us, possess us, tell us something of him.

Maria: Marry, sir, sometimes he is a kind of puritan.

Sir Andrew: O, if I thought that I'd beat him like a dog.

Sir Toby: What, for being a puritan? Thy exquisite reason, dear knight.

Sir Andrew: I have no exquisite reason for't, but I have reason good enough.

Maria: The dev'l a puritan that he is, or anything constantly but a time-pleaser, an affectioned ass that cons state without book and utters it by great swathes; the best persuaded of himself, so crammed, as he thinks, with excellencies, that it is his grounds of faith that all that look on him love him; and on that vice in him will my revenge find notable cause to work.

Sir Toby: What wilt thou do?

Maria: I will drop in his way some obscure epistles of love, wherein by the color of his beard, the shape of his leg, the manner of his gait, the expression of his eye, forehead, and complexion, he shall find himself most feelingly personated. I can write very like my lady your niece; on a forgotten matter we can hardly make distinction of our hands.

Sir Toby: Excellent, I smell a device.

Sir Andrew: I have't in my nose too.

Sir Toby: He shall think by the letters that thou wilt drop that they come from my niece, and that she's in love with him.

Maria: My purpose is indeed a horse of that color.

Sir Andrew: And your horse now would make him an ass.

Maria: Ass! I doubt not.

Sir Andrew: O, 'twill be admirable.

Maria: Sport royal, I warrant you. I know my physic will

8. Teste plays no further part in this scene. This is the suggested exit for him.
9. If I do not trick ("gull") him into a byword (for "dope").
1. Could mean "morally strict and censorious," as well as "a follower of the Puritan religious faith."
2. Memorizes dignified and high-flown language and utters it in great sweeps (like hay falling under a scythe).
3. Having the highest opinion of himself.
work with him. I will plant you two—and let the fool make a third—where he shall find the letter. Observe his construction of it. For this night, to bed, and dream on the event. Farewell. Exit Toby.

Toby: Good night, Penthesilea.

Andrew: Before me, she's a good wench.

Toby: She's a beagle true bred, and one that adores me. What o' that?

Andrew: I was adored once, too.

Toby: Let's to bed, knight. Thou hadst need send for more money.

Andrew: If I cannot recover your niece, I am a foul way out.

Toby: Send for money, knight. If thou hast her not i'th' end, call me cut.

Andrew: If I do not, never trust me, take it how you will.

Toby: Come, come, I'll go burn some sack, 'tis too late to go to bed now. Come knight, come knight. Exeunt

2.4

Enter Duke, Viola [as Cesario], Curio, and others

Orsino: Give me some music. Now good morrow, friends. Now good Cesario, but that piece of song, That old and antic song we heard last night. Methought it did relieve my passion much, More than light airs and recollected terms Of these most brisk and giddy-paced times. Come, but one verse.

Curio: He is not here, so please your lordship, that should sing it.

Orsino: Who was it?

Curio: Feste the jester, my lord, a fool that the lady Olivia's father took much delight in. He is about the house.

Orsino: Seek him out, and play the tune the while. [Exeunt Curio]

Music plays

[To Viola] Come hither, boy. If ever thou shalt love, In the sweet pangs of it remember me; For such as I am, all true lovers are, Unstaid and skittish in all motions else Save in the constant image of the creature That is beloved. How dost thou like this tune?

Viola: It gives a very echo to the seat

Where love is throned.

Orsino: Thou dost speak masterly.

Viola: My life upon't, young though thou art thine eye

4. Queen of the Amazons (a joke about Maria's small size).
5. On my soul (a mild oath).
6. A dock-tailed horse; also, slang for "gelding" or for "female genitals."
7. I'll go warm and spice some Spanish wine.
2.4 Location: Orsino's palace.
1. I.e., it reflects back to the heart.
Hath stayed upon some favor that it loves.
Hath it not, boy?
Viola
A little, by your favor.

Orsino
What kind of woman is't?
Viola
Of your complexion.

Orsino
She is not worth thee then. What years, 'faith?
Viola
About your years, my lord.

Orsino
Too old, by heaven. Let still the woman take
An elder than herself. So wears she to him;
So sways she level in her husband's heart.
For, boy, however we do praise ourselves,
Our fancies are more giddy and unfirm,
More longing, wavering, sooner lost and worn,
Than women's are.

Viola
I think it well, my lord.

Orsino
Then let thy love be younger than thyself,
Or thy affection cannot hold the bent;
For women are as roses, whose fair flower
Being once displayed, doth fall that very hour.

Viola
And so they are. Alas that they are so:
To die even when they to perfection grow.

Enter Curio and [Feste, the clown]

Orsino [to Feste]
O fellow, come, the song we had last night.
Mark it, Cesario, it is old and plain.
The spinsters, and the knitters in the sun,
And the free maids that weave their thread with bones,
Do use to chant it. It is silly sooth,
And dallies with the innocence of love,
Like the old age.

Feste
Are you ready, sir?

Orsino
I prithee, sing.

Music

Feste [sings]
Come away, come away death,
And in sad cypress let me be laid.
Fie away, fie away breath,
I am slain by a fair cruel maid.
My shroud of white, stuck all with yew,
O prepare it.
My part of death no one so true
Did share it.

Not a flower, not a flower sweet
On my black coffin let there be strewn.
Not a friend, not a friend greet
My poor corpse, where my bones shall be thrown.

A thousand thousand sighs to save,
Lay me O where

2. So does she balance (influence and affection).
3. Cannot remain at full stretch (like the tautness of a bowstring).
4. Spools made from bone on which lace (called "bone lace") was woven.
5. Cypress-wood coffin. Like yews, cypresses were emblematic of mourning.
6. I.e., no one has died so true to love as I.
Sad true lover never find my grave,
To weep there.

ORSINO [giving money] There’s for thy pains.

FESTE No pains, sir. I take pleasure in singing, sir.

ORSINO I'll pay thy pleasure then.

FESTE Truly, sir, and pleasure will be paid, one time or another.

ORSINO Give me now leave to leave thee.

FESTE Now the melancholy god protect thee, and the tailor make thy doublet of changeable taffeta, for thy mind is a very opal. I would have men of such constancy put to sea, that their business might be everything, and their intent everywhere, for that’s it that always makes a good voyage of nothing. Farewell.

Exit

ORSINO Let all the rest give place:

[Exeunt CURIO and others]

Once more, Cesario,

Get thee to yon same sovereign cruelty.
Tell her my love, more noble than the world,
Prizes not quantity of dirty lands.
The parts that fortune hath bestowed upon her
Tell her I hold as giddily as fortune;
But tis that miracle and queen of gems
That nature pranks her in attracts my soul.

VIOLA But if she cannot love you, sir?

ORSINO I cannot be so answered.

VIOLA Sooth, but you must.

ORSINO There is no woman’s sides

Can hide the beating of so strong a passion
As love doth give my heart: no woman’s heart
So big, to hold so much. They lack retention.
Alas, their love may be called appetite,
No motion of the liver, but the palate,
That suffer surfeit, cloyment, and revolt.
But mine is all as hungry as the sea,
And can digest as much. Make no compare
Between that love a woman can bear me
And that I owe Olivia.

VIOLA Ay, but I know—

ORSINO What dost thou know?

VIOLA Too well what love women to men may owe.

7. Saturn (thought to control the melancholic).
8. Shot silk, whose color changes with the angle of vision.
9. An iridescent gemstone that changes color depending on the angle from which it is seen.
1. I.e., this fickle lack of direction can make a voyage in the notoriously changeful sea carefree and consonant with one’s desires.
2. Lightly (fortune being fickle).
3. Appetite, like the palate, is easily sated and thus lacks the emotional depth and complexity of real love, whose seat is the liver.
In faith, they are as true of heart as we.
My father had a daughter loved a man
As it might be, perhaps, were I a woman
I should your lordship.
ORSINO  And what's her history?
VIOLA  A blank, my lord. She never told her love,
       But let concealment, like a worm i'th' bud,
       Feed on her damask cheek. She pined in thought,
       And with a green and yellow melancholy
       She sat like patience on a monument,
Smiling at grief. Was not this love indeed?
ORSINO  But died thy sister of her love, my boy?
VIOLA  I am all the daughters of my father's house,
       And all the brothers too; and yet I know not.
ORSINO  Ay, that's the theme,
       To her in haste. Give her this jewel. Say
       My love can give no place, bide no denay.
Exeunt [severally]

2.5
Enter SIR TOBY, SIR ANDREW, and FABIAN

SIR TOBY  Come thy ways. Signor Fabian.
FABIAN  Nay, I'll come. If I lose a scruple of this sport let me be boiled to death with melancholy.
SIR TOBY  Would'st thou not be glad to have the niggardly rascally sheep-biter come by some notable shame?
FABIAN  I would exult, man. You know he brought me out o' favour with my lady about a bear-baiting here.
SIR TOBY  To anger him we'll have the bear again, and we will fool him black and blue, shall we not, Sir Andrew?
SIR ANDREW  An' we do not, it is pity of our lives.

15
SIR TOBY  Here comes the little villain. How now, my metal of India?
MARIA  Get ye all three into the box-tree. Malvolio's coming down this walk. He has been yonder i' the sun practising behavior to his own shadow this half-hour. Observe him, for the love of mockery, for I know this letter will make a contemplative idiot of him. Close, in the name of jesting!

[The men hide, MARIA places the letter]
Lie thou there, for here comes the trout that must be caught with tickling.

Enter MALVOLIO

MALVOLIO 'Tis but fortune, all is fortune. Maria once told me she did affect me, and I have heard herself come thus near, that should she fancy it should be one of my complexion. Besides, she uses me with a more exalted respect than anyone else that follows her. What should I think on't?

SIR TOBY Here's an overweening rogue.

FABIAN O, peace! Contemplation makes a rare turkey-cock of him—how he jets under his advanced plumes!

SIR ANDREW 'Slight, I could so beat the rogue.

SIR TOBY Peace, I say.

MALVOLIO To be Count Malvolio!

SIR TOBY Ah, rogue.

SIR ANDREW Pistol him, pistol him.

SIR TOBY Peace, peace.

MALVOLIO There is example for't: the Lady of the Strachey married the yeoman of the wardrobe.

SIR ANDREW Fie on him, Jezebel.

FABIAN O peace, now he's deeply in. Look how imagination blows him.

MALVOLIO Having been three months married to her, sitting in my state—

SIR TOBY O for a stone-bow to hit him in the eye!

MALVOLIO Calling my officers about me, in my branched velvet gown, having come from a day-bed where I have left Olivia sleeping—

SIR TOBY Fire and brimstone!

FABIAN O peace, peace.

MALVOLIO And then to have the humor of state and—after a demure travel of regard, telling them I know my place, as I would they should do theirs—to ask for my kinsman Toby.

SIR TOBY Bolts and shackles!

FABIAN O peace, peace, peace, now, now.

MALVOLIO Seven of my people with an obedient start make out for him. I frown the while, and perchance wind up my watch, or play with my—[touching his chain] some rich jewel. Toby approaches; curtsies there to me.

SIR TOBY Shall this fellow live?

5. Flattery; trout can supposedly be caught by stroking them under the gills.
6. Proverbially proud; they display their feathers like peacocks.
8. Perhaps an allusion to a noblewoman who had married her manservant, but there is no certain identification. "Yeoman of the wardrobe": keeper of clothes and linen.
9. Biblical allusion to the proud wife of Ahab, king of Israel.
1. Catapult, or crossbow for stones.
2. Embroidered with branch patterns.
3. To adopt the grand air of exalted greatness.
4. After casting my eyes gravely about the room.
5. Malvolio momentarily forgets that he will have abandoned his steward's chain; watches were an expensive luxury at this time.
Though our silence be drawn from us with cars, yet peace.

I extend my hand to him thus, quenching my familiar smile with an austere regard—

And does not Toby take you a blow o' the lips, then?

Saying "Cousin Toby, my fortunes, having cast me on your niece, give me this prerogative of speech"—

"You must amend your drunkenness."

What, what!

Nay, patience, or we break the sinews of our plot.

"Besides, you waste the treasure of your time with a foolish knight."

That's me, I warrant you.

"One Sir Andrew."

I knew twas I, for many do call me fool.

[seeing the letter] What employment have we here?

Now is the woodcock near the gin.

O peace, and the spirit of humors intimate reading aloud to him.

By my life, this is my lady's hand. These be her very c's, her u's, and her t's, and thus makes she her great P's. It is in contempt of question her hand.

Her c's, her u's, and her t's? Why that?

"To the unknown beloved, this, and my good wishes." Her very phrases! [Opening the letter]

By your leave, wax—soft, and the impressure her Lucrece, with which she uses to seal—'tis my lady. To whom should this be?

This wins him, liver and all.

"Jove knows I love, But who? Lips do not move, No man must know."

"No man must know." What follows? The numbers altered.

"No man must know." If this should be thee, Malvolio?

Marry, hang thee, brock.

"I may command where I adore, But silence like a Lucrece knife With bloodless stroke my heart doth gore. M.O.A.I, doth sway my life."

6. A prisoner might be tied to two cars or chariots ("cars") and pulled by horses in opposite directions to extort information.
7. Snare. The woodcock is a proverbially foolish bird.
8. And may a capricious impulse suggest.
9. Malvolio unwittingly spells out "cut," slang for female genitals; the meaning is compounded by "great P's." In fact, these letters do not appear on the outside of the letter.

http://englishworld2011.wordpress.com/
A fustian riddle.

Excellent wench, say I.

"M.O.A.I. doth sway my life." Nay, but first let me see, let me see, let me see.

What dish o' poison has she dressed him!

And with what wing the staniel checks at it!

"I may command where I adore." Why, she may command me. I serve her, she is my lady. Why, this is evident to any formal capacity. There is no obstruction in this. And the end—what should that alphabetical position portend? If I could make that resemble something in me. Softly—"M.O.A.I."

O ay, make up that, he is now at a cold scent.

Sowter will cry upon't for all this, though it be as rank as a fox.

"M." Malvolio—"M"—why, that begins my name.

Did not I say he would work it out? The cur is excellent at faults.

"M." But then there is no consonancy in the sequel. That suffers under probation. "A" should follow, but "O" does.

And "O" shall end, I hope.

Ay, or I'll cudgel him, and make him cry "O!"

And then "I" comes behind.

Ay, an you had any eye behind you you might see more detraction at your heels than fortunes before you.

"M.O.A.I." This simulation is not as the former; and yet to crush this a little, it would bow to me, for every one of these letters are in my name. Soft, here follows prose: "If this fall into thy hand, revolve. In my stars I am above thee, but be not afraid of greatness. Some are born great, some achieve greatness, and some have greatness thrust upon 'em. Thy fates open their hands, let thy blood and spirit embrace them, and to inure thyself to what thou art like to be, cast thy humble slough, and appear fresh. Be opposite with a kinsman, surly with servants. Let thy tongue tang arguments of state; put thyself into the trick of singularity. She thus advises thee that sighs for thee. Remember who commended thy yellow stockings, and wished to see thee ever cross-gartered. I say remember, go to, thou art made if thou desirest to be so; if not, let me see thee a steward.
still, the fellow of servants, and not worthy to touch Fortune's fingers. Farewell. She that would alter services with thee,

The Fortunate-Unhappy.*

Daylight and champaign discovers not more. This is open. I will be proud, I will read politic authors, I will baffle Sir Toby, I will wash off gross acquaintance, I will be point-device the very man. I do not now fool myself, to let imagination jade me; for every reason excites to this, that my lady loves me. She did commend my yellow stockings of late, she did praise my leg, being cross-gartered, and in this she manifests herself to my love, and with a kind of injunction drives me to these habits of her liking. I thank my stars, I am happy. I will be strange, stout, in yellow stockings, and cross-gartered, even with the swiftness of putting on. Jove and my stars be praised. Here is yet a postscript. "Thou canst not choose but know who I am. If thou entertainest my love, let it appear in thy smiling, thy smiles become thee well. Therefore in my presence still smile, dear my sweet, I prithee." Jove, I thank thee. I will smile, I will do everything that thou wilt have me.

[FABIAN, SIR TOBY, SIR ANDREW, and FABIAN come from hiding]

FABIAN I will not give my part of this sport for a pension of thousands to be paid from the Sophy.
SIR TOBY I could marry this wench for this device.
SIR ANDREW So could I, too.
SIR TOBY And ask no other dowry with her but such another jest.

Enter MARIA

SIR ANDREW Nor I neither.
FABIAN Here comes my noble gull-catcher.*
SIR TOBY [to MARIA] Wilt thou set thy foot o' my neck?
SIR ANDREW [to MARIA] Or o' mine either?
SIR TOBY [to MARIA] Shall I play my freedom at tray-trip, and become thy bondslave?
SIR ANDREW [to MARIA] I'faith, or I either?
SIR TOBY [to MARIA] Why, thou hast put him in such a dream that when the image of it leaves him, he must run mad.
MARIA Nay, but say true, does it work upon him?
SIR TOBY Like aqua vitae with a midwife.
MARIA If you will then see the fruits of the sport, mark his first approach before my lady. He will come to her in yellow stockings, and 'tis a color she abhors, and cross-gartered, a fashion she detests; and he will smile upon them.

Enter VIOLA [as Cesario] and [FESTE, the] clown [with pipe and tabor]¹

VIOLA Save thee, friend, and thy music. Dost thou live by thy tabor?

FESTE NO, sir. I live by* the church.

VIOLA Art thou a churchman?

FESTE No such matter, sir. I do live by² the church for I do live at my house, and my house doth stand by the church.

VIOLA So thou mayst say the king lies by³ a beggar if a beggar dwell near him, or the church stands⁴ by thy tabor if thy tabor stand by the church.

FESTE You have said, sir. To see this age!—A sentence⁵ is but a cheverel⁶ glove to a good wit, how quickly the wrong side may be turned outward.

VIOLA Nay, that's certain. They that dally nicely⁷ with words may quickly make them wanton.⁴

FESTE I would therefore my sister had had no name, sir.

VIOLA Why, man?

FESTE Why, sir, her name's a word, and to dally with that word might make my sister wanton. But indeed, words are very rascals since bonds disgraced them.⁵

VIOLA Thy reason, man?

FESTE Troth, sir, I can yield you none without words, and words are grown so false I am loath to prove reason with them.

VIOLA I warrant thou art a merry fellow, and carest for nothing.

FESTE Not so, sir, I do care for something; but in my conscience, sir, I do not care for you. If that be to care for nothing, sir, I would it would make you invisible.

VIOLA Art not thou the Lady Olivia's fool?

FESTE No indeed, sir, the Lady Olivia has no folly, she will keep no fool, sir, till she be married, and fools are as like husbands as pilchards⁶ are to herrings—the husband's

3. A notorious object of contempt.
3.1 Location: Olivia's garden.
1. The dialogue demands only a tabor, but jesters commonly played a pipe with one hand while tapping a tabor (small drum, hanging from the neck) with the other.
2. I do earn my keep with.
3. Lives near; punning on "goes to bed with."
4. Equivocal; Viola puns on the sense "unchaste."
5. Since legal contracts replaced a man's word of honor, ("Bonds" plays on "sworn statements" and "letters," betokening criminality.)
6. Small fish similar to herring.
the bigger. I am indeed not her fool, but her corrupter of words.

Viola I saw thee late at the Count Orsino’s.

Feste Foolery, sir, does walk about the orb like the sun, it shines everywhere. I would be sorry, sir, but the fool should be as oft with your master as with my mistress. I think I saw your wisdom there.

Viola Nay, an thou pass upon me, I’ll no more with thee.

[giving money] Hold, there’s expenses for thee.

Feste Now Jove in his next commodity of hair send thee a beard.

Viola By my troth I’ll tell thee, I am almost sick for one, though I would not have it grow on my chin. Is thy lady within?

Feste Would not a pair of these have bred, sir?

Viola Yes, being kept together and put to use.

Feste I would play Lord Pandarus of Phrygia, sir, to bring a Cressida to this Troilus.

Viola [giving money] I understand you, sir, ’tis well begged.

Feste The matter I hope is not great, sir; begging but a beggar—Cressida was a beggar. My lady is within, sir. I will conster to them whence you come. Who you are and what you would are out of my welkin—I might say “element,” but the word is over-worn.

Exit

Viola This fellow is wise enough to play the fool, and to do that well craves a kind of wit. He must observe their mood on whom he jests, the quality of persons, and the time, and, like the haggard, check at every feather that comes before his eye. This is a practice skill as full of labor as a wise man’s art, for folly that he wisely shows is fit, but wise men, folly-fall’n, quite taint their wit.

Enter Sir Toby and [Sir] Andrew

Sir Toby Save you, gentleman.

Viola And you, sir.

Sir Andrew Dieu vous garde, monsieur.

Viola Et vous aussi, voire serviteur.

7. World; the sun was still believed to circle the earth.

8. Unless (“but”) Feste should visit his foolery upon others, but also unless Orsino should be called “fool” as often as Olivia.

1. If you express an opinion of; if you joke about.

2. Almost eager for a beard; almost pining for a man (Orsino).

3. Would not a pair of coins such as these have multiplied (with possible pun on “be enough to buy bread”).

4. Invented to produce interest.

5. Go-between or “pander,” since Feste needs a “mate” for his coin(s). Shakespeare dramatizes the story in _Troilus and Cressida_.

6. In asking for the “mate” to his Troilus coin, Feste draws on a version of the story of Troilus and Cressida in which Cressida became a leprous beggar.

7. “Welkin” (sky or air) is synonymous with one meaning of “element,” used in what Feste regards as the overworn phrase “out of my element.”

8. I.e., as a wild hawk (“haggard”) must be sensitive to its prey’s disposition.

9. For folly that he skilfully displays is proper.

1. Discredit; spell.

2. God protect you (French).

3. And you also. (I am) your servant. (Sir Andrew’s awkward reply demonstrates that his French is limited.)
SIR ANDREW  I hope, sir, you are, and I am yours.
SIR TOBY  Will you encounter the house? My niece is desirous you should enter if your trade be to her.
VIOLA  I am bound to your niece, sir: I mean she is the first of my voyage.
SIR TOBY  Taste your legs, sir, put them to motion.
VIOLA  My legs do better understand me, sir, than I understand what you mean by bidding me taste my legs.
SIR TOBY  I mean to go, sir, to enter.
VIOLA  I will answer you with gait and entrance.

Enter OLIVIA, and [MARIA, her] gentlewoman
But we are prevented. [To OLIVIA] Most excellent accomplished lady, the heavens rain odors on you.
SIR ANDREW [to SIR TOBY] That youth’s a rare courtier; an excellent “rain odors”—well.
VIOLA  My matter hath no voice, lady, but to your own most pregnant and vouchsafed ear.
SIR ANDREW [to SIR TOBY] “Odors,” “pregnant,” and “vouchsafed”—I’ll get ’em all three all ready.5
OLIVIA  Let the garden door be shut, and leave me to my hearing. [Exeunt SIR TOBY, SIR ANDREW, and MARIA]
Give me your hand, sir.
VIOLA  My duty, madam, and most humble service.
OLIVIA  What is your name?
VIOLA  Cesario is your servant’s name, fair princess.
OLIVIA  My servant, sir? ’Twas never merry world since lowly feigning was called compliment. You’re servant to the Count Orsino, youth.
VIOLA  And he is yours, and his must needs be yours. Your servant’s servant is your servant, madam.
OLIVIA  For him, I think not on him. For his thoughts, Would they were blanks rather than filled with me.
VIOLA  Madam, I come to whet your gentle thoughts On his behalf.
OLIVIA  O by your leave, I pray you. I bade you never speak again of him; But would you undertake another suit, I had rather hear you to solicit that Than music from the spheres.3
VIOLA  Dear lady—
OLIVIA  Give me leave, beseech you. I did send, After the last enchantment you did here, A ring in chase of you. So did I abuse Myself, my servant, and I fear me you.0 Under your hard construction must I sit, To force that on you in a shameful cunning for forcing Which you knew none of yours. What might you think?

4. Pedantry for “enter” (Toby mocks Viola’s courtly language).
5. I.e., to commit to memory for later use.
6. The proverbial “Things have never been the same.”
7. Permit me to interrupt (polite expression).
8. Exquisite music thought to be made by the planets as they moved, but inaudible to mortal ears.
Have you not set mine honor at the stake
And baited it with all th'unmuzzled thoughts¹
That tyrannous heart can think? To one of your receiving²
Enough is shown. A cypress,³ not a bosom,
Hides my heart. So let me hear you speak.

VIOLA I pity you.
OLIVIA That's a degree to° love.
VIOLA No, not a grece,° for 'tis a vulgar proof⁰
That very oft we pity enemies.
OLIVIA Why then, methinks 'tis time to smile again.³
0 world, how apt° the poor are to be proud!
If one should be a prey, how much the better
To fall before the lion than the wolf⁴

Clock strikes
The clock upbraids⁵ me with the waste of time.
Be not afraid, good youth, I will not have you;
And yet when wit and youth is come to harvest
Your wife is like to reap a proper⁶ man.
There lies your way, due west.

VIOLA Then westward ho!⁵
Grace and good disposition⁰ attend your ladyship.
You'll nothing, madam, to my lord by me?
OLIVIA Stay. I prithee tell me what thou⁶ think'st of me.
VIOLA That you do think you are not what you are.⁷
OLIVIA If I think so, I think the same of you.⁸
VIOLA Then think you right, I am not what I am.
OLIVIA I would you were as I would have you be.
VIOLA Would it be better, madam, than I am?
    I wish it might, for now I am your fool.⁹

OLIVIA [aside] O, what a deal of scorn looks beautiful
In the contempt and anger of his lip!
A murd'rous guilt shows not itself more soon
Than love that would seem hid. Love's night is noon.¹
[To VIOLA] Cesario, by the roses of the spring,
By maidhood, honor, truth, and everything,
I love thee so that, maugre⁷ all thy pride,
Nor° wit nor reason can my passion hide.
Do not extort thy reasons from this clause,
For that⁷ I woo, thou therefore hast no cause.²
But rather reason thus with reason fetter:³
Love sought is good, but given unsought, is better.

1. As bears that were tied up at the stake and baited with dogs.
2. Veil of transparent silken gauze; the cypress tree was also emblematic of mourning.
3. Time to discard love's melancholy.
4. I.e., if I had to fall prey to love, it would have been better to succumb to the noble Orsino than to the hardhearted Cesario.
5. Thames watermen's cry to attract London passengers for the court at Westminster.
6. Olivia changes from "you" to the familiar "thou."
7. That you think you are in love with a man, but you are mistaken.
8. Olivia may think that Cesario has suggested that she is mad; or she may imply that she thinks that Cesario, despite his subordinate position, is noble.
9. You have made a fool of me.
10. Love, though attempting secrecy, still shines out as bright as day.
11. Do not take the position that just because I woo you, you are under no obligation to reciprocate.
12. But instead constrain your reasoning with this argument.
VIOLA

By innocence I swear, and by my youth,
I have one heart, one bosom, and one truth,
And that no woman has, nor never none
Shall mistress be of it save I alone.
And so adieu, good madam. Never more
Will I my master’s tears to you deplore.

OLIVIA

Yet come again, for thou perhaps mayst move
That heart which now abhors, to like his love.

Exeunt [severally]

Enter SIR TOBY, SIR ANDREW, and FABIAN

SIR ANDREW No, faith, I’ll not stay a jot longer.
SIR TOBY Thy reason, dear venom, give thy reason.
FABIAN You must needs yield your reason, Sir Andrew.
SIR ANDREW Marry, I saw your niece do more favors to the Count’s servingman than ever she bestowed upon me.
I saw’t i’th’ orchard.
SIR TOBY Did she see thee the while, old boy? Tell me that.
SIR ANDREW As plain as I see you now.
FABIAN This was a great argument of love in her toward you.
SIR ANDREW ‘Slight, will you make an ass o’ me?
FABIAN I will prove it legitimate, sir, upon the oaths of judgment and reason.
SIR TOBY And they have been grand-jurymen since before
Noah was a sailor.
FABIAN She did show favor to the youth in your sight only to exasperate you, to awake your dormouse valor, to put fire in your heart and brimstone in your liver. You should then have accosted her, and with some excellent jests, fire-new from the mint, you should have banged the youth into dumbness. This was looked for at your hand, and this was balked. The double gilt of this opportunity you let time wash off, and you are now sailed into the north of my lady’s opinion, where you will hang like an icicle on a Dutchman’s beard unless you do redeem it by some laudable attempt either of valor or policy.

SIR ANDREW An’t be any way, it must be with valor, for if policy I hate. I had as lief be a Brownist as a politician.
SIR TOBY Why then, build me thy fortunes upon the basis of valor. Challenge me the Count’s youth to fight with him, hurt him in eleven places. My niece shall take note of it; and assure thyself, there is no love-broker in the world can more prevail in man’s commendation with woman than report of valor.

3.2 Location: Olivia’s house.
1. Grand-jurymen were supposed to be good judges of evidence.
2. Twice gilded, and as such, Sir Andrew’s “golden opportunity” to prove both love and valor.
3. Into Olivia’s cold disfavor.
4. Perhaps an allusion to William Barentz, who led an expedition to the Arctic in 1596—97.
5. Schemer. A Brownist was a member of the Puritan sect founded in 1581 by Robert Browne.
FABIAN. There is no way but this, Sir Andrew.

SIR ANDREW. Will either of you bear me a challenge to him?

SIR TOBY. Go, write it in a martial hand, be curst and brief. It is no matter how witty so it be eloquent and full of invention. Taunt him with the license of ink. If thou "thou'st" him some thrice, it shall not be amiss, and as many lies as will lie in thy sheet of paper, although the sheet were big enough for the bed of Ware, in England, set 'em down, go about it. Let there be gall enough in thy ink; though thou write with a goose-pen, no matter. About it.

SIR ANDREW. Where shall I find you?

SIR TOBY. We'll call thee at the cubiculo. Go.

Exit SIR ANDREW.

FABIAN. This is a dear manikin to you, Sir Toby.

SIR TOBY. I have been dear to him, lad, some two thousand strong or so.

FABIAN. We shall have a rare letter from him; but you'll not deliver't.

SIR TOBY. Never trust me then; and by all means stir on the youth to an answer. I think oxen and wain-ropes cannot hale them together. For Andrew, if he were opened and you find so much blood in his liver as will clog the foot of a flea, I'll eat the rest of th'anatomy.

FABIAN. And his opposite, the youth, bears in his visage no great presage of cruelty.

Enter MARIA.

SIR TOBY. Look where the youngest wren of nine comes.

MARIA. If you desire the spleen, and will laugh yourselves into stitches, follow me. Yon gull Malvolio is turned heathen, a very renegado, for there is no Christian that means to be saved by believing rightly can ever believe such impossible passages of grossness. He's in yellow stockings.

SIR TOBY. And cross-gartered?

MARIA. Most villainously, like a pedant that keeps a school 'th' church. I have dogged him like his murderer. He does obey every point of the letter that I dropped to betray him. He does smile his face into more lines than is in the new map with the augmentation of the Indies.
You have not seen such a thing as 'tis. I can hardly forbear hurling things at him. I know my lady will strike him. If she do, he'll smile, and take't for a great favor.

SIR TOBY Come bring us, bring us where he is. Exeunt

3.3

Enter SEBASTIAN and ANTONIO

SEBASTIAN I would not by my will have troubled you, But since you make your pleasure of your pains I will no further chide you.

ANTONIO I could not stay behind you. My desire, More sharp than filed steel, did spur me forth, And not all love to see you—though so much As might have drawn one to a longer voyage— But jealousy what might befall your travel, Being skillless in these parts, which to a stranger, Unguided and unfriended, often prove Rough and unhospitable. My willing love The rather by these arguments of fear Set forth in your pursuit.

SEBASTIAN My kind Antonio,
I can no other answer make but thanks,
And thanks; and ever oft good turns
Are shuffled off with such uncurrent pay.
But were my worth as is my conscience firm,
You should find better dealing. What's to do?
Shall we go see the relics of this town?

ANTONIO Tomorrow, sir. Best first go see your lodging.

SEBASTIAN I am not weary, and 'tis long to night. I pray you let us satisfy our eyes With the memorials and the things of fame That do renown this city.

ANTONIO Would you'd pardon me. I do not without danger walk these streets. Once in a sea-fight 'gainst the Count his galleys I did some service, of such note indeed That were I ta'en here it would scarce be answered.

SEBASTIAN Belike you slew great number of his people.

ANTONIO Th'offense is not of such a bloody nature, Albeit the quality of the time and quarrel Might well have given us bloody argument. It might have since been answered in repaying What we took from them, which for traffic's sake Most of our city did. Only myself stood out, For which if I be latched in this place I shall pay dear.

SEBASTIAN Do not then walk too open.

ANTONIO It doth not fit me. Hold, sir, here's my purse.

3.3 Location: A street scene.

1. Out of currency; worthless.

2. It would be difficult for me to make reparation (and thus my life would be in danger).
In the south suburbs at the Elephant⁰
Is best to lodge. I will bespeak our diet⁰
Whiles you beguile⁰ the time and feed your knowledge
With viewing of the town. There shall you have me.

SEBASTIAN
Why I your purse?

ANTONIO
Haply⁰ your eye shall light upon some toy⁰
You have desire to purchase; and your store⁰
I think is not for idle markets,⁰ sir.

SEBASTIAN
I’ll be your purse-bearer, and leave you
For an hour.

ANTONIO
To th’ Elephant.

SEBASTIAN
I do remember.

Exeunt [severally]

3.4

Enter OLIVIA and MARIA

OLIVIA [aside] I have sent after him, he says he’ll come.

How shall I feast him? What bestow of⁰ him?
For youth is bought more oft than begged or borrowed.¹
I speak too loud.

[To MARIA] Where’s Malvolio? He is sad⁰ and civil,⁰
And suits well for a servant with my fortunes.

Where is Malvolio?

MARIA
He’s coming, madam, but in very strange manner.

He is sure possessed,² madam. (by the devil); insane

OLIVIA
Why, what’s the matter? Does he rave?

MARIA
No, madam, he does nothing but smile. Your ladyship were best to have some guard about you if he come, for sure the man is tainted in’s wits.

OLIVIA
Go call him hither.

[Exit MARIA]

I am as mad as he,

If sad and merry madness equal be.

Enter MALVOLIO [cross-gartered and wearing yellow stockings, with MARIA]

How now, Malvolio?

MALVOLIO
Sweet lady, ho, ho!

OLIVIA
Smil’st thou? I sent for thee upon a sad occasion.⁰

MALVOLIO
Sad, lady? I could be sad. This does make some obstruction in the blood, this cross-gartering, but what of that? If it please the eye of one, it is with me as the very true sonnet¹ is, “Please one, and please all.”²

OLIVIA
Why, how dost thou, man? What is the matter with thee?

MALVOLIO
Not black in my mind, though yellow³ in my legs. It did come to his hands, and commands shall be executed. I think we do know the sweet roman hand.⁰

3. Not large enough to spend on luxuries.
3.4 Location: The garden of Olivia’s house.
1. “Better to buy than to beg or borrow” was proverbial.
2. If I please one, I please all I care to please (words of a popular bawdy ballad).
3. Black and yellow bile indicated choleric and melancholic dispositions, respectively. “Black and yellow” was the name of a popular song; to “wear yellow hose” was to be jealous.
OLIVIA  Wilt thou go to bed, Malvolio?
MALVOLIO  [kissing his hand]  To bed? "Ay, sweetheart, and I'll come to thee." 4
OLIVIA  God comfort thee. Why dost thou smile so, and kiss thy hand so oft?
MARIA  How do you, Malvolio?
MALVOLIO  At your request?—yes, nightingales answer daws. 5
MARIA  Why appear you with this ridiculous boldness before my lady?
MALVOLIO  "Be not afraid of greatness"—'twas well writ.
OLIVIA  What meanest thou by that, Malvolio?
MALVOLIO  "Some are born great"—
OLIVIA  Ha?
MALVOLIO  "Some achieve greatness"—
OLIVIA  What sayst thou?
MALVOLIO  "And some have greatness thrust upon them."
OLIVIA  Heaven restore thee.
MALVOLIO  "Remember who commended thy yellow stockings"—
OLIVIA  'Thy yellow stockings'?
MALVOLIO  'And wished to see thee cross-gartered.'
OLIVIA  'Cross-gartered'?
MALVOLIO  'Go to, thou art made, if thou desierest to be

OLIVIA  Am I made?
MALVOLIO  "If not, let me see thee a servant still."
OLIVIA  Why, this is very midsummer madness. 6
Enter a SERVANT
SERVANT  Madam, the young gentleman of the Count Orsino's is returned. I could hardly entreat him back. He attends your ladyship's pleasure.
OLIVIA  I'll come to him.  [Exit SERVANT]

MALVOLIO  O ho, do you come near me now? No worse man than Sir Toby to look to me. This concurs directly with the letter, she sends him on purpose, that I may appear stubborn to him, for she incites me to that in the letter. "Cast thy humble slough," says she, "be opposite with a kinsman, surly with servants, let thy tongue tang arguments of state, put thyself into the trick of singularity," and consequently sets down the manner how, as a sad face, a reverend carriage, a slow tongue, in the habit of some sir of note, and so forth. I have limed her, but

4. In order to cure his madness with sleep.
5. A line from a popular song.
6. Shall I deign to reply to you? Yes, since even the nightingale sings in response to the crowing of the jackdaw.
7. Birds were caught by smearing sticky birdlime on branches.
it is Jove's doing, and Jove make me thankful. And when she went away now, "let this fellow be looked to." Fellow!—not "Malvolio," nor after my degree, but "fellow."
Why, everything adheres together that no dram of a scru-ple, no scruple of a scruple, no obstacle, no incredulous or unsafe circumstance—what can be said?—nothing that can be can come between me and the full prospect of my hopes. Well, Jove, not I, is the doer of this, and he is to be thanked.

Enter [SIR] TOBY, FABIAN, and MARIA

SIR TOBY Which way is he, in the name of sanctity? If all the devils of hell be drawn in little,¹ and Legion² himself possessed him, yet I'll speak to him.

FABIAN Here he is, here he is. [To MALVOLIO] How is't with you, sir? How is't with you, man?

MALVOLIO Go off, I discard you. Let me enjoy my private.³

Gooff.

MARIA Lo, how hollow⁴ the fiend speaks within him. Did not I tell you? Sir Toby, my lady prays you to have a care of him.

MALVOLIO Aha, does she so?

SIR TOBY Go to, go to. Peace, peace, we must deal gently with him. Let me alone.⁵ How do you, Malvolio? How is't with you? What, man, defy⁶ the devil. Consider, he's an enemy to mankind.

MALVOLIO Do you know what you say?

MARIA La⁷ you, an you speak ill of the devil, how he takes it at heart. Pray God he be not bewitched.

FABIAN Carry his water to th' wise woman.³

MARIA Marry, and it shall be done tomorrow morning, if I live. My lady would not lose him for more than I'll say.

MALVOLIO How now, mistress?

MARIA O Lord!

SIR TOBY Prithee hold thy peace, this is not the way. Do you not see you move⁸ him? Let me alone with him.

FABIAN No way but gentleness, gently, gently. The fiend is rough,⁹ and will not be roughly used.

SIR TOBY Why how now, my bawcock? How dost thou, chuck?⁴

MALVOLIO Sir!

SIR TOBY Ay, biddy,⁹ come with me. What, man, 'tis not for gravity⁵ to play at cherry-pit⁶ with Satan. Hang him, for a man of dignity

1. Be contracted into a small space (punning on 'painted in miniature').
2. Alluding to a scene of exorcism in Mark 5:8–9: "For he [Jesus] said unto him, Come out of the man, thou unclean spirit. And he asked him, What is thy name? And he answered saying, My name is Legion: for we are many.'
3. Local healer, 'good witch.' 'Water': urine (for medical diagnosis).
4. A term of endearment, perhaps from chick, chicken. 'Bawcock': fine fellow (from the French beau coq, 'fine bird').
5. A children's game in which cherry stones were thrown into a hole.
6. Dirty coalman (the devil was supposed to be black).
Maria: Get him to say his prayers. Good Sir Toby, get him to pray.

Malvolio: My prayers, minx? No, I warrant you, he will not hear of godliness.

Malvolio: Go hang yourselves, all. You are idle things, I am not of your element. You shall know more hereafter. Exit

Sir Toby: Is't possible?

Fabian: If this were played upon a stage, now, I could condemn it as an improbable fiction.

Sir Toby: His very genius hath taken the infection of the device, man.

Maria: Nay, pursue him now, lest the device take air and taint.

Fabian: Why, we shall make him mad indeed.

Maria: The house will be the quieter.

Sir Toby: Come, we'll have him in a dark room and bound. My niece is already in the belief that he's mad. We may carry it thus for our pleasure and his penance till our very pastime, tired out of breath, prompt us to have mercy on him, at which time we will bring the device to the bar and crown thee for a finder of madmen. But see, but see.

Enter Sir Andrew [with a paper]

Sir Andrew: Here's the challenge, read it. I warrant there's vinegar and pepper in't.

Fabian: Is't so saucy?

Sir Andrew: Ay—is't? I warrant him. Do but read.

Sir Toby: Give me.

[Reads] "Youth, whatsoever thou art, thou art but a scurvy fellow."

Fabian: Good, and valiant.

Sir Toby: "Wonder not, nor admire not in thy mind why I do call thee so, for I will show thee no reason for't."

Fabian: A good note, that keeps you from the blow of the law.

Sir Toby: "Thou comest to the Lady Olivia, and in my sight she uses thee kindly; but thou liest in thy throat, that is not the matter I challenge thee for."

Fabian: Very brief, and to exceeding good sense [aside] -less.

Sir Toby: "I will waylay thee going home, where if it be thy chance to kill me"—

Fabian: Good.
SIR TOBY
"Thou killest me like a rogue and a villain."

FABIAN
Still you keep o’th’ windy side of the law—good.

SIR TOBY
"Fare thee well, and God have mercy upon one of our souls. He may have mercy upon mine, but my hope is better, and so look to thyself. Thy friend as thou usest him, and thy sworn enemy, Andrew Aguecheek."

If this letter move him not, his legs cannot. I’ll give’t him.

MARIA
You may have very fit occasion for’t. He is now in some commerce with my lady, and will by and by depart.

SIR TOBY
GO, Sir Andrew. Scout me for him at the corner of the orchard like a bum-baily. So soon as ever thou seest him, draw, and as thou drawest, swear horrible, for it comes to pass oft that a terrible oath, with a swaggering accent sharply twanged off, gives manhood more approbation than ever proof itself would have earned him. Away.

SIR ANDREW
Nay, let me alone for swearing.

Exit

SIR TOBY
Now will not I deliver his letter, for the behavior of the young gentleman gives him out to be of good capacity and breeding. His employment between his lord and my niece confirms no less. Therefore this letter, being so excellently ignorant, will breed no terror in the youth. He will find it comes from a clodpoll. But, sir, I will deliver his challenge by word of mouth, set upon Aguecheek a notable report of valor, and drive the gentleman—as I know his youth will aptly receive it—into a most hideous opinion of his rage, skill, fury, and impetuosity. This will so fright them both that they will kill one another by the look, like cockatrices.

Enter OLIVIA, and VIOLA [as Cesario]

FABIAN
Here he comes with your niece. Give them way till he take leave, and presently after him.

SIR TOBY
I will meditate the while upon some horrid message for a challenge.

[Exeunt SIR TOBY, FABIAN, and MARIA]

OLIVIA
I have said too much unto a heart of stone, And laid mine honor too unchary. There’s something in me that reproves my fault, But such a headstrong potent fault it is That it but mocks reproof.

VIOLA
With the same behavior That your passion bears goes on my master’s griefs.

OLIVIA [giving a jewel]
Here, wear this jewel for me, ‘tis my picture—

6. Andrew means he expects to survive, but he ineptly implies that he expects to be damned.
7. Petty sheriff’s officer employed to arrest debtors.
8. Have no doubts as to my swearing ability.
9. As I know his inexperience will readily believe the report.

1. Basilisks: mythical creatures supposed to kill at a glance.
2. Behavior that characterizes your lovesickness.
3. Jeweled ornament, here a brooch or a locket with Olivia’s picture.
Refuse it not, it hath no tongue to vex you—
And I beseech you come again tomorrow.
What shall you ask of me that I'll deny,
That honor, saved, may upon asking give?
VIOLA Nothing but this: your true love for my master.
OLIVIA How with mine honor may I give him that
Which I have given to you?
VIOLA I will acquit you.
OLIVIA Well, come again tomorrow. Fare thee well.
A fiend like thee might bear my soul to hell.
[Exit]

Enter [SIR] TOBY and FABIAN

SIR TOBY Gentleman, God save thee.

VIOLA And you, sir.

SIR TOBY That defense thou hast, betake thee to't. Of what defiance awaits
defense
nature the wrongs are thou hast done him, I know not, drives
defense
but thy intercepter, full of despite, bloody as the hunter, attends thee at the orchard end. Dismount thy tuck, yare
take be yare in thy preparation, for thy assailant is quick, skillful, and deadly.

VIOLA You mistake, sir, I am sure no man hath any quarrel to me. My remembrance is very free and clear from any image of offense done to any man.

SIR TOBY You'll find it otherwise, I assure you. Therefore, if you hold your life at any price, betake you to your guard,
for your opposite hath in him what youth, strength, skill,
and wrath can furnish man withal.

VIOLA I pray you, sir, what is he?

SIR TOBY He is knight dubbed with unhatched rapier and on carpet consideration, but he is a devil in private brawl. Souls and bodies hath he divorced three, and his incensement at this moment is so implacable that satisfaction can be none but by pangs of death and sepulchre.

Hob nob is his word, give't or take't.

VIOLA I will return again into the house and desire some counsel of the lady. I am no fighter. I have heard of some kind of men that put quarrels purposely on others, to taste their valor. Belike this is a man of that quirk.

SIR TOBY Sir, no. His indignation derives itself out of a very sufficient i.e., a duel competent injury, therefore get you on, and give him his desire. Back you shall not to the house unless you undertake that with me which with as much safety you might answer him. Therefore on, or strip your sword stark naked, for meddle you must, that's certain, or forswear to wear iron about you.

VIOLA This is as uncivil as strange. I beseech you do me this courteous office, as to know of the knight what my offense to him is. It is something of my negligence, nothing of my purpose.

4. That honor may grant without compromising itself.
5. I will release you from your promise.
6. Draw your rapier.
7. Unhacked, or undented, never used in battle.
8. A "carpet knight" obtained his title through connections at court rather than valor on the battlefield.
9. Have or have not ("all or nothing").
SIR TOBY. I will do so. Signor Fabian, stay you by this gentleman till my return. [Exit]

VIOLA. Pray you, sir, do you know of this matter?

FABIAN. I know the knight is incensed against you even to a mortal arbitrement, but nothing of the circumstance more.

VIOLA. I beseech you, what manner of man is he?

FABIAN. Nothing of that wonderful promise to read him by his form as you are like to find him in the proof of his valor. He is indeed, sir, the most skilful, bloody, and fatal opposite that you could possibly have found in any part of Illyria. Will you walk towards him, I will make your peace with him if I can.

VIOLA. I shall be much bound to you for’t. I am one that had rather go with Sir Priest than Sir Knight—I care not who knows so much of my mettle. [Exeunt]

Enter [SIR] TOBY and [SIR] ANDREW.

SIR TOBY. Why, man, he’s a very devil, I have not seen such a virago. I had a pass with him, rapier, scabbard, and all, and he gives me the stuck-in with such a mortal motion that it is inevitable, and on the answer, he pays you as surely as your feet hits the ground they step on. They say he has been fencer to the Sophy.

SIR ANDREW. Pox on’t, I’ll not meddle with him.

SIR TOBY. Ay, but he will not now be pacified, Fabian can scarce hold him yonder.

SIR ANDREW. Plague on’t, an’ I thought he had been valiant and so cunning in fence I’d have seen him damned ere I’d have challenged him. Let him let the matter slip and I’ll give him my horse, grey Capulet.

SIR TOBY. I’ll make the motion. Stand here, make a good show on’t—this shall end without the perdition of souls. [Aside] Marry, I’ll ride your horse as well as I ride you.

[Aside to FABIAN] I have his horse to take up the quarrel, I have persuaded him the youth’s a devil.

FABIAN [aside to SIR TOBY]. He is as horribly conceited of him, and pants and looks pale as if a bear were at his heels.

SIR TOBY [to VIOLA]. There’s no remedy, sir, he will fight with you for’s oath’s sake. Marry, he hath better bethought him of his quarrel, and he finds that now scarce to be worth talking of. Therefore draw for the supportance of his vow, he protests he will not hurt you.

VIOLA [aside]. Pray God defend me. A little thing would make me tell them how much I lack of a man.

FABIAN [to SIR ANDREW]. Give ground if you see him furious.

2. I.e., from his outward appearance, you cannot perceive him to be as remarkable.
3. Priests were often addressed as “sir.”
4. Woman warrior (suggesting great ferocity with a feminine appearance).
5. Thrust (from the Italian stoccata).
6. He has as terrifying an idea.
Come, Sir Andrew, there's no remedy, the gentleman will for his honor's sake have one bout with you, he cannot by the duello avoid it, but he has promised me, as he is a gentleman and a soldier, he will not hurt you. Come on, to't.

Pray God he keep his oath.

I do assure you 'tis against my will.

Put up your sword. If this young gentleman

Have done offense, I take the fault on me.

If you offend him, I for him defy you.

You, sir? Why, what are you?

One, sir, that for his love dares yet do more

Than you have heard him brag to you he will.

Nay, if you be an undertaker, I am for you.

Put up your sword if you please.

Marry will I, sir, and for that I'll be as good as my word. He will bear you easily, and reins well.

This is the man, do thy office.

Antonio, I arrest thee at the suit of Count Orsino.

You do mistake me, sir.

No, sir, no jot. I know your favor well,

Though now you have no seacap on your head.

Take him away, he knows I know him well.

I must obey. This comes with seeking you.

But there's no remedy, I shall answer it. What will you do now my necessity

Makes me to ask you for my purse? It grieves me

Much more for what I cannot do for you

Than what befalls myself. You stand amazed,

But be of comfort.

Come, sir, away.

I must entreat of you some of that money.

What money, sir?

For the fair kindness you have showed me here,

And part being prompted by your present trouble,

Out of my lean and low ability

I'll lend you something. My having is not much.

I'll make division of my present with you.

7. One who would take upon himself a task (here, a challenge).
Hold, [offering money] there’s half my coffer.

ANTONIO Will you deny me now?

Is’t possible that my deserts to you
Can lack persuasion? Do not tempt my misery,
Lest that it make me so unsound a man
As to upbraid you with those kindnesses
That I have done for you.

VIOLA I know of none,
Nor know I you by voice, or any feature.
I hate ingratitude more in a man
Than lying, vainness, babbling drunkenness,
Or any taint of vice whose strong corruption
Inhabits our frail blood.

ANTONIO O heavens themselves!

SECOND OFFICER Come, sir, I pray you go.

ANTONIO Let me speak a little. This youth that you see here
I snatched one half out of the jaws of death,
Relieved him with such sanctity of love,
And to his image, which methought did promise
Most venerable worth, did I devotion.

FIRST OFFICER What’s that to us? The time goes by, away.

ANTONIO But O, how vile an idol proves this god!
Thou hast, Sebastian, done good feature shame.
In nature there’s no blemish but the mind.
None can be called deformed but the unkind.
Virtue is beauty, but the beauteous evil
Are empty trunks o’er-flourished by the devil.

FIRST OFFICER The man grows mad, away with him.

ANTONIO Lead me on. Exit [with officers]

VIOLA [aside] Methinks his words do from such passion fly
That he believes himself. So do not I.
Prove true, imagination, O prove true,
That I, dear brother, be now ta’en for you!

SIR TOBY Come hither, knight. Come hither, Fabian. We’ll whisper o’er a couplet or two of most sage saws.

VIOLA He named Sebastian. I my brother know
Yet living in my glass. Even such and so
In favor was my brother, and he went
Still in this fashion, color, ornament,
For him I imitate. O, if it prove,
Tempests are kind, and salt waves fresh in love! Exit

SIR TOBY [to SIR ANDREW] A very dishonest, paltry boy, and more a coward than a hare. His dishonesty appears in leaving his friend here in necessity, and denying him; and for his cowardship, ask Fabian.

---

8. Is it possible my past kindness can fail to persuade you?
9. Appearance (with a play on “religious icon”).
1. Was worthy of veneration.
2. Chests decorated with carving or painting; beautified bodies.
3. I.e., I do not entirely believe the passionate hope (for my brother’s rescue) that is arising in me.
FABIAN A coward, a most devout coward, religious in it.
SIR ANDREW 'Slid, I'll after him again, and beat him. by God's eyelid
SIR ANDREW An I do not— [Exit]
FABIAN Come, let's see the event.
SIR TOBY I dare lay any money 'twill be nothing yet. outcome after all

Exit

Enter SEBASTIAN and [FESTE, the] clown

FESTE Will you make me believe that I am not sent for you? are you trying to SEBASTIAN Go to, go to, thou art a foolish fellow, Let me be clear of thee.
FESTE Well held out, i'faith! No, I do not know you, nor I am not sent to you by my lady to bid you come speak with her, nor your name is not Master Cesario, nor this is not my nose, neither. Nothing that is so, is so.
SEBASTIAN I prithee vent thy folly somewhere else, utter; execute
Thou know'st not me.
FESTE Vent my folly! He has heard that word of some great man, and now applies it to a fool. Vent my folly—I am afraid this great lubber the world will prove a cockney. I prithee now ungird thy strangeness, and tell me what I shall 'vent' to my lady? Shall I 'vent' to her that thou art coming?
SEBASTIAN I prithee, foolish Greek, depart from me. buffoon There's money for thee. If you tarry longer I shall give worse payment.
FESTE By my troth, thou hast an open hand. These wise men that give fools money get themselves a good report, after fourteen years' purchase.2

Enter [SIR] ANDREW, [SIR] TOBY, and FABIAN

SIR ANDREW [to SEBASTIAN] Now, sir, have I met you again? [Striking him] There's for you.
SEBASTIAN [striking SIR ANDREW with his DAGGER] Why, there's for thee, and there, and there. Are all the people mad?
SIR TOBY [to SEBASTIAN, holding him back] Hold, sir, or I'll throw your dagger o'er the house.
FESTE This will I tell my lady straight. I would not be in some of your coats for twopence. [Exit]
SIR TOBY Come on, sir, hold.
SIR ANDREW Nay, let him alone, I'll go another way to work with him. I'll have an action of battery against him if there be any law in Illyria. Though I struck him first, yet it's no matter for that.

4.1 Location: Near Olivia's house.
1. i.e., stop pretending not to know me. (Feste mocks Sebastian’s affected language.)
2. i.e., at a high price. The purchase price of land was normally twelve times its annual rent.
SEBASTIAN Let go thy hand.
SIR TOBY Come, sir, I will not let you go. Come, my young soldier, put up your iron. You are well fleshed. Come on.
SEBASTIAN [freeing himself] I will be free from thee.
What wouldst thou now?
SIR TOBY If thou dar'st tempt me further, draw thy sword.
SEBASTIAN What, what? Nay then, I must have an ounce or two of this malapert^ impudent blood from you.
[SIR TOBY and SEBASTIAN draw their swords.]
Enter OLIVIA
OLIVIA Hold, Toby, on thy life I charge thee hold.
SIR TOBY Madam.
OLIVIA Will it be ever thus? Ungracious wretch, Fit for the mountains and the barbarous caves, Where manners ne'er were preached—out of my sight! Be not offended, dear Cesario.
[To SIR TOBY] Rudesby,° ruffian be gone.
[Exeunt SIR TOBY, SIR ANDREW, and FABIAN]
I prithee, gentle friend,
Let thy fair wisdom, not thy passion sway
In this uncivil and unjust extent° assault Against thy peace. Go with me to my house,
And hear thou there how many fruitless pranks
This ruffian hath botched up," that thou thereby
Mays't smile at this. Thou shalt not choose but go.
Do not deny. Beshrew° his soul for me,
He started one poor heart of mine in thee.°
SEBASTIAN What relish° is in this? How runs the stream?
Or° I am mad, or else this is a dream.
Let fancy° still my sense in Lethe^ steep.
If it be thus to dream, still° let me sleep.
OLIVIA Nay, come, I prithee, would thou'dst be ruled by me.
SEBASTIAN Madam, I will.
OLIVIA O, say so, and so be.
Exeunt

4.2
Enter MARIA [carrying a gown and false beard, and FESTE, the clown]
MARIA Nay, I prithee put on this gown and this beard, make him believe thou art Sir Topas° the curate. Do it quickly. I'll call Sir Toby the whilest.° Exit in the meantime FESTE Well, I'll put it on, and I will dissemble° myself in't.

3. Experienced in combat. Hunting hounds were said to be "flasted" after being fed part of their first kill.
4. By attacking Sebastian, Sir Toby frightened Olivia, who has exchanged hearts with Sebastian. "Started": an allusion to hunting, creating a pun on "hart/heart."
5. The mythical river of oblivion.
4.2 Location: Olivia's house, where Malvolio will be found (offstage) "in a dark room and bound" (3.4.132).
1. The comical hero of Chaucer's Tale of Sir Topas. Also alluding to the topaz stone, which was thought to have special curative qualities for insanity.
2. Disguise; with subsequent play on "lie."
and I would I were the first that ever dissembled in such a gown. [He disguises himself] I am not tall enough to become the function well, nor lean enough to be thought a good student, but to be said "an honest man and a good housekeeper" goes as fairly as to say "a careful man and a great scholar." The competitors enter.

Enter [SIR] TOBY [and MARIA]

SIR TOBY Jove bless thee, Master Parson.

FESTE Bonos dies, Sir Toby, for, as the old hermit of Prague, that never saw pen and ink, very wittily said to a niece of King Gorboduc, "That that is, is." So I, being Master Parson, am Master Parson; for what is 'that' but 'that,' and 'is' but 'is'?

SIR TOBY To him, Sir Topas.

FESTE What ho, I say, peace in this prison.

SIR TOBY The knave counterfeits well—a good knave.

MALVOLIO within

MALVOLIO Who calls there?

FESTE Sir Topas the curate, who comes to visit Malvolio the lunatic.

MALVOLIO Sir Topas, Sir Topas, good Sir Topas, go to my lady.

FESTE Out, hyperbolical fiend, how vexest thou this man! Talkest thou nothing but of ladies?

SIR TOBY Well said, Master Parson.

MALVOLIO Sir Topas, never was man thus wronged. Good Sir Topas, do not think I am mad. They have laid me here in hideous darkness.

FESTE Fie, thou dishonest Satan—I call thee by the most modest terms, for I am one of those gentle ones that will use the devil himself with courtesy. Sayst thou that house is dark?

MALVOLIO As hell, Sir Topas.

FESTE Why, it hath bay windows transparent as barricadoes, and the clerestories toward the south-north are as lustrous as ebony, and yet complainest thou of obstruction?

MALVOLIO I am not mad, Sir Topas; I say to you this house is dark.

FESTE Madman, thou errest. I say there is no darkness but ignorance, in which thou art more puzzled than the Egyptians in their fog.
MALVOLIO: I say this house is as dark as ignorance, though ignorance were as dark as hell; and I say there was never man thus abused. I am no more mad than you are. Make the trial of it in any constant question.
FESTE: What is the opinion of Pythagoras concerning wildfowl?
MALVOLIO: That the soul of our grandam might haply inhabit a bird.
FESTE: What thinkest thou of his opinion?
MALVOLIO: I think nobly of the soul, and no way approve his opinion.
FESTE: Fare thee well. Remain thou still in darkness. Thou shalt hold th opinion of Pythagoras ere I will allow of thy wits, and fear to kill a woodcock lest thou dispossess the soul of thy grandam. Fare thee well.
MALVOLIO: Sir Topas, Sir Topas!
SIR TOBY: My most exquisite Sir Topas.
FESTE: Nay, I am for all waters.
MARIA: Thou mightst have done this without thy beard and gown, he sees thee not.
SIR TOBY [to FESTE]: To him in thine own voice, and bring me word how thou findest him. I would we were well rid of this knavery. If he may be conveniently delivered, I would he were, for I am now so far in offense with my niece that I cannot pursue with any safety this sport to the upshot. [To MARIA] Come by and by to my chamber.
Exit [with MARIA]
FESTE [sings]: “Hey Robin, jolly Robin,
Tell me how thy lady does.”
MALVOLIO: Fool!
FESTE: “My lady is unkind, pardie.”
MALVOLIO: Fool!
FESTE: “Alas, why is she so?”
MALVOLIO: Fool, I say!
FESTE: “She loves another.”
Who calls, ha?
MALVOLIO: Good fool, as ever thou wilt deserve well at my hand, help me to a candle and pen, ink, and paper. As I am a gentleman, I will live to be thankful to thee for’t.
FESTE: Master Malvolio?
MALVOLIO: Ay, good fool.
FESTE: Alas, sir, how fell you besides your five wits?
MALVOLIO: Fool, there was never man so notoriously abused. I am as well in my wits, fool, as thou art.

2. An ancient Greek philosopher who held that the same soul could successively inhabit different creatures.
3. A traditionally stupid bird.
4. I am able to turn my hand to anything.
5. Feste’s song, which makes Malvolio aware of his presence, is traditional. There is a version by Sir Thomas Wyatt.
7. Usually regarded as common sense, fantasy, memory, judgment, and imagination.
Feste: But as well? Then you are mad indeed, if you be no better in your wits than a fool.

Malvolio: They have here propertied me, keep me in darkness, send ministers to me, asses, and do all they can to face me out of my wits.

Feste: Advise you what you say, the minister is here.

[As Sir Topas] Malvolio, Malvolio, thy wits the heavens restore. Endeavor thyself to sleep, and leave thy vain bibble-babble.

Malvolio: Sir Topas, Sir Topas.

Malvolio: Fool, fool, fool, I say.

Feste: Alas, sir, be patient. What say you, sir? I am shent for speaking to you.

Malvolio: Good fool, help me to some light and some paper. I tell thee I am as well in my wits as any man in Illyria.

Feste: Well-a-day that you were, sir.

Malvolio: By this hand, I am. Good fool, some ink, paper, and light, and convey what I will set down to my lady. It shall advantage thee more than ever the bearing of letter did.

Feste: I will help you to't. But tell me true, are you not mad indeed, or do you but counterfeit?

Malvolio: Believe me, I am not, I tell thee true.

Feste: Nay, I'll ne'er believe a madman till I see his brains.

Malvolio: I will fetch you light, and paper, and ink.

Feste: Fool, I'll requite it in the highest degree. I prithee, be gone.

Feste: I am gone, sir, and anon, sir, I'll be with you again, in a trice.

Like to the old Vice, your need to sustain,
Who with dagger of lath in his rage and his wrath cries "Aha," to the devil,

Like a mad lad, "Pare thy nails, dad, Adieu, goodman, devil."

Exit

8. Treated me as a piece of property.
9. Brazenly construe me as.
1. A stock comic figure in the old morality plays; be often carried a wooden dagger.
2. Yeoman; a title given to one not of gentle birth, hence a parting insult to Malvolio.
4.3

Enter SEBASTIAN

SEBASTIAN This is the air, that is the glorious sun.
This pearl she gave me, I do feel’t and see’t,
And though ’tis wonder that enwraps me thus,
Yet ’tis not madness. Where’s Antonio then?
I could not find him at the Elephant,
Yet there he was,° and there I found this credit,°
That he did range the town to seek me out.
His counsel now might do me golden service,
For though my soul disputes well with my sense
That this may be some error but no madness,
Yet doth this accident and flood of fortune
So far exceed all instance,° all discourse,°
That I am ready to distrust mine eyes
And wrangle with my reason that persuades me
Or else the lady’s mad. Yet if ’twere so
She could not sway° her house, command her followers,
Take and give back affairs and their dispatch.°
With such a smooth, discreet, and stable bearing
As I perceive she does. There’s something in’t
That is deceivable.° But here the lady comes.

Enter OLIVIA and PRIEST

OLIVIA Blame not this haste of mine. If you mean well
Now go with me, and with this holy man,
Into the chantry by.° There before him,
And underneath that consecrated roof,
Plight me the full assurance of your faith,°
That my most jealous and too doubtful soul
May live at peace. He shall conceal it
Whiles° you are willing it shall come to note,
What° time we will our celebration keep
According to my birth.° What do you say?

SEBASTIAN I’ll follow this good man, and go with you,
And having sworn truth, ever will be true.

OLIVIA Then lead the way, good father, and heavens so shine
That they may fairly note° this act of mine.  Exeunt

5.1

Enter [FESTE, the] clown and FABIAN

FABIAN Now, as thou lovest me, let me see his letter.

FESTE Good Master Fabian, grant me another request.

FABIAN Anything.

FESTE DO not desire to see this letter.

FABIAN This is to give a dog, and in recompense desire my dog again.°

4.3 Location: Near Olivia’s house.
3. Enter into the solemn contract of betrothal.
1. Perhaps a reference to an anecdote, recorded in John Manningham’s diary, in which Queen Elizabeth
5.1 Location: Before Olivia’s house.
Enter Duke, VIOLA [as Cesario], CURIO, and lords

ORSINO Belong you to the Lady Olivia, friends?

FESTE Ay, sir, we are some of her trappings.

ORSINO I know thee well. How dost thou, my good fellow?

FESTE Truly, sir, the better for my foes and the worse for my friends.

ORSINO Just the contrary - the better for thy friends.

FESTE No, sir, the worse.

ORSINO How can that be?

FESTE Marry, sir, they praise me, and make an ass of me. Now my foes tell me plainly I am an ass, so that by my foes, sir, I profit in the knowledge of myself, and by my friends I am abused; so that, conclusions to be as kisses, if your four negatives make your two affirmatives, why then the worse for my friends and the better for my foes.

ORSINO Why, this is excellent.

FESTE By my troth, sir, no, though it please you to be one of my friends.

ORSINO [giving money] Thou shalt not be the worse for me. There's gold.

FESTE But that it would be double-dealing, sir, I would you could make it another.

ORSINO O, you give me ill counsel.

FESTE Put your grace in your pocket, sir, for this once, and let your flesh and blood obey it.

ORSINO Well, I will be so much a sinner to be a double-dealer. [Giving money] There's another.

FESTE Primo, secundo, tertio is a good play, and the old saying is "The third pays for all." The triplex, sir, is a good tripping measure, or the bells of Saint Bennet, sir, may put you in mind—"one, two, three.'

ORSINO You can fool no more money out of me at this throw. If you will let your lady know I am here to speak with her, and bring her along with you, it may awake my bounty further.

FESTE Marry, sir, lullaby to your bounty till I come again. I go, sir, but I would not have you to think that my desire of having is the sin of covetousness. But as you say, sir, let your bounty take a nap, I will awake it anon. Exit

ANTONIO and OFFICERS

VIOLA Here comes the man, sir, that did rescue me.

requested a dog, and the donor, when granted a wish in return, asked for the dog back.

2. As in grammar a double negative can make an affirmative (and therefore four negatives can make two affirmatives), so when a coy girl is asked for a kiss, her four refusals can be construed as "yes, yes."

3. (1) A duplicity; (2) a double donation.

4. Set aside (pocket up) your virtue; also (with a play on the customary form of address for a duke, "your grace"), reach into your pocket and grace me with another coin.

5. Let your normal human instincts (as opposed to grace) follow the "ill counsel" (line 28).

6. First, second, third (Latin): perhaps an allusion to a dice throw or a child's game.

7. Third time lucky (proverbial).

Cried fame and honor on him. What's the matter?

\textbf{FIRST OFFICER} Orsino, this is that Antonio
That took the \textit{Phoenix} and her freight from Candy,\textsuperscript{6} Candia, capital of Crete
And this is he that did the \textit{Tiger} board
When your young nephew Titus lost his leg.
Here in the streets, desperate of shame and state,\textsuperscript{7}
In private brabble\textsuperscript{8} did we apprehend him.

\textbf{VIOLA} He did me kindness, sir, drew on my side,\textsuperscript{9} but in conclusion put strange speech upon me.
I know not what 'twas but distraction.\textsuperscript{9}

\textbf{ORSINO (to ANTONIO)} Notable\textsuperscript{10} pirate, thou salt-water thief,
What foolish boldness brought thee to their mercies
Whom thou in terms so bloody and so dear\textsuperscript{11} dire
Hast made thine enemies?

\textbf{ANTONIO} Orsino, noble sir,
Be pleased that I shake off these names you give me.
Antonio never yet was thief or pirate,
Though, I confess, on base\textsuperscript{12} and ground enough foundation
Orsino's enemy. A witchcraft drew me hither.
That most ingrateful boy there by your side
From the rude sea's enraged and foamy mouth
Did I redeem. A wreck past hope he was.
His life I gave him, and did thereto add
My love without retention\textsuperscript{13} or restraint, reservation
All his in dedication. For his sake
Did I expose myself, pure\textsuperscript{14} for his love,
Into the danger of this adverse\textsuperscript{15} town,
Drew to defend him when he was beset,
Where being apprehended, his false cunning—
Not meaning to partake with me in danger—
Taught him to face me out of his acquaintance,\textsuperscript{14}
And grew a twenty years' removed thing
While one would wink,\textsuperscript{15} denied me mine own purse,
Which I had recommended\textsuperscript{16} to his use
Not half an hour before.

\textbf{VIOLA} How can this be?

\textbf{ORSINO} When came he to this town?

\textbf{ANTONIO} Today, my lord, and for three months before,

\textbf{ORSINO} Here comes the Countess. Now heaven walks on earth.
But for thee, fellow—fellow, thy words are madness.

\textsuperscript{1} Of no value because of its small size. "Draft": water displaced by a vessel.
\textsuperscript{2} Destructive
\textsuperscript{3} Ship
\textsuperscript{4} Even enmity / the losers
\textsuperscript{5} Trifling
\textsuperscript{6} Recklessly oblivious of the danger to his honor and his position (as a free man and public enemy).
\textsuperscript{7} Even enmity / the losers
\textsuperscript{8} If not insanity
\textsuperscript{9} Notorious \textsuperscript{10} Dire
\textsuperscript{11} Only hostile
\textsuperscript{12} Int'rim, not a minute's vacancy.
\textsuperscript{13} Not mere \textsuperscript{14} Special / not by any means \textsuperscript{15} Hostile
Three months this youth hath tended upon me.
But more of that anon. Take him aside.

OLIVIA

What would my lord, but that he may not have,
Wherein Olivia may seem serviceable?
Cesario, you do not keep promise with me.

VIOLA

Madam—

ORSINO

Gracious Olivia—

OLIVIA

What do you say, Cesario? Good my lord—

VIOLA

My lord would speak, my duty hushes me.

OLIVIA

If it be sought

to the old tune, my lord,

It is as fat and fulsome to mine ear

As howling after music.

ORSINO

Still so cruel?

OLIVIA

Still so constant, lord.

ORSINO

What, to perverseness? You uncivil lady,
To whose ingratitude and ungracious altars

My soul the faithfullst
th' off' rings hath breathed out

That e'er devotion tendered—what shall I do?

OLIVIA

Even what it please my lord that shall become be fitting for him.

ORSINO

Why should I not, had I the heart to do it,
Like to th' Egyptian thief, at point of death

Kill what I love
a savage jealousy

That sometime savors nobly.
But hear me this:

Since you to non-regardance
cast my faith,

And that I partly know the instrument
That screws me from my true place in your favor,

Live you the marble-breasted tyrant still.

But this your minion,
whom I know you love,

And whom, by heaven I swear, I tender dearly,

Him will I tear out of that cruel eye

Where he sits crowned in his master's spite.

[To VIOLA] Come, boy, with me. My thoughts are ripe in mischief.

I'll sacrifice the lamb that I do love

To spite a raven's heart within a dove.

VIOLA

And I most jocund, apt, and willingly

cheerfully I ready

To do you rest a thousand deaths would die.

OLIVIA

Where goes Cesario?

VIOLA

After him I love

More than I love these eyes, more than my life,

More by all mores
then e'er I shall love wife.

If I do feign, you witnesses above,

Punish my life for tainting of my love.

OLIVIA

Ay me detested, how am I beguiled!

Who does beguile you? Who does do you wrong?

OLIVIA

Hast thou forgot thyself? Is it so long?

Call forth the holy father.

[Exit an attendant]

ORSINO [to VIOLA] Come, away.

6. Except that which he may not have (my love).
7. In Heliodorus's Æthiopica, a Greek prose romance translated into English in 1569 and popular in Shakespere's day, the Egyptian robber chief Thyamis tries to kill his captive Chariclea, whom he loves, when he is in danger from a rival band.
8. To the mortification of his master.
9. More beyond all comparison.
OLIVIA Whither, my lord? Cesario, husband, stay.
ORSINO Husband?
OLIVIA Ay, husband. Can he that deny?
ORSINO [to VIOLA] Her husband, sirrah?
VIOLA No, my lord, not I.
OLIVIA Alas, it is the baseness of thy fear
That makes thee strangle thy propriety.²
Fear not, Cesario, take thy fortunes up,
Be that thou know'st thou art, and then thou art
As great as that⁰ thou fear'st.

Enter PRIEST

O welcome, father.

Father, I charge thee by thy reverence
Here to unfold—though lately we intended
To keep in darkness what occasion² now
Reveals before 'tis ripe—what thou dost know
Hath newly passed between this youth and me.

PRIEST A contract of eternal bond of love,
Confirmed by mutual joinder⁰ of your hands,
Attested by the holy close⁰ of lips,
Strengthened by interchangement of your rings,
And all the ceremony of this compact
Sealed in my function,¹ by my testimony;
Since when, my watch hath told me, toward my grave
I have traveled but two hours.

ORSINO [to VIOLA] O thou dissembling cub, what wilt thou be
When time hath sowed a grizzle on thy case?⁴
Or will not else⁰ thy craft⁰ so quickly grow
That thine own trip shall be thine overthrow?⁵
Farewell, and take her, but direct thy feet
Where thou and I henceforth may never meet.

VIOLA My lord, I do protest.

OLIVIA O, do not swear!

Hold little⁰ faith, though thou hast too much fear.

Enter SIR ANDREW

SIR ANDREW For the love of God, a surgeon—send one presently⁰ to Sir Toby.

OLIVIA What's the matter?

SIR ANDREW He's broke⁰ my head across, and has given Sir Toby a bloody coxcomb,⁶ too. For the love of God, your help! I had rather than forty pound I were at home.

OLIVIA Who has done this, Sir Andrew?

SIR ANDREW The Count's gentleman, one Cesario. We took him for a coward, but he's the very devil incardi-

1. Contemptuous form of address to an inferior.
2. That makes you deny your identity (as my husband).
3. Ratified by priestly authority.
4. A gray hair ("grizzle") on your hide (sustaining the metaphor of "cub").
5. Your attempt to trip someone else will be the cause of your downfall.
6. Head; also, a fool's cap, which resembles the crest of a cock.
7. Sir Andrew's blunder for "incarnate" (in the flesh).
ORSINO  My gentleman, Cesario?
SIR ANDREW  'Od's lifelings, here he is. [To VIOLA] You broke my head for nothing, and that that I did I was set on to do't by Sir Toby.
VIOLA  Why do you speak to me? I never hurt you.
You drew your sword upon me without cause,
But I bespake you fair, and hurt you not.

Enter [SIR TOBY] and [FESTE, the clown]
SIR ANDREW  If a bloody coxcomb be a hurt you have hurt me. I think you set nothing by a bloody coxcomb. Here comes Sir Toby, halting. You shall hear more; but if he had not been in drink he would have tickled you other-gates than he did.
ORSINO  [to SIR TOBY] How now, gentleman? How is't with you?
SIR TOBY  That's all one, he's hurt me, and there's th'end on't.
[To FESTE] Sot, didst see Dick Surgeon, sot?
FESTE  O, he's drunk, Sir Toby, an hour agone. His eyes were set at eight i'th' morning.
SIR TOBY  Then he's a rogue, and a passy-measures pavan. I hate a drunken rogue.
OLIVIA  Away with him! Who hath made this havoc with them?
SIR ANDREW  I'll help you, Sir Toby, because we'll be dressed together.
SIR TOBY  Will you help—an ass-head, and a coxcomb, and a knave; a thin-faced knave, a gull?
OLIVIA  Get him to bed, and let his hurt be looked to.
[Exeunt SIR TOBY, SIR ANDREW, FESTE, and FABIAN]

SEBASTIAN  [to OLIVIA] I am sorry, madam, I have hurt your kinsman,
But had it been the brother of my blood I must have done no less with wit and safety. You throw a strange regard upon me, and by that I do perceive it hath offended you. Pardon me, sweet one, even for the vows We made each other but so late ago.
ORSINO  One face, one voice, one habit, and two persons, A natural perspective, that is and is not.
SEBASTIAN  Antonio! O, my dear Antonio,
How have the hours racked and tortured me Since I have lost thee!
ANTONIO  Sebastian are you?
SEBASTIAN  Fear'st thou that, Antonio?

8. But I spoke courteously to you.
9. Closed (as the sun sets).
1. A variety of the slow dance known as "pavane" (from the Italian passamezzo pavano). Sir Toby may think its swaying movements suggest drunkenness.
2. We'll have our wounds dressed.
3. With any sense of my welfare.
4. An optical illusion produced by nature (rather than by a mirror).
antoNio  How have you made division of yourself?

aNToNio  An apple cleft in two is not more twin

THan these two creatures. Which is Sebastian?

viola  Most wonderfully!

Sebastian (seeing Viola)  Do I stand there? I never had a brother,

Nor can there be that deity in my nature

Of here and everywhere. I had a sister,

Whom the blind waves and surges have devoured.

Of charity, what kin are you to me?

What countryman? What name? What parentage?

Viola  Of Messaline. Sebastian was my father.

Such a Sebastian was my brother, too.

So went he suited to his watery tomb.

If spirits can assume both form and suit

You come to fright us.

Sebastian  A spirit I am indeed,

But am in that dimension grossly clad

Which from the womb I did participate.

Were you a woman, as the rest goes even,

I should my tears let fall upon your cheek.

And say ‘Thrice welcome, drowned Viola.’

viola  My father had a mole upon his brow.

Sebastian  And so had mine.

Viola  And died that day when Viola from her birth

Had numbered thirteen years.

Sebastian  O, that record is lively in my soul.

He finished indeed his mortal act

That day that made my sister thirteen years.

Viola  If nothing lets to make us happy both

But this my masculine usurped attire,

Do not embrace me till each circumstance

Of place, time, fortune do cohere and jump

That I am Viola, which to confirm

I’ll bring you to a captain in this town

Where lie my maiden weeds, by whose gentle help

I was preserved to serve this noble count.

All the occurrence of my fortune since

Hath been between this lady and this lord.

Sebastian [to Olivia]  So comes it, lady, you have been mistook.

But nature to her bias drew in that.

You would have been contracted to a maid,

Nor are you therein, by my life, deceived.

You are betrothed both to a maid and man.

orsino [to Olivia]  Be not amazed. Right noble is his blood.

If this be so, as yet the glass seems true,

I shall have share in this most happy wreck.

5. I.e., clad, like all mortals, in the flesh in which I was born.
6. The memory of that is vivid.
7. But nature followed her inclination. (The image is from the game of bowls, which sometimes used a ball with an off-center weight that caused it to curve away from a straight course.)
8. I.e., a man who is a virgin.
9. The ‘natural perspective’ (line 214) continues to seem real.
[To VIOLA] Boy, thou hast said to me a thousand times
Thou never shouldst love woman like to me.

VIOLA And all those sayings will I overswear,
And all those swearings keep as true in soul
As doth that orbed continent\(^1\) the fire
That severs day from night.

ORSINO Give me thy hand,
And let me see thee in thy woman's weeds.

VIOLA The captain that did bring me first on shore
Hath my maid's garments. He upon some action\(^5\)
Is now in durance,\(^6\) at Malvolio's suit,
A gentleman and follower of my lady's.

OLIVIA He shall enlarge\(^7\) him. Fetch Malvolio hither—
And yet, alas, now I remember me,
They say, poor gentleman, he's much distraught.\(^8\)

Enter [FESTE, the] clown with a letter, and FABIAN

A most extracting\(^2\) frenzy of mine own
From my remembrance clearly banished his.
How does he, sirrah?

FESTE Truly, madam, he holds Beelzebub at the stave's end\(^2\) as well as a man in his case may do. He's here writ a letter to you. I should have given't you today morning.
But as a madman's epistles are no gospels,\(^3\) so it skills\(^6\).
not much when they are delivered.

OLIVIA Open't and read it.

FESTE Look then to be well edified when the fool delivers\(^0\)
the madman. [Reads] "By the Lord, madam"—

OLIVIA How now, art thou mad?

FESTE No, madam, I do but read madness. An your ladyship will have it as it ought to be you must allow vox.\(^4\)

OLIVIA Prithee, read i'thy right wits.

FESTE So I do, madonna, but to read his right wits\(^5\) is to read thus. Therefore perpend,\(^2\) my princess, and give ear.

OLIVIA [to FABIAN] Read it you, sirrah.

[FESTE gives the letter to FABIAN]

FABIAN (READS) "By the Lord, madam, you wrong me, and the world shall know it. Though you have put me into darkness and given your drunken cousin rule over me, yet have I the benefit of my senses as well as your ladyship.
I have your own letter that induced me to the semblance
I put on, with the which I doubt not but to do myself much right or you much shame. Think of me as you please. I leave my duty a little unthought of, and speak out of my injury.\(^5\)

OLIVIA Did he write this?

FESTE Ay, madam.

ORSINO This savors not much of distraction.\textsuperscript{0}

OLIVIA See him delivered,\textsuperscript{0} Fabian, bring him hither.
My lord, so please you—these things further thought on—
To think me as well a sister as a wife,\textsuperscript{7}
One day shall crown th'alliance\textsuperscript{8} on't, so please you,
Here at my house and at my proper cost.\textsuperscript{9}

ORSINO Madam, I am most apt\textsuperscript{0} t'embrace your offer.\textsuperscript{0}

[To VIOLA] Your master quits\textsuperscript{0} you, and for your service done him
So much against the mettle\textsuperscript{0} of your sex,
So far beneath your soft and tender breeding,
And since you called me master for so long,
Here is my hand. You shall from this time be
Your master's mistress.

OLIVIA [to VIOLA] A sister, you are she.

Enter MALVOLIO

ORSINO Is this the madman?

OLIVIA Ay, my lord, this same.

How now, Malvolio?

MALVOLIO Madam, you have done me wrong,
Notorious wrong.

OLIVIA Have I, Malvolio? No.

MALVOLIO [showing a letter] Lady, you have. Pray you peruse that letter.
You must not now deny it is your hand.\textsuperscript{0}
Write from\textsuperscript{0} it if you can, in hand or phrase,
Or say 'tis not your seal, not your invention.\textsuperscript{9}
You can say none of this. Well, grant it then,
And tell me in the modesty of honor\textsuperscript{9}
Why you have given me such clear lights\textsuperscript{0} of favor,
Bade me come smiling and cross-gartered to you,
To put on yellow stockings, and to frown
Upon Sir Toby and the lighter\textsuperscript{0} people,
And acting\textsuperscript{0} this in an obedient hope,
Why have you suffered\textsuperscript{0} me to be imprisoned,
Kept in a dark house, visited by the priest,
And made the most notorious geck\textsuperscript{0} and gull
That e'er invention\textsuperscript{0} played on? Tell me why?

OLIVIA Alas, Malvolio, this is not my writing,
Though I confess much like the character,\textsuperscript{9}
But out of question,'tis Maria's hand.
And now I do bethink me, it was she
First told me thou wast mad; then cam'st\textsuperscript{0} in smiling,

\textsuperscript{7} To think as well of me as a sister-in-law as you would have thought of me as a wife.

\textsuperscript{8} The impending double-marriage ceremony.

\textsuperscript{9} Tell me with the propriety that becomes a noblewoman.
And in such forms which here were presupposed
Upon thee in the letter. Prithee be content;
This practice hath most shrewdly passed upon thee,
But when we know the grounds and authors of it
Thou shalt be both the plaintiff and the judge
Of thine own cause.

FABIAN

Good madam, hear me speak,
And let no quarrel nor no brawl to come
Taint the condition of this present hour,
Which I have wondered at. In hope it shall not,
Most freely I confess myself and Toby
Set this device against Malvolio here
Upon some stubborn and uncourteous parts
We had conceived against him. Maria writ

The letter, at Sir Toby's great importance,
In recompense whereof he hath married her.
How with a sportful malice it was followed
May rather pluck on laughter than revenge
If that the injuries be justly weighed

That have on both sides passed.

OLIVIA [to MALVOLIO] Alas, poor fool, how have they baffled thee!

FESTE Why, "Some are born great, some achieve greatness, and some have greatness thrown upon them." I was one, sir, in this interlude, one Sir Topas, sir; but that's all one. "By the Lord, fool, I am not mad"—but do you remember, "Madam, why laugh you at such a barren rascal, an you smile not, he's gagged"—and thus the whirligig of time brings in his revenges.

MALVOLIO I'll be revenged on the whole pack of you.

[Exit]

OLIVIA He hath been most notoriously abused.
ORSINO Pursue him, and entreat him to a peace.
He hath not told us of the captain yet.

[Exit one or more]

When that is known, and golden time convents,
A solemn combination shall be made
Of our dear souls. Meantime, sweet sister,
We will not part from hence. Cesario, come—
For so you shall be while you are a man;
But when in other habits you are seen,
Orsino's mistress, and his fancy's queen.

Exeunt [all but FESTE]

FESTE (sings) When that I was and a little tiny boy,
With hey, ho, the wind and the rain,
A foolish thing was but a toy,
For the rain it raineth every day.

1. This trick has most mischievously played.
2. To which we took exception.
But when I came to man's estate,
With hey, ho, the wind and the rain,
'Gainst knaves and thieves men shut their gate,
For the rain it raineth every day.

But when I came, alas, to wive,
With hey, ho, the wind and the rain,
By swaggering could I never thrive,
For the rain it raineth every day.

But when I came unto my beds,
With hey, ho, the wind and the rain,
With tosspots still had drunken heads,
For the rain it raineth every day.

A great while ago the world begun,
With hey, ho, the wind and the rain,
But that's all one, our play is done,
And we'll strive to please you every day.

King Lear  The story of King Lear and his three daughters had often been told, in chronicles, poems, and sermons as well as on stage, when Shakespeare undertook to make it the subject of a tragedy. The play, performed at court in December 1605, was probably written and first performed somewhat earlier, though not before 1603, since it contains allusions to a florid piece of anti-Catholic propaganda published that year, Samuel Harsnett's Declaration of Egregious Popish Impostures. Thus scholars generally assign Shakespeare's composition of King Lear to 1604–05, shortly after Othello (ca. 1603–04) and before Macbeth (ca. 1606): an astounding succession of tragic masterpieces.

When King Lear was first performed it may have struck contemporaries as strangely timely in the wake of a lawsuit that had occurred in late 1603. The two elder daughters of a doddering gentleman named Sir Brian Annesley attempted to get him legally certified as insane, thereby enabling themselves to take over his estate, while his youngest daughter vehemently protested on her father's behalf. The youngest daughter's name happened to be Cordell, a name uncannily close to that of Lear's youngest daughter, Cordelia, who tries to save her father from the malevolent designs of her older sisters.

The Annesley case directs our own attention to the ordinary family tensions and fears around which King Lear, for all its wildness, violence, and strangeness, is constructed. Though the Lear story has the mythic quality of a folktale (specifically, it resembles both the tale of Cinderella and the tale of a daughter who falls into disfavor for telling her father she loves him as much as salt), it was recounted in Shakespeare's time both as a piece of authentic British history from the very ancient past (ca. 800 B.C.E.) and as a warning to contemporary fathers not to put too much trust in the flattery of their children. In some versions of the story, including Shakespeare's, the warning centers on a decision to retire.

Retirement has come to seem a routine event, but in the patriarchal culture of Tudor and Stuart England, where the old demanded the public deference of the young, it was generally shunned. When through illness or extreme old age, it became... unavoidable, retirement put a severe strain on the politics and psychology of deference by driving a wedge between status—what Lear at society’s pinnacle calls "The name, and all the additions to a king" (1.1.137)—and power. In both the state and the family, the strain could be somewhat eased by transferring power to the eldest legitimate male successor, but as the families of both the legendary Lear and the real Brian Annesley show, such a successor did not always exist. In the absence of a male heir, the aged Lear, determined to "shake all cares and business" from himself and confer them on "younger strengths," attempts to divide his kingdom among his daughters so that, "as he puts it, "future strife / May be prevented now" (1.1.38—44). But this attempt, centered on a public love test, is a disastrous failure, since it leads him to banish the one child who truly loves him.

Shakespeare contrives to show that the problem with which his characters are grappling does not simply result from the absence of a son and heir. In his most brilliant and complex use of a double plot, he intertwines the story of Lear and his three daughters with the story of Gloucester and his two sons, a story he adapted from an episode in Philip Sidney’s prose romance, Arcadia. Gloucester has a legitimate heir, his elder son, Edgar, as well as an illegitimate son, Edmund, and in this family the tragic conflict originates not in an unusual manner of transferring property from one generation to another but rather in the reverse: Edmund seethes with murderous resentment at the disadvantage entirely customary for someone in his position, both as a younger son and as what was called a "base" or "natural" child.

But why does Lear, who has, as the play begins, already drawn up the map equitably dividing the kingdom, stage the love test? In Shakespeare’s principal source, an anonymous play called The True Chronicle History of King Leir (published in 1605 but dating from 1594 or earlier), there is a gratifyingly clear answer. Leir’s strong-willed daughter Cordelia has vowed that she will marry only a man whom she herself loves; Leir wishes her to marry the man he chooses for his own dynastic purposes. He stages the love test, anticipating that in competing with her sisters, Cordelia will declare that she loves her father best, at which point Leir will demand that she prove her love by marrying the suitor of his choice. The stratagem backfires, but its purpose is clear.

By stripping his character of a comparable motive, Shakespeare makes Lear’s act seem stranger, at once more arbitrary and more rooted in deep psychological needs. His Lear is a man who has determined to retire from power but who cannot endure dependence. Unwilling to lose his identity as an absolute authority both in the state and in the family, he arranges a public ritual—"Which of you shall we say doth love us most?" (1.1.50)—whose aim seems to be to allay his own anxiety by arousing it in his children. But Cordelia refuses to perform: "What shall Cordelia speak? Love, and be silent" (1.1.61). When she says "Nothing," a word that echoes darkly throughout the play, Lear hears what he most dreads: emptiness, loss of respect, the extinction of identity. And when, under further interrogation, she declares that she loves her father “according to my bond” (1.1.93), Lear understands these words too to be the equivalent of "nothing."

As Cordelia’s subsequent actions demonstrate, his youngest daughter's bond is in reality a sustaining, generous love, but it is a love that ultimately leads to her death. Here Shakespeare makes an even more startling departure not only from The True Chronicle History of King Leir but from all his known sources. The earliest of these, the account in Geoffrey of Monmouth’s twelfth-century Historia Regum Britanniae, sets the pattern repeated in John Higgins’s A Mirror for Magistrates (1574 ed.), William Warner’s Albion’s England (1586), Raphael Holinshed’s Chronicles (1587), and Edmund Spenser’s Faerie Queene (1590: 2.10.27—32): the aged Lear is overthrown by his wicked daughters and their husbands, but he is restored to the throne by the army of his good daughter’s husband, the king of France. The story then is one of loss and restoration: Lear resumes his reign, and then "made ripe for death" by old age, as Spenser puts it, he dies and is succeeded by Cordelia. The conclusion is not unequivocally happy: in all of the known chronicles, Cordelia rules worthily for several years and then, after being deposed and imprisoned by her nephews, in despair commits suicide. But Shakespeare's ending is unprecedented in its tragic devastation. When in Act 5 Lear suddenly enters with the lifeless body of Cordelia in his arms, the original audience, secure in the expectation of a very different resolution, must have been doubly shocked, a shock cruelly reinforced when the signs that she might be reviving—"This feather stirs; she lives!" (5.3.265)—all prove false. Lear apparently dies in the grip of the illusion that he detects some breath on his daughter's lips, but we know that Cordelia will, as he says a moment earlier, "come no more, / Never, never, never, never, never!" (5.3.307—08).

Those five reiterated words, the bleakest pentameter line Shakespeare ever wrote, are the climax of an extraordinary poetics of despair that is set in motion when Lear disinherits Cordelia and when Gloucester credits Edmund's lies about Edgar. King Lear has seemed to many modern readers and audiences the greatest of Shakespeare's tragedies precisely because of its anguished look into the heart of darkness, but its vision of suffering and evil has not always commanded unequivocal admiration. In the eighteenth century Samuel Johnson wrote that "I was many years ago so shocked by Cordelia's death that I know not whether I ever endured to read again the last scenes of the play till I undertook to revise them as an editor." Johnson's contemporaries preferred a revision of Shakespeare's tragedy undertaken in 1681 by Nahum Tate. Finding the play, he writes, "a Heap of Jewels, unstrung, and unpolished," Tate proceeded to restring them in order to save Cordelia's life and to produce the unambiguous triumph of the forces of good, culminating in the joyous marriage of Cordelia and Edgar.

Only in the nineteenth century was Shakespeare's deeply pessimistic ending—the old generation dead or dying, the survivors shaken to the core, the ruling families all broken with no impending marriage to promise renewal—generally restored to theatrical performance and the tragedy's immense power fully acknowledged. Even passionate admirers of King Lear, however, continued to express deep uneasiness, questioning whether the tragedy was suitable for the stage. Charles Lamb, for example, concluded flatly that "Lear is essentially impossible to be represented on stage." "To see Lear acted," Lamb wrote, "to see an old man tottering about the stage with a walking stick, turned out of doors by his daughters in a rainy night, has nothing in it but what is painful and disgusting." In such a view, King Lear could only be staged successfully in the imagination, where, freed from the limits of the human body, it could assume its true, stupendous proportions and enable the reader to grasp its ultimate spiritual meaning.

A succession of brilliant stage performances and, more recently, films has not only belied the view that King Lear is unactable but also underscored the crucial importance in the play of the body. If Shakespeare explores the extremes of the mind's anguish and the soul's devotion, he never forgets that his characters have bodies as well, bodies that have needs, cravings, and terrible vulnerabilities. When in this tragedy characters fall from high station, they plunge unprotected into a world of violent storms, murderous cruelty, and physical horror. The old king wanders raging on the heath, through a wild night of thunder and rain. Disguised as Poor Tom, a mad beggar possessed by demons, Gloucester's son Edgar enacts a life of utmost degradation. Gloucester's fate is even more terrible: betrayed by his son Edmund, he is seized in his own house by Lear's reptilian daughter Regan and her husband Cornwall, tied to a chair, brutally interrogated, blinded, and then thrust bleeding out of doors.

The body in King Lear is a site not only of abject misery, nausea, and pain but also of care and a nascent moral awareness. In the midst of his mad ravings, Lear turns to the shivering Fool and asks, "Art cold?" (3.2.68). The question anticipates his recognition a few moments later that there is more suffering in the world than his own. Such signs of goodness and empathy, as simple as offering one's hand to someone who is frightened, do not outweigh the harshness of the physical world of the play, let alone cancel out the vicious cruelty of certain of its inhabitants, but they do qualify its moral bleakness. For a time evil seems to flourish unchecked in the world of the play, but the wicked do not ultimately triumph, and, in the midst of their anguish, humiliation, and pain, Lear and Gloucester achieve flashes of insight.

The tragedy is not only that the intervals of moral resolution, mental lucidity, and spiritual calm are so brief, continually giving way to feverish grief and rage, but also that the modest human understandings, moving in their simplicity, cost such an enormous amount of pain. Edgar saves his father from despair but also in some sense breaks his father's heart. Cordelia's steadfast honesty, her refusal to flatter the father she loves, is admirable but has disastrous consequences, and her attempt to save Lear leads only to her own death. For a sublime moment, Lear actually sees his daughter, understands her separateness, acknowledges her existence:

Do not laugh at me;
For, as I am a man, I think this lady
To be my child Cordelia. (4.7.69-71)

But it has taken the destruction of virtually his whole world to reach this recognition.

An apocalyptic dream of last judgment and redemption hovers over the entire tragedy, but it is a dream forever deferred. At the sight of the howling Lear with the dead
Cordelia in his arms, the bystanders can only ask a succession of stunned questions.
Lear's own question seems the most terrible and the most important:

Why should a dog, a horse, a rat, have life,
And thou no breath at all? (5.3.306-07)

It is a sign of King Lear's astonishing freedom from orthodoxy that it refuses to offer any of the conventional answers to this question, answers that serve largely to conceal or deflect the mourner's anguish.

King Lear first appeared in print in a quarto published in 1608 entitled The History of King Lear; a substantially different text, entitled The Tragedy of King Lear and grouped with the other tragedies, was printed in the 1623 Folio. From the eighteenth century, when the difference between the two texts was first noted, editors, assuming that they were imperfect versions of the identical play, customarily conflated them, blending together the approximately one hundred folio lines not printed in the quarto with the approximately three hundred quarto lines not printed in the folio and selecting as best they could among the hundreds of particular alternative readings. But there is a growing scholarly consensus that the 1608 text of Lear represents the play as Shakespeare first wrote it and that the 1623 text represents a substantial revision.
In order to make available as much of both texts as possible within the space constrants of this anthology, we here present a conflated version. We add, on facing pages, a sample in which readers can compare in detail The History of King Lear and The Tragedy of King Lear. Readers who wish to pursue this comparison further may consult the Norton Shakespeare, where the two texts are printed in their entirety on facing pages.

Enter KENT, GLOUCESTER, and EDMUND

KENT I thought the king had more affected the Duke of Albany than Cornwall.

GLOUCESTER It did always seem so to us; but now, in the division of the kingdom, it appears not which of the dukes he values most; for equalities are so weighed, that curiosity in neither can make choice of either's moiety.

KENT Is not this your son, my lord?

GLOUCESTER His breeding, sir, hath been at my charge.

KENT I have so often blushed to acknowledge him, that now I am brazed to it.

GLOUCESTER Whereupon she grew round-wombed, and had, indeed, sir, a son for her cradle ere she had a husband for her bed. Do you smell a fault?

KENT I cannot wish the fault undone, the issue of it being so proper.

GLOUCESTER But I have, sir, a son by order of law, some year elder than this, who yet is no dearer in my account.

1.1 Location: King Lear's court.

1. Pronounced "Glaster."
2. That careful scrutiny ("curiosity") of both parts cannot determine which portion ("moiety") is preferable.
3. My responsibility; at my cost.
4. Could conceive; punning on biological conception.
5. (1) Sin, wrongdoing; (2) female genitals.
Though this knave
came something saucily into the world before he was sent for, yet was his mother fair;
there was good sport at his making, and the whoreson must be acknowledged. Do you know this noble gentleman, Edmund?

EDMUND No, my lord.

GLOUCESTER My lord of Kent. Remember him hereafter as my honorable friend.

EDMUND My services to your lordship.

KENT I must love you, and sue° to know you better.

EDMUND Sir, I shall study deserving.

GLOUCESTER He hath been out nine years, and away he shall again. (Sound a sennet°) The king is coming.

Enter one bearing a coronet, then King LEAR, CORN-WALL, ALBANY, GONERIL, REGAN, CORDELIA, and attendants

LEAR Attend the lords of France and Burgundy, Gloucester.

GLOUCESTER I shall, my liege.°

Exeunt LOUCESTER and EDUND

LEAR Meantime we° shall express our darker° purpose.
Give me the map there. Know° that we have divided
In three our kingdom; and 'tis our fast° intent
To shake all cares and business from our age,
Conferring them on younger strengths, while we Unburthened crawl toward death. Our son° of Cornwall,
And you, our no less loving son of Albany,
We have this hour a constant will to publish°
Our daughters' several dowers,° that future strife
May be prevented now. The princes, France and Burgundy,
Great rivals in our youngest daughter's love,
Long in our court have made their amorous sojourn,
And here are to be answered. Tell me, my daughters—
Since now we will divest us, both of rule,
Interest° of territory, cares of state—
Which of you shall we say doth love us most?
That° we our largest bounty° may extend
Where nature doth with merit challenge.° Goneril,
Our eldest-born, speak first.

GONERIL Sir, I love you more than words can wield° the matter;
Dearer than eye-sight, space,° and liberty;
Beyond what can be valued, rich or rare;
No less than life, with grace, health, beauty, honor;
As much as child e'er loved, or father found;
A love that makes breath° poor, and speech unable;
Beyond all manner of so much° I love you.

CORDELIA (aside) What shall Cordelia speak? Love, and be silent.

6. Somewhat rudely; somewhat shamefully.
7. A fixed determination to announce publicly.
8. I.e., to the one whose natural love and good deeds mutually enhance each other.
LEAR  Of all these bounds, even from this line to this,
With shadowy forests and with champains riched,
With plenteous rivers and wide-skirted meads,
We make thee lady; to thine and Albany's issue
Be this perpetual. What says our second daughter,
Our dearest Regan, wife to Cornwall? Speak.

REGAN  Sir, I am made
Of the self-same metal that my sister is,
And prize me at her worth. In my true heart
I find she names my very deed of love;
Only she comes too short, that I profess
Myself an enemy to all other joys,
Which the most precious square of sense possesses,
And find I am alone felicitate
In your dear highness' love.

Cordelia (aside)  Then poor Cordelia!
And yet not so; since, I am sure, my love's
More ponderous than my tongue.

LEAR  To thee and thine, hereditary ever
Remain this ample third of our fair kingdom;
No less in space, validity,
Than that conferred on Goneril. Now, our joy,
Although our last and least;
to whose young love
The vines of France and milk of Burgundy
Strive to be interested, what can you say to draw
A third more opulent than your sisters? Speak.

Cordelia  Nothing, my lord.

LEAR  Nothing?

Cordelia  Nothing.

LEAR  Nothing will come of nothing, speak again.

Cordelia  Unhappy that I am, I cannot heave
My heart into my mouth. I love your majesty
According to my bond; nor more nor less.

LEAR  How, how, Cordelia! mend your speech a little,
Lest it may mar your fortunes.

Cordelia  Good my lord,
You have begot me, bred me, loved me; I
Return those duties back as are right fit,
Obey you, love you, and most honor you.
Why have my sisters husbands, if they say
They love you all? Haply, when I shall wed,
That lord whose hand must take my plight shall carry
Half my love with him, half my care and duty.
Sure, I shall never marry like my sisters,
To love my father all.

LEAR  But goes thy heart with this?

Cordelia  Ay, good my lord.

LEAR  So young, and so untender?

Cordelia  So young, my lord, and true.

LEAR  Let it be so! Thy truth, then, be thy dower!

9. That the body can enjoy.
For, by the sacred radiance of the sun,
The mysteries of Hecate,¹ and the night;
By all the operation of the orbs
From whom we do exist and cease to be;²
Here I disclaim all my paternal care,
Propinquity³ and property of blood,⁰         closeness / kinship
And as a stranger to my heart and me
Hold thee, from this,⁰ for ever. The barbarous Scythian,³         this time
Or he that makes his generation messes⁴
To gorge his appetite, shall to my bosom
Be as well neighbored, pitied, and relieved,⁰ assisted in trouble
As thou my sometime⁰ daughter.

KENT     Good my liege—
LEAR     Peace, Kent!

Come not between the dragon and his wrath.
I loved her most, and thought to set my rest⁵
On her kind nursery.⁰ Hence, and avoid my sight! care
So be my grave my peace,⁰ as here I give
Her father’s heart from her! Call France; who stirs?¹¹
Call Burgundy, Cornwall and Albany,
With my two daughters’ dowers digest³ this third: incorporate
Let pride, which she calls plainness,⁰ marry her.
I do invest you jointly with my power,
Pre-eminence, and all the large effects⁰ outward shows, trappings
That troop with⁰ majesty. Ourself, by monthly course,
With reservation⁰ of an hundred knights, accompany
By you to be sustained, shall our abode
Make with you by due turns. Only we still retain
The name, and all the additions⁰ to a king; prerogatives
The sway,⁰ revenue, execution of the rest,
Beloved sons, be yours; which to confirm,
This coronet⁰ part betwixt you.

KENT     Royal Lear,
LEAR     Whom I have ever honored as my king,
        Loved as my father, as my master followed,
        As my great patron thought on in my prayers—

KENT     The region of my heart: be Kent unmannerly,
        When Lear is mad. What wilt thou do, old man?
        Think’st thou that duty shall have dread to speak,
        When power to flattery bows? To plainness⁰ honor’s bound,

³ Notoriously savage Crimean nomads of classical antiquity.

LEAR

Kent, on thy life, no more.

LEAR

My life I never held but as a pawn\(^6\) To wage\(^5\) against thy enemies; nor fear to lose it, Thy safety being the motive.

LEAR

Out of my sight!

LEAR

See better, Lear; and let me still remain The true blank\(^9\) of thine eye.

LEAR

Now, by Apollo—

LEAR

O, vassal! miscreant!\(^1\)

LEAR

Laying his hand on his sword

ALBANY

Dear sir, forbear.

CORNWALL

J

KENT

Do; Kill thy physician, and the fee bestow Upon thy foul disease.\(^2\) Revoke thy doom; Or, whilst I can vent clamor from my throat, I'll tell thee thou dost evil.

LEAR

Hear me, recreant\(^10\) On thine allegiance, hear me! Since thou hast sought to make us break our vow, Which we durst never yet, and with strained\(^6\) pride To come between our sentence and our power, Which nor our nature nor our place\(^3\) can bear, Our potency made good,\(^6\) take thy reward. Five days we do allot thee, for provision To shield thee from diseases\(^9\) of the world; And on the sixth to turn thy hated back Upon our kingdom: if, on the tenth day following, Thy banished trunk\(^9\) be found in our dominions, The moment is thy death. Away! by Jupiter, This shall not be revoked.

KENT

Fare thee well, king. Sith\(^4\) thus thou wilt appear, Freedom lives hence, and banishment is here. (To CORDELIA) The gods to their dear shelter take thee, maid, That justly think\'st, and hast most rightly said! (To REGAN and GONERIL) And your large speeches may your deeds approve,\(^4\) That good effects may spring from words of love.

9. I'll stake my life on my opinion.

1. You invoke your gods falsely and without effect. Lear's blindness and misdirected imprecations are particularly inapt for Apollo, god of the sun and of archery.

2. You would not only kill the doctor but hand his fee over to the disease.

3. Which neither my temperament nor my royal position.

4. And let your actions live up to your fine words.
Thus Kent, O princes, bids you all adieu;
He'll shape his old course in a country new.
Exit

Flourish.
Re-enter GLOUCESTER, with FRANCE, BURGUNDY, and attendants

GLOUCESTER   Here's France and Burgundy, my noble lord.

LEAR   My lord of Burgundy,
We first address towards you, who with this king
Hath rivaled for our daughter. What, in the least,
Will you require in present dower with her,
Or cease your quest of love?

BURGUNDY   Most royal majesty,
I crave no more than what your highness offered,
Nor will you tender a less.

LEAR   Right noble Burgundy,
When she was dear to us, we did hold her so;
But now her price is fallen. Sir, there she stands;
If aught within that little seeming substance,
Or all of it, with our displeasure pieced,
And nothing more, may fitly like your grace,
She's there, and she is yours.

BURGUNDY   I know no answer.

LEAR   Will you, with those infirmities she owes,
Unfriend, new-adopted to our hate,
Dowered with our curse, and strangered with our oath,
Take her, or leave her?

BURGUNDY   Pardon me, royal sir;
Election makes not up on such conditions.
LEAR   Then leave her, sir; for, by the power that made me,
I tell you all her wealth. (To FRANCE) For you, great king,
I would not from your love make such a stray
To match you where I hate; therefore beseech you
To avert your liking so far as to turn your affections
Than on a wretch whom nature is ashamed
Almost to acknowledge hers.

FRANCE   This is most strange,
That she, whom even but now was your best object,
The argument of your praise, balm of your age,
Most best, most dearest, should in this trice of time
Commit a thing so monstrous, to dismantle so many folds of favor. Sure, her offense
Must be of such unnatural degree,
That monsters it, or your fore-vouched affection
Fall'n into taint; which to believe of her,
Must be a faith that reason without miracle
Could never plant in me.

CORDELIA   I yet beseech your majesty—
If for I want that glib and oily art,

5. I.e., one who appears more substantial than she is; one who will not pretend.
6. A choice cannot be made under those terms.
7. I.e., or else the love you earlier swore for Cordelia must be regarded with suspicion. "Or" may also mean "before," in which case the phrase would mean "before the love you once proclaimed could have decayed."
To speak and purpose not—since what I well intend,
I'll do't before I speak—that you make known
It is no vicious blot, murder, or foulness,
No unchaste action, or dishonored step,
That hath deprived me of your grace and favor;
But even for want of that for which I am richer,
A still-soliciting eye, and such a tongue
As I am glad I have not, though not to have it
Hath lost me in your liking.

LEAR

Better thou
Hadst not been born than not to have pleased me better.

FRANCE

Is it but this—a tardiness in nature
Which often leaves the history unspoke
That it intends to do? My lord of Burgundy,
What say you to the lady? Love's not love
When it is mingled with regards that stands
Aloof from th' entire point. Will you have her?
She is herself a dowry.

BURGUNDY

Royal Lear,
Give but that portion which yourself proposed,
And here I take Cordelia by the hand,
Duchess of Burgundy.

LEAR

Nothing! I have sworn; I am firm.

BURGUNDY

I am sorry, then, you have so lost a father
That you must lose a husband.

CORDELIA

Peace be with Burgundy!
Since that respects of fortune are his love,
I shall not be his wife.

FRANCE

Fairest Cordelia, that art most rich, being poor;
Most choice, forsaken; and most loved, despised!
Thee and thy virtues here I seize upon:
Be it lawful I take up what's cast away.
Gods, gods! 'tis strange that from their cold'st neglect
My love should kindle to inflamed respect.
Thy dowerless daughter, king, thrown to my chance,
Is queen of us, of ours, and our fair France.
Not all the dukes of waterish Burgundy
Can buy this unprized precious maid of me.
Bid them farewell, Cordelia, though unkind;
Thou losest here, a better where to find.

LEAR

Thou hast her, France; let her be thine; for we Have no such daughter, nor shall ever see
That face of hers again. Therefore be gone
Without our grace, our love, our benison.

Come, noble Burgundy.
Flourish. Exeunt all but France, Goneril, Regan, and

CORDELIA

Bid farewell to your sisters.

CORDELIA

The jewels of our father, with washed eyes
Cordelia leaves you. I know you what you are,

8. A natural reserve that inhibits voicing one's intentions.
And like a sister am most loath to call
Your faults as they are named. Love well our father.
To your professed bosoms I commit him;
But yet, alas, stood 1° within his grace,
I would prefer him to a better place.
So, farewell to you both.

REGAN    Prescribe not us our duties.

GONERIL    Let your study
Be to content your lord, who hath received you
At fortune's alms. You have obedience stantned, if I stood
And well are worth the want that you have wanted.

CORDELIA    Time shall unfold what pleated cunning hides:
Who cover faults, at last shame them derides.
Well may you prosper!

FRANCE    Come, my fair Cordelia.

GLOUCESTER       Why so earnestly seek you to put up that letter?
EDMUND          I know no news, my lord.
GLOUCESTER       What paper were you reading?
EDMUND          Nothing, my lord.
GLOUCESTER       No? What needed, then, that terrible dispatch⁰ of it into your pocket? The quality of nothing hath not such need to hide itself. Let's see. Come, if it be nothing, I shall not need spectacles.
EDMUND          I beseech you, sir, pardon me. It is a letter from my brother, that I have not all o'er-read; and for so much as I have perused, I find it not fit for your o'er-looking.
GLOUCESTER       Give me the letter, sir.
EDMUND          I shall offend, either to detain or give it. The contents, as in part I understand them, are to blame.

If our father would sleep till I waked him, you should enjoy half his revenue for ever, and live the beloved of your brother, Edgar.' Hum—conspiracy!—'Sleep till I waked him—you should enjoy half his revenue'—My son Edgar! Had he a hand to write this? a heart and brain to breed it in?—When came this to you? who brought it?

EDMUND  It was not brought me, my lord; there's the cunning of it; I found it thrown in at the casement of my closet.

GLOUCESTER  You know the character to be your brother's?

EDMUND  If the matter were good, my lord, I durst swear it were his; but, in respect of that, I would fain think it were not.

GLOUCESTER  It is his.

EDMUND  It is his hand, my lord; but I hope his heart is not in the contents.

GLOUCESTER  Hath he never heretofore sounded you in this business?

EDMUND  Never, my lord. But I have heard him oft maintain it to be fit, that, sons at perfect age, and fathers declining, the father should be as ward to the son, and the son manage his revenue.

GLOUCESTER  O villain, villain! His very opinion in the letter! Abhorred villain! Unnatural, detested, brutish villain! worse than brutish! Go, sirrah, seek him. I'll apprehend him. Abominable villain! Where is he?

EDMUND  I do not well know, my lord. If it shall please you to suspend your indignation against my brother till you can derive from him better testimony of his intent, you shall run a certain course; where, if you violently proceed against him, mistaking his purpose, it would make a great gap in your own honor and shake in pieces the heart of his obedience. I dare pawn down my life for him that he hath wrote this to feel my affection to your honor, and to no further pretense of danger.

GLOUCESTER  Think you so?

EDMUND  If your honor judge it meet, I will place you where you shall hear us confer of this, and by an auricular assurance have your satisfaction; and that without any further delay than this very evening.

EDMUND Nor is not, sure.

GLOUCESTER To his father, that so tenderly and entirely loves him. Heaven and earth! Edmund, seek him out; wind me into him, I pray you; frame the business after your own wisdom. I would unstate myself, to be in a due resolution.

EDMUND I will seek him, sir, presently; convey the business as I shall find means, and acquaint you therewith.

GLOUCESTER These late eclipses in the sun and moon portend no good to us. Though the wisdom of nature can reason it thus and thus, yet nature finds itself scourged by the sequent effects. Love cools, friendship falls off, brothers divide; in cities, mutinies; in countries, discord; in palaces, treason; and the bond cracked 'twixt son and father. This villain of mine comes under the prediction; there's son against father. The king falls from bias of nature; there's father against child. We have seen the best of our time. Machinations, hollowness, treach-ery, and all ruinous disorders, follow us disquietly to our graves. Find out this villain, Edmund; it shall lose thee nothing; do it carefully. And the noble and true-hearted
Kent banished! his offense, honesty! 'Tis strange. Exit

EDMUND This is the excellent foppery of the world, that, when we are sick in fortune, often the surfeit of our own behavior, we make guilty of our disasters the sun, the moon, and the stars; as if we were villains by necessity; fools by heavenly compulsion; knaves, thieves, and treachers, by spherical predominance; drunkards, liars, and adulterers, by an enforced obedience of planetary influence; and all that we are evil in, by a divine thrusting on. An admirable evasion of whore-master man, to lay his goatish disposition to the charge of a star! My father compounded with my mother under the dragon's tail, and my nativity was under Ursa Major, so that it follows,
I am rough and lecherous. Fut! I should have been that I am, had the maidenliest star in the firmament twinkled on my bastardizing. Edgar—

Enter EDGAR and pat he comes like the catastrophe of the old comedy.
My cue is villainous melancholy, with a sigh like Tom o' Bedlam. O, these eclipses do portend these divisions!

2. Worm your way into his confidence (with "me" as an intensifier); worm your way into his confidence for me ("me" as a term of respect).
3. I would give up everything to have my doubts resolved.
4. Lunar and solar eclipses that were seen in London about a year before the play's first recorded performance would have added spice to this superstitious belief in the role of heavenly bodies as augurs of misfortune.
5. Though natural science may explain the eclipses this way or that, nature (and family bonds) suffers in the effects that follow.
6. The king deviates from his natural inclination. In the game of bowls, the "bias" ("course") is the eccentric path taken by the weighted ball when thrown.
7. Sickness caused by intemperance.
8. By the ascendancy of a particular planet. In the universe as conceived by Ptolemy, the planets revolved about the earth on crystalline spheres.
9. I.e., to hold a star responsible for his lustful desires.
1. Constellations: "dragon's tail" = Draco; and "Ursa Major" = Great Bear.
2. The usual name for lunatic beggars; "Bethlehem," shortened to "Bedlam," was the name of the oldest and best-known London madhouse.
Fa, sol, la, mi.¹

EDGAR  How now, brother Edmund? What serious contemplation are you in?

EDMUND  I am thinking, brother, of a prediction I read this other day, what should follow these eclipses.

EDGAR  Do you busy yourself about that?

EDMUND  I promise you, the effects he writes of succeed unhappily; as of unnaturalness between the child and the parent; death, dearth, dissolutions of ancient amities; divisions in state, menaces and maledictions against king and nobles; needless diffidences, banishment of friends, dissipation of cohorts, nuptial breaches, and I know not what.

EDGAR  How long have you been a sectary astronomical?²

EDMUND  Come, come! When saw you my father last?

EDGAR  Why, the night gone by.

EDMUND  Spake you with him?

EDGAR  Ay, two hours together.

EDMUND  Parted you in good terms? Found you no displeasure in him by word or countenance?³

EDGAR  None at all.

EDMUND  Bethink yourself wherein you may have offended him; and at my entreaty forbear his presence till some little time hath qualified the heat of his displeasure; which at this instant so rageth in him, that with the mischief of your person it would scarcely allay.⁴

EDGAR  Some villain hath done me wrong.

EDMUND  That's my fear. I pray you, have a continent forbearance till the speed of his rage goes slower; and, as I say, retire with me to my lodging, from whence I will fitly bring you to hear my lord speak. Pray ye, go! There's my key. If you do stir abroad, go armed.

EDGAR  Armed, brother?

EDMUND  Brother, I advise you to the best. Go armed. I am no honest man if there be any good meaning towards you. I have told you what I have seen and heard; but faintly, nothing like the image and horror of it. Pray you, away!

EDGAR  Shall I hear from you anon?

EDMUND  I do serve you in this business. Exit EDGAR

A credulous father, and a brother noble,
Whose nature is so far from doing harms,
That he suspects none; on whose foolish honesty
My practices⁵ ride easy! I see the business.⁶
Let me, if not by birth, have lands by wit:⁷
All with me's meet that I can fashion fit.⁸ Exit

¹ In the musical notation of Shakespeare’s time, Edmund’s sequence of tones spans an augmented fourth (F to B), an interval regarded then as now as especially dissonant; it was sometimes referred to as “the devil in music.” “Divisions”: social fractures; melodic embellishments.
² a devotee of astrology
³ restraint absence when suitable
⁴ restrained absence when suitable
⁵ it is now clear to me what needs to be done.
⁶ anything is fine by me as long as I can make it serve my purpose. “Meet”: justifiable; appropriate.

Enter GONERIL, and OSWALD, her steward

GONERIL Did my father strike my gentleman for chiding of his fool?

OSWALD Yes, madam.

GONERIL By day and night he wrongs me: every hour
He flashes into one gross crime or other,
That sets us all at odds. I'll not endure it.
His knights grow riotous, and himself upbraids us
On every trifle. When he returns from hunting,
I will not speak with him. Say I am sick.
If you come slack of former services, you shall do well; the fault of it I'll answer.

OSWALD He's coming, madam; I hear him.

Horns within

GONERIL Put on what weary negligence you please,
You and your fellows. I'd have it come to question.
If he dislike it, let him to our sister,
Whose mind and mine, I know, in that are one,
Not to be overruled. Idle old man,
That still would manage those authorities
That he hath given away! Now, by my life,
Old fools are babes again, and must be used
With checks as flatteries, when they are seen abused.
Remember what I tell you.

OSWALD Well, madam.

GONERIL And let his knights have colder looks among you.
What grows of it, no matter; advise your fellows so.
I would breed from hence occasions, and I shall,
That I may speak. I'll write straight to my sister,
To hold my very course. Prepare for dinner. Exeunt exact

Enter KENT, disguised

KENT If but as well I other accents borrow,
That can my speech defuse, my good intent
May carry through itself to that full issue
For which I razed my likeness. Now, banished Kent,
If thou canst serve where thou dost stand condemned,
So may it come, thy master, whom thou lovest,
Shall find thee full of labors.

Horns within. Enter LEAR, knights, and attendants

LEAR Let me not stay a jot for dinner; go get it ready.

Exit an attendant

KENT A man, sir.

1.3 Location: The duke of Albany's castle.

1. If you offer him less service (and respect) than before.
2. When foolish old men act like children, rebukes are the kindest treatment when kind treatment is abused.

1.4 Location: As before.

1. As well as disguising my appearance.
2. Disguised my appearance; shaved off my beard (with a pun on "razor").
LEAR: What dost thou profess? What wouldst thou with us?

KENT: I do profess to be no less than I seem; to serve him truly that will put me in trust; to love him that is honest; to converse with him that is wise and says little; to fear judgment; to fight when I cannot choose; and to eat no fish.

LEAR: What art thou?

KENT: A very honest-hearted fellow, and as poor as the king.

LEAR: If thou be as poor for a subject as he is for a king, thou art poor enough. What wouldst thou?

KENT: Service.

LEAR: Who wouldst thou serve?

KENT: You.

LEAR: Dost thou know me, fellow?

KENT: No, sir; but you have that in your countenance which I would fain call master.

LEAR: What's that?

KENT: Authority.

LEAR: What services canst thou do?

KENT: I can keep honest counsel, ride, run, mar a curious tale in telling it, and deliver a plain message bluntly. That which ordinary men are fit for, I am qualified in; and the best of me is diligence.

LEAR: How old art thou?

KENT: Not so young, sir, to love a woman for singing, nor so old to dote on her for anything. I have years on my back forty-eight.

LEAR: Follow me; thou shalt serve me. If I like thee no worse after dinner, I will not part from thee yet. Dinner, ho dinner! Where's my knave? my fool? Go you, and call my fool hither.

Exit an attendant

Enter OSWALD

OSWALD: You, you, sirrah, where's my daughter?

LEAR: What says the fellow there? Call the clotpoF back. (Exit a KNIGHT) Where's my fool, ho? I think the world's asleep.

Re-enter KNIGHT

KNIGHT: How now! Where's that mongrel?

KNIGHT: He says, my lord, your daughter is not well.

LEAR: Why came not the slave back to me when I called him?

KNIGHT: Sir, he answered me in the roundest manner, he would not.

LEAR: He would not!

---

3. What is your job (profession)? Kent, in reply, uses "profess" punningly to mean "claim."

4. And not to be a Catholic or penitent (Catholics were obliged to eat fish on specified occasions and as penance); alternatively, to be a manly man, a meat eater.
KNIGHT  My lord, I know not what the matter is; but, to my judgment, your highness is not entertained with that ceremonious affection as you were wont, there's a great abatement of kindness appears as well in the general dependants as in the duke himself also and your daughter.
LEAR  Ha! sayest thou so?
KNIGHT  I beseech you pardon me, my lord, if I be mistaken; for my duty cannot be silent when I think your highness wronged.
LEAR  Thou but rememberest me of mine own conception. I have perceived a most faint neglect of late; which I have rather blamed as mine own jealous curiosity than as a very pretense and purpose of unkindness. I will look further into't. But where's my fool? I have not seen him this two days.
KNIGHT  Since my young lady's going into France, sir, the fool hath much pined away.
LEAR  No more of that; I have noted it well. Go you and tell my daughter I would speak with her.  Exit KNIGHT Go you, call hither my fool.Exit an attendant
Re-enter OSWALD
O, you sir, you! Come you hither, sir. Who am I, sir?
OSWALD  My lady's father.
LEAR  "My lady's father"! My lord's knave! You whoreson dog! you slave! you cur!
OSWALD  I am none of these, my lord; I beseech your pardon.
LEAR  Do you bandy looks with me, you rascal? (Striking him)
OSWALD  I'll not be struck, my lord.
KENT  Nor tripped neither, you base foot-ball player.
Tripping up his heels
LEAR  I thank thee, fellow; thou servest me, and I'll love thee.
KENT  Come, sir, arise, away! I'll teach you differences.
Away, away! If you will measure your lubber's length again, tarry; but away! Go to! Have you wisdom? so.
Pushes OSWALD out
LEAR  Now, my friendly knave, I thank thee: there's earnest of thy service. (Giving KENT money)
Enter FOOL
FOOL  Let me hire him too. Here's my coxcomb.
Offering KENT his cap
LEAR  How now, my pretty knave! How dost thou?
FOOL  Sirrah, you were best take my coxcomb.
KENT  Why, fool?

5. Paranoid concern with niceties.
6. Football was a rough street game played by the poor.
7. If you will be stretched out by me again. 'Lubber clumsy oaf.
FOOL Why, for taking one's part that's out of favor. Nay, an thou canst not smile as the wind sits, thou'lt catch cold shortly. There, take my coxcomb! Why, this fellow has banished two on's daughters, and did the third a blessing against his will. If thou follow him, thou must needs wear my coxcomb. How now, nuncle! Would I had two coxcombs and two daughters!

LEAR Why, my boy?

FOOL If I gave them all my living. I'd keep my coxcombs myself. There's mine; beg another of thy daughters.

LEAR Take heed, sirrah; the whip.

FOOL Truth's a dog must to kennel; he must be whipped out, when Lady the brach may stand by the fire and stink.

LEAR A pestilent gall to me!

FOOL Sirrah, I'll teach thee a speech.

LEAR DO.

FOOL Mark it, nuncle:

Have more than thou showest,
Speak less than thou knowest,
Lend less than thou owest,
Ride more than thou goest,
Learn more than thou trowest,
Set less than thou throwest,
Leave thy drink and thy whore,
And keep in-a-door,
And thou shalt have more
Than two tens to a score.

KENT This is nothing, fool.

FOOL Then 'tis like the breath of an unfeed lawyer; you gave me nothing for't. Can you make no use of nothing, nuncle?

LEAR Why, no, boy; nothing can be made out of nothing.

FOOL (to KENT) Prithhee, tell him, so much the rent of his land comes to. He will not believe a fool.

LEAR A bitter fool!

FOOL Dost thou know the difference, my boy, between a bitter fool and a sweet fool?

LEAR NO, lad; teach me.

FOOL That lord that counseled thee
To give away thy land,
Come place him here by me,
Do thou for him stand!

The sweet and bitter fool

8. I.e., if you can't keep in with those in power, you will soon find yourself left out in the cold.

9. By abdicating, Lear has in effect prevented his daughters from any longer being his subjects, just as if he had banished them.

1. I.e., I'd be twice as much a fool.

2. Lady the bitch. Pet dogs were often called "Lady" such-and-such. The allusion is to Regan and Goneril, who are now being preferred to truthful Cordelia.

3. Don't gamble everything on a single cast of the dice.

4. And there will be more than two tens in your twenty; that is, you will become richer.

5. Remind him that no land means no rent; with a pun on "rent" meaning "torn, divided."
KING LEAR 1.1 / 1159

Will presently appear;
The one in motley here,
The other found out there.

LEAR Dost thou call me fool, boy?
FOOL All thy other titles thou hast given away; that thou wast born with.
KENT This is not altogether fool, my lord.
FOOL No, faith, lords and great men will not let me; if I had a monopoly out, they would have part on't; and ladies too, they will not let me have all fool to myself; they'll be snatchings. Give me an egg, nuncle, and I'll give thee two crowns.
LEAR What two crowns shall they be?
FOOL Why, after I have cut the egg i' the middle, and eat up the meat, the two crowns of the egg. When thou clovest thy crown i' the middle, and gavest away both parts, thou borest thy ass on thy back o'er the dirt. Thou hastd little wit in thy bald crown, when thou gavest thy golden one away. If I speak like myself in this, let him be whipped that first finds it so.

Singing
Fools had ne'er less grace in a year;
For wise men are grown foppish,
They know not how their wits to wear,
Their manners are so apish.

LEAR When were you wont to be so full of songs, sirrah?
FOOL I have used it, nuncle, ever since thou madest thy daughters thy mother; for when thou gavest them the rod, and put'st down thine own breeches,

Singing
Then they for sudden joy did weep,
And I for sorrow sung,
That such a king should play bo-peep,
And go the fools among.

Prithee, nuncle, keep a schoolmaster that can teach thy fool to lie. I would fain learn to lie.

LEAR An you lie, sirrah, we'll have you whipped.
FOOL I marvel what kin thou and thy daughters are. They'll have me whipped for speaking true, thou'lt have me whipped for lying; and sometimes I am whipped for holding my peace. I had rather be any kind o' thing than a fool; and yet I would not be thee, nuncle; thou hast pared thy wit o' both sides, and left nothing i' the middle.

Here comes one o' the parings.

Enter GONERIL

LEAR How now, daughter! What makes that frontlet on?

---

7. In a fable of Aesop, a man carried his ass instead of riding it, thereby reversing the order of nature.
8. I.e., who first discovers for himself that this is true; colloquially, who deserves to be whipped as a fool.
9. Professional fools have gone out of favor ("grace") since wise men have lately outdone them in idiocy.
1. Band worn on the forehead; here, a metaphor for "frown."
Methinks you are too much of late i’ the frown.

Fool
Thou wast a pretty fellow when thou hadst no need to care for her frowning; now thou art an O without a figure.¹ I am better than thou art now; I am a fool, thou art nothing. [To Goneril] Yes, forsooth,² I will hold my tongue; so your face bids me, though you say nothing.

Goneril
He that keeps nor crust nor crumb,
Wearie of all, shall want some.

(Pointing to Lear) That’s a shealed peascod.³

Goneril
Not only, sir, this your all-licensed fool,
But other of your insolent retinue
Do hourly carp and quarrel, breaking forth
In rank⁴ and not-to-be-endured riots. Sir,
I had thought, by making this well known unto you,
To have found a safe redress; but now grow fearful,
By what yourself too late have spoke and done,
That you protect this course, and put it on⁵
By your allowance; which if you should, the fault
Would not ‘scape censure, nor the redresses sleep,
Which, in the tender of a wholesome weal,
Might in their working do you that offense,
Which else were shame, that then necessity
Will call discreet proceeding.³

Fool
For, you know, nuncle,
The hedge-sparrow fed the cuckoo so long,
That it had its head bit off by it young.⁶
So, out went the candle, and we were left darkling.⁷

Lear
Are you our daughter?

Goneril
Come, sir.
I would you would make use of that good wisdom,
Whereof I know you are fraught,⁸ and put away
These dispositions,⁹ that of late transform you
From what you rightly are.

Fool
May not an ass know when the cart draws the horse?
Whoop, Jug!¹⁰ I love thee.

Lear
Doth any here know me? This is not Lear.
Doth Lear walk thus? speak thus? Where are his eyes?
Either his notion weakens, his discernings
Are lethargied—Ha! waking! Tis not so.
Who is it that can tell me who I am?

Fool
Lear’s shadow.

Lear
I would learn that; for, by the marks of sovereignty,
Knowledge, and reason, I should be false persuaded I had daughters.

¹. A zero without a preceding digit: nothing.
². I.e., if you do approve (of your attendants’ behavior), you will not escape criticism, nor will it be without retribution, which for the common good will cause you pain. While this would otherwise be improper, it will be seen as a prudent (‘discreet’) action under the circumstances. "Tender of" concern for; "Weal": state, commonwealth. "Then necessity": the demands of the time.
³. The cuckoo lays its eggs in other birds’ nests.
⁴. Nickname for "Joan"; sobriquet for a whore.
FOOL Which
de they will make an obedient father.

LEAR Your name, fair gentlewoman?

GONERIL This admiration,
sir, is much o’ the savor
Of other your new pranks. I do beseech you
To understand my purposes aright.
As you are old and reverend,
you should be wise.
Here do you keep a hundred knights and squires;
Men so disordered, so debashed and bold,
That this our court, infected with their manners,
Shows like a riotous inn. Epicurism and lust
Make it more like a tavern or a brothel
Than a graced palace. The shame itself doth speak
For instant remedy: be then desired
By her, that else will take the thing she begs,
Otherwise a little to disquantity your train;
And the remainder that shall still depend,
To be such men as may be sort your age,
And know themselves and you.

LEAR Darkness and devils!
Saddle my horses! call my train together!
Degenerate bastard! I’ll not trouble thee.
Yet have I left a daughter.

GONERIL YOU strike my people, and your disordered rabble
Make servants of their betters.

Enter ALBANY

LEAR Woe that too late repents!—(To ALBANY) woe to him who
O, sir, are you come?
Is it your will? Speak, sir. Prepare my horses!
Ingratitude, thou marble-hearted fiend,
More hideous when thou show’st thee in a child
Than the sea-monster!

ALBANY Pray, sir, be patient.

LEAR (to GONERIL) Detested kite! thou liest: carrion-eating hawk
My train are men of choice and rarest parts,
That all particulars of duty know,
And in the most exact regard support
The worships of their name. O most small fault,
How ugly didst thou in Cordelia show!
That, like an engine, wrench’d my frame of nature
From the fixed place; drew from my heart all love,
And added to the gall. O Lear, Lear, Lear!
Beat at this gate, that let thy folly in, (striking his head)
And thy dear judgment out! Go, go, my people.

ALBANY My lord, I am guiltless, as I am ignorant
Of what hath moved you.

LEAR It may be so, my lord.
Hear, Nature, hear! dear goddess, hear!
Suspend thy purpose, if thou didst intend
To make this creature fruitful!

---

6. As a machine (or lever) dislocated my natural affections from their proper foundations.
Into her womb convey sterility!
Dry up in her the organs of increase;
A babe to honor her! If she must teem, create by her organs of increase, and make her barren.
Create her child of spleen, that it may live
And be a thwart, disnaturèd torment to her!
Let it stamp wrinkles in her brow of youth;
With cadent tears fret channels in her cheeks;
Turn all her mother's pains and benefits to laughter and contempt, that she may feel
How sharper than a serpent's tooth it is To have a thankless child! Away, away!
Exit

ALBANY  Now, gods that we adore, whereof comes this?
GONERIL  Never afflict yourself to know the cause;
But let his disposition have that scope inclination
That dotage gives it.

Re-enter LEAR
LEAR  What, fifty of my followers at a clap?
Within a fortnight?

ALBANY  What's the matter, sir?
LEAR  I'll tell thee. (To GONERIL) Life and death! I am ashamed
That thou hast power to shake my manhood thus;
That these hot tears, which break from me perforce, should make thee worth them. Blasts and fogs upon thee!
The untented woundings of a father's curse
Pierce every sense about thee! Old fond eyes,
Beweep this cause again, I'll pluck ye out,
And cast you, with the waters that you lose,
To temper clay. Yea, is it come to this?

ALBANY  I cannot be so partial, to the great love I bear you—
GONERIL  Pray you, content. What, Oswald, ho! (To the FOOL) You sir, more knave than fool, after your master!

FOOL  Nuncle Lear, nuncle Lear, tarry and take the fool with thee.

A fox, when one has caught her,
And such a daughter,
Should sure to the slaughter,
If my cap would buy a halter:
So the fool follows after.

Exit

7. Evidently Goneril has already given orders that fully half of Lear's retinue is to be dismissed. See lines 241—43 above.
GONERIL  This man hath had good counsel!—a hundred knights?
'Tis politic and safe to let him keep At point a hundred knights? Yes, that on every dream, Each buzz, each fancy, each complaint, dislike, He may enguard his dotage with their powers, And hold our lives in mercy. Oswald, I say!

ALBANY  Well, you may fear too far.

GONERIL  Safer than trust too far:
Let me still take away the harms I fear, Not fear still to be taken. I know his heart. What he hath uttered I have writ my sister. If she sustaine him and his hundred knights, When I have showed the unfitness——

Re-enter OSWALD

How now, Oswald!

OSWALD  Yes, madam.

GONERIL  Take you some company, and away to horse! Inform her full of my particular fear, And thereto add such reasons of your own As may compact it more. Get you gone, And hasten your return.

No, no, my lord, This milky gentleness and course of yours Though I condemn not, yet, under pardon, You are much more attaxed for want of wisdom Than praised for harmful mildness.

ALBANY  How far your eyes may pierce I cannot tell:
Striving to better, oft we mar what's well.

GONERIL  Nay, then——
ALBANY  Well, well; the event.

Enter LEAR, KENT, and FOOL

LEAR  Go you before to Gloucester with these letters. Acquaint my daughter no further with any thing you know than comes from her demand out of the letter. If your diligence be not speedy, I shall be there afore you.

KENT  I will not sleep, my lord, till I have delivered your letter.

FOOL  If a man's brains were in's heels, were't not in danger of kibes?

LEAR  Ay, boy.

FOOL  Then, I prithee, be merry; thy wit shall ne'er go slipshod.

LEAR  Ha, ha, ha!

1.5 Location: Before Albany's castle.
1. To the city of Gloucester.
2. Other than such questions as are prompted by the letter.
3. Literally, your brains will not wear slippers (to warm feet that are afflicted with chilblains); feet of any intelligence would not walk toward Regan.
FOOL Shalt see thy other daughter use thee kindly; for though she’s as like this as a crab’s like an apple, yet I can tell what I can tell.

LEAR Why, what canst thou tell, my boy?

FOOL She will taste as like this as a crab does to a crab. Thou canst tell why one’s nose stands i’ the middle on’s face?

LEAR No.

FOOL Why, to keep one’s eyes of either side’s nose, that what a man cannot smell out, ‘a may spy into.

LEAR I did her wrong—

FOOL Canst tell how an oyster makes his shell?

LEAR No.

FOOL Nor I neither; but I can tell why a snail has a house.

LEAR Why?

FOOL Why, to put his head in; not to give it away to his daughters, and leave his horns without a case.

LEAR I will forget my nature. So kind a father! Be my horses ready?

FOOL Thy asses are gone about ’em. The reason why the seven stars are no more than seven is a pretty reason.

LEAR Because they are not eight?

FOOL Yes, indeed. Thou wouldst make a good fool.

LEAR To take’t again perforce! Monster ingratitude!

FOOL If thou wert my fool, nuncle, I’d have thee beaten for being old before thy time.

LEAR How’s that?

FOOL Thou shouldst not have been old till thou hadst been wise. O, let me not be mad, not mad, sweet heaven! Keep me in temper; I would not be mad!

Enter GENTLEMEN

How now! Are the horses ready?

GENTLEMEN Ready, my lord.

LEAR Come, boy.

FOOL She’s a maid now, and laughs at my departure, Shall not be a maid long, unless things be cut shorter.

Exeunt

Enter EDMUND and CURAN meeting

EDMUND Save thee, Curan.

CURAN And you, sir. I have been with your father, and given him notice that the Duke of Cornwall and Regan his duchess will be here with him this night.

EDMUND How comes that?

4. Protective covering for his head or concealment for his horns (horns were the conventional sign of a cuckold). The Fool reflects the cynical view, common in the period, that all married men are inevitably cuckolded.

5. To take it back by force. Lear may refer to Goneril’s treachery, or he may be contemplating resuming his authority.

6. A girl who would laugh at my leaving would be so foolish that she could not remain a virgin for long; "things" refers both to the unfolding event and to penises.

2.1 Location: Gloucester’s castle.
KING LEAR 1.1 / 1165

CURAN Nay, I know not. You have heard of the news abroad—I mean the whispered ones, for they are yet but ear-bussing arguments?¹

EDMUND Not I. Pray you, what are they?

CURAN Have you heard of no likely wars toward,⁰ ’twixt the Dukes of Cornwall and Albany?

EDMUND Not a word.

CURAN Why may you do, then, in time. Fare you well, sir. Exit

EDMUND The duke be here tonight? The better! best!

This weaves itself perforce⁰ into my business, i.e., of its own accord

My father hath set guard to take my brother; And I have one thing, of a queasy question, Which I must act.² Briefness and fortune, work!⁰ be with me

Brother, a word! Descend! Brother, I say!

Enter EDGAR

My father watches. O sir, fly this place! Intelligence is given where you are hid. You have now the good advantage of the night. Have you not spoken ’gainst the Duke of Cornwall? He’s coming hither; now, i’ the night, i’ the haste, And Regan with him: have you nothing said Upon his party⁰ ’gainst the Duke of Albany? Advise yourself.⁰ consider carefully

EDGAR I am sure on’t, not a word.

EDMUND I hear my father coming. Pardon me!

In cunning I must draw my sword upon you: Draw; seem to defend yourself; now quit you⁰ well. acquit yourself

Yield! Come before my father. Light, ho, here! Fly, brother. Torches, torches! So farewell. Exit EDGAR

Some blood drawn on me would beget opinion⁰ produce the impression

Enter GLOUCESTER, and servants with torches

GLOUCESTER Now, Edmund, where’s the villain?

EDMUND Here stood he in the dark, his sharp sword out, Mumbling of wicked charms, conjuring the moon To stand³ auspicious mistress,— to act as his

GLOUCESTER But where is he?

EDMUND Look, sir, I bleed.

GLOUCESTER Where is the villain, Edmund?

EDMUND Fled this way, sir. When by no means he could—

GLOUCESTER Pursue him, ho! Go after. Exeunt some servants

By no means what?

EDMUND Persuade me to the murder of your lordship;

¹. Barely whispered affairs. ’Bussing’: kissing.
². There is one thing, of a ticklish sort, that I must do.
But that I told him, the revenging gods
'Gainst parricides did all their thunders bend;
Spoke, with how manifold and strong a bond
The child was bound to the father; sir, in fine,
Seeing how loathly opposite
I stood
To his unnatural purpose, in fell motion,
With his prepared sword, he charges home
My unprovided body, lanced mine arm:
But when he saw my best alarumed spirits,
Bold in the quarrel's right, roused to the encounter,
Or whether gasted by the noise I made,
Full suddenly he fled.

GLOUCESTER  Let him fly far.

Not in this land shall he remain uncaught;
And found—dispatch. The noble duke my master,
My worthy arch and patron, comes to-night:
By his authority I will proclaim it,
That he which finds him shall deserve our thanks,
Bringing the murderous caitiff to the stake;
He that conceals him, death.

EDMUND  When I dissuaded him from his intent,

And found him pight to do it, with curst speech
I threatened to discover him. He replied,
"Thou unpossessing bastard! dost thou think
If I would stand against thee, would the reposal
Of any trust, virtue, or worth in thee
Make thy words faithed? No. What I should deny—
As this I would; ay, though thou didst produce
My very character—I'd turn it all
To thy suggestion, plot, and damned practice:
And thou must make a dullard of the world,
If they not thought the profits of my death
Were very pregnant and potential spurs
To make thee seek it."

GLOUCESTER  Strong and fast'ned villain!

Would he deny his letter? I never got him.

Tucket within

Hark, the Duke's trumpets! I know not why he comes.
All ports I'll bar; the villain shall not 'scape;
The duke must grant me that. Besides, his picture
I will send far and near, that all the kingdom
May have due note of him; and of my land,
Loyal and natural boy, I'll work the means
To make thee capable.

Enter Cornwall, Regan, and attendants

3. I.e., that I was fully roused to action, made brave by righteousness.
4. Treachery and rebellion were crimes for which one could be burned.
5. Handwriting; but also, a true summary of my character.
6. I'd blame it all on.
7. And do you think the world so stupid that it could not see the benefit you would get from my death (and thus a motive for plotting to kill me)?
8. Likenesses of outlaws were drawn up, printed, and publicly displayed, sometimes with an offer of reward, as in "Wanted" posters.

CORNWALL

How now, my noble friend! Since I came hither,
(Which I can call but now) I have heard strange news.

REGAN

If it be true, all vengeance comes too short
Which can pursue the offender. How dost, my lord?

GLOUCESTER

O, madam, my old heart is cracked, is cracked!

REGAN

What, did my father's godson seek your life? He whom my father named? Your Edgar?

GLOUCESTER

O, lady, lady, shame would have it hid!

REGAN

Was he not companion with the riotous knights That tend upon my father?

GLOUCESTER

I know not, madam. 'Tis too bad, too bad!

EDMUND

Yes, madam, he was of that consort.

REGAN

No marvel, then, though he were ill affected. 'Tis they have put him on the old man's death, To have th' expense and waste of his revenues. I have this present evening from my sister Been well informed of them; and with such cautions That if they come to sojourn at my house, I'll not be there.

CORNWALL

Nor I, assure thee, Regan. Edmund, I hear that you have shown your father A child-like office.

EDMUND

'Twas my duty, sir.

GLOUCESTER

He did bewray his practice, and received This hurt you see, striving to apprehend him.

CORNWALL

Is he pursued?

GLOUCESTER

Ay, my good lord.

CORNWALL

If be taken, he shall never more Be feared of doing harm. Make your own purpose, How in my strength you please. For you, Edmund, Whose virtue and obedience doth this instant So much commend itself, you shall be ours. Natures of such deep trust we shall much need; You we first seize on.

EDMUND

I shall serve you, sir,

EDMUND

Truly, however else.

GLOUCESTER

For him I thank your grace.

CORNWALL

You know not why we came to visit you—

REGAN

Thus out of season, threading dark-eyed night. Occasions, noble Gloucester, of some poise, Wherein we must have use of your advice: Our father he hath writ, so hath our sister, Of differences, which I best thought it fit To answer from our home. The several messengers From hence attend dispatch. Our good old friend, Lay comforts to your bosom, and bestow Your needful counsel to our business,

9. Devis your plots making use of my forces and authority as you see fit.
GLOUCESTER
I serve you, madam.

Your graces are right welcome.

Enter KENT and OSWALD, severally

OSWALD
Good dawning to thee, friend. Art° of this house?

KENT
I' the mire.

OSWALD
Prithee, if thou lovest me,° tell me.

KENT
I love thee not.

OSWALD
Why, then, I care not for thee.

KENT
If I had thee in Lipsbury pinfold,° would make thee care for me.

OSWALD
Why dost thou use° me thus? I know thee not.

KENT
Fellow, I know thee.

OSWALD
What dost thou know me for?

KENT
A knave; a rascal; an eater of broken meats; a base, proud, shallow, beggarly, three-suited, hundred-pound, filthy, worsted-stocking knave; a lily-livered, action-taking knave; a whoreson, glass-gazing, superservice-able, finical° rogue; one-trunk-inheriting slave; one that wouldst be a bawd in way of good service, and art nothing but the composition° of a knave, beggar, coward, pan-dar, and the son and heir of a mongrel bitch; one whom I will beat into clamorous whining, if thou denyest the least syllable of thy addition.

OSWALD
Why, what a monstrous fellow art thou, thus to rail on one that is neither known of° thee nor knowes thee!

KENT
What a brazen-faced varlet art thou, to deny thou knowest me! Is it two days ago since I tripped up thy heels, and beat thee before the king? Draw, you rogue!
For, though it be night, yet the moon shines. I'll make a sop of the moonshine of you. Draw, you whoreson cul-lionly barber-monger, draw!

Drawing his sword

OSWALD
Away! I have nothing to do with thee.

KENT
Draw, you rascal! You come with letters against the king, and take Vanity the puppet's part against the royalty of her father. And support Goneril, here depicted as a dressed-up doll whose pride is contrasted with Lear's kingli-ness. Slash or score as one would the surface of meat in preparation for broiling.

---

1. Which requires immediate attention.
2. Location: Before Gloucester's house.
2.1 If I had you in the enclosure of my mouth (gripped in my teeth), Lipsbury is probably an invented place-name. "Pinfold": pen, animal enclosure.
2.2 Oswald is being called a poor imitation of a gentleman. Servants were permitted three suits a year; one hundred pounds was the minimum qualification for the purchase of one of King James's knighthoods; a gentleman would wear silk, not "worsted" (of thick woolen material), stockings.
2.3 "One-trunk inheriting": owning only what would fill one trunk. "Superserviceable": overly officious, or too ready to serve. "Action-taking": litigious, one who would rather use the law than his fists.
3. Of the descriptions Kent has just applied to him.
4. One who would be a pimp if called upon.
5. "Addition": title (used ironically).
6. Kent proposes so to skewer and pierce Oswald that his body might soak up moonlight. "Sop": piece of bread to be steeped or dunked in soup.
7. Despicable frequenter of hairdressers. A "cullion" is a testicle.
8. And support Goneril, here depicted as a dressed-up doll whose pride is contrasted with Lear's kingli-ness.
9. Slash or score as one would the surface of meat in preparation for broiling.
shanks! Draw, you rascal! Come your ways\textsuperscript{10} come forward

ODEY Stand, rogue! Stand, you neat\textsuperscript{12} elegant; foppish

Oswald Help, ho! murther! help!

KENT Strike, you slave! strike! [Beating him]

Oswald Help, ho! murther! murther!

Enter EDMUND with his rapier drawn, CORNWALL, REGAN, GLOUCESTER, and servants

EDMUND How now! What's the matter?

KENT With you, goodman\textsuperscript{6} boy, an\textsuperscript{10} you please! Come, I'll flesh ye! Come, on, young master!

GLOUCESTER Weapons! arms! What's the matter here?

CORNWALL Keep peace, upon your lives!

He dies that strikes again. What is the matter?

REGAN The messengers from our sister and the king.

CORNWALL What is your difference? Speak.

Oswald I am scarce in breath, my lord.

KENT No marvel, you have so bestirred your valor. You cowardly rascal, nature disclaims\textsuperscript{6} in thee; a tailor made thee.

CORNWALL Thou art a strange fellow. A tailor\textsuperscript{2} make a man?

KENT Ay, a tailor, sir. A stone-cutter or a painter could not have made him so ill,\textsuperscript{4} though he had been but two hours at the trade.

CORNWALL Speak yet, how grew your quarrel?

Oswald This ancient ruffian, sir, whose life I have spared at suit of\textsuperscript{11} his gray beard—

KENT Thou whoreson zed!\textsuperscript{3} thou unnecessary letter! My lord, if you will give me leave, I will tread this unbolted\textsuperscript{9} villain into mortar, and daub the walls of a jakes\textsuperscript{10} with him. Spare my gray beard, you wagtail\textsuperscript{4}

CORNWALL Peace, sirrah!

You beastly knave, know you no reverence?\textsuperscript{9}

KENT Yes, sir, but anger hath a privilege.

CORNWALL Why art thou angry?

KENT That such a slave as this should wear a sword, Who wears no honesty. Such smiling rogues as these, Like rats, oft bite the holy cords\textsuperscript{5} a-twain Which are too intricate\textsuperscript{6} t' unloose; smooth\textsuperscript{6} every passion That in natures of their lords rebel; Bring oil to fire, snow to their colder moods; Renege,\textsuperscript{9} affirm, and turn their halcyon beaks\textsuperscript{6} With every gale and vary\textsuperscript{9} of their masters,

Knowing nought, like dogs, but following.

1. I'll blood you (as a hunting dog); I'll initiate you into fighting.
2. Tailors, considered effeminate, were stock objects of mockery.
3. The letter Z (zed) was considered superfluous and was omitted from many dictionaries.
4. A common English bird that takes its name from the up-and-down flicking of its tail; this, and its characteristic hopping from foot to foot, causes it to appear nervous.
5. Bonds of kinship, affection, marriage, or rank.
6. It was believed that the kingfisher (in Greek, halcyon) could be used as a weather vane when dead: if the bird were suspended by a thread, its beak would turn whatever way the wind blew.
A plague upon your epileptic visage! distorted, grimacing
Smile you' my speeches, as I were a fool?  do you smile at / as if Goose, if I had you upon Sarum plain
I'd drive ye cackling home to Camelot.7
Cornwall What, art thou mad, old fellow? came you to Gloucester How fell you out? Say that. opposites
Kent No contraries hold more antipathy
Than I and such a knave.
CORNWALL Why dost thou call him knave? What's his offense?
KENT His countenance likes me not.
CORNWALL No more, perchance, does mine, nor his, nor hers. perhaps KENT Sir, 'tis my occupation to be plain.
I have seen better faces in my time
Than stands on any shoulder that I see
Before me at this instant.
CORNWALL This is some fellow,
Who, having been praised for bluntness, doth affect
A saucy roughness, and constrains the garb
Quite from his nature.8 He cannot flatter, he,
An honest mind and plain, he must speak truth!
An they will take it, so; if not, he's plain.9
These kind of knaves I know, which in this plainness
Harbor more craft and more corrupter ends
Than twenty silly ducking observants
That stretch their duties nicely.1
KENT Sir, in good sooth, in sincere verity,
Under the allowance of your great aspect,2
Whose influence, like the wreath of radiant fire
On flickering Phoebus' front—° the sun god's forehead
CORNWALL What mean'st by this?
KENT To go out of my dialect,6 which you discommend so normal mode of speech much. I know, sir, I am no flatterer. He that beguiled you in a plain accent was a plain knave; which for my part I will not be, though I should win your displeasure to entreat me to't.3
CORNWALL What was the offense you gave him?
Oswald I never gave him any:
It pleased the king his master very late° lately
To strike at me, upon his misconstruction,6 misunderstanding (me)
When he, conjunct,° and flattering his displeasure,
Tripped me behind; being down, insulted,° railed,
And put upon him such a deal of man,

7. Comparing him to a cackling goose, Kent tells Oswald that if he had him on Salisbury Plain, he would drive him all the way to Camelot, legendary home of King Arthur.
8. °e., and assumes the appearance though it is untrue to his real self. Alternatively (with °his° meaning °its°), and distorts the true shape of plainness from what it naturally is (by turning it into disrespect).
9. If they will accept (Kent's attitude), well and good; if not, he is a plain spoken man (and does not care).
1. Than twenty obsequious attendants who constantly bow idiotically and who perform their functions with excessive diligence (°nicely°).
That worthied him, got praises of the king
For him attempting who was self-subdued;
And, in the fleshment of this dread exploit,
Drew on me here again.

KENT

None of these rogues and cowards
But Ajax is their fool.

CORNWALL

Fetch forth the stocks!
You stubborn miscreant knave, you reverent braggart,
We'll teach you—

KENT

Sir, I am too old to learn.
Call not your stocks for me. I serve the king;
On whose employment I was sent to you:
You shall do small respect, show too bold malice
Against the grace and person of my master,
Stocking his messenger.

CORNWALL

Fetch forth the stocks! As I have life and honor,
There shall he sit till noon.

REGAN

Till noon? Till night, my lord, and all night too!

KENT

Why, madam, if I were your father's dog,
You should not use me so.

REGAN

Sir, being his knave, I will.

CORNWALL

This is a fellow of the self-same color
Our sister speaks of. Come, bring away the stocks!

GLOUCESTER

Let me beseech your grace not to do so.
His fault is much, and the good king his master
Will check him for't. Your purposed low correction
Is such as basest and contemned' st wretches
For pilferings and most common trespasses
Are punished with: the king must take it ill,
That he, so slightly valued in his messenger,
Should have him thus restrained.

CORNWALL

I'll answer that.

REGAN

My sister may receive it much more worse,
To have her gentleman abused, assaulted,
For following her affairs. Put in his legs.

KENT

Come, my good lord, away.

---

4. And put on such a show of manliness that he was thought a worthy fellow.
5. For attacking a man who had already surrendered.
6. I.e., by their own account, such rogues and cowards are always vastly superior to Ajax (next to Achilles, the mightiest of the Greeks in the Iliad).
7. The fortunes of even good men sometimes wear thin.
Give you good morrow!

God give

The duke's to blame in this; 'twill be ill-taken.

Enter  EDGAR

I am nothing; I am no longer Edgar.

8. You come from the blessing of heaven into the heat of the sun (go from good to bad).
9. It is arguable whether Kent here refers to the sun or the moon.
1. Only those suffering misery are granted miracles; any comfort seems miraculous to those who are miserable.
2. The goddess Fortune was traditionally depicted with a wheel to signify her mutability and caprice. She was believed to take pleasure in arbitrarily lowering those at the top of her wheel and raising those at the bottom.
2.3 Location: As before.
1. Tangle the hair into ‘elf locks,’ supposed to be a favorite trick of malicious elves.
2. A word of unknown origin.
3. Edgar, I am nothing; I am no longer Edgar.
Enter LEAR, FOOL, and GENTLEMAN.

LEAR 'Tis strange that they should so depart from home, And not send back my messenger.

GENTLEMAN As I learned, The night before there was no purpose in them Of this remove.

KENT Hail to thee, noble master!

LEAR Ha! Makest thou this shame thy pastime?

KENT No, my lord.

FOOL Ha, ha! he wears cruel garters. Horses are tied by the heads, dogs and bears by the neck, monkeys by the loins, and men by the legs. When a man's over-lusty at legs, then he wears wooden nether-stocks.

LEAR What's he that hath so much thy place mistook To set thee here?

KENT It is both he and she; Your son and daughter.

LEAR No.

KENT Yes.

LEAR No, I say.

KENT I say, yes.

LEAR No, no, they would not!

KENT Yes, yes, they have!

LEAR By Jupiter, I swear, no!

KENT By Juno, I swear, aye!

LEAR They durst not do't; They would not, could not do't. 'Tis worse than murder, To do upon respect such violent outrage. Resolve me, with all modest haste, which way Thou mightst deserve, or they impose, this usage, Coming from us.

KENT My lord, when at their home I did commend your highness' letters to them, Ere I was risen from the place that showed My duty kneeling, came there a reeking post, Stewed in his haste, half breathless, panting forth From Goneril his mistress, salutations; Delivered letters, spite of intermission, Which presently they read; on whose contents, They summoned up their meiny, straight took horse; Commanded me to follow, and attend The leisure of their answer, gave me cold looks, And meeting here the other messenger,

2.4 Location: As before.
1. The Folio seems to reserve "a Gentleman" for this particular character, who returns in 5.2.
2. Worsted garters, punning on "crewel," a thin yarn. The Fool is actually referring to the stocks in which Kent's feet are held.
3. When a man's liable to run away.
4. Queen of the Roman gods and wife of Jupiter, with whom she constantly quarreled.
5. To do to one who deserves respect.
6. Regardless of interrupting me; despite the interruptions in his account (as he gasped for breath).
Whose welcome, I perceived, had poisoned mine—I
Being the very fellow that of late
Displayed so saucily against your highness—
Having more man than wit about me, drew.
He raised the house with loud and coward cries.
Your son and daughter found this trespass worth—
The shame which here it suffers.

Fool Winter’s not gone yet, if the wild-geese fly that way.?

Fathers that wear rags
Do make their children blind; but
But fathers that bear bags
Shall see their children kind.

Fortune, that arrant whore,
Ne’er turns the key to the poor.

But, for all this, thou shalt have as many dolors for thy daughters as thou canst tell in a year.

LEAR O, how this mother swells up toward my heart!

Hysterica passio, down, thou climbing sorrow.

Thy element’s below! Where is this daughter?

KENT With the earl, sir, here within.

LEAR Follow me not; stay here.

Exit Gentleman Made you no more offenses but what you speak of?

KENT None. How chance the king comes with so small a train?

Fool An thou hadst been set i’ the stocks for that question, thou hadst well deserved it.

KENT Why, fool?

Fool We’ll set thee to school to an ant, to teach thee there’s no laboring i’ the winter. All that follow their noses are led by their eyes but blind men, and there’s not a nose among twenty but can smell him that’s stinking. Let go thy hold when a great wheel runs down a hill, lest it break thy neck with following it; but the great one that goes up the hill, let him draw thee after. When a wise man gives thee better counsel, give me mine again. I would have none but knaves follow it, since a fool gives it.

That sir which serves and seeks for gain,
And follows but for form,
Will pack when it begins to rain,
And leave thee in the storm.
But I will tarry; the fool will stay.

7. That is, things will get worse before they get better.
8. I.e., blind to their father’s needs.
9. Pains, sorrows; punning on “dollar,” the English term for the German “thaler,” a large silver coin.
1. Hysterica passio (a Latin expression, originating in the Greek steiros, “suffering in the womb”) was an inflammation of the senses. In Renaissance medicine, vapors from the abdomen were thought to rise up through the body, and in women, the uterus itself to wander around.
2. Ants, proverbially prudent, know they cannot work in winter. Implicitly, a wise person should know better than to look for sustenance to an old man who has fallen on wintry times.
3. A great wheel is a figure for Lear and of Fortune’s wheel itself, which has swung downward.
And let the wise man fly.
The knave turns fool that runs away;\(^4\)
The fool no knave, perdy.\(^5\)

"by God (from French pardieu)"

KENT Where learned you this, fool?

FOOL Not i' the stocks, fool.

Re-enter Lear, with Gloucester

LEAR Deny to speak with me? They are sick? They are weary?
They have traveled all the night? Mere fetches;\(^9\)
The images of revolt and flying off.\(^5\)
Fetch me a better answer.

GLOUCESTER My dear lord,
You know the fiery quality\(^6\) of the duke;
How unremoveable and fixed he is
In his own course.

LEAR Vengeance! plague! death! confusion!\(^10\)
Fiery? what quality? Why, Gloucester, Gloucester,
I'd speak with the Duke of Cornwall and his wife.

GLOUCESTER Well, my good lord, I have informed them so.

LEAR Informed them! Dost thou understand me, man?

GLOUCESTER Ay, my good lord.

LEAR The king would speak with Cornwall; the dear father
Would with his daughter speak, commands her service.
Are they informed of this? My breath and blood!
Fiery? the fiery duke? Tell the hot duke that—
No, but not yet. May be he is not well.
Infirmitv doth still\(^8\) neglect all office\(^0\)
Whereto our health is bound; we are not ourselves
When nature, being oppressed, commands the mind
To suffer with the body. I'll forbear;
And am fallen out with my more header will,\(^6\)
To take\(^8\) the indisposed and sickly fit
For the sound man. Death on my state!\(^7\) Wherefore\(^8\)
\(\text{looking on Kent}\)
Should he sit here? This act persuades me
That this remotion\(^9\) of the duke and her
Is practice\(^9\) only. Give me my servant forth.\(^9\)
Go tell the duke and's wife I'd speak with them,
Now, presently!\(^9\) Bid them come forth and hear me,
Or at their chamber-door I'll beat the drum
Till it cry sleep to death.\(^8\)

GLOUCESTER I would have all well betwixt you.
Exit Lear
FOOL Cry to it, nuncle, as the cockney\(^9\) did to the eels when she put 'em i' the paste\(^9\) alive; she knapped 'em o'
the coxcombs\(^9\) with a stick, and cried "Down, wantons, down!" 'Twas her brother that, in pure l'dness to his horse, buttered his hay.\(^9\)

---

4. The scoundrel who runs away is the real fool.
5. Signs of revolt and of desertion or insurrection.
6. And disagree with my (earlier) more rash intention.
7. May my royal authority end (an oath). Ironically, this has already happened.
8. Till the noise kills sleep.
9. Like that of his sister (who wanted to make eel pie without killing the eels), his kindness was misplaced.
10. Signs of revolt and of desertion or insurrection.
Enter Cornwall, Regan, Gloucester, and servants

Lear Good morrow to you both.

Cornwall Hail to your grace!

KENT is set at liberty

Regan I am glad to see your highness.

Lear Regan, I think you are; I know what reason
I have to think so. If thou shouldst not be glad,
I would divorce me from thy mother's tomb,
Sepulchring an adulteress. (To Kent) O, are you free? because it entombed
Some other time for that. Beloved Regan,
Thy sister's naught. O Regan, she hath tied Sharp-toothed unkindness, like a vulture, here!

Points to his heart
I can scarce speak to thee; thou'lt not believe
With how depraved a quality—O Regan!

Regan I pray you, sir, take patience. I have hope
You less know how to value her desert
Than she to scant her duty.1

Lear Say, how is that?

Regan I cannot think my sister in the least
Would fail her obligation. If, sir, perchance
She have restrained the riots of your followers,
'Tis on such ground, and to such wholesome end,
As clears her from all blame.

Lear My curses on her!

Regan O, sir, you are old;
Nature in you stands on the very verge
Of her confine. You should be ruled and led
By some discretion, that discerns your state
Better than you yourself. Therefore, I pray you,
That to our sister you do make return;
Say you have wronged her, sir.

Lear Ask her forgiveness?

Regan (kneeling) O, sir, you are old;
Age is unnecessary. On my knees I beg
That you'll vouchsafe me raiment, bed, and food.

Lear (rising) Never, Regan!

Regan Good sir, no more! These are unsightly tricks.

Lear She hath abated me of half my train;
Looked black upon me; struck me with her tongue
Most serpent-like, upon the very heart.

All the stored vengeances of heaven fall
On her ingratitude! Strike her young bones,
You taking airs, with lameness!

Cornwall Fie, fie!
LEAR
You nimble lightnings, dart your blinding flames
Into her scornful eyes! Infect her beauty,
You fen-sucked fogs, drawn by the powerful sun,3
To fall and blast her pride!

REGAN
O the blest gods! so will you wish on me,
When the rash mood is on.

LEAR
No, Regan, thou shalt never have my curse.
Thy tender-hafted4 nature shall not give Thee o'er to harshness. Her eyes are fierce; but thine
Do comfort and not burn. 'Tis not in thee
To grudge my pleasures, to cut off my train,
To bandy hasty words, to scant my sizes,
And in conclusion to oppose the bolt5 to lock the door
Against my coming in. Thou better know'st
The offices6 of nature, bond of childhood,
Effects7 of courtesy, dues of gratitude;
Thy half o' the kingdom hast thou not forgot,
Wherein I thee endow'd.

REGAN
Who put my man i' the stocks?

CORNWALL
What trumpet's that?

REGAN
I know't, my sister's. This approves8 her letter,
That she would soon be here.

Enter OSWALD
Is your lady come?

LEAR
This is a slave, whose easy-borrowed pride9
Dwells in the fickle grace of her he follows.
Out varlet,10 from my sight!

CORNWALL
What means your grace?

LEAR
Who stocked my servant? Regan, I have good hope
Thou didst not know on 't.9

Enter GONERIL
Who comes here? O heavens,
If you do love old men, if your sweet sway
Allow obedience, if yourselves are old,
Make it your cause! Send down, and take my part!
(To GONERIL) Art not ashamed to look upon this beard?
O Regan, wilt thou take her by the hand?

GONERIL
Why not by the hand, sir? How have I offended?
All's not offense that indiscretion finds
And dotage terms so.

LEAR
O sides,6 you are too tough!
Will you yet hold? How came my man i' the stocks?

CORNWALL
I set him there, sir; but his own disorders6 disorderly behavior
Deserved much less advancement.7

5. Unmerited and unpaid-for arrogance; "pride" may also refer to Oswald's fine clothing received for his services to Goneril.
6. Chest, where Lear's heart is swelling with emotion.
LEAR

You! did you?

REGAN

I pray you, father, being weak, seem so. If, till the expiration of your month, You will return and sojourn with my sister, Dismissing half your train, come then to me. I am now from home, and out of that provision Which shall be needful for your entertainment.

LEAR

Return to her, and fifty men dismissed? No, rather I abjure all roofs, and choose To wage against the enmity o' the air; To be a comrade with the wolf and owl— Necessity's sharp pinch! Return with her? Why, the hot-blooded France, that dowerless took Our youngest born, I could as well be brought To kneel his throne, and, squire-like, pension beg To keep base life afoot. Return with her? Persuade me rather to be slave and sumpter To this detested groom. (Pointing at OSWALD)

GONERIL

At your choice, sir.

LEAR

I prithee, daughter, do not make me mad. I will not trouble thee, my child; farewell. We'll no more meet, no more see one another. But yet thou art my flesh, my blood, my daughter; Or rather a disease that's in my flesh, Which I must needs call mine. Thou art a boil, A plague-sore, an embossed carbuncle, In my corrupted blood. But I'll not chide thee; Let shame come wien it will, I do not call it. I do not bid the Thunder-bearer shoot, Nor tell tales of thee to high-judging Jove. Mend when thou canst; be better at thy leisure. I can be patient, I can stay with Regan, I and my hundred knights.

REGAN

Not altogether so. I looked not for you yet, nor am provided For your fit welcome. Give ear, sir, to my sister; For those that mingle reason with your passion Must be content to think you old, and so— But she knows what she does.

LEAR

Is this well spoken? Is it not well? What should you need of more? Yea, or so many, sith' that both charge and danger Speak 'gainst so great a number? How, in one house, Should many people, under two commands, Hold amity? 'Tis hard; almost impossible.

GONERIL

Why might not you, my lord, receive attendance

From those that she calls servants, or from mine?

REGAN Why not, my lord? If then they chanced to slack you,
We could control them. If you will come to me—
For now I spy a danger—I entreat you
To bring but five-and-twenty. To no more
Will I give place or notice. acknowledgment

LEAR I gave you all—

REGAN And in good time you gave it. it was about time

LEAR Made you my guardians, my depositaries;
But kept a reservation to be followed reserved a right
With such a number. What, must I come to you
With five-and-twenty, Regan? Said you so?

REGAN And speak't again, my lord; no more with me.

LEAR Those wicked creatures yet do look well-favored,
When others are more wicked; not being the worst
Stands in some rank of praise. (To GONERIL) I'll go with thee:
Thy fifty yet doth double five-and-twenty,
And thou art twice her love.

GONERIL Hear me, my lord.

LEAR What need you five-and-twenty, ten, or five,
To follow in a house where twice so many
Have a command to tend you?

REGAN What need one?

LEAR O, reason not the need! Our basest beggars
Are in the poorest thing superfluous.
Allow not nature more than nature needs,
Man's life's as cheap as beast's. Thou art a lady;
If only to go warm were gorgeous,
Why, nature needs not what thou gorgeous wear'st,
Which scarcely keeps thee warm.
But, for true need—
You heavens, give me that patience, patience I need!
You see me here, you gods, a poor old man,
As full of grief as age; wretched in both!
If it be you that stir these daughters' hearts
Against their father, fool me not so much
To bear it tamely; touch me with noble anger,
And let not women's weapons, water-drops,
Stain my man's cheeks! No, you unnatural hags,
I will have such revenges on you both,
That all the world shall—I will do such things—
What they are, yet I know not; but they shall be
The terrors of the earth! You think I'll weep;
No, I'll not weep.
I have full cause of weeping, but this heart
Shall break into a hundred thousand flaws
Or ere I'll weep. O fool, I shall go mad!

Storm and tempest

CORNWALL Let us withdraw; 'twill be a storm.

REGAN This house is little; the old man and his people
Cannot be well bestowed.

GONERIL 'Tis his own blame; hath put himself from rest,
And must needs taste his folly.

REGAN For his particular, I'll receive him gladly,
But not one follower.

GONERIL So am I purposed.

CORNWALL Followed the old man forth. He is returned.

Re-enter GLOUCESTER

GLOUCESTER The king is in high rage.

CORNWALL Whither is he going?

GLOUCESTER He calls to horse, but will I know not whither.

GONERIL My lord, entreat him by no means to stay.

GLOUCESTER Alack, the night comes on, and the bleak winds
Do sorely ruffle. For many miles about
There's scarce a bush.

REGAN O, sir, to willful men,
The injuries that they themselves procure
Must be their schoolmasters. Shut up your doors.
He is attended with a desperate train;
And what they may incense him to, being apt
To have his ear abused, wisdom bids fear.

CORNWALL Shut up your doors, my lord; 'tis a wild night.
My Regan counsels well. Come out o' the storm.

Storm still. Enter KENT and a Gentleman, at several doors

KENT Who's there, besides foul weather?

GENTLEMAN One minded like the weather, most unequately.

KENT I know you. Where's the king?

GENTLEMAN Contending with the fretful elements;
Bids the wind blow the earth into the sea,
Or swell the curled waters 'bove the main,
That things might change or cease; tears his white hair,
Which the impetuous blasts, with eyeless rage,
Catch in their fury, and make nothing of;
Strives in his little world of man to out-scorn
The to-and-fro-conflicting wind and rain.
This night, wherein the cub-drawn bear would couch,
The lion and the belly-pinched wolf
Keep their fur dry, unbonneted
And bids what will take all.

3.1 Location: Bare, open country.

1. In which even the bear, though starving, having been sucked dry ('drawn') by its cub, would not go out to forage.
KENT But who is with him?

GENTLEMAN None but the fool, who labors to out-jest His heart-struck injuries.

KENT Sir, I do know you; And dare, upon the warrant of my note, Commend a dear thing to you. There is division, Although as yet the face of it be covered With mutual cunning, 'twixt Albany and Cornwall; Who have—as who have not, that their great stars Throned and set high?—servants, who seem no less, Which are to France the spies and speculations Which are to France the spies and speculations Intelligent of our state. What hath been seen, Either in snuffs and packings of the dukes, Or the hard rein which both of them have borne Against the old kind king; or something deeper, Whereof per chance these are but furnishings; But, true it is, from France there comes a power Into this scattered kingdom; who already, Wise in our negligence, have secret feet In some of our best ports, and are at point To show their open banner. Now to you: If on my credit you dare build so far To make your speed to Dover, you shall find Some that will thank you, making just report Of how unnatural and bemadding sorrow The king hath cause to plain. I am a gentleman of blood and breeding; And, from some knowledge and assurance, offer This office to you.

GENTLEMAN I will talk further with you.

KENT No, do not. For confirmation that I am much more Than my out-wall, open this purse, and take What it contains. If you shall see Cordelia— As fear not but you shall—show her this ring, And she will tell you who your fellow is That yet you do not know. Fie on this storm! I will go seek the king.

GENTLEMAN Give me your hand. Have you no more to say?

KENT Few words, but, to effect, more than all yet; That, when we have found the king—in which your pain That way, I'll this—he that first lights on him Holla the other.

Enter Lear and Fool. Storm still

Lear

Blow, winds, and crack your cheeks! rage! blow!
You cataracts and hurricanoes, spout
Till you have drenched our steeples, drowned the cocks!
You sulphurous and thought-executing fires,
Vaunt-courtiers to oak-cleaving thunderbolts,
Singe my white head! And thou, all-shaking thunder,
Smite flat the thick rotundity o' the world!
Crack Nature's molds, all germens spill at once,
That make ingratitude man!

Fool

O nuncle, court holy-water in a dry house is better than this rain-water out o' door. Good nuncle, in, and ask thy daughters' blessing! Here's a night pities neither wise man nor fool.

Lear

Rumble thy bellyful! Spit, fire! spout, rain!
Nor, I, wind, thunder, lirc, are my daughters:
I tax not you, you elements, with unkindness;
I never gave you kingdom, called you children,
You owe me no subscription. Then let fall
Your horrible pleasure. Here I stand, your slave,
A poor, infirm, weak, and despised old man.
But yet I call you servile ministers,
That have with two pernicious daughters joined
Your high engendered battles 'gainst a head
So old and white as this. O! O! 'tis foul!

Fool

He that has a house to put 's head in has a good headpiece.

Lear

No, I will be the pattern of all patience; I will say nothing.

Love not such nights as these; the wrathful skies

Such groans of roaring wind and rain, I never Come on, my boy. How dost, my boy? Art cold?

I am cold myself. Where is this straw, my fellow?
The art of our necessities is strange,
That can make vile things precious. Come, your hovel.

When every case in law is right;§

This prophecy Merlin shall make; for I live before his time.\n

Enter Gloucester and Edmund

Gloucester Alack, alack, Edmund, I like not this unnatural dealing. When I desired their leave that I might pity\nhim, they took from me the use of mine own house; charged me, on pain of their perpetual displeasure, neither to speak of him, entreat for him, nor any way sustain him.

Edmund Most savage and unnatural!

Gloucester Go to; say you nothing. There's a division betwixt the dukes, and a worse matter than that. I have received a letter this night; 'tis dangerous to be spoken; I have locked the letter in my closet. These injuries the king now bears will be revenged home; there's part of a power already footed; we must incline to the king. I will seek him, and privately relieve him. Go you and maintain talk with the duke, that my charity be not of him perceived. If he ask for me, I am ill, and gone to bed. Though I die for it, as no less is threatened me, the king my old master must be relieved. There is some strange thing toward, Edmund; pray you, be careful.

Edmund This courtesy, forbid thee, shall the duke Instantly know, and of that letter too. This seems a fair deserving, and must draw me That which my father loses—no less than all. The younger rises when the old doth fall.

5. When the only heretics burned are lovers, who burn from venereal disease.
6. When usurers can count their profits openly (because they have no shady dealings to hide).
7. Merlin was the great wizard at the legendary court of King Arthur. Lear’s Britain is set in an even more distant past.

Enter EDGAR disguised as a madman

EDGAR Away! the foul fiend follows me!

Through the sharp hawthorn blows the cold wind.5
Humh! go to thy cold bed, and warm thee.6

LEAR Hast thou given all to thy two daughters? And art thou come to this?

EDGAR Who gives any thing to poor Tom? whom the foul fiend hath led through fire and through flame, through ford and whirlpool, o’er bog and quagmire; that hath laid knives under his pillow and halters in his pew; set rats-nooses by his porridge;7 made him proud of heart, to ride on a bay trotting-horse over four-inch bridges;8 to course his own shadow for a traitor. Bless thy five wits!9

Storm still

LEAR What, has his daughters brought him to this pass? Couldst thou save nothing? Didst thou give them all?

FOOL Nay, he reserved a blanket, else we had been all shamed.

LEAR Hang fated o’er men’s faults light on thy daughters!

KENT He hath no daughters, sir.

LEAR Death, traitor! nothing could have subdued nature To such a lowness but his unkind daughters. Is it the fashion that discarded fathers Should have thus little mercy on their flesh? Judicious punishment! ‘twas this flesh begot Those pelican daughters.

EDGAR Pillicock sat on Pillicock-hill.

Halloo, halloo, loo, loo!10

FOOL This cold night will turn us all to fools and madmen.

EDGAR Take heed O the foul fiend; obey thy parents; keep thy word justly; swear not; commit not with man’s sworn spouse; set not thy sweet heart on proud array.5 Tom’s a-cold.

LEAR What hast thou been?

EDGAR A serving-man, proud in heart and mind; that curled my hair; wore gloves in my cap; served the lust of Let not the creaking of shoes nor the rustling of silks betray thy poor heart to woman. Keep thy foot out of brothels, thy hand out of plackets, thy pen from lenders' books, and defy the foul fiend. Still through the hawthorn blows the cold wind: Says suum, mun, ha, no, nonny. Dolphin my boy, my boy, sessa! let him trot by.

"Storm still"

LEAR

Why, thou wert better in thy grave than to answer with thy uncovered body this extremity of the skies.° Is man no more than this? Consider him well. EDGAR

This is the foul fiend Flibbertigibbet.° He begins at curfew,° and walks till the first cock.° He gives the web and the pin,° squinies° the eye, and makes the harelip; mildews the white° wheat, and hurts the poor creature of earth.

GLOUCESTER

What are you there? Your names?

EDGAR

Poor Tom, that eats the swimming frog, the toad, the tadpole, the wall-newt and the water;\(^9\) that in the fury of his heart, when the foul fiend rages, eats cow-dung for sallets;\(^9\) swallows the old rat and the ditch-dog;\(^9\) drinks the green mantle\(^9\) of the standing-pool; who is whipped from tithing to tithing,\(^9\) and stock-punished,\(^9\) and imprisoned; who hath had three suits to his back, six shirts to his body, horse to ride, and weapon to wear;

But mice and rats, and such small deer,\(^1\)

Beware my follower. Peace, Smulkin;\(^9\) peace, thou fiend!

GLOUCESTER What, hath your grace no better company?

EDGAR The prince of darkness is a gentleman. Modo he's called, and Mahu.\(^2\)

GLOUCESTER Our flesh and blood is grown so vile, my lord, That it doth hate what gets\(^9\) it.

EDGAR Poor Tom's a-cold.

GLOUCESTER Go in with me. My duty cannot suffer\(^9\) To obey in all your daughters' hard commands: Though their injunction be to bar my doors, And let this tyrannous night take hold upon you Yet have I ventured to come seek you out. And bring you where both fire and food is ready.

LEAR First let me talk with this philosopher. What is the cause of thunder?

KENT Good my lord, take his offer; go into the house.

LEAR I'll take a word with this same learned Theban.\(^9\)

What is your study?\(^9\)

EDGAR How to prevent the fiend, and to kill vermin.

LEAR Let me ask you one word in private. Importune\(^9\) him once more to go, my lord; His wits begin to unsettle.

GLOUCESTER Canst thou blame him?

\textit{Storm still}

His daughters seek his death; ah, that good Kent!

He said it would be thus, poor banished man! Thou say'st the king grows mad; I'll tell thee, friend, I am almost mad myself. I had a son, Now outlawed\(^9\) from my blood. He sought my life. But lately, very late,\(^9\) I loved him, friend; No father his son dearer. True to tell thee, The grief hath crazed my wits. What a night's this! I do beseech your grace—

Noble philosopher, your company.

tience: may the gods reward your kindness!

EDGAR Frateretto calls me; and tells me Nero is an angler in the lake of darkness. Pray, innocent, and beware the foul fiend.

FOOL Prithee, nuncle, tell me whether a madman be a gentleman or a yeoman?

LEAR A king, a king!

FOOL NO. he's a yeoman that has a gentleman to his son; for he's a mad yeoman that sees his son a gentleman before him.

LEAR To have a thousand with red burning spits

EDGAR The foul fiend bites my back.

FOOL He's mad that trusts in the tameness of a wolf, a horse's health, a boy's love, or a whore's oath.

LEAR It shall be done; I will arraign them straight.

(To EDGAR) Come, sit thou here, most learned justicer;
(to the FOOL) Thou, sapient sir, sit here. Now, you she foxes!

EDGAR Look, where he stands and glares! Wantest thou eyes at trial, madam?

(To KENT) You are o' the commission, Sit you too.

EDGAR The foul fiend haunts poor Tom in the voice of a nightingale. Hopdance cries in Tom's belly for two white herring. Croak not, black angel; I have no food for thee.

KENT How do you, sir? Stand you not so amazed:

LEAR I'll see their trial first. Bring in the evidence.

(To EDGAR) Thou robed man of justice, take thy place;
(to the FOOL) And thou, his yoke-fellow of equity,
Bench by his side. (To KENT) You are o' the commission,
Sit you too.

EDGAR Let us deal justly.

Sleepest or wakest thou, jolly shepherd?

Thy sheep be in the corn;
And for one blast of thy minikin mouth,
Thy sheep shall take no harm.

Purr! the cat is gray.

LEAR Arraign her first; 'tis Goneril. I here take my oath before this honorable assembly, she kicked the poor king her father.

1. Rage; inability to bear more suffering.
2. In Chaucer's Monk's Tale, the infamously cruel Roman emperor Nero is found fishing in hell.
3. A free landowner but not a member of the gentry, lacking official family arms and the distinctions they confer. Shakespeare seems to have procured a coat of arms for his father in 1596.
4. From an old song.
5. She has venereal disease; punning on "boat" as body and "burn" as genital discomfort.
6. Purr the cat is another devil; such devils in the shape of cats were the familiars of witches.
FOOL     Come hither, mistress. Is your name Goneril?
LEAR     She cannot deny it.
FOOL     Cry you mercy, I took you for a joint-stool. 7
LEAR     And here’s another, whose warped looks proclaim
What store her heart is made on. 8 Stop her there!
Arms, arms, sword, fire! Corruption in the place!
False justicer, why hast thou let her ’scape?
EDGAR   Bless thy five wits!
KENT     O pity! Sir, where is the patience now,
That you so oft have boasted to retain?
EDGAR (aside) My tears begin to take his part so much,
They’ll mar my counterfeiting.
LEAR     The little dogs and all, 9 even the little dogs
Tray, Blanch, and Sweetheart, see, they bark at me.
EDGAR     Tom will throw his head at’ them. Avaunt, 0 will threaten (?) / be gone you curs!
Be thy mouth or 2 black or white, either tooth that poisons 3 if it bite;
Mastiff, greyhound, mongrel grim, gives rabies
Hound or spaniel, brach 4 or lym, 5 bitch / bloodhound
Or bobtail tike or trundle-tail, 6
Tom will make them weep and wail:
For, with throwing thus my head,
Dogs leap the hatch, 8 and all are fled.
Do de, de, de. Sessa! 1 Come, march to wakes 0 and fairs ’parish festivals and market-towns. Poor Tom, thy horn is dry. 2 LEAR     Then let them anatomize 0 Regan; see what breeds about her heart. Is there any cause in nature that makes these hard hearts? (To EDGAR) You, sir, I entertain 0 for one of my hundred; I do not like the fashion of your garments. You will say they are Persian; 0 but let them be changed.
KENT     Now, good my lord, lie there and rest awhile.
LEAR     Make no noise, make no noise; draw the curtains. 8  bed curtains
So, so, so. We’ll go to supper i’ the morning.
FOOL     And I’ll go to bed at noon.

[Re-enter GLOUCESTER]
GLOUCESTER Come hither, friend. Where is the king my master?
KENT     Here, sir; but trouble him not; his wits are gone.
GLOUCESTER Good friend, I prithee, take him in thy arms;
I have o’erheard a plot of death upon 9 him: against
There is a litter ready; lay him in’t hurry
And drive 9 towards Dover, friend, where thou shalt meet
Both welcome and protection. Take up thy master.
If thou shouldst daily half an hour, his life,
With thine, and all that offer to defend him,
Stand in assured loss. 9 Take up, take up! are certainly doomed

7. “I beg your pardon, I mistook you for a stool.” Here the part of Goneril is actually being played by a stool.
8. Short-tailed mongrel or long-tailed.
9. Dogs leap over the lower half of a divided door.
1. Apparently nonsense, although “Sessa” may be a version of the French cesse (“stop” or “hush”).
2. A begging formula that refers to the horn vessel that vagabonds carried for drink; the covert sense is that Edgar has run out of Bedlamite inspiration.

And follow me, that will to some provision
Give thee quick conduct.¹

KENT
Oppressed nature sleeps:
This rest might yet have balmed² thy broken sinews,³
Which, if convenience will not allow,
Stand in hard cure.⁴ (To the FOOL) Come, help to bear thy master:
Thou must not stay behind.

GLOUCESTER
Come come, away.

EDGAR
When we our betters see bearing our⁵ woes,
We scarcely think our miseries our foes.
Who alone suffers suffers most i' the mind,
Leaving free⁶ things and happy shows⁷ behind:
But then the mind much sufferance doth o'erskip
When grief hath mates, and bearing⁸ fellowship.
How light and portable⁹ my pain seems now,
When that which makes me bend makes the king bow;
He¹ childed as I fathered! Tom, away!
Mark the high noises,¹⁰ and thyself bewray¹¹ important rumors / reveal
When false opinion, whose wrong thought defiles thee,
In thy just proof repeals and reconciles thee.¹²
What¹³ will hap¹⁴ more tonight, safe 'scape the king!
Lurk, lurk.

Exeunt some of the servants
REGAN

GONERIL

CORNWALL
Leave him to my displeasure. Edmund, keep you our sister¹⁰ company. The revenges we are bound¹¹ to take upon your traitorous father are not fit for your beholding. Advise the duke, where you are going, to a most festinate preparation.¹² We are bound¹³ to the like.

My lord of Gloucester hath conveyed him hence.

To have well-armed friends.

CORNWALL

Get horses for your mistress.

GONERIL

Farewell, sweet lord, and sister.

CORNWALL

Edmund, farewell.

Exeunt GONERIL, EDMUND, and OSWALD

Go seek the traitor Gloucester,
Pinion him like a thief, bring him before us.

Exeunt other servants

Though well we may not pass upon his life
Without the form of justice, yet our power
Shall do a courtesy to our wrath, which men
May blame, but not control. Who's there? the traitor?

Enter GLOUCESTER, brought in by two or three

REGAN

Ingrateful fox! 'tis he.

CORNWALL

Bind fast his corky arms.

GLOUCESTER

What mean your graces? Good my friends, consider
You are my guests. Do me no foul play, friends.

CORNWALL

Bind him, I say.

Servants bind him

REGAN

Hard, hard. O filthy traitor!

GLOUCESTER

Unmerciful lady as you are, I'm none.

CORNWALL

To this chair bind him. Villain, thou shalt find-

REGAN

Plucks his beard (an extreme insult)

To pluck me by the beard.

REGAN

So white, and such a traitor!

GLOUCESTER

Naughty lady,

These hairs, which thou dost ravish from my chin,
Will quicken and accuse thee. I am your host.
With robbers' hands my hospitable favors
You should not ruffle thus. What will you do?

CORNWALL

Come, sir, what letters had you late from France?

REGAN

Be simple answered, for we know the truth.

CORNWALL

And what confederacy have you with the traitors
Late footed in the kingdom?

REGAN

To whose hands have you sent the lunatic king?

GLOUCESTER

I have a letter guessingly set down,
Which came from one that's of a neutral heart,
And not from one opposed.

CORNWALL

Cunning.

REGAN

And false.

CORNWALL

Where hast thou sent the king?

GLOUCESTER

To Dover.

REGAN

Wherefore to Dover? Wast thou not charged at peril—

3. Shall allow a courtesy, or indulgence; shall bow to.
4. Written without confirmation; speculative.
CORNWALL Wherefore to Dover? Let him first answer that.

GLOUCESTER I am tied to the stake, and I must stand the course.5

REGAN Wherefore to Dover?

GLOUCESTER Because I would not see thy cruel nails Pluck out his poor old eyes; nor thy fierce sister In his anointed flesh stick boarish fangs.
The sea, with such a storm as his bare head In hell-black night endured, would have buoyed\(^6\) up, risen
And quenched the stelled\(^7\) fires.\(^8\)
Yet, poor old heart, he holp\(^9\) the heavens to rage.
If wolves had at thy gate howled that dern\(^10\) time, dreary; dreadful
Thou shouldst have said "Good porter, turn the key."\(^{10}\) (to open the door)
All cruels else subscribed.\(^7\) But I shall see
The winged vengeance\(^8\) overtake such children.

CORNWALL See't shalt thou never. Fellows,\(^9\) hold the chair.

Upon these eyes of thine I'll set my foot.

GLOUCESTER He that will think\(^a\) to live till he be old, whoever hopes Give me some help! O cruel! O ye gods!

REGAN One side will mock another.\(^9\) The other too! the other

CORNWALL If you see vengeance—

FIRST SERVANT Hold your hand, my lord:
I have served you ever since I was a child;
But better service have I never done you
Than now to bid you hold.

REGAN How now, you dog!

FIRST SERVANT If you did wear a beard upon your chin,
I'd shake it on this quarrel.\(^9\)

REGAN What do you mean?\(^{10}\)

CORNWALL My villain!\(^{10}\) servant; villain

FIRST SERVANT Why, then, come on, and take the chance of anger.\(^1\)

REGAN Give me thy sword. A peasant stand up thus!

CORNWALL is wounded.

Takes a sword, and runs at him behind

FIRST SERVANT O, I am slain! My lord, you have one eye left
To see some mischief on him. O! Dies injury

CORNWALL Lest it see more, prevent it. Out, vile jelly!
Where is thy luster now?

GLOUCESTER All dark and comfortless. Where's my son Edmund?
Edmund, enkindle all the sparks of nature,\(^2\)
To quit\(^0\) this horrid act. requite, avenge

REGAN Out, treacherous villain!
Thou call'st on him that hates thee. It was he
That made the overture\(^0\) of thy treasons to us; revelation

Who is too good to pity thee.

GLOUCESTER  O my follies! Then Edgar was abused. slandered

95 Kind gods, forgive me that, and prosper him!

REGAN Go thrust him out at gates, and let him smell His way to Dover.  Exit one with GLOUCESTER

How is't, my lord? how do you feel?

CORNWALL I have received a hurt. Follow me, lady;

Do Turn out that eyeless villain. Throw this slave Upon the dunghill. Regan, I bleed apace.

Untimely comes this hurt. Give me your arm.

SECOND SERVANT I'll never care what wickedness I do, If this man come to good.

THIRD SERVANT If she live long,

105 And in the end meet the old course of death, usual

Women will all turn monsters.

SECOND SERVANT Let's follow the old earl, and get the Bedlam madman

To lead him where he would. His roguish madness Allows itself to anything, THIRD SERVANT Go thou; I'll fetch some flax and whites of eggs To apply to his bleeding face. Now, heaven help him!

Enter GLOUCESTER, led by an OLD MAN

10 My father, parti-eyed? World, world, O world!

But that thy strange mutations make us hate thee, Life would not yield to age.4

OLD MAN O, my good lord, I have been your tenant, and your father's tenant, these fourscore years.

15 GLOUCESTER Away, get thee away! Good friend, be gone.

Thy comforts can do me no good at all; assistance

Thee they may hurt.

OLD MAN Alack, sir, you cannot see your way.

The food of thy abused father's wrath!
Might I but live to see thee in my touch,
I'd say I had eyes again!

OLD MAN How now! Who's there?
EDGAR (aside) O gods! Who is't can say 'I am at the worst'?
I am worse than e'er I was.
OLD MAN 'Tis poor mad Tom.
EDGAR (aside) And worse I may be yet: the worst is not
So long as we can say "This is the worst."
OLD MAN Fellow, where goest?
GLOUCESTER Is it a beggar-man?
OLD MAN Madman and beggar too.
GLOUCESTER He has some reason, else he could not beg.
I the last night's storm I such a fellow saw;
Which made me think a man a worm. My son
Came then into my mind, and yet my mind
Was then scarce friends with him. I have heard more since.
As flies to wanton boys are we to the gods;
They kill us for their sport.
EDGAR (aside) How should this be?
Bad is the trade that must play fool to sorrow,
Angering itself and others.—Bless thee, master!
GLOUCESTER Is that the naked fellow?
OLD MAN Ay, my lord.
GLOUCESTER Then, prithee, get thee gone. If, for my sake,
Thou wilt o'ertake us, hence a mile or twain,
I the way toward Dover, do it for ancient love;
And bring some covering for this naked soul,
Who I'll entreat to lead me.
OLD MAN Alack, sir, he is mad.
GLOUCESTER 'Tis the times' plague, when madmen lead the blind.
Do as I bid thee, or rather do thy pleasure;
Above the rest, be gone.
OLD MAN I'll bring him the best 'parel that I have,
Come on't what will. Exit
GLOUCESTER Sirrah, naked fellow—
EDGAR Poor Tom's a-cold. (Aside) I cannot daub it further.
GLOUCESTER Come hither, fellow.
EDGAR (aside) And yet I must.—Bless thy sweet eyes, they bleed.

Enter Kent and a Gentleman

Kent Why the King of France is so suddenly gone back know you the reason?

Gentleman Something he left imperfect\(^6\) in the state, which since his coming forth is thought of;\(^a\) which imports\(^2\) to the kingdom so much fear and danger, that his personal return was most required and necessary.

Kent Who hath he left behind him general?

Kent Did your letters pierce the queen to any demonstration of grief?

Gentleman Ay, sir. She took them, in my presence;
And now and then an ample tear trilled down
Her delicate cheek. It seemed she was a queen
Over her passion, who,\(^b\) most rebel-like,
Sought to be king o'er her.

Kent O, then it moved her.

Gentleman Not to a rage. Patience and sorrow strove
Who should express her goodliest.\(^1\) You have seen
Sunshine and rain at once: her smiles and tears
Were like \(^a\) better way. Those happy smillets,
That played on her ripe lip, seemed not to know
What guests were in her eyes, which parted thence,
As pearls from diamonds dropped. In brief,
Sorrow would be a rarity\(^o\) most beloved,
If all could so become it.\(^2\)

Kent Made she no verbal question?

Gentleman 'Faith, once or twice she heaved the name of "father"
Pantingly forth, as if it pressed her heart;
Cried "Sisters! sisters! Shame of ladies! sisters!
Kent father! sisters! What, i'the storm? i'the night?
Let pity not be believed!\(^3\) There she shook
The holy water from her heavenly eyes,
And clamor moistened.\(^3\) Then away she started\(^0\)
To deal with grief alone.

Kent It is the stars,
The stars above us, govern our conditions;
Else one self mate and make\(^5\) could not beget
Such different issues.\(^b\) You spoke not with her since?

Gentleman No.

2. If everyone wore it so beautifully.
3. Never believe in pity; compassion cannot exist.
4. And moistened her anguish (with tears).
5. Or else the same pair of spouses.
KENT Was this before the king returned?

GENTLEMAN No, since.

KENT Well, sir, the poor distressed Lear's i' the town; Who sometime, in his better tune, remembers state of mind. What we are come about, and by no means Will yield consent to see his daughter.

GENTLEMAN Why, good sir?

KENT A sovereign shame so elbows prod, nudges him; his own unkindness, risks That stripped her from his benediction, turned her To foreign casualties, gave her dear rights To his dog-hearted daughters, these things sting His mind so venomously, that burning shame Detains him from Cordelia.

GENTLEMAN Alack, poor gentleman!

KENT Of Albany's and Cornwall's powers arms you heard not?

GENTLEMAN 'Tis so, they are afoot.

KENT Well, sir, I'll bring you to our master Lear, And leave you to attend him. Some dear cause some important reason Will in concealment wrap me up awhile; When I am known aright, you shall not grieve repent Lending me this acquaintance. I pray you, go news Along with me. Exeunt

Enter, with drum and colors, CORDELIA, DOCTOR, and soldiers

CORDELIA Alack, 'tis he! Why, he was met even now As mad as the vexed sea; singing aloud; Crowned with rank fumiter and furrow-weeds,1 With hor-docks, hemlock, nettles, cuckoo-flowers, Darnel, and all the idle weeds that grow useless In our sustaining corn. A century send forth; grain / battalion (100 men) Search every acre in the high-grown field, And bring him to our eye. Exit an officer

What can man's wisdom In the restoring his bereaved sense? do to restore He that helps him take all my outward worth. material

DOCTOR There is means, madam. Our foster-nurse of nature is repose, The which he lacks. That to provoke in him, Are many simples operative, whose power Will close the eye of anguish.

CORDELIA All blest secrets, All you unpublished virtues of the earth, obscure healing plants Spring with my tears! be aidant and remediate healing and remedial In the good man's distress! Seek, seek for him; Lest his ungoverned rage dissolve the life

4.4 Location: The French camp at Dover.

1. Fumiter was used against brain sickness. Furrow-weeds, like the other weeds in the following lines, grow in the furrows of plowed fields.

2. That which comforts and nourishes human nature.

3. To induce that ("repose") in him, there are many effective medicinal herbs.
That wants the means to lead it.

Enter a MESSNER

MESSNER News, madam;
The British powers are marching hitherward.

Cordelia 'Tis known before; our preparation stands
In expectation of them. O dear father,
It is thy business that I go about;
Therefore great France
My mourning and importuned tears hath pitied,
No blown ambition doth our arms incite,
But love, dear love, and our aged father's right.
Soon may I hear and see him! Exeunt

4.5

Enter REGAN and OSWALD

REGAN But are my brother's powers set forth? (Albany's forces)

OSWALD Ay, madam.

REGAN Himself in person there?

OSWALD Madam, with much ado. Your sister is the better soldier.

REGAN Lord Edmund spake not with your lord at home?

OSWALD No, madam.

REGAN What might import my sister's letter to him?

OSWALD I know not, lady.

REGAN Faith, he is posted hence on serious matter. It was great ignorance, Gloucester's eyes being out,
To let him live. Where he arrives he moves
All hearts against us. Edmund, I think, is gone,
In pity of his misery, His nighted life; moreover, to descry
The strength o' the enemy.

OSWALD I must needs after him, madam, with my letter.

REGAN Our troops set forth tomorrow. Stay with us;
The ways are dangerous.

OSWALD I may not, madam: My lady charged my duty in this business.

REGAN Why should she write to Edmund? Might not you Transport her purposes by word? Belike, Some— I know not what. I'll love thee much,
Let me unseal the letter.

OSWALD Madam, I had rather—

REGAN I know your lady does not love her husband; I am sure of that; and at her late being here
She gave strange oeillades and most speaking looks
To noble Edmund. I know you are of her bosom.

OSWALD I, madam?

REGAN I speak in understanding. y'are, I know't. Therefore I do advise you, take this note:
My lord is dead; Edmund and I have talked;

4. The line echoes Christ's explanation of his mission in Luke 2.49: "I must be about my Father's business."

4.5 Location: At Gloucester's castle,
And more convenient\(^0\) is he for my hand
Than for your lady’s. You may gather\(^0\) more.
If you do find him, pray you, give him this;\(^1\)
And when your mistress hears thus much from you,
I pray, desire her call her wisdom to her.\(^2\)
So, fare you well.
If you do chance to hear of that blind traitor,
Preferment falls on him that cuts him off.\(^3\)

OSWALD Would I could meet him, madam! I should show
What party I do follow.

REGAN Fare thee well.

Exeunt

Enter GLOUCESTER, and EDGAR dressed like a peasant

GLOUCESTER When shall we come to the top of that same\(^4\) hill?

EDGAR You do climb up it now. Look how we labor.

GLOUCESTER Methinks the ground is even.

EDGAR Horrible steep.

Hark, do you hear the sea?

GLOUCESTER No, truly.

EDGAR Why, then, your other senses grow imperfect
By your eyes’ anguish.

GLOUCESTER So may it be, indeed.

Methinks thy voice is altered, and thou speakest
In better phrase and matter\(^5\) than thou didst.

EDGAR Y’are much deceived. In nothing am I changed
But in my garments.

GLOUCESTER Methinks y’are better spoken.

EDGAR Come on, sir; here’s the place. Stand still. How fearful
And dizzy ’tis, to cast one’s eyes so low!
The crows and choughs\(^6\) that wing the midway air
Show\(^6\) scarce so gross\(^6\) as beetles. Halfway down
Hangs one that gathers sampire,\(^1\) dreadful trade!
Methinks he seems no bigger than his head.
The fishermen, that walk upon the beach,
Appear like mice; and yond tall anchoring bark,\(^7\)
Diminished to her cock,\(^6\) her cock, a buoy
Almost too small for sight. The murmuring forge,
That on the unnumbered\(^8\) idle pebble chafes,
Cannot be heard so high. I’ll look no more,
Lest my brain turn, and the\(^9\) deficient sight
Topple\(^5\) down headlong.

GLOUCESTER Set me where you stand.

EDGAR Give me your hand. You are now within a foot
Of th’ extreme verge. For all beneath the moon
Would I not leap upright.\(^2\)

GLOUCESTER Let go my hand.

---

1. This information, but possibly another letter or token.
2. Tell her to come to her senses.
3. Cuts his life short
4. Location: Near Dover.
5. Preferment falls on him that cuts him off.
6. The crows and choughs that wing the midway air
7. The crows and choughs that wing the midway air
8. Halfway down
9. Lest my brain turn, and the deficient sight

---
Here, friend, 's another purse; in it a jewel
Well worth a poor man's taking. Fairies and gods
Prosper it\(^3\) with thee! Go thou farther off;
Bid me farewell, and let me hear thee going.

EDGAR  Now fare you well, good sir.

GLOUCESTER  With all my heart.

EDGAR (aside)  Why I do trifle thus with his despair
Is done to cure it.

GLOUCESTER (kneeling)  O you mighty gods!
This world I do renounce, and, in your sights,
Shake patiently my great affliction off.
If I could bear it longer, and not fall
To quarrel\(^0\) with your great opposeless wills,
My snuff and loathed part of nature\(^4\) should Burn itself out. If Edgar live, O, bless him!
Now, fellow, fare thee well.

EDGAR  Gone, sir; farewell.—

And yet I know not how conceit may rob
The treasury of life, when life itself
Yields to the theft.\(^5\) Had he been where he thought,
By this\(^6\) had thought been past. Alive or dead?
Ho, you sir! friend! Hear you, sir? speak!
Thus might he pass\(^6\) indeed. Yet he revives.
What are you, sir?

GLOUCESTER  Away, and let me die.

EDGAR  Hadst thou been aught\(^6\) but gossamer, feathers, air,
So many fathom down precipitating,\(^9\)
Thou'dst shivered\(^9\) like an egg; but thou dost breathe;
Hast heavy substance; bleed'st not; speak'st; art sound.
Ten masts at each\(^9\) make not the altitude
Which thou hast perpendicularly fell.
Thy life's a miracle. Speak yet again.

GLOUCESTER  But have I fallen, or no?

EDGAR  From the dread summit of this chalky bourn.\(^6\)
Look up a-height; the shrill-gorged\(^9\) lark so far
Cannot be seen or heard. Do but look up.

GLOUCESTER  Alack, I have no eyes.
Is wretchedness deprived\(^6\) that benefit,
To end itself by death? 'Twas yet some comfort,
When misery could beguile\(^6\) the tyrant's rage,
And frustrate his proud will.

EDGAR  Give me your arm.
Up—so. How is't? Feel you your legs? You stand.

GLOUCESTER  Too well, too well.

EDGAR  This is above all strangeness.

3. Make it increase. Fairies were sometimes held to hoard and multiply treasure.
4. The scorched and hateful remnant of my lifetime.
5. "Snuff": end of a candle wick.
6. Edgar worries that the imagined scenario ("conceit") he has invented may be enough to kill his father, particularly as Gloucester wishes for ("yields to") his own death.
7. The white chalk cliffs of Dover, which make a boundary ("bourn") between land and sea.
Upon the crown o' the cliff, what thing was that
Which parted from you?

GLOUCESTER  A poor unfortunate beggar.

EDGAR  As I stood here below, methought his eyes
Were two full moons; he had a thousand noses,
Horns whelked and waved like the enridged sea:
It was some fiend. Therefore, thou happy father,
Think that the clearest gods, who make them honors
Of men's impossibilities, have preserved thee.

GLOUCESTER  I do remember now. Henceforth I'll bear Affliction till it do cry out itself

"Enough, enough," and die. That thing you speak of,
I took it for a man; often 'twould say
"The fiend, the fiend"—he led me to that place.

EDGAR  Bear free and patient thoughts. But who comes here?

Enter LEAR, fantastically dressed with wild flowers

LEAR  NO, they cannot touch me for coining;
I am the king himself.

EDGAR  O thou side-piercing sight!

LEAR  Nature's above art in that respect.
There's your press-money.
That fellow handles his bow like a crow-keeper.
Draw me a clothier's yard.
Look, look, a mouse!

Peace, peace; this piece of toasted cheese will do't.°

There's my gauntlet; I'll prove it on a giant.

Bring up the brown bills.°
O, well flown, bird° i' the clout,° i' the clout.

Hewgh! Give the word.°

EDGAR  Sweet marjoram.°

LEAR  Pass.

GLOUCESTER  I know that voice.

LEAR  Ha! Goneril, with a white beard! They flattered me like a dog;° and told me I had white hairs in my beard ere the black ones were there.° To say "aye" and "no" to everything that I said!—"Aye" and "no" too was no good divinity.° When the rain came to wet me once, and the wind to make me chatter; when the thunder would not peace at my bidding; there I found° 'em, there I smelt 'em out.

Go to, they are not men o' their words! They told me I was everything. 'Tis a lie, I am not ague-proof.°

7. Who attain honor for themselves by performing deeds impossible to men.
8. A sane mind would never allow its possessor to dress up this way.
9. Cannot equal me (or, perhaps, censure me), because minting money was the prerogative of the king.
1. My true feelings will always outvalue others' hypercisy; my natural supremacy surpasses any attempt to create a false new reign. This image may also be based on coining (see preceding note).
2. Fee paid to a soldier impressed, or forced, into the army.
3. A person hired as a scarecrow, and thus unfit for anything else.
4. Draw the bowstring the full length of the arrow (a standard English arrow was a cloth yard—thirty-seven inches—long).
5. I'll defend my stand even against a giant. To throw down an armored glove ("gauntlet") was to issue a challenge.
6. Brown painted pikes; or, the soldiers carrying them.
7. Used medicinally against madness.
8. i.e., told me I had wisdom before age.
9. I.e., poor theology (because insincere); from James
   5.12, "Let your yea be yea; nay, nay."
GLOUCESTER The trick\(^0\) of that voice I do well remember. Is't not the king?

LEAR Aye, every inch a king!

When I do stare, see how the subject quakes.
I pardon that man's life. What was thy cause?\(^0\)
Adultery?

Thou shalt not die. Die for adultery? No.
The wren goes to't, and the small gilded fly
Does lecher in my sight.

Let copulation thrive; for Gloucester's bastard son
Was kinder to his father than my daughters

Got 'tween the lawful sheets. To't luxury,\(^a\) pell-mell!

For I lack soldiers. Behold yond simpering dame,
Whose face between her forks presages snow;

That minces\(^i\) virtue, and does shake the head

To hear of° pleasure's name;
The fitchew, nor the soiled horse,\(^d\) goes to't

With a more riotous appetite.

Down from the waist they are Centaurs,\(^d\)

Though women all above.

But\(^b\) to the girdle\(^o\) do the gods inherit.\(^d\)

Beneath is all the fiends'; there's hell,\(^e\) there's darkness,

There's the sulphurous pit, burning, scalding,
Stench, consumption! Fie, fie, fie! pah! pah!

Give me an ounce of civet,\(^g\)
good apothecary,

To sweeten my imagination.

There's money for thee.

GLOUCESTER O, let me kiss that hand!

LEAR Let me wipe it first; it smells of mortality.

GLOUCESTER O ruined piece\(^o\) of nature! This great world shall so wear out to nought.\(^d\) Dost thou know me?

LEAR I remember thine eyes well enough. Dost thou squint\(^i\) at me? No, do thy worst, blind Cupid; I'll not love.

Read thou this challenge; mark but the penning of it.

GLOUCESTER Were all the letters suns, I could not see one.

EDGAR (aside) I would not take\(^b\) this from report. It is, and my heart breaks at it.

LEAR Read.

GLOUCESTER What, with the case\(^o\) of eyes?

LEAR O, ho, are you there with me?\(^b\) No eyes in your head, nor no money in your purse? Your eyes are in a heavy case,\(^e\) your purse in a light. Yet you see how this world goes.

GLOUCESTER I see it feelingly.\(^d\) by touch; painfully

1. Whose expression implies cold chastity. "Face" refers to the area between her legs ("forks"), as well as to her literal facial expression as framed by the aristocratic lady's starched headpiece, also called a "fork."
2. Neither the polecat nor a horse full of fresh grass.
3. Lecherous mythological creatures that have a human body to the waist and the legs and torso of a horse below.
4. Shakespeare's frequent term for female genitals.

What, art mad? A man may see how this world goes with no eyes. Look with thine ears. See how yond justice rails upon yond simple thief. Hark, in thine ear. Change places and, handy-dandy, which is the justice, which is the thief? Thou hast seen a farmer's dog bark at a beggar?

Thou know'st, the first time that we smell the air,

We wail and cry. I will preach to thee. Mark.

I will be jovial. Come, come; I am a king,
My masters, know you that?

LEAR  Then there's life isn't. Nay, if you get it, you shall get it with running. Sa, sa, sa, sa.1
(Exit running: attendants follow)

GENTLEMAN  A sight most pitiful in the meanest wretch,
Past speaking of in a king! Thou hast one daughter,
Who redeems nature from the general curse
Which twain have brought her to.2

EDGAR  Hail, gentle sir.

GENTLEMAN  Sir, speed you Noble. What's your will? God speed you
EDGAR  Do you hear aught, sir, of a battle toward? coming
GENTLEMAN  Most sure and vulgar. Everyone hears that, commonly known
Which can distinguish sound.

EDGAR  But, by your favor,
How near's the other army?

GENTLEMAN  Near and on speedy foot. The main descry appearance
Stands on the hourly thought.6
EDGAR  I thank you, sir. That's all.

GENTLEMAN  Though that the queen on special cause is here, for/reason
Her army is moved on.

EDGAR  I thank you, sir. Exit GENTLEMAN

GLOUCESTER  You ever-gentle gods, take my breath from me;
Let not my worser spirit tempt me again
To die before you please!

EDGAR  Well pray you, father.4

GLOUCESTER  Now, good sir, what are you?
EDGAR  A most poor man, made tame to fortune's blows;
Who, by the art of known and feeling profound sorrows,
Am pregnant to good pity. Give me your hand,
I'll lead you to some biding.8

GLOUCESTER  Hearty thanks.

Enter OSWALD

OSWALD A proclaimed prize! Most happy
That eyeless head of thine was first framed flesh
To raise my fortunes. Thou old unhappy traitor, Briefly thyself remember. The sword is out
That must destroy thee.

GLOUCESTER Now let thy friendly hand
Put strength enough to't.

EDGAR interposes

OSWALD Wherefore, bold peasant,
Darest thou support a published traitor? Hence,
Let that the infection of his fortune take
Like hold on thee. Let go his arm.

EDGAR Chill not let go, zir, without further 'casion.

OSWALD Let go, slave, or thou diest!

EDGAR Good gentleman, go your gait, and let poor volk pass. An chud ha bin swaggered out of my life, 'twould not ha' bin zo long as 'tis by a vortnight. Nay, come not near th'old man; keep out, che vor ye, or ise try whether your costard or my ballow be the harder. Chill be plain with you.

OSWALD Out, dunghill!

EDGAR Chill pick your teeth, zir. Come! No matter vor your foins.

They fight, and EDGAR knocks him down

OSWALD Slave, thou hast slain me. Villain, take my purse.
If ever thou wilt thrive, bury my body;
And give the letters which thou find'st about me
To Edmund earl of Gloucester. Seek him out
Upon the British party. O, untimely death!

EDGAR I know thee well: a serviceable villain;
As duteous to the vices of thy mistress
As badness would desire.

GLOUCESTER What, is he dead?

EDGAR Sit you down, father; rest you.

Let's see his pockets; the letters that he speaks of
May be my friends. He's dead; I am only sorry
He had no other death'sman. Let us see.
Leave, gentle wax; and manners, blame us not.
To know our enemies' minds, we'd rip their hearts;
Their papers, is more lawful.

0 undistinguished space of woman's will!\(^2\)
A plot upon her virtuous husband's life;
And the exchange\(^0\) my brother! Here, in the sands,
Thee I'll rake up,\(^1\) the post unsanctified\(^0\)
Of murderous lechers; and in the mature time\(^6\) cover up / unholy messenger
With this ungracious\(^0\) paper strike the sight
Of the death-practiced duke.\(^5\) For him 'tis well
That of thy death and business I can tell.

GLOUCESTER The king is mad. How stiff is my vile sense,\(^4\)
That I stand up, and have ingenious feeling\(^5\)
Of my huge sorrows! Better I were distract;\(^0\) mad
So should my thoughts be severed from my griefs,
And woes by wrong\(^0\) imaginations lose
The knowledge of themselves.

Drum afar off

EDGAR Give me your hand.
Far off, methinks, I hear the beaten drum.
Come, father, I'll bestow\(^0\) you with a friend.
Exeunt lodge

Enter CORDelia, KENT, DOCTOR, and a GENTLEMAN

CORDelia O thou good Kent, how shall I live and work,
To match thy goodness? My life will be too short,
And every measure\(^0\) fail me.

KENT To be acknowledged, madam, is o'erpaid.\(^0\) is more than enough
All my reports go\(^1\) with the modest truth;
Nor more, nor clipped, but so.\(^2\)

CORDelia Be better suited.\(^0\) attired
These weeds\(^0\) are memories of those worser hours.
I prithee, put them off.

KENT Pardon me, dear madam;
Yet to be known shortens my made intent.\(^3\)
My boon I make it,\(^4\) that you know\(^0\) me not Till time and I think meet.\(^0\) suitable

CORDelia Then be't so, my good lord. (To the DOCTOR)
How does the king?

DOCTOR Madam, sleeps still.

CORDelia O you kind gods,
Cure this great breach in his abused nature!
The untuned and jarring senses, O, wand up\(^5\)

1. As a reward for your endeavors; for sexual exertion.
2. Limitless extent of woman's willfulness. As with "hell" in line 125, "will" might also refer to a woman's genitals.
3. Of the duke whose death is plotted.
4. How obstinate is my unwanted power of reason.
5. That I remain upright and firm in my sanity and have rational perceptions.

4.7 Location: The French camp at Dover.
1. May all accounts of me agree.
2. Not greater or less, but exactly the modest amount I deserve.
3. Revealing myself now would abort my designs.
4. The reward I beg is.
5. Reorder his confused and delirious mind. The image is of tightening the strings of a lute.
Of this child-changed father!

DOCTOR
So please your majesty
That we may wake the king? He hath slept long.

CORDELIA
I’ the sway of your own will. Is he arrayed by the authority /clothed
Enter Lear in a chair carried by servants

GENTLEMAN
Aye, madam. In the heaviness of his sleep
We put fresh garments on him.

DOCTOR
Be by, good madam, when we do awake him;
I doubt not of his temperance.

CORDELIA
Very well.

Music

DOCTOR
Please you, draw near. Louder the music there!

CORDELIA
O my dear father! Restoration hang
Thy medicine on my lips; and let this kiss
Repair those violent harms that my two sisters
Have in thy reverence made!

KENT
Kind and dear princess!

CORDELIA
Had you not been their father, these white flakes had challenged pity of them. Was this a face
To be opposed against the warring winds?
To stand against the deep dread-bolted thunder?
In the most terrible and nimble stroke
Of quick, cross lightning? to watch —poor perd!
With this thin helm —mine enemy’s dog,
Though he had bit me, should have stood that night
Against my fire; and wast thou fain, poor father,
To hovel thee with swine, and rogues forlorn,
In short and musty straw? Alack, alack!
’Tis wonder that thy life and wits at once
Had not concluded all. He wakes; speak to him.

DOCTOR
Madam, do you; ’tis fittest.

CORDELIA
How does my royal lord? How fares your majesty?

LEAR
You do me wrong to take me out o’ the grave.
Thou art a soul in bliss; but I am bound
Upon a wheel of fire, that mine own tears
Do scald like molten lead.

CORDELIA
Sir, do you know me?

LEAR
You are a spirit, I know. When did you die?

CORDELIA
Still, still, far wide!

DOCTOR
He’s scarce awake. Let him alone awhile.

LEAR
Where have I been? Where am I? Fair daylight?
I am mightily abused. I should e’en die with pity,
To see another thus. I know not what to say.
I will not swear these are my hands. Let’s see.
I feel this pin prick. Would I were assured
Of my condition!

6. Changed by his children; changed into a child; playing on a musical key-change.
7. Lost one; in military terminology, a dangerously exposed sentry.
8. Lear puts himself in either hell or purgatory, both places of such punishment in medieval accounts.
CORDELIA O, look upon me, sir,
And hold your hands in benediction o'er me:
No, sir, you must not kneel.

LEAR Pray, do not mock me.
I am a very foolish fond old man,
Fourscore and upward, not an hour more nor less;
And, to deal plainly,
I fear I am not in my perfect mind.
Methinks I should know you, and know this man;
Yet I am doubtful; for I am mainly ignorant
What place this is; and all the skill I have Remembers not these garments; nor I know not Where I did lodge last night. Do not laugh at me;
For, as I am a man, I think this lady
To be my child Cordelia.

CORDELIA And so I am, I am.

LEAR Be your tears wet? Yes, faith. I pray, weep not.
If you have poison for me, I will drink it.
I know you do not love me; for your sisters
Have, as I do remember, done me wrong.
You have some cause, they have not.

CORDELIA No cause, no cause.

LEAR Am I in France?
KENT In your own kingdom, sir.

LEAR Do not abuse me.

DOCTOR Be comforted, good madam. The great rage,
You see, is killed in him; and yet it is danger
To make him even o'er the time he has lost.
Desire him to go in. Trouble him no more
Till further settling.

CORDELIA Will' please your highness walk?

LEAR You must bear with me:
Pray you now, forget and forgive. I am old and foolish.

Exeunt all but KENT and GENTLEMAN

GENTLEMAN Holds it true, sir, that the Duke of Cornwall was so slain?

KENT Most certain, sir.

GENTLEMAN Who is conductor of his people?

KENT As 'tis said, the bastard son of Gloucester.

GENTLEMAN They say Edgar, his banished son, is with the Earl of Kent in Germany.

KENT Report is changeable. 'Tis time to look about.
The powers of the kingdom approach apace.

GENTLEMAN The arbitrement is like to be bloody. Fare you well, sir.

KENT My point and period will be throughly wrought,
Or well or ill, as this day's battle's fought.
Enter, with drum and colors, Edmund, Regan, gentleman, and soldiers

Edmund

Know of the duke if his last purpose hold, or whether since he is advised by aught to change the course. He's full of alteration and self-reproving. Bring his constant pleasure.

To a gentleman, who goes out

Regan

Our sister's man is certainly miscarried.

Edmund

'Tis to be doubted, madam.

Regan

Now, sweet lord, you know the goodness I intend upon you. Tell me—but truly—but then speak the truth, do you not love my sister?

Edmund

In honored love.

Regan

But have you never found my brother's way to the forfended place?

Edmund

That thought abuses you.

Regan

I am doubtful that you have been conjunct and bosomed with her, as far as we call hers.

Edmund

No, by mine honor, madam.

Regan

I never shall endure her. Dear my lord, be not familiar with her.

Edmund

Fear me not.

She and the duke her husband!

Enter, with drum and colors, Albany, Goneril, and soldiers

Goneril (aside) I had rather lose the battle than that sister should loosen him and me.

Albany

Our very loving sister, well be-met. Sir, this I hear: the king is come to his daughter, with others whom the rigor of our state forced to cry out. Where I could not be honest, I never yet was valiant. For this business, it toucheth us, as France invades our land, not bolds the king, with others, whom, I fear, most just and heavy causes make oppose.

Edmund

Sir, you speak nobly.

Regan

Why is this reasoned?

Goneril

Combine together 'gainst the enemy; for these domestic and particular broils are not the question here.

Albany

Let's then determine with the ancient of war on our proceeding.

Edmund

I shall attend you presently at your tent.

5.1 Location: The British camp near Dover.

1. If his previous intention (to wage war) remains firm.

2. Since then anything has persuaded him.

3. Has surely come to grief by some accident.

4. Forbidden to Edmund, because it is adulterous.

5. In total intimacy; all the way.

6. This is of concern to us because France lands on our soil, not because it emboldens the king and others, who, I am afraid, have been provoked for good and solid reasons.

7. What is the point of this kind of speech?
REGAN  Sister, you'll go with us?
GONERIL  No.
REGAN  'Tis most convenient; pray you, go with us.
GONERIL  (aside) O, ho, I know the riddle.—I will go.
EDGAR  As they are going out, enter EDGAR disguised
EDGAR  If e'er your grace had speech with man so poor,
      Hear me one word.
ALBANY  I'll overtake you. Speak.
      Exit all but ALBANY and EDGAR
EDGAR  Before you fight the battle, ope this letter.
      If you have victory, let the trumpet sound
ALBANY  I'll overtake you. Speak.
EDGAR  If you miscarry, your business of the world hath so an end,
      And machination ceases. Fortune love you!
ALBANY  Stay till I have read the letter.
EDGAR  When time shall serve, let but the herald cry,
      And I'll appear again.
ALBANY  Why, fare thee well. I will o'erlook thy paper.
      Exit EDGAR
Re-enter EDMUND
EDMUND  The enemy’s in view; draw up your powers.
      Here is the guess of their true strength and forces
ALBANY  We will greet the time.
EDMUND  To both these sisters have I sworn my love;
      Each jealous of the other, as the stung
ALBANY  We will greet the time.
EDMUND  Are of the adder. Which of them shall I take?
      Both? one? or neither? Neither can be enjoyed,
ALBANY  We will greet the time.
EDMUND  If both remain alive. To take the widow
      Exasperates, makes mad her sister Goneril;
ALBANY  We will greet the time.
EDMUND  And hardly shall I carry out my side,
      Her husband being alive. Now then we'll use
ALBANY  We will greet the time.
EDMUND  His countenance' for the battle; which being done,
      Let her who would be rid of him devise
ALBANY  We will greet the time.
EDMUND  His speedy taking off. As for the mercy
      Which he intends to Lear and to Cordelia,
ALBANY  We will greet the time.
EDMUND  The battle done, and they within our power,
      Shall never see his pardon; for my state
ALBANY  We will greet the time.
EDMUND  Stands on me to defend, not to debate.
      Exit

5.2
Alarum within. Enter, with drum and colors, LEAR,
      CORDELIA, and soldiers, over the stage; and exit

8. Regan wants Goneril to go with Albany and her, rather than with Edmund.
9. We will be ready to meet the occasion.
1. Authority or backing; also suggesting "face," to be used like a mask for Edmund’s ambition.
5.2 Location: The rest of the play takes place near the battlefield.
1. Trumpet call to battle (backstage).
Enter EDGAR and GLOUCESTER

EDGAR Here, father, take the shadow of this tree
For your good host; pray that the right may thrive:
If ever I return to you again,
I'll bring you comfort.

GLOUCESTER Grace go with you, sir!

Exit EDGAR

Enter, in conquest, with drum and colors, EDMUND; LEAR and CORDELIA, prisoners; CAPTAIN, soldiers, &c.

EDMUND Some officers take them away. Good guard,
Until their greater pleasures' first be known
That are to censure them.

CORDELIA We are not the first
Who, with best meaning, have incurred the worst.
For thee, oppressed king, am I cast down,
Myself could else out-frown false Fortune's frown.
Shall we not see these daughters and these sisters?

LEAR No, no, no, no! Come, let's away to prison.
We two alone will sing like birds i' the cage.
When thou dost ask me blessing, I'll kneel down,
And ask of thee forgiveness. So we'll live,
And pray, and sing, and tell old tales, and laugh
At gilded butterflies, and hear poor rogues
Talk of court news; and we'll talk with them too,
Who loses and who wins; who's in, and who's out;
And take upon's the mystery of things,
As if we were God's spies; and we'll wear out,
In a walled prison, packs and sects of great ones,
That ebb and flow by the moon.

EDMUND Take them away.

LEAR Upon such sacrifices, my Cordelia,
The gods themselves throw incense. Have I caught thee?
He that parts us shall bring a brand from heavens,
And fire us hence like foxes.\(^6\) Wipe thine eyes; The good-years shall devour them, flesh and fell;\(^7\) Ere they shall make us weep! We'll see 'em starved first.

Come. \(\text{Exeunt Lear and Cordelia guarded}\)

EDMUND Come hither, captain; hark.

Take thou this note \(\text{[giving a paper]}.\) Go follow them to prison:

One step I have advanced\(^8\) thee. If thou dost

As this instructs thee, thou dost make thy way

To noble fortunes. Know thou this, that men

Are as the time is. To be tender-minded

Does not become a sword.\(^9\) Thy great employment

Will not bear question.\(^9\) Either say thou'lt do't,

Or thrive by other means.

CAPTAIN I'll do't, my lord.

EDMUND About it; and write happy when thou hast done.\(^8\)

Mark, I say, instantly; and carry it so

As I have set it down.

CAPTAIN I cannot draw a cart, nor eat dried oats;\(^9\) \(\text{[like a horse]}\)

If it be a man's work, I'll do it. \(\text{Exit} \)

\(\text{Flourish. Enter Albany, Goneril, Regan, another Captain, and soldiers}\)

ALBANY Sir, you have showed today your valiant strain,\(^0\)

And fortune led you well. You have the captives

That were the opposites\(^0\) of this day's strife.

I do require them of you, so to use them

As we shall find their merits and our safety

May equally determine.

EDMUND Sir, I thought it fit

To send the old and miserable king

To some retention\(^0\) and appointed guard;

Whose\(^0\) age has charms in it, whose title more,

To pluck the common bosom\(^9\) on his side,

And turn our impressed lances\(^0\) in our eyes

Which\(^1\) do command them. With him I sent the queen;

My reason all the same; and they are ready

Tomorrow, or at further space,\(^0\) t'appear

Where you shall hold your session.\(^0\) At this time

We sweat and bleed; the friend hath lost his friend;

And the best quarrels, in the heat, are cursed

By those that feel their sharpness.\(^2\)

The question of Cordelia and her father

Requires a fitter place.

ALBANY Sir, by your patience,

I hold you but a subject of\(^0\) this war,

Not as a brother.\(^5\)

6. i.e., must have divine aid to do so. The image is of using a torch to smoke foxes out of their holes, or, in the case of Lear and Cordelia, prison cells.
7. Meat and skin; entirely. The precise meaning of "good-years" has not been explained; it may signify simply the passage of time or may suggest some ominous, destructive power.
8. Go to it, and call yourself happy when you are done.
9. To garner the affection of the populace.
10. In the eyes of us who.
11. And in the heat of battle, even the most just wars are cursed by those who must suffer the fighting.
REGAN That’s as we list⁰ to grace him. Methinks our pleasure might have been demanded,³ Ere you had spoken so far. He led our powers;⁰ Bore the commission of my place and person; The which immediacy⁰ may well stand up, And call itself your brother.

GONERIL Not so hot⁰! In his own grace⁰ he doth exalt himself, More than in your addition.⁴

REGAN In my rights, By me invested, he compeers⁰ the best.

GONERIL That were the most,⁵ if he should husband you.

REGAN Jesters do oft prove prophets.

GONERIL Holla, holla! That eye that told you so looked but a-squint.⁶

REGAN Lady, I am not well; else I should answer From a full-flowing stomach.⁰ General, Take thou my soldiers, prisoners, patrimony: Dispose of them, of me; the walls⁰ are thine. Witness the world, that I create thee here My lord and master.

GONERIL Mean you to enjoy him?

ALBANY The let-alone⁰ lies not in your good will.

EDMUND Nor in thine, lord.

ALBANY Half-blooded⁰ fellow, yes.

REGAN (to EDMUND) Let the drum strike,⁷ and prove my title thine.

ALBANY Thou art armed, Gloucester. Let the trumpet sound. If none appear to prove upon thy head Thy heinous, manifest, and many treasons, There is my pledge (throwing down a glove); I’ll prove it on thy heart, ERE I taste bread, thou art in nothing less⁰ In no way less guilty Than I have proclaimed thee.

REGAN Sick, O, sick!

GONERIL (aside) If not, I’ll ne’er trust medicine.⁰

3. I think you should have inquired into my wishes.
4. In the honors you confer upon him.
5. That investiture would be complete.
6. Only looked sideways. “Looking asquint” was a proverbial effect of jealousy, because of the tendency to look suspiciously at potential rivals.
7. Perhaps to announce the betrothal or a challenge.
8. And in order to accuse you; and as one who shares your corruption or crime.
EDMUND There's my exchange (throwing down a glove).

What's in the world he is
That names me traitor, villain-like he lies.
Call by thy trumpet. He that dares approach,
On him, on you, who not? I will maintain
My truth and honor firmly.

ALBANY A herald, ho!

EDMUND A herald, ho, a herald!

ALBANY Trust to thy single virtue; for thy soldiers,
All levied in my name, have in my name
Took their discharge.

REGAN My sickness grows upon me.

ALBANY She is not well; convey her to my tent.

Enter a HERALD

EDGAR, at the third sound, armed, with a trumpet before him

ALBANY Ask him his purposes, why he appears
Upon this call o' the trumpet.

Herald What are you?
Your name, your quality? and why you answer
This present summons?

EDGAR Know, my name is lost;
By treason's tooth bare-gnawn and canker-bit.
Yet am I noble as the adversary
I come to cope.

ALBANY Which is that adversary?

EDGAR What's he that speaks for Edmund earl of Gloucester?

EDMUND Himself. What say'st thou to him?

EDGAR Draw thy sword,
That, if my speech offend a noble heart,
Thy arm may do thee justice. Here is mine.
Behold, it is the privilege of mine honors,
My oath, and my profession. I protest,
Maugre thy strength, youth, place, and eminence,
Despite thy victor sword and fire-new fortune,
Thy valor and thy heart, thou art a traitor;
False to thy gods, thy brother, and thy father;
Conspirant 'gainst this high-illustrious prince;
And, from the extremest upward of thy head

http://englishworld20111.wordpress.com/
To the descent⁰ and dust below thy foot,
A most toad-spotted⁰ traitor. Say thou "No,"⁰
This sword, this arm, and my best spirits, are bent⁰
To prove upon thy heart, whereto I speak,
Thou liest.

EDMUND  In wisdom I should ask thy name;
But, since thy outside looks so fair and warlike
And that thy tongue some say of breeding⁰ breathes,
What safe and nicely I might well delay
By rule of knighthood, I disdain and spurn.¹
Back do I toss these treasons to thy head;
With the hell-hated¹ lie o'erwhelm thy heart;
Which, for⁰ they yet glance by and scarcely bruise,
This sword of mine shall give them instant way,⁰
Where they shall rest for ever. Trumpets, speak!

Alarums. They fight, EDMUND falls

EDMUND  Thou hast spoken right, 'tis true;
The wheel² is come full circle! I am here.³

ALBANY  Methought thy very gait did prophesy
A royal nobleness. I must embrace thee.
Let sorrow split my heart, if ever I
Did hate thee or thy father!

EDGAR  Worthy prince. I know’t.

ALBANY  Where have you hid yourself?
     How have you known the miseries of your father?

EDGAR  By nursing them, my lord. List a brief tale;
     And when ’tis told, O, that my heart would burst!

     The bloody proclamation to escape,
     That followed me so near—O, our lives’ sweetness!

     That we the pain of death would hourly die
     Rather than die at once! taught me to shift
     Into a madman’s rags; to assume a semblance
     That very dogs disdained; and in this habit
     Met I my father with his bleeding rings,
     Their precious stones new lost; became his guide,
     Led him, begged for him, saved him from despair;
     Never—O fault!—revealed myself unto him
     Until some half-hour past, when I was armed:
     Not sure, though hoping, of this good success,
     I asked his blessing, and from first to last
     Told him my pilgrimage. But his flawed—
     Alack, too weak the conflict to support!—
     ’Twixt two extremes of passion, joy and grief,
     Burst smilingly.

EDMUND  This speech of yours hath moved me,
     And shall perchance do good; but speak you on;
     You look as you had something more to say.

ALBANY  If there be more, more woeful, hold it in;
     For I am almost ready to dissolve,
     Hearing of this.

EDGAR  This would have seemed a period
     To such as love not sorrow; but another,
     To amplify too much would make much more,
     And top extremity.

     Whilst I was big in clamor came there in a man,
     Who, having seen me in my worst estate,
     Shunned my abhorred society; but then, finding
     Who ’twas that so endured, with his strong arms
     He fastened on my neck, and bellowed out
     As he’d burst heaven; threw him on my father;
     Told the most piteous tale of Lear and him
     That ever ear received; which in recounting
     His grief grew puissant, and the strings of life
     Began to crack. Twice then the trumpets sounded,
     And there I left him tranced.

ALBANY  But who was this?

EDGAR  Kent, sir, the banished Kent; who in disguise
     Followed his enemy king, and did him service

4. In order to escape the sentence of death.
5. How sweet must life be that we prefer the constant pain of dying to death itself.
6. "Enemy"—that is, hostile—because Lear had previously banished him.
Improper for a slave.

Enter a Gentleman, with a bloody knife

Gentleman Help, help, O, help! What kind of help?

Edgar Speak, man.

Edgar What means that bloody knife?

Gentleman Tis hot, it smokes, It came even from the heart of—O, she's dead!

Albany Who dead? speak, man.

Gentleman Your lady, sir, your lady! and her sister

By her is poisoned; she hath confessed it.

Edmund I was contracted to them both. All three

Now marry in an instant.

Enter Kent

Edgar Here comes Kent.

Albany Produce their bodies, be they alive or dead: This judgment of the heavens, that makes us tremble, Touches us not with pity.

Exit Gentleman

O, is this he?

The time will not allow the compliment Which very manners urges.

Kent I am come To bid my king and master aye good night. forever

Is he not here?

Albany Great thing of us forgot! by

Speak, Edmund, where's the king? and where's Cordelia? See'st thou this object, Kent? spectacles

The bodies of Goneril and Regan are brought in Kent Alack, why thus?

Edmund Yet Edmund was beloved. despite all

The one the other poisoned for my sake, And after slew herself.

Albany Even so. Cover their faces.

Edmund I pant for life. Some good I mean to do, Despite of mine own nature. Quickly send, Be brief in it, to the castle; for my writ speedy / order for execution

Is on the life of Lear and on Cordelia: Nay, send in time.

Albany Run, run, O, run!

Edgar To who, my lord? Who hath the office? Send Thy token of reprieve.

Edmund Well thought on. Take my sword, Give it the captain.

Albany Haste thee for thy life. Exit Edgar

Edmund He hath commission from thy wife and me To hang Cordelia in the prison, and To lay the blame upon her own despair, That she fordid herself.

Albany The gods defend her! Bear him hence awhile.

Edmund is borne off
Re-enter Lear, with Cordelia dead in his arms; Edgar, Captain, and others following

Lear
Howl, howl, howl, howl! O, you are men of stones:
Had I your tongues and eyes, I'd use them so
That heaven's vault should crack. She's gone forever!

I know when one is dead, and when one lives;
She's dead as earth. Lend me a looking-glass;
If that her breath will mist or stain the stone, Why, then she lives.

Kent
Is this the promised end?

Edgar
Or image of that horror?

Albany
Fall, and cease!

Lear
This feather stirs; she lives! If it be so,
It is a chance which does redeem all sorrows
That ever I have felt.

Kent (kneeling)
O my good master!

Lear
Prithee, away.

Edgar
Tis noble Kent, your friend.

Lear
I might have saved her; now she's gone for ever!
Cordelia, Cordelia! stay a little. Ha!
What is't thou say'st? Her voice was ever soft,
Gentle, and low, an excellent thing in woman.
I killed the slave that was a-hanging thee.

Captain
'Tis true, my lords, he did.

Lear
Did I not, fellow? I have seen the day, with my good biting falchion light sword.
I would have made them skip: I am old now,
And these same crosses spoil me. Who are you?
Mine eyes are not o' the best. I'll tell you straight. recognize you soon

Kent
If fortune brag of two she loved and hated,
One of them we behold.

Lear
This is a dull sight. Are you not Kent?

Kent
The same,
Your servant Kent. Where is your servant Caius?

Lear
He's a good fellow, I can tell you that;
He'll strike, and quickly too. He's dead and rotten.

Kent
No, my good lord; I am the very man——

Lear
I'll see that straight.

Kent
That, from your first of difference and decay,
Have followed your sad steps.

Lear
You are welcome hither.

Kent
Nor no man else. All's cheerless, dark, and deadly.

9. Mica, or stone polished to a mirror finish.
1. Doomsday; expected end of the play. In no version of the story previous to Shakespeare's does Cordelia die at this point.
2. Let the world collapse and end.
3. Lear probably kneels over Cordelia's body during most of the scene, and Kent kneels here partly in submission, partly to catch Lear's attention.
4. And these recent adversities have weakened me; and these parts I could once match would now destroy me.
5. If there were only two supreme examples in the world of Fortune's ability to raise up and cast down, Lear would be one; alternatively, we are each of us one (Lear and Kent are here looking at each other).
6. This is a sad sight; my vision is failing.
7. I'll attend to that shortly; I'll comprehend that in a moment.
8. Who from the beginning of your alteration and deterioration.
9. No, neither I nor anyone else is welcome—that is, this is not a welcoming sight.

Your eldest daughters have fordone\textsuperscript{0} themselves, destroyed
And desperately\textsuperscript{2} are dead.

\begin{quote}
LEAR Aye, so I think.
\end{quote}

\begin{quote}
ALBANY He knows not what he says; and vain\textsuperscript{1} it is in vain
That we present us to him.
\end{quote}

\begin{quote}
EDGAR Very bootless.\textsuperscript{9} futile
\end{quote}

Enter a CAPTAIN

ALBANY Edmund is dead, my lord.

CAPTAIN That's but a trifle here.

ALBANY You lords and noble friends, know our intent.

What comfort to this great decay\textsuperscript{6} may come ruin, destruction
Shall be applied. For us, we will resign,
During the life of this old majesty,
To him our absolute power; (to EDGAR and KENT) you, to your rights;
With boot,\textsuperscript{8} and such addition as your honors good measure
Have more than merited. All friends shall taste
The wages of their virtue, and all foes
The cup of their deserving. O, see, see!

\begin{quote}
LEAR And my poor fool\textsuperscript{1} is hanged! No, no, no life!
Why should a dog, a horse, a rat, have life,
And thou no breath at all? Thou'lt come no more,
Never, never, never, never, never!
Pray you, undo this button. Thank you, sir.
Do you see this? Look on her, look, her lips,
Look there, look there! DIES
\end{quote}

EDGAR He faints! My lord, my lord!

KENT Break, heart; I prithee,\textsuperscript{6} break!

EDGAR Look up, my lord.

KENT Vex not his ghost.\textsuperscript{2} O, let him pass! He hates him much
That would upon the rack\textsuperscript{3} of this tough world
Stretch him out longer.

EDGAR He is gone, indeed.

KENT The wonder is, he hath endured so long.
He but usurped his life.\textsuperscript{4}

ALBANY Bear them from hence. Our present business
Is general woe. (To KENT and EDGAR) Friends of my soul, you twain
Rule in this realm, and the gored\textsuperscript{8} state sustain.

KENT I have a journey, sir, shortly to go;
My master calls me, I must not say no.

Speak what we feel, not what we ought to say,
The oldest hath borne most; we that are young
Shall never see so much, nor live so long.

The Two Texts of King Lear

The following excerpts enable readers to compare, on facing pages, a sample passage from the quarto History of King Lear (1608) and the Folio Tragedy of King Lear (1623). (On the relation between the two texts, see above, p. 1142.) The quarto version of this scene seems to emphasize a French invasion of the kingdom, while the Folio text seems to emphasize an impending civil war.

From The History of King Lear: Scene 8

[Storm.] Enter Kent [disguised.] and [First] Gentleman, at several° doors

Kent What's here, beside foul weather?

First Gentleman One minded like the weather, Most unquietly.

Kent I know you. Where's the King?

First Gentleman Contending with the fretful element; Bids the wind blow the earth into the sea Or swell the curled waters 'bove the main, That things might change or cease; tears his white hair, Which the impetuous blasts, with eyeless rage, Catch in their fury and make nothing of; Strives in his little world of man to outstorm The to-and-fro-conflicting wind and rain. This night, wherein the cub-drawn bear would couch, The lion and the belly-pinched wolf Keep their fur dry, unbonneted he runs, And bids what will take all.

Kent But who is with him?

First Gentleman None but the fool, who labors to outjest His heart-struck injuries.³

Kent Sir, I do know you, And dare upon the warrant of my art Commend a dear thing to you. There is division, Although as yet the face of it be covered With mutual cunning, 'twixt Albany and Cornwall; But true it is. From France there comes a power Into this scattered kingdom, who already, Wise in our negligence, have secret feet In some of our best ports, and are at point To show their open banner. Now to you: If on my credit you dare build so far To make your speed to Dover, you shall find Some that will thank you, making just report Of how unnatural and bemadding sorrow The king hath cause to plain. I am a gentleman of blood and breeding, And from some knowledge and assurance offer This office to you.

First Gentleman I will talk farther with you.

Kent No, do not.

1. In which even the bear, though starving, having been sucked dry ("drawn") by its cub, would not go out to forage.
2. Injuries (from the betrayal of his paternal love) that penetrated to the heart. "To outjest": to relieve with laughter; to exorcise through ridicule.
3. On the basis of my skill (at judging people).
From The Tragedy of King Lear: 3.1

Storm still. Enter KENT [disguised] and [THE FIRST]

KENT Who's there, besides foul weather?
FIRST GENTLEMAN One minded like the weather, Most unquietly.
KENT I know you. Where's the King?
FIRST GENTLEMAN Contending with the fretful elements;
Bids the wind blow the earth into the sea Or swell the curled waters 'bove the main, That things might change or cease.
KENT But who is with him?
FIRST GENTLEMAN None but the Fool, who labors to outjest His heart-struck injuries.
KENT Sir, I do know you, And dare upon the warrant of my note Commend a dear thing to you. There is division, Although as yet the face of it is covered With mutual cunning, twixt Albany and Cornwall, Who have—as who have not that their great stars Throned and set high—servants, who seem no less, Which are to France the spies and speculations Intelligent of our state. What hath been seen, Either in snuffs and packings of the Dukes, Or the hard rein which both of them hath borne Against the old kind King; or something deeper, Whereof perchance these are but furnishings—
FIRST GENTLEMAN I will talk further with you.
KENT No, do not.

1. I.e., as has everybody who has been favored by destiny.
2. Supplying intelligence about; well informed of.
For confirmation that I am much more
Than my out-wall,° open this purse, and take
What it contains. If you shall see Cordelia—
As fear not but you shall—show her this ring
And she will tell you who your fellow° is,
That yet you do not know. Fie on this storm!
I will go seek the King.

FIRST GENTLEMAN
Give me your hand.
Have you no more to say?

KENT
Few words, but to effect°
More than all yet: that when we have found the King—
In which endeavor I’ll° this way, you that—
He that first lights on him holla the other.

Exeunt severally
For confirmation that I am much more
Than my out-wall, open this purse, and take
What it contains. If you shall see Cordelia—
As fear not but you shall—show her this ring
And she will tell you who that fellow is
That yet you do not know. Fie on this storm!
I will go seek the King.

FIRST GENTLEMAN  Give me your hand. Have you no more to say?
KENT    Few words, but to effect more than all yet:
That when we have found the King—in which your pain
That way, I'll this—he that first lights on him
Holla the other.  Exeunt [severally]

3. In which effort you will go that way and I this.
Thomas Campion was a law student, a physician, a composer, a writer of masques, and a poet. His first poetic attempts were in Latin, and he believed that the principles of Latin quantitative versification could be applied to English poetry. In his Observations in the Art of English Poesy, he defended quantitative verse and disparaged the "vulgar and unartificial [i.e., unartistic] custom of rhyming." Yet, as with Jonson and Milton, two other poets who denounced rhyming, many of his best works feature rhyme. His finest achievements as a lyric poet arose from the fact that he was both poet and composer. In the preface to one of his books, he wrote, "I have chiefly aimed to couple my words and notes lovingly together, which will be much for him to do that hath not power over both." That Campion's songs are still loved and sung today, and available in numerous recordings, is testimony to his gentle power.*

My sweetest Lesbia

My sweetest Lesbia, let us live and love,
And though the sager sort our deeds reprove,
Let us not weigh them. Heav'n's great lamps do dive
Into their west, and straight again revive,

But soon as once set is our little light,
Then must we sleep one ever-during night.

If all would lead their lives in love like me,
Then bloody swords and armor should not be;
No drum nor trumpet peaceful sleeps should move,

Unless alarm came from the camp of love.
But fools do live, and waste their little light,
And seek with pain their ever-during night.

When timely death my life and fortune ends,
Let not my hearse be vexed with mourning friends,
But let all lovers, rich in triumph, come
And with sweet pastimes grace my happy tomb;

And Lesbia, close up thou my little light,
And crown with love my ever-during night.

I care not for these ladies

I care not for these ladies
That must be wooed and prayed;

1. Imitated and partly translated from a poem by Catullus (87-ca. 54 B.C.E.), the Latin lyric poet who often celebrated the charms of Lesbia in his verses. This and the two lyrics that follow appeared, with musical settings, in A Book of Airs, which contains Campion's first work as a composer.
When to her lute Corinna sings

When to her lute! Corinna sings,
Her voice revives the leaden\(^1\) strings,
And doth in highest notes appear
As any challenged\(^2\) echo clear;
But when she doth of mourning speak,
Ev'n with her sighs the strings do break
And as her lute doth live or die,
Led by her passion, so must I:
For when of pleasure she doth sing,
My thoughts enjoy a sudden spring;
But if she doth of sorrow speak,
Ev'n from my heart the strings do break.

1. With an obscene pun—as also in line 9.

1. Stringed instrument somewhat like a guitar.
Now winter nights enlarge

Now winter nights enlarge
The number of their hours,
And clouds their storms discharge
Upon the airy towers.
5
Let now the chimneys blaze
And cups o'erflow with wine,
Let well-tuned words amaze
With harmony divine.
Now yellow waxen lights
10 Shall wait on honey Love,
While youthful revels, masques, and courtly sights
Sleep's leaden spells remove.

This time doth well dispense
With lovers' long discourse;
15 Much speech hath some defense,
Though beauty no remorse.
All do not all things well:
Some measures comely tread,
Some knotted riddles tell,
20 Some poems smoothly read.
The Summer hath his joys,
And Winter his delights;
Though Love and all his pleasures are but toys,
They shorten tedious nights.

There is a garden in her face

There is a garden in her face,
Where roses and white lilies grow;
A heav'nly paradise is that place,
Wherein all pleasant fruits do flow.
5 There cherries grow, which none may buy
Till "Cherry ripe!" themselves do cry.
Those cherries fairly do enclose
Of orient pearl a double row;
Which when her lovely laughter shows,
10 They look like rosebuds filled with snow.
Yet them nor peer nor prince can buy,
Till "Cherry ripe!" themselves do cry.

Her eyes like angels watch them still;
Her brows like bended bows do stand,

1. "Dispense / With": permit, allow.
2. Dances; also poetic rhythms. "Some": i.e., some
3. A familiar cry of London street vendors.
Threatening with piercing frowns to kill
All that attempt with eye or hand
Those sacred cherries to come nigh,
Till "Cherry ripe!" themselves do cry.

Fain would I wed

Fain would I wed a fair young man that night and day could please me,
When my mind or body grieved, that had the power to ease me.
Maids are full of longing thoughts that breed a bloodless sickness,
And that, oft I hear men say, is only cured by quickness.
Oft have I been wooed and praised, but never could be moved;
Many for a day or so I have most dearly loved,
But this foolish mind of mine straight loathes the thing resolved;
If to love be sin in me, that sin is soon absolved.
Sure I think I shall at last fly to some holy order;
When I once am settled there, then can I fly no farther.
Yet I would not die a maid, because I had a mother,
As I was by one brought forth, I would bring forth another.

1. In this poem Campion assumes the voice of a female speaker; the procedure is rare among early poets. The poem is written in the old-fashioned metrical form known as fourteens—verses of fourteen or fifteen syllables, with seven accented beats. "Fain": gladly.

THOMAS NASHE
1567-1601

Thomas Nashe, a Cambridge graduate, was a versatile writer of satires, plays, a novel, lyric verse, and controversial pamphlets. He was one of the so-called "University Wits" who in the late 1580s came to London and wrote for the stage and the press. They lived precarious and short lives; Nashe was about thirty-three when he died; his friend Christopher Marlowe died at twenty-nine; George Peele, at thirty; and Robert Greene, at thirty-two. In his brief career, Nashe won fame for his brilliant, idiosyncratic style, and notoriety for the vituperative and slanderous pamphlet war he conducted with Spenser's friend the scholar Gabriel Harvey.

Nashe's best-known prose work is a picaresque narrative, The Unfortunate Traveler, or the Life of Jack Wilton, which recounts the rambling adventures of the young hero all over Europe, including Active encounters with Erasmus and the poet Surrey, the massacre of the Protestant radicals in Germany, and harrowing, melodramatic exploits in seductive, corrupt, and plague-ridden Italy. In this tale, and in satirical pamphlets like Pierce Penniless, His Supplication to the Devil, Nashe's prose, which sometimes sounds like modern experimental fiction, is headlong, exuberant, surrealistic, and intensely vivid. His tone routinely mingles the beautiful and the grotesque, laughter and horror. His dance-of-death poem, "A Litany in Time of Plague," comes paradoxically from one of his most light-hearted works, a festive comedy called Summer's Last Will and Testament.

Nashe's general outlook, like that of many satirists, was conservative; he attacked innovation and praised the purported stability and order of the past. But in his vision of the world, as in the manner of his writing, there is something wild and extreme. Those in power seem to have recognized that Nashe's style in itself, regardless of the content to which it was wedded, might constitute a threat to established order. In June 1599 the ecclesiastical authorities ordered that "all Nashe's books and Doctor Harvey's books be taken wheresoever they may be found and that none of their books be ever printed hereafter."*

A Litany in Time of Plague

Adieu, farewell, earth's bliss,
This world uncertain is;
Fond* are life's lustful joys,
Death proves them all but toys.°

None from his darts can fly;
I am sick, I must die.
Lord, have mercy on us!

Rich men, trust not in wealth,
Gold cannot buy you health;
Physic himself must fade,
All things to end are made.

The plague full swift goes by;
I am sick, I must die.
Lord, have mercy on us!

Beauty is but a flower
Which wrinkles will devour;
Brightness falls from the air,
Queens have died young and fair,

Dust hath closed Helen's eye.
Helen of Troy

I am sick, I must die.
Lord, have mercy on us!

Strength stoops unto the grave,
Worms feed on Hector brave;
Swords may not fight with fate,
Earth still holds ope her gate.

"Come, come!" the bells do cry.
I am sick, I must die.
Lord, have mercy on us!

1. This lyric is from A Pleasant Comedy Called Summer's Last Will and Testament, acted before the archbishop of Canterbury in his palace at Croydon in 1592 and published in 1600. Literally, a litany is an appointed form of public prayer in which each of a series of supplications by the clergy is followed by a response by the congregation, with the same formula of response being repeated several times.

2. The greatest of the Trojan warriors—killed, nevertheless, by Achilles.

3. The "passing bell" that was tolled in the parish church to solicit prayers for the dying. See John Donne's "Meditation 17," p. 1305.
Wit with his wantonness
Tasteth death's bitterness;
Hell's executioner
Hath no ears for to hear
What vain art* can reply.
I am sick, I must die.

Lord, have mercy on us!

Haste, therefore, each degree,
To welcome destiny;
Heaven is our heritage,
Earth but a player's stage;
Mount we unto the sky.
I am sick, I must die.
Lord, have mercy on us!

The eldest son in a family of landed gentry, Richard Barnfield was born in Norbury, Staffordshire, in 1574 and educated at Oxford. In 1594 and 1595, he published two collections of pastoral verses, The Affectionate Shepherd, Containing the Complaint of Daphnis for the Love of Ganymede, and Cynthia, with Certain Sonnets. These volumes earned him admiring attention: in a 1598 survey of the literary scene, Francis Meres praised him as one of England's chief poets for pastoral. But 1598 also marked the end of Barnfield's literary career: in that year he published another poem, The Encomium of Lady Pecunia, or The Praise of Money, and then fell silent for the rest of his life. For reasons that remain unknown, Barnfield was disinherited by his father. It is thought that he returned to Staffordshire, where he died in 1627.

Both The Affectionate Shepherd and Cynthia have overt homoerotic themes. These themes—also found in the work of other Elizabethan poets, including Spenser, Marlowe, and Shakespeare—were relatively conventional at the time, being modeled on Greek and Roman poetry. But the passionate explicitness of Barnfield's verses evidently raised eyebrows, for he felt it necessary in a dedicatory letter to explain his intention: "being nothing else," he insisted, "but an imitation of Virgil."

This appeal to a prestigious classical model for sanction is not surprising: by law, sodomitical acts were strictly forbidden in Elizabethan England and punishable by death. The literary convention enables Barnfield to articulate desires that might otherwise have been silenced:

Then shouldst thou suck my sweet and my fair flower
That now is ripe, and full of honey-berries:
Then would I lead thee to my pleasant Bower
Filled full of grapes, of mulberries, and cherries;
Then shouldst thou be my wasp or else my bee,
I would thy hive, and thou my honey be.

The Affectionate Shepherd

But Elizabethan homophobia, though real enough, is easy to misunderstand. The laws were draconian, but actual trials for sodomy were extremely rare, and English culture in many ways encouraged male intimacy. Unmarried men routinely shared beds; male friends kissed and caressed each other openly; and, on the stage as well as on the page, the seductive beauty of boys was actively celebrated.

Sonnet 9

Diana (on a time) walking the wood
To sport herself, of her fair train forlorn,^2_
Chanced for to prick her foot against a thorn,
And from thence issued out a stream of blood.

No sooner she was vanished out of sight,
But love’s fair queen^3 came there away by chance,
And having of this hap^* a glimm’ring glance,
She put the blood into a crystal^4 bright.

When being now come unto Mount Rhodope,^3_
With her fair hands she forms a shape of snow,
And blends it with this blood; from whence doth grow
A lovely creature, brighter than the day.

And being christened in fair Paphos’^4 shrine,
She called him Ganymede,^5 as all divine.

Sonnet 11

Sighing, and sadly sitting by my love,
He asked the cause of my heart’s sorrowing,
Conjuring me by heaven’s eternal king
To tell the cause which me so much did move.

Compelled (quoth I), to thee will I confess Love is the cause, and only love it is
That doth deprive me of my heavenly bliss;
Love is the pain that doth my heart oppress.

And what is she (quoth he) whom thou dost love?
Look in this glass^5 (quoth I), there shalt thou see
The perfect form of my felicity.

When, thinking that it would strange magic prove,^6
He opened it: and taking off the cover,
He straight perceived himself to be my lover.

1. Cynthia, or Diana, was the chase huntress goddess, and moon goddess, of classical mythology.
2. Left without her fair retinue (of wood nymphs).
3. In frigid Thrace, and associated with Diana.
4. A city in Cyprus, sacred to Venus.
5. A Trojan boy, said to be the most beautiful of mortals. Enamored of him, Zeus brought Ganymede away to Olympus, where he was deified and became cupbearer to the gods.
Queen Elizabeth died on March 24, 1603, after ruling England for more than four decades. The Virgin Queen had not, of course, produced a child to inherit her throne, but her kinsman, the thirty-six-year-old James Stuart, James VI of Scotland, succeeded her as James I without the attempted coups that many had feared. Many welcomed the accession of a man in the prime of life, supposing that he would prove more decisive than his notoriously vacillating predecessor. Worries over the succession, which had plagued the reigns of the Tudor monarchs since Henry VIII, could finally subside: James already had several children with his queen, Anne of Denmark. Writers and scholars jubilantly noted that their new ruler had literary inclinations. He was the author of treatises on government and witchcraft, and some youthful efforts at poetry. Nonetheless, there were grounds for disquiet. James had come to maturity in Scotland, in the seventeenth century a foreign land with a different church, different customs, and different institutions of government. Two of his books, The True Law of Free Monarchies (1598) and Basilikon Doron (1599), expounded authoritarian theories of kingship: James's views seemed incompatible with the English tradition of "mixed" government, in which power was shared by the monarch, the House of Lords, and the House of Commons. As Thomas Howard wrote in 1611, while Elizabeth "did talk of her subjects' love and good affection," James "talketh of his subjects' fear and subjection." James liked to imagine himself as a modern version of the wise, peace-loving Roman Augustus Caesar, who autocratically governed a vast empire. The Romans had deified their emperors, and while the Christian James could not expect the same, he insisted on his closeness to divinity. Kings, he believed, derived their powers from God rather than from the people. As God's specially chosen delegate, surely he deserved his subjects' reverent, unconditional obedience.
Yet unlike the charismatic Elizabeth, James was personally unprepossessing. One contemporary, Anthony Weldon, provides a barbed description: "His tongue too large for his mouth, which ever made him speak full in the mouth, and drink very uncomely as if eating his drink . . . he never washed his hands . . . his walk was ever circular, his fingers ever in that walk fiddling about his codpiece." Unsurprisingly, James did not always inspire in his subjects the deferential awe to which he thought himself entitled.

The relationship between the monarch and his people and the relationship between England and Scotland would be sources of friction throughout James's reign. James had hoped to unify his domains as a single nation, "the empire of Britain." But the two realms' legal and ecclesiastical systems proved difficult to reconcile, and the English Parliament, traditionally a sporadically convened advisory body to the monarch, offered robustly xenophobic opposition. The failure of unification was only one of several clashes with the English Parliament, especially with the House of Commons, which had authority over taxation. After James died in 1625 and his son, Charles I, succeeded him, tensions persisted and intensified. Charles, indeed, attempted to rule without summoning Parliament at all between 1629 and 1638. By 1642 England was up in arms, in a civil war between the king's forces and armies loyal to the House of Commons. The conflict ended with Charles's defeat and beheading in 1649.

Although in the early 1650s the monarchy as an institution seemed as dead as the man who had last worn the crown, an adequate replacement proved difficult to devise. Executive power devolved upon a "Lord Protector," Oliver Cromwell, former general of the parliamentary forces, who wielded power nearly as autocratically as Charles had done. Yet without an institutionally sanctioned method of transferring power upon Cromwell's death in 1658, the attempt to fashion a commonwealth without a hereditary monarch eventually failed. In 1660 Parliament invited the eldest son of the old king home from exile. He succeeded to the throne as King Charles II.

As James's accession marks the beginning of "the early seventeenth century," his grandson's marks the end. Literary periods often fail to correlate neatly with the reigns of monarchs, and the period 1603—60 can seem especially arbitrary. Many of the most important cultural trends in seventeenth-century Europe neither began nor ended in these years but were in the process of unfolding slowly, over several centuries. The Protestant Reformation of the sixteenth century was still ongoing in the seventeenth, and still producing turmoil. The printing press, invented in the fifteenth century, made books ever more widely available, contributing to an expansion of literacy and to a changed conception of authorship. Although the English economy remained primarily agrarian, its manufacturing and trade sectors were expanding rapidly. England was beginning to establish itself as a colonial power and as a leading maritime nation. From 1550 on, London grew explosively as a center of population, trade, and literary endeavor. All these important developments got under way before James came to the throne, and many of them would continue after the 1714 death of James's great-granddaughter Queen Anne, the last of the Stuarts to reign in England.

From a literary point of view, 1603 can seem a particularly capricious dividing line because at the accession of James I so many writers happened to be in midcareer. The professional lives of William Shakespeare, Ben Jonson, John Donne, Francis Bacon, Walter Ralegh, and many less important writers—
Thomas Dekker, George Chapman, Samuel Daniel, Michael Drayton, and Thomas Heywood, for instance—straddle the reigns of Elizabeth and James. The Restoration of Charles II, with which this section ends, is likewise a more significant political than literary milestone: John Milton completed Paradise Lost and wrote two other major poems in the 1660s. Nonetheless, recognizing the years 1603–60 as a period sharpens our awareness of some important political, intellectual, cultural, and stylistic currents that bear directly upon literary production. It helps focus attention too upon the seismic shift in national consciousness that, in 1649, could permit the formal trial, conviction, and execution of an anointed king at the hands of his former subjects.

STATE AND CHURCH, 1603-40

In James's reign, the most pressing difficulties were apparently financial, but money troubles were merely symptoms of deeper quandaries about the proper relationship between the king and the people. Compared to James's native Scotland, England seemed a prosperous nation, but James was less wealthy than he believed. Except in times of war, the Crown was supposed to fund the government not through regular taxation but through its own extensive land revenues and by exchanging Crown prerogatives, such as the collection of taxes on luxury imports, in return for money or services. Yet the Crown's independent income had declined throughout the sixteenth century as inflation eroded the value of land rents. Meanwhile, innovations in military technology and shipbuilding dramatically increased the expense of port security and other defenses, a traditional Crown responsibility. Elizabeth had responded to straitened finances with parsimony, transferring much of the expense of her court, for instance, onto wealthy subjects, whom she visited for extended periods on her annual "progresses." She kept a tight lid on honorific titles too, creating new knights or peers very rarely, even though the years of her reign saw considerable upward social mobility. In consequence, by 1603 there was considerable pent-up pressure both for "honors" and for more tangible rewards for government officials. As soon as James came to power, he was immediately besieged with supplicants.

James responded with what seemed to him appropriate royal munificence, knighting and ennobling many of his courtiers and endowing them with opulent gifts. His expenses were unavoidably higher than Elizabeth's, because he had to maintain not only his own household, but also separate establishments for his queen and for the heir apparent, Prince Henry. Yet he quickly became notorious for his financial heedlessness. Compared to Elizabeth's, his court was disorderly and wasteful, marked by hard drinking, gluttonous feasting, and a craze for hunting. "It is not possible for a king of England . . . to be rich or safe, but by frugality," warned James's lord treasurer, Robert Cecil, but James seemed unable to restrain himself. Soon he was deep in debt and unable to convince Parliament to bankroll him by raising taxes.

The king's financial difficulties set his authoritarian assertions about the monarch's supremacy at odds with Parliament's control over taxation. How were his prerogatives as a ruler to coexist with the rights of his subjects? Particularly disturbing to many was James's tendency to bestow high offices upon favorites apparently chosen for good looks rather than for good judgment. James's openly romantic attachment first to Robert Carr, Earl of Somerset, and then to George Villiers, Duke of Buckingham, gave rise to widespread rumors of homosexuality at court. The period had complex attitudes toward same-sex relationships; on the one hand, "sodomy" was a capital crime (though it was very rarely prosecuted); on the other hand, passionately intense male friendship, sometimes suffused with eroticism, constituted an important cultural ideal. In James's case, at least, contemporaries considered his susceptibility to lovely, expensive youths more a political than a moral calamity. For his critics, it crystallized what was wrong with unlimited royal power: the ease with which a king could confuse his own whim with a divine mandate.

Despite James's ungainly demeanor, his frictions with Parliament, and his chronic problems of self-management, he was politically astute. Often, like Elizabeth, he succeeded not through decisiveness but through canny inaction. Cautious by temperament, he characterized himself as a peacemaker and, for many years, successfully kept England out of the religious wars raging on the Continent. His 1604 peace treaty with England's old enemy, Spain, made the Atlantic safe for English ships, a prerequisite for the colonization of the New World and for regular long-distance trading expeditions into the Mediterranean and down the African coast into the Indian Ocean. During James's reign the first permanent English settlements were established in North America, first at Jamestown, then in Bermuda, at Plymouth, and in the Caribbean. In 1611 the East India Company established England's first foothold in India. Even when expeditions ended disastrously, as did Henry Hudson's 1611 attempt to find the Northwest Passage and Walter Ralegh's 1617 expedition to Guiana, they often asserted territorial claims that England would exploit in later decades.

Although the Crown's deliberate attempts to manage the economy were often misguided, its frequent inattention or refusal to interfere had the unintentional effect of stimulating growth. Early seventeenth-century entrepreneurs undertook a wide variety of schemes for industrial or agricultural improvement. Some ventures were almost as loony as Sir Politic Would-be's ridiculous moneymaking notions in Ben Jonson's _Volpone_ (1606), but others were serious, profitable enterprises. In the south, domestic industries began manufacturing goods like pins and light woolens that had previously been imported. In the north, newly developed coal mines provided fuel for England's growing cities. In the east, landowners drained wetlands, producing more arable land to feed England's rapidly growing population. These endeavors gave rise to a new respect for the practical arts, a faith in technology as a means of improving human life, and a conviction that the future might be better than the past: all important influences upon the scientific theories of Francis Bacon and his seventeenth-century followers. Economic growth in this period owed more to the initiative of individuals and small groups than to government policy, a factor that encouraged a reevaluation of the role of self-interest, the profit motive, and the role of business contracts in the betterment of the community. This reevaluation was a prerequisite for the secular, contractual political theories proposed by Thomas Hobbes and John Locke later in the seventeenth century.

On the vexations faced by the Church of England, James was likewise often most successful when he was least activist. Since religion cemented sociopolitical order, it seemed necessary to English rulers that all of their subjects belong to a single church. Yet how could they do so when the Reformation had discredited many familiar religious practices and had bred disagreement over many theological issues? Sixteenth- and seventeenth-century English people argued over many religious topics. How should public worship be conducted, and what sorts of qualifications should ministers possess? How should Scripture be understood? How should people pray? What did the sacrament of Communion mean? What happened to people’s souls after they died? Elizabeth’s government had needed to devise a common religious practice when actual consensus was impossible. Sensibly, it sought a middle ground between traditional and reformed views. Everyone was legally required to attend Church of England services, and the form of the services themselves was mandated in the Elizabethan Book of Common Prayer. Yet the Book of Common Prayer deliberately avoided addressing abstruse theological controversies. The language of the English church service was carefully chosen to be open to several interpretations and acceptable to both Protestant- and Catholic-leaning subjects.

The Elizabethan compromise effectively tamed many of the Reformation’s divisive energies and proved acceptable to the majority of Elizabeth’s subjects. To staunch Catholics on one side and ardent Protestants on the other, however, the Elizabethan church seemed to have sacrificed truth to political expediency. Catholics wanted to return England to the Roman fold; while some of them were loyal subjects of the queen, others advocated invasion by a foreign Catholic power. Meanwhile the Puritans, as they were disparagingly called, pressed for more thoroughgoing reformation in doctrine, ritual, and church government, urging the elimination of “popish” elements from worship services and “idolatrous” religious images from churches. Some, the Presbyterians, wanted to separate lay and clerical power in the national church, so that church leaders would be appointed by other ministers, not by secular authorities. Others, the separatists, advocated abandoning a national church in favor of small congregations of the “elect.”

The resistance of religious minorities to Elizabeth’s established church opened them to state persecution. In the 1580s and 1590s, Catholic priests and the laypeople who harbored them were executed for treason, and radical Protestants for heresy. Both groups greeted James’s accession enthusiastically; his mother had been the Catholic Mary, Queen of Scots, while his upbringing had been in the strict Reformed tradition of the Scottish Presbyterian Kirk.

James began his reign with a conference at Hampton Court, one of his palaces, at which advocates of a variety of religious views could openly debate them. Yet the Puritans failed to persuade him to make any substantive reforms. Practically speaking, the Puritan belief that congregations should choose their leaders diminished the monarch’s power by stripping him of authority over ecclesiastical appointments. More generally, allowing people to choose their leaders in any sphere of life threatened to subvert the entire system of deference and hierarchy upon which the institution of monarchy itself seemed to rest. "No bishop, no king," James famously remarked.

Nor did Catholics fare well in the new reign. Initially inclined to lift Elizabeth’s sanctions against them, James hesitated when he realized how entrenched was the opposition to toleration. Then, in 1605, a small group of disaffected Catholics packed a cellar adjacent to the Houses of Parliament with gunpowder, intending to detonate it on the day that the king formally opened Parliament, with Prince Henry, the Houses of Lords and Commons, and the leading justices in attendance. The conspirators were arrested before they could effect their plan. If the "Gunpowder Plot" had succeeded, it would have eliminated much of England's ruling class in a single tremendous explosion, leaving the land vulnerable to invasion by a foreign, Catholic power. Not surprisingly, the Gunpowder Plot dramatically heightened anti-Catholic paranoia in England, and its apparently miraculous revelation was widely seen as a sign of God’s care for England’s Protestant governors.

By and large, then, James’s ecclesiastical policies continued along the lines laid down by Elizabeth. By appointing bishops of varying doctrinal views, he restrained any single faction from controlling church policy. The most important religious event of James’s reign was a newly commissioned translation of the Bible. First published in 1611, it was a typically moderating document. A much more graceful rendering than its predecessor, the Geneva version produced by Puritan expatriates in the 1550s, the King James Bible immediately became the standard English Scripture. Its impressive rhythms and memorable phrasing would influence writers for centuries. On the one hand, the new translation contributed to the Protestant aim of making the Bible widely available to every reader in the vernacular. On the other hand, unlike the Geneva Bible, the King James Version translated controversial and ambiguous passages in ways that bolstered conservative preferences for a ceremonial church and for a hierarchically organized church government.

James’s moderation was not universally popular. Some Protestants yearned for a more confrontational policy toward Catholic powers, particularly toward Spain, England’s old enemy. In the first decade of James’s reign, this party clustered around James’s eldest son and heir apparent, Prince Henry, who cultivated a militantly Protestant persona. When Henry died of typhoid fever in 1612, those who favored his policies were forced to seek avenues of power outside the royal court. By the 1620s, the House of Commons was developing a vigorous sense of its own independence, debating policy agendas often quite at odds with the Crown’s and openly attempting to use its power to approve taxation as a means of exacting concessions from the king.

James’s second son, Prince Charles, came to the throne upon James’s death in 1625. Unlike his father, Charles was not a theorist of royal absolutism, but he acted on that principle with an inflexibility that his father had never been able to muster. By 1629 he had dissolved Parliament three times in frustration with its recalcitrance, and he then began more than a decade of “personal rule” without Parliament. Charles was more prudent in some respects than his father had been—he not only restrained the costs of his own court, but paid off his father’s staggering debts by the early 1630s. Throughout his reign, he conscientiously applied himself to the business of government. Yet his refusal to involve powerful individuals and factions in the workings of the state inevitably alienated them, even while it cut him off dangerously from important channels of information about the reactions of his people. Money was a constant problem, too. Even a relatively frugal king required some funds for ambitious government initiatives; but without parliamentary approval, any taxes Charles imposed were widely perceived as illegal. As a result, even wise policies, such as Charles’s effort to build up the English navy, spawned misgivings among many of his subjects.

Religious conflicts intensified. Charles’s queen, the French princess Henrietta Maria, supported an entourage of Roman Catholic priests, protected English Catholics, and encouraged several noblewomen in her court to convert to the Catholic faith. While Charles remained a staunch member of the Church of England, he loved visual splendor and majestic ceremony in all aspects of life, spiritual and otherwise—proclivities that led his Puritan subjects to suspect him of popish sympathies. Charles's profound attachment to his wife, so different from James's neglect of Anne, only deepened their qualms. Like many fellow Puritans, Lucy Hutchinson blamed the entire debacle of Charles's reign on his wife's influence.

Charles's appointment of William Laud as archbishop of Canterbury, the ecclesiastical head of the English Church, further alienated Puritans. Laud subscribed to a theology that most Puritans rejected. As followers of the sixteenth-century reformer John Calvin, Puritans held that salvation depended upon faith in Christ, not "works." Works were meaningless because the deeds of sinful human beings could not be sanctified in the absence of faith; moreover, the Fall had so thoroughly corrupted human beings that they could not muster this faith without the help of God's grace. God chose (or refused) to extend grace to particular individuals on grounds that human beings were incapable of comprehending, and his decision had been made from eternity, before the individuals concerned were even born. In other words, Puritans believed, God predestined people to be saved or damned, and Christ's redemptive sacrifice was designed only for the saved group, the "elect." Laud, by contrast, advocated the Arminian doctrine that through Christ, God made redemption freely available to all human beings. Individuals could choose whether or not to respond to God's grace, and they could work actively toward their salvation by acts of charity, ritual devotion, and generosity to the church.

Although Laud's theology appears more generously inclusive than the Calvinist alternative, his ecclesiastical policies were uncompromising. Stripping many Puritan ministers of their posts, Laud aligned the doctrine and ceremonies of the English church with Roman Catholicism, which like Arminianism held works in high regard. In an ambitious project of church renovation, Laud installed religious paintings and images in churches; he thought they promoted reverence in worshippers, but the Puritans believed they encouraged idolatry. He rebuilt and resituated altars, making them more ornate and prominent: another change that dismayed Puritans, since it implied that the Eucharist rather than the sermon was the central element of a worship service. In the 1630s thousands of Puritans departed for the New England colonies, but many more remained at home, deeply discontented.

As the 1630s drew to a close, Archbishop Laud and Charles attempted to impose a version of the English liturgy and episcopal organization upon Presbyterian Scotland. Unlike his father, Charles had little acquaintance with his northern realm, and he drastically underestimated the difficulties involved. The Scots objected both on nationalist and on religious grounds, and they were not shy about expressing their objections: the bishop of Renfrew, obliged to conduct divine service in the prescribed English style, mounted the pulpit armed with two pistols against his unruly congregation, while his wife, stationed on the floor below, backed him up with a blunderbuss. In the conflict that followed, the Bishops' Wars of 1639 and 1640, Charles's forces met with abject defeat. Exacerbating the situation, Laud was simultaneously insisting upon greater conformity within the English church. Riots in the London streets and the Scots' occupation of several northern English cities forced Charles to call the so-called Long Parliament, which would soon be managing a revolution.
In the first part of the seventeenth century, exciting new scientific theories were in the air, but the older ways of thinking about the nature of things had not yet been superseded. Writers such as John Donne, Robert Burton, and Ben Jonson often invoked an inherited body of concepts even though they were aware that those concepts were being questioned or displaced. The Ptolemaic universe, with its fixed earth and circling sun, moon, planets, and stars, was a rich source of poetic imagery. So were the four elements—fire, earth, water, and air—that together were thought to comprise all matter, and the four bodily humors—choler, blood, phlegm, and black bile—which were supposed to determine a person's temperament and to cause physical and mental disease when out of balance. Late Elizabethans and Jacobean (so called from Jacobus, Latin for James) considered themselves especially prone to melancholy, an ailment of scholars and thinkers stemming from an excess of black bile. Shakespeare's Hamlet is melancholic, as is Bosola in John Webster's Duchess of Malfi and Milton's title figure in "Il Penseroso" ("the serious-minded one"). In his panoramic Anatomy of Melancholy, Burton argued that melancholy was universal.

Key concepts of the inherited system of knowledge were analogy and order. Donne was especially fond of drawing parallels between the macrocosm, or "big world," and the microcosm, or "little world," of the individual human being. Also widespread were versions of the "chain of being" that linked and ordered various kinds of beings in hierarchies. The order of nature, for instance, put God above angels, angels above human beings, human beings above animals, animals above plants, plants above rocks. The social order installed the king over his nobles, nobles over the gentry, gentry over yeomen, yeomen over common laborers. The order of the family set husband above wife, parents above children, master and mistress above servants, the elderly above the young. Each level had its peculiar function, and each was connected to those above and beneath in a tight network of obligation and dependency. Items that occupied similar positions in different hierarchies were related by analogy: thus a monarch was like God, and he was also like a father, the head of the family, or like a lion, most majestic of beasts, or like the sun, the most excellent of heavenly bodies. A medieval or Renaissance poet who calls a king a sun or a lion, then, imagines himself not to be forging a metaphor in his own creative imagination, but to be describing something like an obvious fact of nature. Many Jacobean tragedies, Shakespeare's King Lear perhaps most comprehensively, depict the catastrophes that ensue when these hierarchies rupture, and both the social order and the natural order disintegrate.

Yet this conceptual system was itself beginning to crumble. Francis Bacon advocated rooting out of the mind all the intellectual predilections that had made the old ideas so attractive: love of ingenious correlations, reverence for tradition, and a priori assumptions about what was possible in nature. Instead, he argued, groups of collaborators ought to design controlled experiments to find the truths of nature by empirical means. Even as Bacon was promoting his views in The Advancement of Learning, Novum Organum, and The New Atlantis, actual experiments and discoveries were calling the old verities into question. From the far-flung territories England was beginning to colonize or to trade with, collectors brought animal, plant, and ethnological novelties, many of which were hard to subsume under old categories of understanding. William Harvey's discovery that blood circulated in the body shook received views on the function of blood, casting doubt on the theory of the humors. Galileo's telescope provided evidence confirming Copernican astronomical theory, which dislodged the earth from its stable central position in the cosmos and, in defiance of all ordinary observation, set it whirling around the sun. Galileo found evidence as well of change in the heavens, which were supposed to be perfect and incorruptible above the level of the moon. Donne, like other writers of his age, responded with a mixture of excitement and anxiety to such novel ideas as these:

And new philosophy calls all in doubt:
The element of fire is quite put out;
The sun is lost, and the earth, and no man's wit
Can well direct him where to look for it.

Several decades later, however, Milton embraced the new science, proudly recalling a visit during his European tour to "the famous Galileo, grown old, a prisoner to the Inquisition for thinking in astronomy otherwise than the Franciscan and Dominican licensers thought." In Paradise Lost, he would make complex poetic use of the astronomical controversy, considering how, and how far, humans should pursue scientific knowledge.

Patrons, Printers, and Acting Companies

The social institutions, customs, and practices that had supported and regulated writers in Tudor times changed only gradually before 1640. As it had under Elizabeth, the church promoted writing of several kinds: devotional treatises; guides to meditation; controversial tracts; "cases of conscience," which work out difficult moral issues in complex situations; and especially sermons. Since everyone was required to attend church, everyone heard sermons at least once and often twice on Sunday, as well as on religious or national holidays. The essence of a sermon, Protestants agreed, was the careful exposition of Scripture, and its purpose was to instruct and to move. Yet styles varied; while some preachers, like Donne, strove to enthral their congregations with all the resources of artful rhetoric, others, especially many Puritans, sought an undecorated style that would display God's word in its own splendor. Printing made it easy to circulate many copies of sermons, blurring the line between oral delivery and written text and enhancing the role of printers and booksellers in disseminating God's word.

Many writers of the period depended in one way or another upon literary patronage. A Jacobean or Caroline aristocrat, like his medieval forebears, was expected to reward dependents in return for services and homage. Indeed, his status was gauged partly on the size of his entourage (that is one reason why in King Lear the hero experiences his daughters' attempts to dismiss his retainers as so intensely humiliating). In the early seventeenth century, although commercial relationships were rapidly replacing feudal ones, patronage pervaded all walks of life: governing relationships between landlords and tenants, masters and servants, kings and courtiers. Writers were assimilated into this system partly because their works reflected well on the patron, and partly because their all-around intelligence made them useful members of a great man's household. Important patrons of the time included the royal family—especially Queen Anne, who sponsored the court masques, and Prince
Henry—the members of the intermarried Sidney/Herbert family, and the Countess of Bedford, Queen Anne’s confidante.

Because the patronage relationship often took the form of an exchange of favors rather than a simple financial transaction, its terms were very variable and are difficult to recover with any precision at this historical remove. A poet might dedicate a poem or a work to a patron in the expectation of a simple cash payment. But a patron might provide a wide range of other benefits: a place to live; employment as a secretary, tutor, or household servant; or gifts of clothing (textiles were valuable commodities). Donne, for instance, received inexpensive lodging from the Drury family, for whom he wrote the Anniversaries; a suit of clerical attire from Lucy Russell, Countess of Bedford, when he took orders in the Church of England; and advancement in the church from King James. Ben Jonson lived for several years at the country estates of Lord Aubigny and of Robert Sidney, in whose honor he wrote “To Penshurst”; he received a regular salary from the king in return for writing court masques; and he served as chaperone to Sir Walter Ralegh’s son on a Continental tour. Aemilia Lanyer apparently resided for some time in the household of Margaret Clifford, Countess of Cumberland. Andrew Marvell lived for two years with Thomas Fairfax, tutored his daughter and wrote “Upon Appleton House” for him. All these quite different relationships and forms of remuneration fall under the rubric of patronage.

The patronage system required the poets involved to hone their skills at eulogizing their patrons’ generosity and moral excellence. Jonson’s epigrams and many of Lanyer’s dedicatory poems evoke communities of virtuous poets and patrons joined by bonds of mutual respect and affection. Like the line between sycophantic flattery and truthful depiction, the line between patronage and friendship could be a thin one. Literary manuscripts circulated among circles of acquaintances and supporters, many of whom were, at least occasionally, writers as well as readers. Jonson esteemed Mary Wroth both as a fellow poet and as a member of the Sidney family to whom he owed so much. Donne became part of a coterie around Queen Anne’s closest confidante, Lucy Russell, Countess of Bedford, who was also an important patron for Ben Jonson, Michael Drayton, and Samuel Daniel. The countess evidently wrote poems herself, although only one attributed to her has apparently survived.

Presenting a poem to a patron, or circulating it among the group of literary people who surrounded the patron, did not require printing it. In early-seventeenth-century England, the reading public for sophisticated literary works was tiny and concentrated in a few social settings: the royal court, the universities, and the Inns of Court, or law schools. In these circumstances, manuscript circulation could be an effective way of reaching one’s audience. So a great deal of writing remained in manuscript in early-seventeenth-century England. The collected works of many important writers of the period—most notably John Donne, George Herbert, William Shakespeare, and Andrew Marvell—appeared in print only posthumously, in editions produced by friends or admirers. Other writers, like Robert Herrick, collected and printed their own works long after they were written and (probably) circulated in manuscript. In consequence, it is often difficult to date accurately the composition of a seventeenth-century poem. In addition, when authors do not participate in the printing of their own works, editorial problems multiply—when, for instance, the printed version of a poem is inconsistent with a surviving manuscript copy.
Nonetheless, the printing of all kinds of literary works was becoming more common. Writers such as Francis Bacon or Robert Rurton, who hoped to reach large numbers of readers with whom they were not acquainted, usually arranged for the printing of their texts soon after they were composed. The sense that the printing of lyric poetry, in particular, was a bit vulgar began to fade when the famous Ben Jonson collected his own works in a grand folio edition.

Until 1640 the Stuart kings kept in place the strict controls over print publication originally instituted by Henry VIII, in response to the ideological threat posed by the Reformation. King Henry had given the members of London’s Stationer’s Company a monopoly on all printing; in return for their privilege, they were supposed to submit texts to prepublication censorship. In the latter part of the sixteenth century, presses associated with the universities at Oxford and Cambridge would begin operation as well, but they were largely concerned with scholarly and theological books. As a result, with a very few exceptions (such as George Herbert’s The Temple, published by Cambridge University Press), almost all printed literary texts were produced in London. Most of them were sold there as well, in the booksellers’ stalls set up outside St. Paul’s Cathedral.

The licensing system located not only primary responsibility for a printed work, but its ownership, with the printer rather than with the author. Printers typically paid writers a onetime fee for the use of their work, but the payment was scanty, and the authors of popular texts realized no royalties from the many copies sold. As a result, no one could make a living as a writer in the early seventeenth century by producing best sellers. The first writer formally to arrange for royalties was apparently John Milton, who received five pounds up front for Paradise Lost, and another five pounds and two hundred copies at the end of each of the first three impressions. Still, legal ownership of and control over a printed work remained with the printer: authorial copyright would not become a reality until the early eighteenth century.

In monetary terms, a more promising outlet for writers was the commercial theater, which provided the first literary market in English history. Profitable and popular acting companies, established successfully in London in Elizabeth's time, continued to play a very important cultural role under James and Charles. Because the acting companies staged a large number of different plays and paid for them at a predictable, if not generous, rate, they enabled a few hardworking writers to support themselves as full-time professionals. One of them, Thomas Dekker, commented bemusedly on the novelty of being paid for the mere products of one's imagination: "the theater," he wrote, "is your poet's Royal Exchange upon which their muses—that are now turned to merchants—meeting, barter away that light commodity of words." In James's reign, Shakespeare was at the height of his powers: Othello, King Lear, Macbeth, Antony and Cleopatra, The Winter's Tale, The Tempest, and other important plays were first staged during these years. So were Jonson’s major comedies: Volpone, Epicene, The Alchemist, and Bartholomew Fair. The most important new playwright was John Webster, whose dark tragedies The White Devil and The Duchess of Malfi combined gothic horror with stunningly beautiful poetry.

Just as printers were legally the owners of the texts they printed, so theater companies, not playwrights, were the owners of the texts they performed. Typically, companies guarded their scripts closely, permitting them to be printed only in times of financial distress or when they were so old that printing them seemed unlikely to reduce the paying audience. As a result, many Jacobean and Caroline plays are lost to us or available only in corrupt or posthumous versions. For contemporaries, though, a play was "published" not by being printed but by being performed. Aware of the dangerous potential of plays in arousing the sentiments of large crowds of onlookers, the Stuarts, like the Tudors before them, instituted tight controls over dramatic performances. Acting companies, like printers, were obliged to submit works to the censor before public presentation.

Authors, printers, and acting companies who flouted the censorships laws were subject to imprisonment, fines, or even bodily mutilation. Queen Elizabeth cut off the hand of a man who disagreed in print with her marriage plans, King Charles the ears of a man who inveighed against court masques. Jonson and his collaborators found themselves in prison for ridiculing King James's broad Scots accent in one of their comedies. The effects of censorship on writers' output were therefore far reaching across literary genres. Since overt criticism or satire of the great was so dangerous, political writing was apt to be oblique and allegorical. Writers often employed animal fables, tales of distant lands, or long-past historical events to comment upon contemporary issues.

While the commercial theaters were profitable businesses that made most of their money from paying audiences, several factors combined to bring writing for the theater closer to the Stuart court than it had been in Elizabeth's time. The Elizabethan theater companies had been officially associated with noblemen who guaranteed their legitimacy (in contrast to unsponsored traveling players, who were subject to punishment as vagrants). Early in his reign, James brought the major theater companies under royal auspices. Shakespeare's company, the most successful of the day, became the King's Men: it performed not only all of Shakespeare's plays but also Volpone and The Duchess of Malfi. Queen Anne, Prince Henry, Prince Charles, and Princess Elizabeth sponsored other companies of actors. Royal patronage, which brought with it tangible rewards and regular court performances, naturally encouraged the theater companies to pay more attention to courtly taste. Shakespeare's Macbeth put onstage Scots history and witches, two of James's own interests; in King Lear, the hero's disastrous division of his kingdom may reflect controversies over the proposed union of Scotland and England. In the first four decades of the seventeenth century, court-affiliated theater companies such as the King's Men increasingly cultivated audiences markedly more affluent than the audiences they had sought in the 1580s and 1590s, performing in intimate, expensive indoor theaters instead of, or as well as, in the cheap popular amphitheaters. The Duchess of Malfi, for instance, was probably written with the King's Men's indoor theater at Blackfriars in mind, because several scenes depend for their effect upon a control over lighting that is impossible outdoors. Partly because the commercial theaters seemed increasingly to cater to the affluent and courtly elements of society, they attracted the ire of the king's opponents when civil war broke out in the 1640s.

Jacobean Writers and Genres

The era saw important changes in poetic fashion. Some major Elizabethan genres fell out of favor—long allegorical or mythological narratives, sonnet sequences, and pastoral poems. The norm was coming to be short, concentrated, often witty poems. Poets and prose writers alike often preferred the jagged rhythms of colloquial speech to the elaborate ornamentation and near-musical orchestration of sound that many Elizabthans had sought. The major poets of these years, Jonson, Donne, and Herbert, led this shift and also promoted a variety of "new" genres: love elegy and satire after the classical models of Ovid and Horace, epigram, verse epistle, meditative religious lyric, and country-house poem. Although these poets differed enormously from one another, all three exercised an important influence on the poets of the next generation.

A native Londoner, Jonson first distinguished himself as an acute observer of urban manners in a series of early, controversial satiric plays. Although he wrote two of his most moving poems to his dead children, Jonson focused rather rarely on the dynamics of the family relationships that so profoundly concerned his contemporary Shakespeare. When generational and dynastic matters do figure in his poetry, as they do at the end of "To Penshurst," they seem part of the agrarian, feudal order that Jonson may have romanticized but that he suspected was rapidly disappearing. By and large, Jonson interested himself in relationships that seemed to be negotiated by the participants, often in a bustling urban or courtly world in which blood kinship no longer decisively determined one's social place. Jonson's poems of praise celebrate and exemplify classical and humanist ideals of friendship: like-minded men and women elect to join in a community that fosters wisdom, generosity, civic responsibility, and mutual respect. In the plays and satiric poems, Jonson stages the violation of those values with such riotous comprehensiveness that the very survival of such ideals seem endangered: the plays swarm with voracious swindlers and their eager victims, social climbers both adroit and inept, and a dizzying assortment of morons and misfits. In many of Jonson's plays, rogues or wits collude to victimize others; their stormy, self-interested alliances, apparently so different from the virtuous friendships of the poems of praise, in fact resemble them in one respect: they are connections entered into by choice, not by law, inheritance, or custom.

Throughout his life, Jonson earned his living entirely from his writing, composing plays for the public theater while also attracting patronage as a poet and a writer of court masques. His acute awareness of his audience was partly, then, a sheerly practical matter. Yet Jonson's yearning for recognition ran far beyond any desire for material reward. A gifted poet, Jonson argued, was a society's proper judge and teacher, and he could only be effective if his audience understood and respected the poet's exalted role. Jonson set out unabashedly to create that audience and to monumentalize himself as a great English author. In 1616 he took the unusual step, for his time, of collecting his poems, plays, and masques in an elegant folio volume.

Jonson's influence upon the next generation of writers, and through them into the Restoration and the eighteenth century, was an effect both of his poetic mastery of his chosen modes and of his powerful personal example. Jonson mentored a group of younger poets, known as the Tribe, or Sons, of Ben, meeting regularly with some of them in the Apollo Room of the Devil Tavern in London. Many of the royalist, or Cavalier, poets—Robert Herrick, Thomas Carew, Richard Lovelace, Sir John Suckling, Edmund Waller, Henry Vaughan in his secular verse—proudly acknowledged their relationship to Jonson or gave some evidence of it in their verse. Most of them absorbed too Jonson's attitude toward print and in later decades supervised the publication of their own poems.

Donne, like Jonson, spent most of his life in or near London, often in the company of other writers and intellectuals—indeed, in the company of many of the same writers and intellectuals, since the two men were friends and shared some of the same patrons. Yet, unlike Jonson's, most of Donne's poetry concerns itself not with a crowded social panorama, but with a dyad—with the relationship between the speaker and one single other being, a woman or God—that in its intensity blots out the claims of lesser relationships. Love for Donne encompasses an astonishing range of emotional experiences, from the lusty impatience of "To His Mistress Going to Bed" to the cheerful promiscuity of "The Indifferent" to the mysterious platonic telepathy of "Air and Angels," from the vengeful wit of "The Apparition" to the postcoital tranquility of "The Good Morrow." While for Jonson the shared meal among friends often becomes an emblem of communion, for Donne sexual consummation has something of the same highly charged symbolic character, a moment in which the isolated individual can, however temporarily, escape the boundaries of selfhood in union with another:

The phoenix riddle hath more with
By us: we two being one, are it.
So, to one neutral thing both sexes fit.

In the religious poems, where Donne both yearns for a physical relationship with God and knows it is impossible, he does not abandon his characteristic bodily metaphors. The doctrine of the Incarnation—God's taking material form in the person of Jesus Christ—and the doctrine of the bodily resurrection of the dead at the Last Day are Christian teachings that fascinate Donne, to which he returns again and again in his poems, sermons, and devotional writings. While sexual and religious love had long shared a common vocabulary, Donne delights in making that overlap seem new and shocking. He likens conjoined lovers to saints; demands to be raped by God; speculates, after his wife's death, that God killed her because He was jealous of Donne's divided loyalty; imagines Christ encouraging his Bride, the church, to "open" herself to as many men as possible.

Throughout Donne's life, his faith, like his intellect, was anything but quiet. Born into a family of devout Roman Catholics just as the persecution of Catholics was intensifying in Elizabethan England, Donne eventually became a member of the Church of England. If "Satire 3" is any indication, the conversion was attended by profound doubts and existential crisis. Donne's restless mind can lead him in surprising and sometimes unorthodox directions, to a qualified defense of suicide, for instance, in Biathanatos. At the same time, overwhelmed with a sense of his own unworthiness, he courts God's punishment, demanding to be spat upon, flogged, burnt, broken down, in the expectation that suffering at God's hand will restore him to grace and favor.

In both style and content, Donne's poems were addressed to a select few rather than to the public at large. His style is demanding, characterized by learned terms, audaciously far-fetched analogies, and an intellectually sophisticated play of ironies. Even Donne's sermons, attended by large crowds, share the knotty difficulty of the poems, and something too of their quality of intimate address. Donne circulated his poems in manuscript and largely avoided print publication (most of his poems were printed after his death in 1631). By some critics Donne has been regarded as the founder of a Metaphysical school of poetry. We find echoes of Donne's style in many later poets: in Thomas Carew, who praised Donne as a "monarch of wit," George Herbert, Richard Crashaw, John Cleveland, Sir John Suckling, Abraham Cowley, and Andrew Marvell.

Herbert, the younger son of a wealthy, cultivated, and well-connected family, seemed destined in early adulthood for a brilliant career as a diplomat or government servant. Yet he turned his back on worldly greatness to be ordained a priest in the Church of England. Moreover, eschewing a highly visible career as an urban preacher, he spent the remaining years of his short life ministering to the tiny rural parish of Bemerton. Herbert's poetry is shot through with the difficulty and joy of this renunciation, with all it entailed for him. Literary ambition—pride in one's independent creativity—appears to Herbert a temptation that must be resisted, whether it takes the form of Jonson's openly competitive aspiration for literary preeminence or Donne's brilliantly ironic self-displaying performances. Instead, Herbert seeks other models for poetic agency: the secretary taking dictation from a master, the musician playing in harmonious consort with others, the member of a church congregation who speaks with and for a community.

Herbert destroyed his secular verse in English and he turned his volume of religious verse over to a friend only on his deathbed, desiring him to print it if he thought it would be useful to "some dejected poor soul," but otherwise to burn it. The 177 lyrics contained in that volume, The Temple, display a complex religious sensibility and great artistic subtlety in an amazing variety of stanza forms. Herbert was the major influence on the next generation of religious lyric poets and was explicitly recognized as such by Henry Vaughan and Richard Crashaw.

The Jacobean period also saw the emergence of what would become a major prose genre, the familiar essay. The works of the French inventor of the form, Michel de Montaigne, appeared in English translation in 1603, influencing Shakespeare as well as such later writers as Sir Thomas Browne. Yet the first essays in English, the work of Francis Bacon, attorney general under Elizabeth and eventually lord chancellor under James, bear little resemblance to Montaigne's intimate, tentative, conversational pieces. Bacon's essays present pithy, sententious, sometimes provocative claims in a tone of cool objectivity, tempering moral counsel with an awareness of the importance of prudence and expediency in practical affairs. In Novum Organum Bacon adapts his deliberately discontinuous mode of exposition to outline a new scientific method, holding out the tantalizing prospect of eventual mastery over the natural world and boldly articulating the ways in which science might improve the human condition. In his fictional Utopia, described in The New Atlantis, Bacon imagines a society that realizes his dream of carefully orchestrated collaborative research, so different from the erratic, uncoordinated efforts of alchemists and amateurs in his own day. Bacon's philosophically revolutionary approach to the natural world profoundly impacted scientifically minded people over the next several generations. His writings influenced the materialist philosophy of his erstwhile secretary, Thomas Hobbes, encouraged Oliver Cromwell to attempt a large-scale overhaul of the university curriculum during the 1650s, and inspired the formation of the Royal Society, an organization of experimental scientists, after the Restoration.

The reigns of the first two Stuart kings mark the entry of Englishwomen, in some numbers, into authorship and publication. Most female writers of the period were from the nobility or gentry; all were much better educated than most women of the period, many of whom remained illiterate. In 1611 Aemilia
Lanyer was the first Englishwoman to publish a substantial volume of original poems. It contained poetic dedications, a long poem on Christ's passion, and a country-house poem, all defending women's interests and importance. In 1613 Elizabeth Cary, Lady Falkland, was the first Englishwoman to publish a tragedy, Mariam, a closet drama that probes the situation of a queen subjected to her husband's domestic and political tyranny. In 1617 Rachel Speght, the first female polemicist who can be securely identified, published a defense of her sex in response to a notorious attack upon "Lewd, Idle, Froward, and Unconstant Women"; she was also the author of a long dream-vision poem. Lady Mary Wroth, niece of Sir Philip Sidney and the Countess of Pembroke, wrote a long prose romance, Urania (1612), which presents a range of women's experiences as lovers, rulers, counselors, scholars, storytellers, poets, and seers. Her Petrarchan sonnet sequence Pamphilia to Amphilanthus, published with Urania, gives poetic voice to the female in love.

THE CAROLINE ERA, 1625-40

When King Charles came to the throne in 1625, "the fools and bawds, mimics and catamites of the former court grew out of fashion," as the Puritan Lucy Hutchinson recalled. The changed style of the court directly affected the arts and literature of the Caroline period (so called after Carolus, Latin for Charles). Charles and his queen, Henrietta Maria, were art collectors on a large scale and patrons of such painters as Peter Paul Rubens and Sir Anthony Van Dyke; the latter portrayed Charles as a heroic figure of knightly romance, mounted on a splendid stallion. The conjunction of chivalric virtue and divine beauty or love, symbolized in the union of the royal couple, was the dominant theme of Caroline court masques, which were even more extravagantly hyperbolic than their Jacobean predecessors. Even as Henrietta Maria encouraged an artistic and literary cult of platonic love, several courtier-poets, such as Carew and Suckling, wrote playful, sophisticated love lyrics that both alluded to this fashion and sometimes urged a more licentiously physical alternative.

The religious tensions between the Caroline court's Laudian church and the Puritan opposition produced something of a culture war. In 1633 Charles reissued the Book of Sports, originally published by his father in 1618, prescribing traditional holiday festivities and Sunday sports in every parish. Like his father, he saw these recreations as the rural, downscale equivalent of the court masque: harmless, healthy diversions for people who otherwise spent most of their waking hours hard at work. Puritans regarded masques and rustic dances alike as occasions for sin, the Maypole as a vestige of pagan phallus worship, and Sunday sports as a profanation of the Sabbath. In 1632 William Prynne staked out the most extreme Puritan position, publishing a tirade of over one thousand pages against stage plays, court masques, Maypoles, Laudian church rituals, stained-glass windows, mixed dancing, and other outrages, all of which he associated with licentiousness, effeminacy, and the seduction of popish idolatry. For this cultural critique, Prynne was stripped of his academic degrees, ejected from the legal profession, set in the pillory, sentenced to life imprisonment, and had his books burned and his ears cut off. The severity of the punishments indicates the perceived danger of the book and the inextricability of literary and cultural affairs from politics.

Milton's astonishingly virtuosic early poems also respond to the tensions of the 1630s. Milton repudiated both courtly aesthetics and also Prynne's wholesale prohibitions, developing reformed versions of pastoral, masque, and hymn. In "On the Morning of Christ's Nativity," the birth of Christ coincides with a casting out of idols and a flight of false gods, stanzas that suggest contemporary Puritan resistance to Archbishop Laud's policies. Milton's magnificent funeral elegy "Lycidas" firmly rejects the poetic career of the Cavalier poet, who disregards high artistic ambition to "sport with Amaryllis in the shade / Or with the tangles of Neaera's hair." The poem also vehemently denounces the establishment clergy, ignorant and greedy "blind mouths" who rob their flocks of spiritual nourishment.

THE REVOLUTIONARY ERA, 1640-60

Early in the morning on January 30, 1649, Charles Stuart, the dethroned king Charles I, set off across St. James Park for his execution, surrounded by a heavy guard. He wore two shirts because the weather was frigid, and he did not want to look as if he were shivering with fear to the thousands who had gathered to watch him be beheaded. The black-draped scaffold had been erected just outside James I's elegant Banqueting House, inside of which so many court masques, in earlier decades, had celebrated the might of the Stuart monarchs and assured them of their people's love and gratitude. To those who could not attend, newsbooks provided eyewitness accounts of the dramatic events of the execution, as they had of Charles's trial the week before. Andrew Marvell also memorably describes the execution scene in "An Horatian Ode."

The execution of Charles I was understood at the time, and is still seen by many historians today, as a watershed event in English history. How did it come to pass? Historians do not agree over what caused "the English revolution," or, as it is alternatively called, the English civil war. One group argues that long-term changes in English society and the English economy led to rising social tensions and eventually to violent conflict. New capitalist modes of production in agriculture, industry, and trade were often incompatible with older feudal norms. The gentry, an affluent, highly educated class below the nobility but above the artisans, mechanics, and yeomen, played an increasingly important part in national affairs, as did the rich merchants in London; but the traditional social hierarchies failed to grant them the economic, political, and religious freedoms they believed they deserved. Another group of historians, the "revisionists," emphasize instead short-term and avoidable causes of the war—unlucky chances, personal idiosyncrasies, and poor decisions made by a small group of individuals.

Whatever caused the outbreak of hostilities, there is no doubt that the twenty-year period between 1640 and 1660 saw the emergence of concepts central to bourgeois liberal thought for centuries to come: religious toleration, separation of church and state, freedom from press censorship, and popular sovereignty. These concepts developed out of bitter disputes centering on three fundamental questions: What is the ultimate source of political power? What kind of church government is laid down in Scripture, and therefore ought to be settled in England? What should be the relation between the church and the state? The theories that evolved in response to these questions contained the seeds of much that is familiar in modern thought, mixed with much that is forbiddingly alien. It is vital to recognize that the participants in the disputes were not haphazardly attempting to predict the shape of modern liberalism, but were responding powerfully to the most important problems of their day. The need to find right answers seemed particularly urgent for the Millenarians among them, who, interpreting the upheavals of the time through the lens of the apocalyptic Book of Revelation, believed that their day was very near to being the last day of all.

When the so-called Long Parliament convened in 1640, it did not plan to execute a monarch or even to start a war. It did, however, want to secure its rights in the face of King Charles's perceived absolutist tendencies. Refusing merely to approve taxes and go home, as Charles would have wished, Parliament insisted that it could remain in session until its members agreed to disband. Then it set about abolishing extralegal taxes and courts, reining in the bishops' powers, and arresting (and eventually trying and executing) the king's ministers, the Earl of Strafford and Archbishop Laud. The collapse of effective royal government meant that the machinery of press censorship, which had been a Crown responsibility, no longer restrained the printing of explicit commentary on contemporary affairs of state. As Parliament debated, therefore, presses poured forth a flood of treatises arguing vociferously on all sides of the questions about church and state, creating a lively public forum for political discussion where none had existed before. The suspension of censorship permitted the development of weekly newsbooks that reported, and editorialized on, current domestic events from varying political and religious perspectives.

As the rift widened between Parliament and the king in 1641, Charles sought to arrest five members of Parliament for treason, and Londoners rose in arms against him. The king fled to York, while the queen escaped to the Continent. Negotiations for compromise broke down over the issues that would derail them at every future stage: control of the army and the church. On July 12, 1642, Parliament voted to raise an army, and on August 22 the king stood before a force of two thousand horse and foot at Nottingham, unfurled his royal standard, and summoned his liege men to his aid. Civil war had begun. Regions of the country, cities, towns, social classes, and even families found themselves painfully divided. The king set up court and an alternative parliament in Oxford, to which many in the House of Lords and some in the House of Commons transferred their allegiance.

In the First Civil War (1642—46), Parliament and the Presbyterian clergy that supported it had limited aims. They hoped to secure the rights of the House of Commons, to limit the king's power over the army and the church—but not to depose him—and to settle Presbyterianism as the national established church. As Puritan armies moved through the country, fighting at Edgehill, Marston Moor, Naseby, and elsewhere, they also undertook a crusade to stamp out idolatry in English churches, smashing religious images and stained-glass windows and lopping off the heads of statues as an earlier generation had done at the time of the English Reformation. Their ravages are still visible in English churches and cathedrals.

The Puritans were not, however, a homogeneous group, as the 1643 Toleration Controversy revealed. The Presbyterians wanted a national Presbyterian church, with dissenters punished and silenced as before. But Congregationalists, Independents, Baptists, and other separatists opposed a national church and pressed for some measure of toleration, for themselves at least. The religious radical Roger Williams, just returned from New England, argued that Christ mandated the complete separation of church and state and the civic toleration of all religions, even Roman Catholics, Jews, and...
Muslims. Yet to most people, the civil war itself seemed to confirm that people of different faiths could not coexist peacefully. Thus even as sects continued to proliferate—Seekers, Finders, Antinomians, Fifth Monarchists, Quakers, Muggletonians, Ranters—even the most broad-minded of the age often attempted to draw a line between what was acceptable and what was not. Predictably, their lines failed to coincide. In Areopagitica (1644), John Milton argues vigorously against press censorship and for toleration of most Protestants—but for him, Catholics are beyond the pale. Robert Herrick and Sir Thomas Browne regarded Catholic rites, and even some pagan ones, indulgently but could not stomach Puritan zeal.

In 1648, after a period of negotiation and a brief Second Civil War, the king's army was definitively defeated. His supporters were captured or fled into exile, losing position and property. Yet Charles, imprisoned on the Isle of Wight, remained a threat. He was a natural rallying point for those disillusioned by parliamentary rule—many people disliked Parliament's legal but heavy taxes even more than they had the king's illegal but lighter ones. Charles repeatedly attempted to escape and was accused of trying to open the realm to a foreign invasion. Some powerful leaders of the victorious New Model Army took drastic action. They expelled royalists and Presbyterians, who still wanted to come to an accommodation with the king, from the House of Commons and abolished the House of Lords. With consensus assured by the purgation of dissenting viewpoints, the army brought the king to trial for high treason in the Great Hall of Westminster.

After the king's execution, the Rump Parliament, the part of the House of Commons that had survived the purge, immediately established a new government "in the way of a republic, without king or House of Lords." The new state was extremely fragile. Royalists and Presbyterians fiercely resented their exclusion from power and pronounced the execution of the king a sacrilege. The Rump Parliament and the army were at odds, with the army rank and file arguing that voting rights ought not be restricted to men of property. The Levelers, led by John Lilburne, called for suffrage for all adult males. An associated but more radical group, called the Diggers or True Levelers, pushed for economic reforms to match the political ones. Their spokesman, Gerrard Winstanley, wrote eloquent manifestos developing a Christian communist program. Meanwhile, Millenarians and Fifth Monarchists wanted political power vested in the regenerate "saints" in preparation for the thousand-year reign of Christ on earth foretold in the biblical Book of Revelation. Quakers defied both state and church authority by refusing to take oaths and by preaching incendiary sermons in open marketplaces. Most alarming of all, out of proportion to their scant numbers, were the Ranters, who believed that because God dwelt in them none of their acts could be sinful. Notorious for sexual license and for public nudity, they got their name from their deliberate blasphemy and their penchant for rambling prophecy. In addition to internal disarray, the new state faced serious external threats. After Charles I's execution, the Scots and the Irish—who had not been consulted about the trial—immediately proclaimed his eldest son, Prince Charles, the new king. The prince, exiled on the Continent, was attempting to enlist the support of a major European power for an invasion.

The formidable Oliver Cromwell, now undisputed leader of the army, crushed external threats, suppressing rebellions in Ireland and Scotland. The Irish war was especially bloody, as Cromwell's army massacred the Catholic natives in a frenzy of religious hatred. When trade rivalries erupted with the Dutch over control of shipping lanes in the North Sea and the English Channel, the new republic was again victorious. Yet the domestic situation remained unstable. Given popular disaffection and the unresolved disputes between Parliament and the army, the republic's leaders dared not call new elections. In 1653 power effectively devolved upon Cromwell, who was sworn in as Lord Protector for life under England's first written constitution. Many property owners considered Cromwell the only hope for stability, while others, including Milton, saw him as a champion of religious liberty. Although persecution of Quakers and Ranters continued, Cromwell sometimes intervened to mitigate the lot of the Quakers. He also began a program to readmit Jews to England, partly in the interests of trade but also to open the way for their conversion, supposedly a precursor of the Last Day as prophesied in the Book of Revelation.

The problem of succession remained unresolved, however. When Oliver Cromwell died in 1658, his son, Richard, was appointed in his place, but he had inherited none of his father's leadership qualities. In 1660 General George Monck succeeded in calling elections for a new "full and free" parliament, open to supporters of the monarchy as well as of the republic. The new Parliament immediately recalled the exiled prince, officially proclaiming him King Charles II on May 8, 1660. The period that followed, therefore, is called the Restoration: it saw the restoration of the monarchy and with it the royal court, the established Church of England, and the professional theater.

Over the next few years, the new regime executed some of the regicides that had participated in Charles I's trial and execution and harshly repressed radical Protestants (the Baptist John Bunyan wrote Pilgrim's Progress in prison). Yet Charles II, who came to the throne at Parliament's invitation, could not lay claim to absolute power as his father had done. After his accession, Parliament retained its legislative supremacy and complete power over taxation, and exercised some control over the king's choice of counselors. It assembled by its own authority, not by the king's mandate. During the Restoration years, the journalistic commentary and political debates that had first flourished in the 1640s remained forceful and open, and the first modern political parties developed out of what had been the royalist and republican factions in the civil war. In London and in other cities, the merchant classes, filled with dissenters, retained their powerful economic leverage. Although the English revolution was apparently dismantled in 1660, its long-term effects profoundly changed English institutions and English society.

LITERATURE AND CULTURE, 1640-60

The English civil war was disastrous for the English theater. One of Parliament's first acts after hostilities began in 1642 was to abolish public plays and sports, as "too commonly expressing lascivious mirth and levity." Some drama continued to be written and published, but performances were rare and would-be theatrical entrepreneurs had to exploit loopholes in the prohibitions by describing their works as "operas" or presenting their productions in semiprivate circumstances.

As the king's government collapsed, the patronage relationships centered upon the court likewise disintegrated. Many leading poets were staunch royalists, or Cavaliers, who suffered considerably in the war years. Robert Herrick lost his position; Richard Lovelace was imprisoned; Margaret Cavendish went into exile. With their usual networks of manuscript circulation disrupted, many royalist writers printed their verse. Volumes of poetry by Thomas Carew, John Denham, John Suckling, James Shirley, Richard Lovelace, and Robert Herrick appeared in the 1640s. Their poems, some dating from the 1620s or 1630s, celebrate the courtly ideal of the good life: good food, plenty of wine, good verse, hospitality, and high-spirited loyalty, especially to the king. One characteristic genre is the elegant love lyric, often with a carpe diem theme. In Herrick's case especially, apparent ease and frivolity masks a frankly political subtext. The Puritans excoriated May Day celebrations, harvest-home festivities, and other time-honored holidays and "sports" as unscriptural, idolatrous, or frankly pagan. For Herrick, they sustained a community that strove neither for ascetic perfection nor for equality among social classes, but that knew the value of pleasure in cementing social harmony and that incorporated everyone—rich and poor, unlettered and learned—as the established church had traditionally tried to do.

During the 1640s and 1650s, as they faced defeat, the Cavaliers wrote movingly of the relationship between love and honor, of fidelity under duress, of like-minded friends sustaining one another in a hostile environment. They presented themselves as amateurs, writing verse in the midst of a life devoted to more important matters: war, love, the king's service, the endurance of loss. Rejecting the radical Protestant emphasis on the "inner light," which they considered merely a pretext for presumptuousness and violence, the Cavalier poets often cultivated a deliberately unidiosyncratic, even self-deprecating poetic persona. Thus the poems of Richard Lovelace memorably express sentiments that he represents not as the unique insights of an isolated genius, but as principles easily grasped by all honorable men. When in "The Vine" Herrick relates a wet dream, he not only laughs at himself but at those who mistake their own fantasies for divine inspiration.

During the 1650s, royalists wrote lyric poems in places far removed from the hostile centers of parliamentary power. In Wales, Henry Vaughan wrote religious verse expressing his intense longing for past eras of innocence and for the perfection of heaven or the millennium. Also in Wales, Katherine Philips wrote and circulated in manuscript poems that celebrate female friends in terms normally reserved for male friendships. The publication of her poems after the Restoration brought Philips some celebrity as "the Matchless Orinda." Richard Crashaw, an exile in Paris and Rome and a convert to Roman Catholicism, wrote lush religious poetry that attempted to reveal the spiritual by stimulating the senses. Margaret Cavendish, also in exile, with the queen in Paris, published two collections of lyrics when she returned to England in 1653; after the Restoration she published several dramas and a remarkable Utopian romance, The Blazing World.

Several prose works by royalist sympathizers have become classics in their respective genres. Thomas Hobbes, the most important English philosopher of the period, another exile in Paris, developed his materialist philosophy and psychology there and, in Leviathan (1651), his unflinching defense of absolute sovereignty based on a theory of social contract. Some royalist writing seems to have little to do with the contemporary scene, but in fact carries a political charge. In Religio Medici (1642—43), Sir Thomas Browne presents himself as a genial, speculative doctor who loves ritual and ceremony not for complicated theological reasons, but because they move him emotionally. While he can sympathize with all Christians, even Roman Catholics, and while he recognizes in himself many idiosyncratic views, he willingly submits his judgment to the Church of England, in sharp contrast to Puritans bent on ridding the church of its errors. Izaak Walton’s treatise on fishing, The Complete Angler (1653), presents a dialogue between Walton’s persona, Piscator the angler, and Venator the hunter. Piscator, speaking like many Cavalier poets for the values of warmheartedness, charity, and inclusiveness, converts the busy, war-like Venator, a figure for the Puritan, to the tranquil and contemplative pursuit of fishing.

The revolutionary era gave new impetus to women’s writing. The circumstances of war placed women in novel, occasionally dangerous situations, giving them unusual events to describe and prompting self-discovery. The autobiographies of royalists Lady Anne Halkett and Margaret Cavendish, Duchess of Newcastle, published after the Restoration, report their experiences and their sometimes daring activities during those trying days. Lucy Hutchinson’s memoir of her husband, Colonel John Hutchinson, first published in 1806, narrates much of the history of the times from a republican point of view. Leveler women offered petitions and manifestos in support of their cause and of their imprisoned husbands. The widespread belief that the Holy Spirit was moving in unexpected ways encouraged a number of female prophets: Anna Trapnel, Mary Cary, and Lady Eleanor Davies. Their published prophecies often carried a strong political critique of Charles or of Cromwell. Quaker women came into their own as preachers and sometimes as writers of tracts, authorized by the Quaker belief in the spiritual equality of women and men, and by the conviction that all persons should testify to whatever the inner light communicates to them. Many of their memoirs, such as Dorothy Waugh’s "Relation," were originally published both to call attention to their sufferings and to inspire other Quakers to similar feats of moral fortitude.

While most writers during this period were royalists, two of the best, Andrew Marvell and John Milton, sided with the republic. Marvell wrote most of the poems for which he is still remembered while at Nunappleton in the early 1650s, tutoring the daughter of the retired parliamentary general Thomas Fairfax; in 1657 he joined his friend Milton in the office of Cromwell’s Latin Secretariat. In Marvell’s love poems and pastorals, older convictions about ordered harmony give way to wittily unresolved or unresolvable oppositions, some playful, some painful. Marvell’s conflictual worldview seems unmistakably the product of the unsettled civil war decades. In his country-house poem "Upon Appleton House," even agricultural practices associated with regular changes of the season, like the flooding of fallow fields, become emblems of unpredictability, reversal, and category confusion. In other poems Marvell eschews an authoritative poetic persona in favor of speakers that seem limited or even a bit unbalanced: a mower who argues for the values of pastoral with disconcerting belligerence, a nymph who seems to exemplify virginal innocence but also immature self-absorption and possibly unconscious sexual perservity. Marvell’s finest political poem, "An Horatian Ode upon Cromwell’s Return from Ireland," celebrates Cromwell’s providential victories even while inviting sympathy for the executed king and warning about the potential dangers of Cromwell’s meteoric rise to power.

A promising, prolific young poet in the 1630s, Milton committed himself to the English republic as soon as the conflict between the king and Parliament began to take shape. His loyalty to the revolution remained unwavering despite his disillusion when it failed to realize his ideals: religious toleration for all Protestants and the free circulation of ideas without prior censorship. First as a self-appointed adviser to the state, then as its official defender, he addressed the great issues at stake in the 1640s and the 1650s. In a series of treatises he argued for church disestablishment and for the removal of bishops, for a republican government based on natural law and popular sovereignty, for the right of the people to dismiss from office and even execute their rulers, and, most controversial even to his usual allies, in favor of divorce on the grounds of incompatibility. Milton was a Puritan, but both his theological heterodoxies and his poetic vision mark him as a distinctly unusual one.

During his years as a political polemicist, Milton also wrote several sonnets, revising that small, love-centered genre to accommodate large private and pubtic topics: a Catholic massacre of proto-Protestants in the foothills of Italy, the agonizing questions posed by his blindness, various threats to intellectual and religious liberty. In 1645 he published his collected English and Latin poems as a counterstatement to the royalist volumes of the 1640s. Yet his most ambitious poetry remained to be written. Milton probably wrote some part of Paradise Lost in the late 1650s and completed it after the Restoration, encompassing in it all he had thought, read, and experienced of tyranny, political controversy, evil, deception, love, and the need for companionship. This cosmic blank-verse epic assimilates and critiques the epic tradition and Milton's entire intellectual and literary heritage, classical and Christian. Yet it centers not on martial heroes but on a domestic couple who must discover how to live a good life day by day, in Eden and later in the fallen world, amid intense emotional pressures and the seductions of evil.

Seventeenth-century poetry, prose, and drama retains its hold on readers because so much of it is so very good, fusing intellectual power, emotional passion, and extraordinary linguistic artfulness. Poetry in this period ranges over an astonishing variety of topics and modes: highly erotic celebrations of sexual desire, passionate declarations of faith and doubt, lavishly embroidered paens to friends and benefactors, tough-minded assessments of social and political institutions. English dramatists were at the height of their powers, situating characters of unprecedented complexity in plays sometimes remorselessly satiric, sometimes achingly moving. In these years English prose becomes a highly flexible instrument, suited to informal essays, scientific treatises, religious meditation, political polemic, biography and autobiography, and journalistic reportage. Literary forms evolve for the exquisitely modulated representation of the self: dramatic monologues, memoirs, spiritual autobiographies, sermons in which the preacher takes himself for an example.
Finally, we have in Milton an epic poet who assumed the role of inspired prophet, envisioning a world created by God but shaped by human choice and imagination.

Lovers' eyeballs threaded on a string. A god who assaults the human heart with a battering ram. A teardrop that encompasses and drowns the world. John Donne's poems abound with startling images, some of them exalting and others grotesque. With his strange and playful intelligence, expressed in puns, paradoxes, and the elaborately sustained metaphors known as "conceits," Donne has enthralled and sometimes enraged readers from his day to our own. The tired cliches of love poetry—cheeks like roses, hearts pierced by the arrows of love—emerge reinvigorated and radically transformed by his hand, demanding from the reader an unprecedented level of mental alertness and engagement. Donne prided himself on his wit and displayed it not only in his conceits but in his grasp of learned and obscure discourses ranging from theology to alchemy, from cosmology to law. Yet for all their ostentatious intellectuality, Donne's poems never give the impression of being academic exercises put into verse. Rather, they are intense dramatic monologues in which the speaker's ideas and feelings seem to shift and evolve from one line to the next. Donne's prosody is equally dramatic, mirroring in its variable and jagged rhythms the effect of speech (and eliciting from his classically minded contemporary Ben Jonson the gruff observation that "Donne, for not keeping of accent deserved hanging").

Donne began life as an outsider, and in some respects remained one until death. He was born in London in 1572 into a devout Roman Catholic household. The family was prosperous, but, as the poet later remarked, none had suffered more heavily for its loyalty to the Catholic Church: "I have been ever kept awake in a meditation of martyrdom." Donne was distantly related to the great Catholic humanist and martyr Sir Thomas More. Closer to home, a Jesuit uncle was executed by the brutal method of hanging, castrating, disemboweling, and quartering, and his own brother Henry, arrested for harboring a priest, died in prison of the plague. As a Catholic in Protestant England, growing up in decades when anti-Roman feeling reached new heights, Donne could not expect any kind of public career, nor even to receive a university degree (he left Oxford without one and studied law for a time at the Inns of Court). What he could reasonably expect instead was prejudice, official harassment, and crippling financial penalties. He chose not to live under such conditions. At some point in the 1590s, having returned to London after travels abroad, and having devoted some years to studying theological issues, Donne converted to the English church.

The poems that belong with certainty to this period of his life—the five satires and most of the elegies—reveal a man both fascinated by and keenly critical of English society. Four of the satires treat commonplace Elizabethan topics—foppish and obsequious courtiers, bad poets, corrupt lawyers and a corrupt court—but are unique both in their visceral revulsion and in their intellectual excitement. Donne uses striking images of pestilence, itchy lust, vomit, excrement, and pox to create a unique satiric world, busy, vibrant, and corrupt, in which his dramatic speakers have only to step outside the door to be inundated by all the fools and knaves in Christendom. By contrast, the third satire treats the quest for true religion—the question that preoccupied him above all others in these years—in terms that are serious, passionately witty, and deeply felt. Donne argues that honest doubting search is better than the facile acceptance of any religious tradition, epitomizing that point brilliantly in the image of Truth on a high and craggy hill, very difficult to climb. What is certain is that society's values are of no help whatsoever to the individual seeker—none will escape the final judgment by pleading that "A Harry, or a Martin taught [them] this." In the love elegies Donne seems intent on making up for his social powerlessness through witty representations of mastery in the bedroom and of adventurous travel. In "Elegy 16" he imagines his speaker embarking on a journey "O'er the white Alps" and with mingled tenderness and condescension argues down a naive mistress's proposal to accompany him. And in “Elegy 19,” his fondling of a naked lover becomes in a famous conceit the equivalent of exploration in America. Donne's interest in satire and elegy—classical Roman genres, which he helped introduce to English verse—is itself significant. He wrote in English, but he reached out to other traditions.

If Donne's conversion to the Church of England promised him security, social acceptance, and the possibility of a public career, that promise was soon to be cruelly withdrawn. In 1596–97 he participated in the Earl of Essex's military expeditions against Catholic Spain in Cadiz and the Azores (the experience prompted two remarkable descriptive poems of life at sea, "The Storm" and "The Calm") and upon his return became secretary to Sir Thomas Egerton, Lord Keeper of the Great Seal. This should have been the beginning of a successful public career. But his secret marriage in 1601 to Egerton's seventeen-year-old niece Ann More enraged Donne's employer and the bride's wealthy father; Donne was briefly imprisoned and dismissed from service. The poet was reduced to a retired country life beset by financial insecurity and a rapidly increasing family; Ann bore twelve children (not counting miscarriages) by the time she died at age thirty-three. At one point, Donne wrote despairingly that while the death of a child would mean one less mouth to feed, he could not afford the burial expenses. In this bleak period, he wrote but dared not publish Biathanatos, a paradoxical defense of suicide.

As his family grew, Donne made every effort to reinstate himself in the favor of the great. To win the approval of James I, he penned Pseudo-Martyr (1610), defending the king's insistence that Catholics take the Oath of Allegiance. This set an irrevocable public stamp on his renunciation of Catholicism, and Donne followed up with a witty satire on the Jesuits, Ignatius His Conclave (1611). In the same period he was producing a steady stream of occasional poems for friends and patrons such as Somerset (the king's favorite), the Countess of Bedford, and Magdalen Herbert, and for small coteries of courtiers and ladies. Like most gentlemen of his era, Donne saw poetry as a polite accomplishment rather than as a trade or vocation, and in consequence he circulated his poems in manuscript but left most of them uncollected and unpublished. In 1611 and 1612, however, he published the first and second Anniversaries on the death of the daughter of his patron Sir Robert Drury.

For some years King James had urged an ecclesiastical career on Donne, denying him any other means of advancement. In 1615 Donne finally consented, overcoming his sense of unworthiness and the pull of other ambitions. He was ordained in the Church of England and entered upon a distinguished career as court preacher, reader in divinity at Lincoln's Inn, and dean of St. Paul's. Donne's metaphorical style, bold erudition, and dramatic wit established him as a great preacher in an age that appreciated learned sermons powerfully delivered. Some 160 of his sermons survive, preached to monarchs and courtiers, lawyers and London magistrates, city merchants and trading companies. As a distinguished clergyman in the Church of England, Donne had traveled an immense distance from the religion of his childhood and the adventurous life of his twenties. Yet in his sermons and late poems we find the same brilliant and idiosyncratic mind at work, refashioning his profane conceits to serve a new and higher purpose. In "Expostulation 19" he praises God as the greatest of literary stylists: "a figurative, a metaphorical God," imagining God as a conceit-maker like himself. In poems, meditations, and sermons, Donne came increasingly to be engaged in anxious contemplation of his own mortality. In "Hymn to God My God, in My Sickness," Donne imagines himself spread out on his deathbed like a map showing the route to the next world. Only a few days before his death he preached "Death's Duel," a terrifying analysis of all life as a decline toward death and dissolution, which contemporaries termed his own funeral sermon. On his deathbed, according to his contemporary biographer Izaak Walton, Donne had a portrait made of himself in his shroud and meditated on it daily. Meditations upon skulls as emblems of mortality were common in the period, but nothing is more characteristic of Donne than to find a way to meditate on his own skull.
Given the shape of Donne's career, it is no surprise that his poems and prose works display an astonishing variety of attitudes, viewpoints, and feelings on the great subjects of love and religion. Yet this variety cannot be fully explained in biographical terms. The poet's own attempt to distinguish between Jack Donne, the young rake, and Dr. Donne, the grave and religious dean of St. Paul's, is (perhaps intentionally) misleading. We do not know the time and circumstances for most of Donne's verses, but it is clear that many of his finest religious poems predate his ordination, and it is possible that he continued to add to the love poems known as his "songs and sonnets" after he entered the church. Theological language abounds in his love poetry, and daringly erotic images occur in his religious verse.

Donne's "songs and sonnets" have been the cornerstone of his reputation almost since their publication in 1633. The title Songs and Sonnets associates them with the popular miscellanies of love poems and sonnet sequences in the Petrarchan tradition, but they directly challenge the popular Petrarchan sonnet sequences of the 1590s. The collection contains only one formal sonnet, the "songs" are not notably lyrical, and Donne draws upon and transforms a whole range of literary traditions concerned with love. Like Petrarch, Donne can present himself as the despairing lover of an unattainable lady ("The Funeral"); like Ovid he can be lighthearted, witty, cynical, and frankly lustful ("The Flea," "The Indifferent"); like the Neoplatonists, he espouses a theory of transcendent love, but he breaks from them with his insistence in many poems on the union of physical and spiritual love. What binds these poems together and grants them enduring power is their compelling immediacy. The speaker is always in the throes of intense emotion, and that emotion is not static but constantly shifting and evolving with the turns of the poet's thought. Donne seems supremely present in these poems, standing behind their various speakers. Where Petrarchan poets exhaustively catalogue their beloved's physical features (though in highly conventional terms), Donne's speakers tell us little or nothing about the loved woman, or about the male friends imagined as the audience for many poems. Donne's repeated insistence that the private world of lovers is superior to the wider public world, or that it somehow contains all of that world, or obliterates it, is understandable in light of the many disappointments of his career. Yet this was also a poet who threw himself headlong into life, love, and sexuality, and later into the very visible public role of court and city preacher.

Donne was long grouped with Herbert, Vaughan, Crashaw, Marvell, Traherne, and Cowley under the heading of "Metaphysical poets." The expression was first employed by critics like Samuel Johnson and William Hazlitt, who found the intricate conceits and self-conscious learning of these poets incompatible with poetic beauty and sincerity. Early in the twentieth century, T. S. Eliot sought to restore their reputation, attributing to them a unity of thought and feeling that had since their time been lost. There was, however, no formal "school" of Metaphysical poetry, and the characteristics ascribed to it by later critics pertain chiefly to Donne. Like Ben Jonson, John Donne had a large influence on the succeeding generation, but he remains a singularity.
FROM SONGS AND SONNETS

The Flea

Mark but this flea, and mark in this,
How little that which thou deniest me is;
Me it sucked first, and now sucks thee,
And in this flea our two bloods mingled be;

Thou know'st that this cannot be said
A sin, or shame, or loss of maidenhead,
Yet this enjoys before it woo,
And pampered overfed
And this, alas, is more than we would do.

Oh stay, three lives in one flea spare,
Where we almost, nay more than married are.
This flea is you and I, and this
Our marriage bed and marriage temple is;

And cloistered in these living walls of jet.°
Though use make you apt to kill me,
Let not to that, self-murder added be,
And sacrilege, three sins in killing three.

Cruel and sudden, hast thou since
Purpled thy nail in blood of innocence?
Wherein could this flea guilty be,
Except in that drop which it sucked from thee?

Yet thou triumph'st, and say'st that thou
Find'st not thy self nor me the weaker now;
'Tis true; then learn how false fears be:
Just so much honor, when thou yield'st to me,
Will waste, as this flea's death took life from thee.

The Good-Morrow

I wonder, by my troth, what thou and I
Did, till we loved? Were we not weaned till then,
But sucked on country pleasures, childishly?

1. Donne's love poems were written over nearly two decades, beginning around 1595; they were not published in Donne's lifetime but circulated widely in manuscript. The title Songs and Sonnets was supplied in the second edition (1635), which grouped the poems by kind, but neither this arrangement nor the more haphazard organization of the first edition (1633) is Donne's own. In Donne's time the term "sonnet" often meant simply "love lyric," and in fact there is only one formal sonnet in this collection. For the poems we present we follow the 1635 edition, beginning with the extremely popular poem "The Flea."
2. This insect afforded a popular erotic theme for poets all over Europe, deriving from a pseudo-Ovidian medieval poem in which a lover envies the flea for the liberties it takes with his mistress's body.
3. The swelling suggests pregnancy.
4. As in a convent or monastery.
5. By denying me sexual gratification.
Or snorted we in the seven sleepers' den?

'Twas so; but this, all pleasures fancies be.

If ever any beauty I did see,
Which I desired, and got, 'twas but a dream of thee.
And now good morrow to our waiting souls,
Which watch not one another out of fear;

For love all love of other sights controls,
And makes one little room an everywhere.

Let sea-discoverers to new worlds have gone,
Let maps to others, worlds on worlds have shown:
Let us possess one world; each hath one, and is one.

My face in thine eye, thine in mine appears,
And true plain hearts do in the faces rest;
Where can we find two better hemispheres,
Without sharp North, without declining West?

If our two loves be one, or thou and I
Love so alike that none do slacken, none can die.

Song

Go and catch a falling star,
Get with child a mandrake root,
Tell me where all past years are,
Or who cleft the Devil's foot,

Teach me to hear mermaids' singing,
Or to keep off envy's stinging,
And find
What wind
Serves to advance an honest mind.

If thou beest born to strange sights,
Things invisible to see,
Ride ten thousand days and nights,
Till age snow white hairs on thee,
Thou, when thou return'st, wilt tell me

All strange wonders that befell thee,
And swear
No where
Lives a woman true, and fair.

1. Cave in Ephesus where, according to legend, seven Christian youths hid from pagan persecutors and slept for 187 years.
2. "Our world" in many manuscripts.
3. Scholastic philosophy taught that when the elements were imperfectly mixed ("not mixed equally"), matter was mutable and mortal; conversely, when the elements were perfectly mixed, matter was immutable and hence immortal.
4. The mandrake root, or mandragora, is forked like the lower part of the human body. It was thought to shriek when pulled from the ground and to kill all humans who heard it; it was also (paradoxically) thought to help women conceive.
If thou find'st one, let me know,
Such a pilgrimage were sweet;
Yet do not, I would not go,
Though at next door we might meet;
Though she were true when you met her,
And last till you write your letter,
Yet she
Will be False, ere I come, to two, or three.

The Undertaking

I have done one braver thing
Than all the Worthies did,
And yet a braver thence doth spring,
Which is, to keep that hid.

It were but madness now t' impart
The skill of specular stone,
When he which can have learned the art
To cut it, can find none.

So, if I now should utter this,
Others (because no more Such stuff to work upon, there is)
Would love but as before.

But he who loveliness within
Hath found, all outward loathes,
For he who color loves, and skin,
Loves but their oldest clothes.

If, as I have, you also do
Virtue attired in woman see,
And dare love that, and say so too,
And forget the He and She;

And if this love, though placed so,
From profane men you hide,
Which will no faith on this bestow,
Or, if they do, deride;

1. According to medieval legend, the Nine Worthies, or supreme heroes of history, included three Jews (Joshua, David, Judas Maccabaeus), three pagans (Hector, Alexander, Julius Caesar), and three Christians (Arthur, Charlemagne, Godfrey of Boulogne).

2. A transparent or translucent material, reputed to have been used in antiquity for windows, but no longer known. Great skill was needed to cut it.
Then you have done a braver thing
Than all the Worthies did;
And a braver thence will spring,
Which is, to keep that hid.

The Sun Rising

Busy old fool, unruly sun,
Why dost thou thus
Through windows and through curtains call on us?
Must to thy motions lovers' seasons run?
Saucy pedantic wretch, go chide
Late schoolboys and sour prentices,
Go tell court huntsmen that the king will ride,
Call country ants to harvest offices;
Love, all alike, no season knows nor clime,
Nor hours, days, months, which are the rags of time.

Thy beams, so reverend and strong
Why shouldst thou think?
I could eclipse and cloud them with a wink,
But that I would not lose her sight so long;
If her eyes have not blinded thine,
Look, and tomorrow late, tell me,
Whether both th' Indias of spice and mine
Be where thou leftst them, or lie here with me.
Ask for those kings whom thou saw'st yesterday,
And thou shalt hear, All here in one bed lay.

She is all states, and all princes I,
Nothing else is.
Princes do but play us; compared to this,
All honor's mimic, all wealth alchemy.

Thou, sun, art half as happy as we,
In that the world's contracted thus;
Thine age asks ease, and since thy duties be
To warm the world, that's done in warming us.
Shine here to us, and thou art everywhere;
This bed thy center is, these walls thy sphere.
THE CANONIZATION / 1267

The Indifferent

I can love both fair and brown, Her whom abundance melts, and her whom want betrays, Her who loves loneness best, and her who masks and plays, Her whom the country formed, and whom the town, 5 Her who believes, and her who tries, Her who still2 weeps with spongy eyes, tests
And her who is dry cork, and never cries; I can love her, and her, and you, and you, I can love any, so she be not true.

Will no other vice content you? Will it not serve your turn to do as did your mothers? Or have you all old vices spent, and now would find out others? Or doth a fear that men are true torment you? O we are not, be not you so; 10 Let me, and do you, twenty know.
Rob me, but bind me not, and let me go. Must I, who came to travail thorough3 you, Grow your fixed subject, because you are true?

Venus heard me sigh this song, And by love's sweetest part, variety, she swore, She heard not this till now; and that it should be so no more. She went, examined, and returned ere long, And said, Alas, some two or three 20 Poor heretics in love there be, Which think to stablish dangerous constancy.
But I have told them, Since you will be true, You shall be true to them who are false to you.

The Canonization

For God's sake hold your tongue, and let me love, Or chide my palsy, or my gout, My five gray hairs, or ruined fortune, flout, With wealth your state, your mind with arts improve, 5 Take you a course, get you a place,2 Observe His Honor, or His Grace,3 Or the king's real, or his stamped face4 Contemplate; what you will, approve, try, test So you will let me love.

1. Some lines of this poem recall Ovid, Amores 2.4.
2. Both blonde and brunette.
3. Through "Travail": grief.
4. The poem plays off against the Roman Catholic process of determining that certain persons are saints, proper objects of veneration and prayer.
      2. An appointment, at court or elsewhere. "Take you a course": follow some career.
      3. Pay court to some lord or bishop.
      4. On coins; "real" (royal) refers also to a particular Spanish coin.
Alas, alas, who’s injured by my love?

What merchant’s ships have my sighs drowned?

Who says my tears have overflowed his ground?

When did my colds a forward spring remove?

When did the heats which my veins fill

Add one man to the plaguy bill?

Soldiers find wars, and lawyers find out still

Litigious men, which quarrels move,

Though she and I do love.

Call us what you will, we are made such by love;

Call her one, me another fly,

We’re tapers too, and at our own cost die,

And we in us find the eagle and the dove.

The phoenix riddle hath more wit

By us: we two being one, are it.

So, to one neutral thing both sexes fit.

We die and rise the same, and prove

Mysterious by this love.

We can die by it, if not live by love,

And if unfit for tombs and hearse

Our legend be, it will be fit for verse;

And if no piece of chronicle we prove,

We’ll build in sonnets pretty rooms;

And by these hymns, all shall approve

Us canonized for love:

And thus invoke us: You whom reverend love

Made one another’s hermitage;

You, to whom love was peace, that now is rage;

Who did the whole world’s soul contract, and drove

Into the glasses of your eyes

(So made such mirrors, and such spies, spyglasses, telescopes

That they did all to you epitomize)

Countries, towns, courts; Beg from above

A pattern of your love!

5. Petrarchan lovers traditionally sigh, weep, and are frozen because of their mistresses’ neglect.

6. Deaths from the plague, which raged in summer, were recorded by parish in weekly lists.

7. Flies were emblems of transience and lustfulness; tapers (candles) attract flies to their death and also consume themselves. "Die" in the punning terminology of the period means to experience orgasm, and there was a superstition that intercourse shortened life.

8. The eagle signifies strength and vision; the dove, meekness and mercy. The phoenix was a mythic Arabian bird, only one of which existed at any one time. After living five hundred years, it was consumed by fire, then rose triumphantly from its ashes a new bird. Thus it was a symbol of immortality and sometimes associated with Christ. "Eagle" and "dove" are also alchemical terms for processes leading to the rise of "phoenix," a stage in the transmutation of metals to gold.

9. "Rooms" (punning on the Italian meaning of "stanza") will contain their exploits, as prose chronicle histories contain great deeds done in the world.

1. The lover’s own poems.

2. An alternative meaning is "extract."

3. "Countries, towns, courts" are objects of the verb "drove." The notion is that eyes both see and reflect the outside world, and so can contain all of it.
SONG / 1269

Song

Sweetest love, I do not go,
   For weariness of thee,
Nor in hope the world can show
   A fitter love for me;
   But since that I
Must die at last, 'tis best,
   To use myself in jest
   Thus by feigned deaths\(^6\) to die. \(i.e.,\) absences

Yesternight the sun went hence
   And yet is here today,
He hath no desire nor sense,
   Nor half so short a way:
   Then fear not me,
But believe that I shall make Speedier journeys, since I take
   More wings and spurs than he.

O how feeble is man's power,
   That if good fortune fall,\(^5\)
   Cannot add another hour,
   Nor a lost hour recall!
   But come bad chance,
And we join to 't our strength,
   And we teach it art and length,
   Itself o'er us to advance.

When thou sigh'st, thou sigh'st not wind,
   But sigh'st my soul away,
When thou weep'st, unkindly\(^1\) kind,
   My life's blood doth decay.
   It cannot be
That thou lov'st me, as thou say'st,
   If in thine my life thou waste,
   Thou art the best of me.

Let not thy divining\(^6\) heart
   Forethink me any ill,
Destiny may take thy part,
   And may thy fears fulfill;
   But think that we
Are but turned aside to sleep;
   They who one another keep Alive, ne'er parted be.

Air and Angels

Twice or thrice had I loved thee,
Before I knew thy face or name;
So in a voice, so in a shapeless flame,
Angels affect us oft, and worshipped be;
Still\(^5\) when, to where thou wert, I came,
Some lovely glorious nothing\(^1\) I did see.
But since my soul, whose child love is,
Takes limbs of flesh, and else could nothing do,\(^2\)
More subtle\(^6\) than the parent is

Love must not be, but take a body too;
And therefore what thou wert, and who,
I bid love ask, and now
That it assume thy body I allow,
And fix itself in thy lip, eye, and brow.

Whilst thus to ballast love I thought,
And so more steadily to have gone,
With wares which would sink\(^7\) admiration,
I saw I had love's pinnacle\(^8\) overfraught;\(^9\)
Every thy hair for love to work upon
Is much too much, some fitter must be sought;
For, nor in nothing, nor in things
Extreme and scatt'ring bright, can love inhere,
Then as an angel, face and wings
Of air, not pure as it, yet pure doth wear,
So thy love may be my love's sphere;\(^3\)
Just such disparity
As 'twixt air and angels' purity,
'Twixt women's love and men's will ever be.\(^4\)

Break of Day\(^1\)

'Tis true, 'tis day; what though it be?
O wilt thou therefore rise from me?
Why should we rise because 'tis light?
Did we lie down because 'twas night?

Love, which in spite of darkness brought us hither,
Should in despite of light keep us together.

Light hath no tongue, but is all eye;
If it could speak as well as spy,

---

1. Spiritual beauty, the true object of love in Neo-platonic philosophy.
2. My soul could not function unless it were in a body.
3. Each sphere was thought to be governed by an angel (an intelligence).
4. It was commonly believed that angels, when they appeared to humans, assumed a body of air which, though pure, was less so than the angel's spiritual essence.
5. An aubade, or song of the lovers' parting at dawn, this poem is unusual for Donne in having a female speaker. The poem was given a musical setting and published in 1622, in William Corkine's Second Book of Ayres.
A VALEDICTION: OF WEEPING / 1271

This were the worst that it could say,
10 That being well, I fain° would stay,
And that I loved my heart and honor so
That I would not from him, that had them, go.

Must business thee from hence remove?
O, that's the worst disease of love.
15 The poor, the foul, the false, love can
Admit, but not the busied man.
He which hath business, and makes love, doth do
Such wrong, as when a married man doth wo.

A Valediction: 1 Of Weeping

Let me pour forth
My tears before thy face whilst I stay here,
For thy face coins them, and thy stamp° they bear,
And by this mintage they are something worth,
5 For thus they be
Pregnant of thee;
Fruits of much grief they are, emblems° of more—
When a tear falls, that thou falls which it bore,
So thou and I are nothing then, when on a diverse° shore.

On a round ball
A workman that hath copies by can lay
An Europe, Afric, and an Asia,
And quickly make that, which was nothing, all;°
10 So doth each tear
Which thee doth wear,°
A globe, yea world, by that impression grow,
Till thy tears mixed with mine do overflow
This world; by waters sent from thee, my heaven dissolved so.

O more than moon,
20 Draw not up seas to drown me in thy sphere;°
Weep me not dead in thine arms, but forbear
To teach the sea what it may do too soon.
Let not the wind
Example find
25 To do me more harm than it purposeth;
Since thou and I sigh one another's breath,
Whoe'er sighs most is cruelest, and hastes the other's death.

1. A farewell poem, one of four so titled in the Songs and Sonnets. Another is "A Valediction: Forbidding Mourning," p. 1275.
2. I.e., on a blank globe one can place maps of the continents and so convert a cipher ("nothing") into the whole world ("all").
3. Which bears your image.
4. A star or planet with more power of attraction than the moon might not only affect tides but draw the very seas unto itself.
Love's Alchemy

Some that have deeper digged love's mine than I,
Say where his centric happiness doth lie:
I have loved, and got, and told,
But should I love, get, tell, till I were old,

And as no chemic yet the elixir got,
But glorifies his pregnant pot
If by the way to him befall
Some odorous thing, or medicinal;
So lovers dream a rich and long delight,
But get a winter-seeming summer's night.

Our ease, our thrift, our honor, and our day,
Shall we for this vain bubble's shadow pay?

Ends love in this, that my man
Can be as happy as I can, if he can Endure the short scorn of a bridegroom's play?
That loving wretch that swears
'Tis not the bodies marry, but the minds,
Which he in her angelic finds,
Would swear as justly that he hears,
In that day's rude hoarse minstrelsy, the spheres.
Hope not for mind in women; at their best
Sweetness and wit, they are but mummy, possessed.

A Nocturnal upon Saint Lucy's Day,
Being the Shortest Day

'Tis the year's midnight and it is the day's,
Lucy's, who scarce seven hours herself unmasks;
The sun is spent, and now his flasks
Send forth light squibs, no constant rays.

The world's whole sap is sunk;

1. A magic medicine sought by alchemists and reputed to heal all ills.
2. A fertile (and womb-shaped) retort, calling up the common analogy between producing the elixir of life and human generation.
3. A night cold as in winter and short as in summer.
4. The perfect harmony of the planets, moving in concentric crystalline "spheres," is contrasted with the boisterous serenade of pots, pans, and trumpets performed on the wedding night.
5. The syntax of the last two lines is unclear, and they are punctuated differently in various copies. The 1633 edition reads: "at their best, / Sweetness, and wit they are, but, mummy, possessst."

Many modern editors punctuate as we do here. "Mummy" suggests a corpse-like body, without mind or spirit.
1. The nocturne, or night office of the Roman Catholic Church, is a service held in the primitive church at midnight. St. Lucy's Day fell on December 13 according to the old calendar still in use in England at the time, and its vigil (the previous day and night) is the winter solstice, the shortest day of the year. At this time of the year, the sun rises after 8 A.M. in the latitude of London and sets well before 4 P.M.
2. The stars are "flasks," thought to store up light from the sun.
The general balm th' hydroptic earth hath drunk,
Whither, as to the bed's feet, life is shrunk,
Dead and interred; yet all these seem to laugh,
Compared with me, who am their epitaph.

 Study me, then, you who shall lovers be
At the next world, that is, at the next spring;
  For I am every dead thing
  In whom love wrought new alchemy.
For his art did express
A quintessence even from nothingness,
From dull privations and lean emptiness.
He ruined me, and I am re-begot
Of absence, darkness, death: things which are not.

All others from all things draw all that's good,
Life, soul, form, spirit, whence they being have;
  I, by love's limbeck, am the grave
  Of all that's nothing. Oft a flood
Have we two wept, and so
Drowned the whole world, us two; oft did we grow
To be two chaoses when we did show
Care to aught else; and often absences
Withdrawed our souls, and made us carcasses.

But I am by her death (which word wrongs her)
Of the first nothing the elixir grown;
  Were I a man, that I were one
  I needs must know; I should prefer,
If I were any beast,
Some ends, some means; yea plants, yea stones detest
And love. All, all some properties invest.
If I an ordinary nothing were,
As shadow, a light and body must be here.

But I am none; nor will my sun renew.
You lovers, for whose sake the lesser sun
At this time to the Goat is run
To fetch new lust and give it you,
Enjoy your summer all.

Since she enjoys her long night's festival,
Let me prepare towards her, and let me call
This hour her vigil and her eve, since this Both the year's and the day's deep midnight is.
The Bait

Come live with me and be my love,
And we will some new pleasures prove,
Of golden sands and crystal brooks,
With silken lines and silver hooks.

There will the river whispering run,
Warmed by thine eyes more than the sun.
And there the enamored fish will stay,
Begging themselves they may betray.

When thou wilt swim in that live bath,
Each fish, which every channel hath,
Will amorousely to thee swim,
Gladder to catch thee, than thou him.

If thou, to be so seen, beest loath,
By sun or moon, thou darkenest both;
And if myself have leave to see,
I need not their light, having thee.

Let others freeze with angling reeds,
And cut their legs with shells and weeds,
Or treacherously poor fish beset
With strangling snare or windowy net.

Let coarse bold hands from slimy nest
The bedded fish in banks outwrest,
Or curious traitors, sleave-silk flies,
Bewitch poor fishes' wandering eyes.

For thee, thou need'st no such deceit,
For thou thyself art thine own bait;
That fish that is not catched thereby,
Alas, is wiser far than I.

The Apparition

When by thy scorn, O murderess, I am dead,
And that thou thinkst thee free
From all solicitation from me,
Then shall my ghost come to thy bed,
And thee, feigned vestal, in worse arms shall see;
Then thy sick taper will begin to wink,

1. This poem is Donne's response to Marlowe's "Passionate Shepherd to His Love." Another of the many responses was Raleigh's "The Nymph's Reply to the Shepherd."
3. Virgins consecrated to the Roman goddess Vesta.
And he whose thou art then, being tired before,
Will, if thou stir, or pinch to wake him, think
  Thou call’st for more,
And in false sleep will from thee shrink,
And then, poor aspen wretch, neglected thou
Bathed in a cold quicksilver sweat wilt lie
  A verier ghost than I;
What I will say, I will not tell thee now,
Lest that preserve thee; and since my love is spent,
I had rather thou shouldst painfully repent,
Than by my threatenings rest still innocent.

A Valediction: Forbidding Mourning

As virtuous men pass mildly away,
And whisper to their souls to go,
Whilst some of their sad friends do say
  The breath goes now, and some say, No;

So let us melt, and make no noise,
No tear-floods, nor sigh-tempests move;
'Twere profanation of our joys to tell the laity our love.

Moving of th’ earth brings harms and fears,
Men reckon what it did and meant;
But trepidation of the spheres,
  Though greater far, is innocent.

Dull sublunary lovers’ love
(Whose soul is sense) cannot admit
Those things which elemented it.

Absence, because it doth remove
That ourselves know not what it is,
Inter-assured of the mind.

Care less, eyes, lips, and hands to miss.

Our two souls therefore, which are one,
Though I must go, endure not yet

2. Aspen leaves flutter in the slightest breeze.
3. Sweating in terror; quicksilver (mercury) was a stock prescription for venereal disease, and sweating was part of the cure.
1. For “valediction” see p. 1271, n. 1. Izaak Walton speculated that this poem was addressed to Donne's wife on the occasion of his trip to the Continent in 1611, but there is no proof of that. Donne was, however, apprehensive about that trip. Walton also heard that, while abroad, Donne had a startling vision of his wife holding a dead baby at about the time she gave birth to a stillborn child.
2. Earthquakes cause damage and were thought to be portentous. “Trepidation” (in the Ptolemaic cosmology) is an oscillation of the ninth or crystalline sphere imparted to all the inner spheres. Though a much more violent motion than an earthquake, it is neither destructive nor sinister.
3. Beneath the moon, therefore earthly, sensual, and subject to change.
A breach, but an expansion,
Like gold to airy thinness beat.

25 If they be two, they are two so
As stiff twin compasses\(^4\) are two;
Thy soul, the fixed foot, makes no show
To move, but doth, if th' other do.

And though it in the center sit,
30 Yet when the other far doth roam,
It leans and hearkens after it,
And grows erect, as that comes home.

Such wilt thou be to me, who must,
Like th' other foot, obliquely run;
35 Thy firmness makes my circle just,
And makes me end where I begun.

The Ecstasy\(^1\)

Where, like a pillow on a bed,
A pregnant bank swelled up to rest
The violet's reclining head,
Sat we two, one another's best.

5 Our hands were firmly cemented
With a fast balm\(^5\) which thence did spring,
Our eye-beams\(^2\) twisted, and did thread
Our eyes upon one double string,

So to intergraft our hands, as yet
10 Was all our means to make us one,
And pictures in our eyes\(^3\) to get\(^6\)
Was all our propagation.

As 'twixt two equal armies Fate
Suspends uncertain victory,
15 Our souls (which to advance their state
Were gone out) hung 'twixt her and me;

And whilst our souls negotiate there,
We like sepulchral statues lay;
All day the same our postures were,
20 And we said nothing all the day.

4. The two legs of a geometer's or draftsman's compass. This simile is the most famous example of the "metaphysical conceit" (see the "Literary Terminology" appendix to this volume).
1. From ekstasis (Greek), a movement of the soul outside of the body.
2. Invisible shafts of light, thought of as going out of the eyes and thereby enabling one to see things.
3. Reflections of each in the other's eyes, often called "making babies."
If any, so by love refined
   That he soul's language understood,
And by good love were grown all mind,\(^4\)
   Within convenient distance stood,

25 He (though he knew not which soul spake,
   Because both meant, both spake the same)
Might thence a new concoction\(^5\) take,
   And part far purer than he came.

This ecstasy doth unperplex,
30 We said, and tell us what we love;
   We see by this it was not sex;
   We see we saw not what did move;\(^0\) motivate us
But as all several\(^6\) souls contain
   Mixture of things, they know not what,
35 Love these mixed souls doth mix again,
   And makes both one, each this and that.

A single violet transplant,
   The strength, the color, and the size
(All which before was poor and scant)
40 Redoubles still,\(^4\) and multiplies.\(^7\)
   When love with one another so
   Interinanimates two souls,
   That abler soul, which thence doth flow,
   Defects of loneliness controls.

45 We then, who are this new soul, know
   Of what we are composed and made,
   For th' atomies\(^6\) of which we grow
   Are souls, whom no change can invade.

But O alas, so long, so far
50 Our bodies why do we forbear?
   They are ours, though they are not we; we are
   The intelligences, they the sphere.\(^6\)

   We owe them thanks because they thus
   Did us to us at first convey,
55 Yielded their forces, sense, to us,
   Nor are dross to us, but allay.\(^7\)

   On man heaven's influence works not so
   But that it first imprints the air.\(^8\)

\(^0\) On this higher love, see Bembo's ladder of love from Castiglione's The Courtier.
\(^4\) In the alchemical sense of sublimation or purification.
\(^5\) In Ptolemaic astronomy, each planet, set in a transparent "sphere" that revolved and so carried it around the earth, was inhabited by a controlling angelic "intelligence."
\(^6\) "Dross" is an impurity that weakens metal; "allay" (alloy) strengthens it.
\(^7\) Astrological influences were thought to work on people through the medium of the surrounding air.
So soul into the soul may flow,

60 Though it to body first repair.

As our blood labors to beget

Spirits as like souls as it can,

Because such fingers need to knit

That subtle knot which makes us man,

65 So must pure lovers' souls descend

T' affections, and to faculties

Which sense may reach and apprehend;

Else a great prince in prison lies.

To our bodies turn we then, that so

70 Weak men on love revealed may look;

Love's mysteries in souls do grow,

But yet the body is his book.

And if some lover, such as we,

Have heard this dialogue of one,

75 Let him still mark us; he shall see

Small change when we are to bodies gone.

The Funeral

Whoever comes to shroud me, do not harm

Nor question much

That subtle wreath of hair which crowns my arm;

The mystery, the sign you must not touch,

5 For 'tis my outward soul,

Viceroy to that, which then to heaven being gone,

Will leave this to control,

And keep these limbs, her provinces, from dissolution.

For if the sinewy thread my brain lets fall

10 Through every part

Can tie those parts and make me one of all,

These hairs which upward grew, and strength and art

Have from a better brain,

Can better do it; except she meant that I

15 By this should know my pain,

As prisoners then are manacled, when they're condemned to die.

9. Subtle substances thought to be produced by the blood to serve as intermediaries between body and soul.

1. The implied comparison is with God's mysteries, which are revealed and may be read in the book of Nature and the book of Scripture.

2. "Dialogue of one" because "both meant, both spake the same" (line 26).

1. The soul's, but also the mistress's (cf. "she," line 14).

2. The nervous system.
Whate'er she meant by it, bury it with me,
    For since I am
Love's martyr, it might breed idolatry,
20  If into others' hands these relics\(^3\) came:
    As 'twas humility
To afford to it all that a soul can do,
    So 'tis some bravery,
That since you would save\(^4\) none of me, I bury some of you.

The Blossom

Little think'st thou, poor flower,
    Whom I have watched six or seven days,
And seen thy birth, and seen what every hour
Gave to thy growth, thee to this height to raise,
5   And now dost laugh and triumph on this bough,
    Little think'st thou
That it will freeze anon, and that I shall Tomorrow find thee fall'n, or not at all.

Little think'st thou, poor heart,
    That labor'st yet to nestle thee,
And think'st by hovering here to get a part
In a forbidden or forbidding tree,\(^1\)
And hop'st her stiffness by long siege to bow,
    Little think'st thou
is That thou tomorrow, ere that sun doth wake,
Must with this sun and me a journey take.

But thou, which lov'st to be
    Subtle to plague thyself, wilt say,
Alas, if you must go, what's that to me?
20  Here lies my business, and here I will stay:
    You go to friends whose love and means present
Various content\(^0\)
    To your eyes, ears, and tongue, and every part.
If then your body go, what need you a heart?

Well, then, stay here; but know,
    When thou hast stayed and done thy most,
A naked thinking heart that makes no show
Is to a woman but a kind of ghost.
    How shall she know my heart; or, having none,
30    Know thee for one?

3. Body parts or other objects belonging to a saint, venerated by Roman Catholics.
4. All the early printed texts read "have" (which carries sexual connotations), while many manuscripts read "save."
1. The fruit of this tree is "forbidden" (presumably because the woman is married) or "forbidding" (because she is unwilling).
Practice may make her know some other part,
But take my word, she doth not know a heart.

Meet me at London, then,
Twenty days hence, and thou shalt see
Me fresher and more fat\textsuperscript{a} by being with men
Than if I had stayed still with her and thee.
For God's sake, if you can, be you so too:
I would give you
There to another friend, whom we shall find
As glad to have my body as my mind.

The Relic

When my grave is broke up again
Some second guest to entertain
(For graves have learned that woman-head\textsuperscript{b} to be to more than one a bed),\textsuperscript{1}
And he that digs it spies
A bracelet of bright hair about the bone,
Will he not let us alone,
And think that there a loving couple lies,
Who thought that this device might be some way
To make their souls, at the last busy day,\textsuperscript{0}
Meet at this grave, and make a little stay?

If this fall\textsuperscript{0} in a time, or land,
Where mis-devotion\textsuperscript{2} doth command,
Then he that digs us up will bring
Us to the bishop and the king,
To make us relics; then
Thou shalt be a Mary Magdalen, and I
A something else thereby;
All women shall adore us, and some men;
And since at such times, miracles are sought,
I would have that age by this paper taught
What miracles we harmless lovers wrought.

First, we loved well and faithfully,
Yet knew not what we loved, nor why,
Difference of sex no more we knew,
Than our guardian angels do;
Coming and going, we
Perchance might kiss, but not between those meals;\textsuperscript{3}
Our hands ne'er touched the seals\textsuperscript{0}

1. Graves were often used to inter successive corpses, the bones of previous occupants being deposited in charnel houses.
2. False devotion, superstition, i.e., Roman Catholicism.
3. The kisses of salutation and parting.
ELEGY 16. ON HIS MISTRESS / 1281

30 Which nature, injured by late law, sets free:⁴
These miracles we did: but now, alas,
All measure and all language I should pass,
Should I tell what a miracle she was.

A Lecture upon the Shadow

Stand still, and I will read to thee
A lecture, Love, in love's philosophy.
These three hours that we have spent
Walking here, two shadows went
5 Along with us, which we ourselves produced;
But, now the sun is just above our head,
We do those shadows tread
And to brave⁶ clearness all things are reduced. splendid
So, whilst our infant loves did grow,
10 Disguises did and shadows flow
From us and our care;° but now, 'tis not so. caution
That love hath not attained the high'st degree
Which is still diligent lest others see.

Except⁰ our loves at this noon stay,
15 We shall new shadows make the other way.
As the first were made to blind
Others, these which come behind
Will work upon ourselves, and blind our eyes.
If our loves faint and westwardly decline,
20 To me thou falsely thineth
And I to thee mine actions shall disguise.
The morning shadows wear away,
But these grow longer all the day,
But, oh, love's day is short if love decay.

25 Love is a growing or full constant light,
And his first minute after noon is night.

Elegy¹ 16. On His Mistress

By our first strange and fatal interview,
By all desires which thereof did ensue,

⁴. Human law forbids the free love permitted by nature. Late: recent (comparatively speaking).
¹. In Latin poetry, an elegy is a discursive or reflective poem written in "elegiacs" (unrhymed couplets of alternating dactylic hexameters and pentameters). This meter was used for funeral laments and especially for love poetry. The most famous collection of elegies was Ovid's Amores.
By our long starving hopes, by that remorse
Which my words' masculine persuasive force
Begot in thee, and by the memory
Of hurts which spies and rivals threatened me,
I calmly beg; but by thy father's wrath,
By all pains which want and divorcement hath,
I conjure thee; and all the oaths which I
And thou have sworn to seal joint constancy
Here I unswear and overswear them thus:
Thou shalt not love by ways so dangerous.
Temper, oh fair love, love's impetuous rage;
Be my true mistress still, not my feigned page.
I'll go, and, by thy kind leave, leave behind
Thee, only worthy to nurse in my mind
Thirst to come back. Oh, if thou die before,
My soul from other lands to thee shall soar.
Thy (else almighty) beauty cannot move
Rage from the seas, nor thy love teach them love.
Nor tame wild Boreas' harshness. Thou hast read
How roughly he in pieces shivered
Fair Orithea, whom he swore he loved.
Fall ill or good, 'tis madness to have proved
Dangers unurged; feed on this flattery,
That absent lovers one in th' other be.
Dissemble nothing, not a boy, nor change
Thy body's habit, nor mind's; be not strange to thyself only; all will spy in thy face
A blushing womanly discovering grace.
Richly clothed apes are called apes, and as soon
Eclipsed as bright we call the moon the moon.
Men of France, changeable chameleons,
Spitals of diseases, shops of fashions,
Love's fuelers and the rightest company
Of players which upon the world's stage be,
Will quickly know thee, and know thee; and alas!
Th' indifferent Italian, as we pass
His warm land, well content to think thee page,
Will hunt thee with such lust and hideous rage
As Lot's fair guests were vexed. But none of these Nor spongy, hydroptic Dutch shall thee displease
If thou stay here. O stay here, for, for thee,
England is only a worthy gallery
To walk in expectation, till from thence
Our greatest king call thee to his presence.
When I am gone, dream me some happiness,
Nor let thy looks our long-hid love confess;
Nor praise nor dispraise me, bless nor curse
Openly love's force, nor in bed fright thy nurse
With midnight's startings, crying out "Oh, oh!
Nurse, oh my love is slain, I saw him go
O'er the white Alps alone; I saw him, I,
Assailed, fight, taken, stabbed, bleed, fall, and die."
Augur me better chance, except dread Love
Think it enough for me t’ have had thy love.

Elegy 19. To His Mistress Going to Bed

Come, Madam, come, all rest my powers defy,
Until I labor, I in labor lie. §
The foe oftentimes having the foe in sight,
Is tired with standing though he never fight.
Off with that girdle, like heaven's zone glistening,
But a far fairer world encompassing.
Unpin that spangled breastplate which you wear
That th' eyes of busy fools may be stopped there.
Unlace yourself, for that harmonious chime
Tells me from you that now it is bed-time.
Off with that happy busk, which I envy,
That still can be and still can stand so nigh.
Your gown going off, such beauteous state reveals
As when from flowery meads th' hill's shadow steals.
Off with that wiry coronet and show
The hairy diadem which on you doth grow;
Now off with those shoes, and then safely tread
In this love's hallowed temple, this soft bed.
In such white robes, heaven's angels used to be Received by men; thou, angel, bring'st with thee
A heaven like Mahomet's paradise; and though
Ill spirits walk in white, we easily know
By this these angels from an evil sprite,
Those set our hairs, but these our flesh upright.
License my roving hands, and let them go
Before, behind, between, above, below.
O my America! my new-found-land,
My kingdom, safest when with one man manned,
My mine of precious stones, my empery.
How blest am I in this discovering thee!
To enter in these bonds is to be free;

1. This poem reworks the central situation of Ovid's Amores 1.5 in much more dramatic terms.
2. "Labor" in the dual sense of "get to work (sexually)" and "distress."
3. The stomacher, an ornamental, often jeweled, covering for the chest, worn under the lacing of the bodice.
4. A place of sensual pleasure, thought to be populated by seductive houris for the delectation of the faithful.
There where my hand is set, my seal shall be.

Full nakedness! All joys are due to thee.
As souls unbodied, bodies unclothed must be,
To taste whole joys. Gems which you women use
Are like Atalanta’s balls, cast in men’s views,
That when a fool’s eye lighteth on a gem,
His earthly soul may covet theirs, not them.
Like pictures, or like books’ gay coverings, made
For laymen, are all women thus arrayed;
Themselves are mystic books, which only we (Whom their imputed grace will dignify)
Must see revealed. Then since that I may know,
As liberally as to a midwife show
Thyself: cast all, yea, this white linen hence,
Here is no penance, much less innocence.

To teach thee, I am naked first; why then
What need’st thou have more covering than a man?

Satire 3

In satire the author holds a subject up to ridicule. Like his elegies, Donne's five verse satires were written in his twenties and are in the forefront of an effort in the 1590s (by Donne, Ben Jonson, Joseph Hall, and John Marston) to naturalize those classical forms in England. While elements of satire figure in many different kinds of literature, the great models for formal verse satire were the Roman poets Horace and Juvenal, the former for an urbanely witty style, the latter for an indignant or angry manner. While Donne's other satires call on these models, his third satire more nearly resembles those of a third Roman satirist, Persius, known for an abstruse style and moralizing manner. This work is a strenuous discussion of an acute theological problem, for the age and for Donne himself: How may one discover the true Christian church among so many claimants to that role? At the time Donne wrote this, he was in the process of leaving the Roman Catholic Church of his heritage for the Church of England.

Satire 3

Kind pity chokes my spleen; brave scorn forbids
Those tears to issue which swell my eyelids;
I must not laugh, nor weep sins, and be wise:
Can railing then cure these worn maladies?

defiant lament

5. The jokes mingle law with sex: where he has signed a document (placed his hand) he will now place his seal; and in the bonds of her arms he will find freedom.
6. Atalanta, running a race against her suitor Hippomenes, was beaten when he dropped golden apples ("balls") for her to pick up. Donne reverses the story.
7. By granting favors to their lovers, women impute to them grace that they don't deserve, as God (in Calvinist doctrine) imputes grace to undeserving sinners. Laymen can only look at the covers of mystic books (clothed women), but "we" elect can read them (see women naked).
8. Some manuscripts read: "There is no penance due to innocence." White garments would be appropriate either for the innocent virgin or for the sinner doing formal penance.
1. The seat of bile, hence scorn and ridicule.
Is not our mistress, fair Religion,
As worthy of all our souls' devotion
As virtue was to the first blinded age?²
Are not heaven's joys as valiant to assuage
Lusts, as earth's honor was to them?⁰
Alas, pagans
As we do them in means, shall they surpass
Us in the end, and shall thy father's spirit
Meet blind philosophers in heaven, whose merit
Of strict life may be imputed faith,¹ and hear
Thee, whom he taught so easy ways and near
To follow, damned? O, if thou dar'st, fear this;
This fear great courage and high valor is.
Dar'st thou aid mutinous Dutch,⁴ and dar'st thou lay Thee in ships, wooden sepulchers, a prey to leaders' rage, to storms, to shot, to dearth⁰
Dar'st thou dive seas and dungeons⁰ of the earth?
Hast thou courageous fire to thaw the ice
Of frozen north discoveries?⁵ And thrice
Colder than salamanders, like divine
Children in the oven,⁶ fires of Spain and the line,
Whose countries limbecks to our bodies be,
Canst thou for gain bear?⁷ And must every he
Which cries not "Goddess!" to thy mistress, draw,
Or eat thy poisonous words? Courage of straw!
O desperate coward, wilt thou seem bold, and
To thy foes and His (who made thee to stand Sentinel in his world's garrison) thus yield,
And for forbidden wars leave th' appointed field?⁸
Know thy foes: The foul Devil (whom thou Strivest to please) for hate, not love, would allow
The world's all parts wither away and pass,⁹
So the world's self, thy other loved foe, is
In her decrepit wane, and thou, loving this,
Dost love a withered and worn strumpet; last,
Flesh (itself's death) and joys which flesh can taste
Thou lovest; and thy fair goodly soul, which doth
Give this flesh power to taste joy, thou dost loathe.
Seek true religion. O, where? Mirreus,¹

². The age of paganism, blind to Christianity but capable of natural morality ("virtue").
³. Donne's formulation wittily turns on its head the key concept of Protestant theology—that salvation is to be achieved only by imputing Christ's merits to Christians through faith—by suggesting that virtuous pagans might be saved by imputing faith to them on the basis of their moral life.
⁴. English volunteers took frequent part with the Dutch in their wars against Spain. Donne himself had sailed in two raiding expeditions against the Spanish.
⁵. Many explorers tried to find a northwest passage to the Pacific.
⁶. In the biblical story (Daniel 3), Shadrach, Meshack, and Abednego were rescued from a fiery furnace. The salamander (a lizardlike creature) was thought to be so cold-blooded that it could live in fire.
⁷. The object of "bear" is "fires of Spain and the line"—quisitorial and equatorial heats, which roast people as chemists heat materials in "limbecks" (alembics, or vessels for distilling).
⁸. Of moral struggle.
⁹. The common belief that the world was growing old and becoming decrepit.
¹. The satiric types in this passage represent different creeds: "Mirreus" is a Roman Catholic; "Crantz," an austere Calvinist Presbyterian of Geneva; "Graius" a Church of England Erastian who believes in any religion sponsored by the state; "Phrygius," a skeptic; and "Graccus," a complete relativist.
Thinking her unhoused here, and fled from us,
Seeks her at Rome; there, because he doth know
That she was there a thousand years ago.
He loves her rags so, as we here obey
The statecloth where the prince sat yesterday.
Crantz to such brave loves will not be enthralled,
But loves her only, who at Geneva is called Religion—plain, simple, sullen, young,
Contemptuous, yet unhandsome; as among Lecherous humors, there is one that judges
Temperaments
No wenches wholesome but coarse country drudges.
Graius stays still at home here, and because
Some preachers, vile ambitious bawds, and laws
Still new, like fashions, bid him think that she
Which dwells with us is only perfect, he Embraceth her whom his godfathers will Tender to him, being tender, as wards still Take such wives as their guardians offer, or Pay values. Careless Phrygius doth abhor
All, because all cannot be good, as one
Knowing some women whores, dares marry none.
Graccus loves all as one, and thinks that so
As women do in divers countries go
In divers habits, yet are still one kind,
So doth, so is religion; and this blindness too much light breeds; but unmoved thou
Of force must one, and forced but one allow;
And the right; ask thy father which is she,
Let him ask his; though truth and falsehood be Near twins, yet truth a little elder is;
Be busy to seek her, believe me this,
He's not of none, nor worst, that seeks the best.
To adore, or scorn an image, or protest,
May all be bad; doubt wisely; in strange way
To stand inquiring right, is not to stray;
To sleep, or run wrong, is. On a huge hill,
Cragged and steep, Truth stands, and he that will Reach her, about must, and about must go,
And what the hill's suddenness resists, win so;
Yet strive so, that before age, death's twilight,
Thy soul rest, for none can work in that night.
To will implies delay, therefore now do.
Hard deeds, the body's pains; hard knowledge too
The mind's endeavors reach, and mysteries
Are like the sun, dazzling, yet plain to all eyes.
Keep the truth which thou hast found; men do not stand
In so ill case here, that God hath with his hand

2. The royal canopy, a symbol of kingly power.
3. If minors in care of a guardian (in wardship) rejected the wives offered ("tendered") to them they had to pay fines ("values").
4. I.e., Graccus considers the differences between religions merely incidental, like womens’ clothes, but his apparently tolerant, "enlightened" attitude is itself a form of blindness.
5. The person who seeks the best church is neither an unbeliever nor the worst sort of believer.
6. Echoes John 9.4, "the night cometh, when no man can work."
Sappho to Philaenis

Where is that holy fire, which verse is said To have? Is that enchanting force decayed? Verse, that draws Nature's works, from Nature's law, copies / according to Thee, her best work, to her work cannot draw.

Have my tears quenched my old poetic fire; Why quenched they not as well, that of desire? Thoughts, my mind's creatures, often are with thee, But I, their maker, want their liberty. Only thine image in my heart doth sit, But that is wax, and fires environ it. My fires have driven, thine have drawn it hence; And I am robbed of picture, heart, and sense. Dwells with me still mine irksome memory, Which both to keep and lose, grieves equally. That tells me how fair thou art: thou art so fair, As gods, when gods to thee I do compare, Are graced thereby: and to make blind men see, What things gods are, I say they are like to thee. For, if we justly call each silly man ordinary' Power from God claimed, than God himself to trust.

7. Kings are not God's vicars on earth, with license ("blank charters") to persecute or kill whomsoever they wish on grounds of religion.
8. "Philip" is Philip II of Spain, "Gregory" is Pope Gregory XIII or XIV, "Harry" is England's Henry VIII, and "Martin" is Martin Luther.
1. A heroic epistle, modeled on Ovid's Heroides, erotic poems set forth as letters between famous lovers and often with female speakers. Sappho was a famous woman poet of Lesbos (b. 612 B.C.E.). Her poems to her several female lovers made "lesbian" a term for same-sex love between women.
2. I.e., you are not drawn to sexual intimacy ("Nature's work") by poetry, which imitates nature's works.
3. I.e., when I compare you to gods it is they who are exalted by the comparison.
A little world, what shall we call thee then?
Thou art not soft, and clear, and straight, and fair,
As down, as stars, cedars, and lilies are,
But thy right hand, and cheek, and eye, only
Are like thy other hand, and cheek, and eye.
Such was my Phao awhile, but shall be never,
As thou wast, art, and, oh, mayst thou be ever.
Here lovers swear in their idolatry,
That I am such; but grief discolors me.
And yet I grieve the less, lest grief remove
My beauty, and make me unworthy of thy love.
Plays some soft boy with thee, oh there wants yet
A mutual feeling which should sweeten it.
His chin, a thorny hairy unevenness
Doth threaten, and some daily change possess.
Thy body is a natural paradise,
In whose self, unmanured, all pleasure lies,
Nor needs perfection, why shouldst thou then
Admit the tillage of a harsh rough man?
Men leave behind them that which their sin shows,
And are as thieves traced, which rob when it snows.
But of our dalliance no more signs there are,
Than fishes leave in streams, or birds in air.
And between us all sweetness may be had;
All, all that Nature yields, or Art can add.
My two lips, eyes, thighs, differ from thy two,
But so, as thine from one another do;
And, oh, no more; the likeness being such,
Why should they not alike in all parts touch?
Hand to strange hand, lip to lip none denies;
Why should they breast to breast, or thighs to thighs?
Likeness begets such strange self-flattery,
That touching myself, all seems done to thee.
Myself I embrace, and mine own hands I kiss,
And amorously thank myself for this.
Me, in my glass, I call thee; but alas,
When I would kiss, tears dim mine eyes, and glass.
O cure this loving madness, and restore
Me to me; thee, my half, my all, my more.
So may thy cheeks' red outwear scarlet dye,
And their white, whiteness of the galaxy,
So may thy mighty, amazing beauty move
Envy in all women, and in all men, love,
And so be change, and sickness, far from thee,
As thou by coming near, keep'st them from me.

4. The traditional belief that man is a microcosm containing in himself everything that is in the entire world, the macrocosm.
5. Sappho was said to have loved a handsome youth named Phaon.
6. A woman was said to receive "perfection" only when she married and had sex with her husband.
7. Some manuscripts read "heart."
8. Sappho promises that her verse will preserve her lover's beauty and its fame.
An Anatomy of the World: The First Anniversary

Donne composed and published this poem in 1611 to mark the first anniversary of the death of Elizabeth Drury, fifteen-year-old daughter of his patron and friend Sir Robert Drury. On the actual occasion of her death he composed a "Funeral Elegy," and on the second anniversary he wrote a companion poem to this one, titled The Progress of the Soul: The Second Anniversary, publishing all three poems together in 1612. This is not a poem about personal grief: responding to criticism of his wildly hyperbolic praises of Elizabeth, Donne commented that he had never met the young woman but intended rather to describe "the Idea of a woman, and not as she was." Nor is this merely a poem to please a patron, though Donne obviously hoped to do that. Rather, as the full title indicates, Donne took the occasion of Elizabeth's untimely death to analyze (the term "anatomy" evokes both a rigorous logical analysis and a medical dissection in an anatomy theater) the corruption, decay, and disintegration of the world in all its aspects, due ultimately to the Fall of humankind. Here, the death of the young virgin Elizabeth is made to figure that loss and all its dire effects; in The Second Anniversary her death figures the soul's progress to heavenly glory. For the Anatomy, we give the long introduction (lines 1—90) and the first two of the four meditations (lines 91—246), each of which contains a lament for the various aspects of humankind's and the world's deterioration, an eulogy of the dead girl as symbol of lost innocence, and a two-line refrain. The marginal glosses on the left-hand side are by Donne, added in 1612.

From An Anatomy of the World: The First Anniversary

ry into the  When that rich soul which to her heaven is gone,
    Whom all they celebrate who know they have one (For who is sure he hath a soul, unless
It see, and judge, and follow worthiness,
And by deeds praise it? He who doth not this,
May lodge an inmate soul, but 'tis not his); 5
When that queen ended here her progress time,¹
And, as to her standing house,² to heaven did climb,
Where, loath to make the saints attend³ her long,
She's now a part both of the choir and song, 10 await
This world in that great earthquake languished;
For in a common bath of tears it bled,
Which drew the strongest vital spirits⁴ out:
But succored⁵ then with a perplexed doubt,
(Whether the world did lose or gain in this Because since now no other way there is
But goodness to see her, whom all would see,
All must endeavor to be good as she), 15
This great consumption⁶ to a fever turned,
(#sing disease
And so the world had fits; it joyed, it mourned.
And as men think that agues physic are,⁴
And the ague being spent, give over care,

1. "That queen" is the soul of Elizabeth Drury, implicitly compared to Queen Elizabeth, who liked to go on "progresses," formal visits from one country house to another.
2. I.e., her royal palace or permanent residence.
3. "Vital spirits" of the blood were mysterious agents supposed to link soul with body.
4. "Ague" is chills and fever. "Physic": medicine. Some people think the fever stage of the disease is itself a cure.
So thou, sick world, mistak'st thyself to be Well, when, alas, thou art in a lethargy. in a near-death coma
Her death did wound and tame thee then, and then
Thou might'st have better spared the sun, or man;
That wound was deep, but 'tis more misery
That thou hast lost thy sense and memory.
'Twas heavy then to hear thy voice of moan, sad, depressing
But this is worse, that thou art speechless grown.
Thou hast forgot thy name thou hadst; thou wast
Nothing but she, and her thou hast O'erpast.
For as a child kept from the font, until
A prince, expected long, come to fulfill
The ceremonies, thou unnamed had'st laid,
Had not her coming, thee her palace made;
Her name defined thee, gave thee form and frame,
And thou forget'st to celebrate thy name.
Some months she hath been dead (but being dead, Measures of times are all determined),
But long she hath been away, long, long, yet none
Offers to tell us who it is that's gone.
But as in states doubtful of future heirs,
When sickness without remedy impairs
The present prince, they're loath it should be said
The prince doth languish, or the prince is dead:
So mankind, feeling now a general thaw,
A strong example gone, equal to law,
The cement which did faithfully compact
And glue all virtues, now resolved, and slackled,
Thought it some blasphemy to say she was dead,
Or that our weakness was discovered
In that confession; therefore spoke no more
Than tongues, the soul being gone, the loss deplore.
But though it be too late to succor thee,
Sick world, yea, dead, yea, putrefied, since she,
Thy intrinsic balm and thy preservative,
Can never be xenewed, thou never live,
I (since no man can make thee live) will try
What we may gain by thy anatomy.
Her death hath taught us dearly that thou art
Corrupt and mortal in thy purest part.
Let no man say, the world itself being dead,
Tis labor lost to have discovered
The world's infirmities, since there is none
Alive to study this dissection;
For there's a kind of world remaining still,
Though she which did inanimate and fill
The world be gone, yet in this last long night,
Her ghost doth walk; that is, a glimmering light,
A faint weak love of virtue and of good

5. The sick world is still being addressed; until it was made her palace, the world was a nameless nothing.
6. A medicine that preserved one in perfect health forever.
7. I.e., by dissecting and analyzing the world's corpse.
Reflects from her on them which understood
Her worth; and though she have shut in all day,
The twilight of her memory doth stay;
Which, from the carcass of the old world free,
Creates a new world; and new creatures be Produced: the matter and the stuff of this,
Her virtue, and the form our practice is;
And though to be thus elemented, arm
These creatures, from home-born intrinsic harm
(For all assumed unto this dignity
So many weedless Paradises be,
Which of themselves produce no venomous sin,
Except some foreign serpent bring it in),
Yet, because outward storms the strongest break,
And strength itself by confidence grows weak,
This new world may be safer, being told
The dangers and diseases of the old:
For with due temper men do then forgo
Or covet things, when they their true worth know.
There is no health; physicians say that we
At best enjoy but a neutrality.
And can there be worse sickness than to know
That we are never well, nor can be so?
We are born ruinous; poor mothers cry
That children come not right, nor orderly,
Except they headlong come and fall upon
An ominous precipitation.

How witty's ruin! How importunate
Upon mankind! It labored to frustrate
Even God's purpose; and made woman, sent
For man's relief, cause of his languishment.
They were to good ends, and they are so still,
But accessory, and principal in ill.
For that first marriage was our funeral:
One woman at one blow then killed us all,
And singly, one by one, they kill us now.
We do delightfully ourselves allow
To that consumption; and profusely blind,
We kill ourselves to propagate our kind.

And yet we do not that; we are not men:
There is not now that mankind which was then
When as the sun and man did seem to strive (Joint tenants of the world) who should survive;
When stag and raven and the long-lived tree,
Compared with man, died in minority;

8. The sun was thought to have power to breed new life out of carcasses and mud.
9. "We do not make account that a child comes right, except it come with the head forward, and thereby prefigure that headlong falling into calamities which it must suffer after" (Donne, Sermons, ed. Potter and Simpson, 4.333).
1. Women are only helpers in good but leaders in evil. "That first marriage" (line 105): Adam and Eve's.
2. Popular superstition had it that every act of sex shortened one's life by a day.
3. Joint owners. The survivor would enjoy sole ownership.
4. Stags, ravens, and oak trees were thought to live particularly long, but compared with early humans, they died in youth.
When, if a slow-paced star had stolen away
From the observer’s marking, he might stay
Two or three hundred years to see it again,
And then make up his observation plain;

When, as the age was long, the size was great;
Man's growth confessed and recompensed the meat;¹
So spacious and large, that every soul
Did a fair kingdom and large realm control;
And when the very stature, thus erect,
Did that soul a good way towards heaven direct.

Where is this mankind now? Who lives to age
Fit to be made Methusalem his page?
Alas, we scarce live long enough to try
Whether a new-made clock run right, or lie.
Old grandsires talk of yesterday with sorrow,
And for our children we reserve tomorrow.
So short is life that every peasant strives,
In a torn house, or field, to have three lives. ²

And as in lasting, so in length is man
Contracted to an inch, who was a span;³
For had a man at first in forests strayed,
Or shipwrecked in the sea, one would have laid
A wager that an elephant or whale
That met him would not hastily assail
A thing so equal to him: now, alas,
The fairies and the pygmies well may pass
As credible; mankind decays so soon,
We're scarce our fathers' shadows cast at noon.

Only death adds to our length:
nor are we grown
In stature to be men, till we are none.

But this were light, did our less volume hold
A trifle
All the old text, or had we changed to gold
Their silver; or disposed into less glass
Spirits of virtue,⁴ which then scattered was.
But 'tis not so: we're not retired, but damped;¹
And as our bodies, so our minds are cramped:
The shrinking, not close weaving, that hath thus
In mind and body both bedwarfed us.

We seem ambitious, God's whole work to undo;
Of nothing He made us, and we strive, too,
To bring ourselves to nothing back; and we Do what we can to do it so soon as He.
With new diseases⁵ on ourselves we war,
And with new physic,⁶ a worse engine⁷ far.

⁵. Early humans were thought to have eaten better than modern humans, lived longer, and grown to greater stature. Methuselah ("Methusalem," below) is said to have lived 969 years (Genesis 5.27).
⁶. Leases of farmland were often made for "three lives," i.e., through the longest-lived of three designated persons.
⁷. I.e., the distance from the tip of the thumb to the tip of the little finger, about nine inches.
⁸. The corpse of a person was said to measure a little more than his or her height when alive.
⁹. I.e., distilled virtue, which would fit into a smaller bottle. "Virtue" includes the sense of "power" as well as that of "goodness."
¹. I.e., not compressed but shrunk.
². I.e., influenza, and especially syphilis.
³. New medications—said to be far worse than the diseases they ostensibly combatted.
Thus man, this world’s vice-emperor, in whom
All faculties, all graces are at home—
And if in other creatures they appear,
They’re but man’s ministers and legates there,
To work on their rebellions, and reduce
Them to civility, and to man’s use—
This man, whom God did woo, and loath to attend
Till man came up, did down to man descend,
This man, so great, that all that is, is his,
Oh what a trifle, and poor thing he is!
If man were anything, he’s nothing now:
Help, or at least some time to waste, allow
To his other wants, yet when he did depart
With her whom we lament, he lost his heart.
She, of whom the ancients seemed to prophesy
When they called virtues by the name of she;
She in whom virtue was so much refined
That for alloy unto so pure a mind
She took the weaker sex, she that could drive
The poisonous tincture, and the stain of Eve,
Out of her thoughts and deeds, and purify
All, by a true religious alchemy;
She, she is dead; she’s dead: when thou knowest this,
Thou knowest how poor a trifling thing man is.
And learn’st thus much by our anatomy,
The heart being perished, no part can be free.
And that except thou feed (not banquet) on
The supernatural food, religion,
Thy better growth grows withered and scant;
Be more than man, or thou’rt less than an ant.
Then, as mankind, so is the world’s whole frame
Quite out of joint, almost created lame:
For, before God had made up all the rest,
Corruption entered and depraved the best.
It seized the angels, and then first of all
The world did in her cradle take a fall,
And turned her brains, and took a general maim,
Wronging each joint of the universal frame.
The noblest part, man, felt it first; and then
Both beasts and plants, cursed in the curse of man.
So did the world from the first hour decay,
That evening was beginning of the day,
And now the springs and summers which we see
Like sons of women after fifty be.
And new philosophy calls all in doubt:
The element of fire is quite put out;
fall corrupted the physical universe, see Paradise Lost 10.706ff.

4. The virtues are all represented in Latin by feminine nouns and portrayed as female figures.
5. Taste, nibble. A banquet usually contained desserts and delicacies.
6. The angels who fell from heaven with Satan and became demons. As purely intellectual beings, angels are the world’s “brains” (line 197).
7. For a similar account of the way humankind’s
8. The world’s day began with the darkness of sin.
9. Women giving birth after the age of fifty were thought to produce feeble or defective children.
10. The Polish astronomer Copernicus in the 16th century and the Italian Galileo in the 17th argued a “new philosophy,” that the sun, not the earth,
The sun is lost, and the earth, and no man's wit\(^{\circ}\) can well direct him where to look for it.

And freely men confess that this world's spent,

When in the planets and the sky they seek so many new;\(^{2}\) they see that this is crumbled out again to his atomies.\(^{6}\)

'Tis all in pieces, all coherence gone;

All just supply, and all relation:

Prince, subject; father, son,\(^{3}\) are things forgot,

For every man alone thinks he hath got to be\(^{\circ}\) a phoenix, and that there can be none of that kind of which he is, but he.\(^{4}\)

This is the world's condition now, and now she that should all parts to reunion bow,

She that had all magnetic force alone,

To draw and fasten sundered parts in one;

She whom wise nature had invented then when she observed that every sort of men did in their voyage in this world's sea stray, and needed a new compass for their way;

She that was best, and first original of all fair copies, and the general Steward to Fate;\(^{5}\) she whose rich eyes and breast gilt the West Indies, and perfumed the East;

Whose having breathed in this world did bestow spice on those isles, and bade them still smell so, and that rich Indie which doth gold inter is but as single money,\(^{6}\) coined from her;

She to whom this world must itself refer as suburbs, or the microcosm of her,

She, she is dead; she's dead: when thou know'st this, thou know'st how lame a cripple this world is, and learn'st thus much by our anatomy,

That this world's general sickness doth not lie in any humor,\(^{7}\) or one certain part;

But, as thou sawest it rotten at the heart, thou seest a hectic\(^{5}\) fever hath got hold of the whole substance, not to be controlled, and that thou hast but one way not to admit the world's infection, to be none of it.

was the center of the cosmos. This theory also contradicted the notion that a realm of fire surrounded the earth beyond the air.

2. Galileo's first accounts of his telescope observations were published in 1610. Intensifying speculations as to whether there were other inhabited worlds.

3. I.e., all traditional relationships.

4. Legend had it that there was only one phoenix on earth at any one time.

5. Fate or Providence disposes all things, but she was their "Steward," dispensing what has been decreed.

6. The West Indies were a source of gold, the East Indies a source of spices and perfumes.

7. The four bodily "humors"—blood, phlegm, bile, choler—were thought to combine to make up a temperament; when they are out of balance a person is ill. So with the world.
From Holy Sonnets

Thou hast made me, and shall thy work decay?
Repair me now, for now mine end doth haste;
I run to death, and death meets me as fast,
And all my pleasures are like yesterday.

I dare not move my dim eyes any way,
Despair behind, and death before doth cast
Such terror, and my feeble flesh doth waste
By sin in it, which it towards hell doth weigh.

Only thou art above, and when towards thee
By thy leave I can look, I rise again;
But our old subtle foe so tempteth me
That not one hour myself I can sustain.

Thy grace may wing me to prevent his art,
And thou like adamant draw mine iron heart.

I am a little world made cunningly
Of elements, and an angelic sprite;
But black sin hath betrayed to endless night
My world's both parts, and O, both parts must die.

You which beyond that heaven which was most high
Have found new spheres, and of new lands can write,
Pour new seas in mine eyes, that so I might Drown my world with my weeping earnestly,
Or wash it if it must be drowned no more.

But O, it must be burnt! Alas, the fire
Of lust and envy have burnt it heretofore,
And made it fouler; let their flames retire,
And burn me, O Lord, with a fiery zeal
Of thee and thy house, which doth in eating heal.

At the round earth's imagined corners, blow
Your trumpets, angels; and arise, arise

1. Donne wrote a variety of religious poems (called "Divine Poems"), including a group of nineteen "Holy sonnets" that reflect his interest in Jesuit and especially Protestant meditative procedures. He probably began writing them about 1609, a decade or so after leaving the Catholic Church. Our selections follow the traditional numbering established in Sir Herbert Grierson's influential edition, since for most of these sonnets we cannot tell when they were written or in what order they were intended to appear.

2. The traditional idea of the human being as microcosm (a "little world"), containing in miniature all the features of the macrocosm, or great world.

3. Astronomers, especially Galileo, and explorers.

4. God promised Noah (Genesis 9.11) never to flood the earth again.

5. See Psalm 69.9: "For the zeal of thine house hath eaten me up." These lines refer to three lands of flame—those of the Last Judgment, those of lust and envy, and those of zeal, which alone save.

6. Cf. Revelation 7.1: "I saw four angels standing on the four corners of the earth."
From death, you numberless infinities
Of souls, and to your scattered bodies go:
All whom the flood did, and fire shall o'erthrow,
All whom war, death, age, agues, tyrannies,
Despair, law, chance hath slain, and you whose eyes
Shall behold God, and never taste death's woe,
But let them sleep, Lord, and me mourn a space;
For, if above all these, my sins abound,
'Tis late to ask abundance of thy grace
When we are there. Here on this lowly ground,
Teach me how to repent; for that's as good
As if thou hadst sealed my pardon with thy blood.

If poisonous minerals, and if that tree
Whose fruit threw death on else-immortal us,
If lecherous goats, if serpents envious
Cannot be damned, alas! why should I be?
Why should intent or reason, born in me,
Make sins, else equal, in me more heinous?
And, mercy being easy and glorious
To God, in his stern wrath why threatens he?
But who am I that dare dispute with thee
O God? Oh, of thine only worthy blood
And my tears, make a heavenly Lethean flood,
And drown in it my sin's black memory.
That thou remember them some claim as debt;
I think it mercy if thou wilt forget.

Death, be not proud, though some have called thee
Mighty and dreadful, for thou art not so;
For those whom thou think'st thou dost o'erthrow
Die not, poor Death, nor yet canst thou kill me.
From rest and sleep, which but thy pictures be,
Much pleasure; then from thee much more must flow,
And soonest our best men with thee do go,
Rest of their bones, and soul's delivery.
Thou art slave to fate, chance, kings, and desperate men,
And dost with poison, war, and sickness dwell,
And poppy or charms can make us sleep as well

8. Those who will be alive at the Second Coming (cf. Luke 9.27).
9. The Tree of Knowledge of Good and Evil, whose fruit was forbidden to Adam and Eve in Eden.
1. Traits commonly associated with these creatures.
2. In classical mythology, the waters of the river Lethe in the underworld caused total forgetfulness.
3. Cf. Jeremiah 31.34: "I will forgive their iniquity, and I will remember their sins no more."
4. i.e., to find rest for their bones and freedom ("delivery") for their souls.
And better than thy stroke; why swell'st thou then? puff with pride
One short sleep past, we wake eternally
And death shall be no more; Death, thou shalt die.

Spit in my face ye Jews, and pierce my side,
Buffet, and scoff, scourge, and crucify me,
For I have sinned, and sinned, and only he,
Who could do no iniquity, hath died:
But by my death cannot be satisfied
My sins, which pass the Jews’ impiety:
They killed once an inglorious man, but I
Crucify him daily, being now glorified.
Oh let me then, his strange love still admire:
Kings pardon, but he bore our punishment.
And Jacob came clothed in vile harsh attire
But to supplant, and with gainful intent:
God clothed himself in vile man's flesh, that so
He might be weak enough to suffer woe.

What if this present were the world's last night?
Mark in my heart, O soul, where thou dost dwell,
The picture of Christ crucified, and tell
Whether that countenance can thee affright.
Tears in his eyes quench the amazing light,
Blood fills his frowns, which from his pierced head fell;
And can that tongue adjudge thee unto hell
Which prayed forgiveness for his foes' fierce spite?
No, no; but as in my idolatry
I said to all my profane mistresses,
Beauty of pity, foulness only is
A sign of rigor; so I say to thee,
To wicked spirits are horrid shapes assigned,
This beauteous form assures a piteous mind.

Batter my heart, three-personed God; for you
As yet but knock, breathe, shine, and seek to mend;

5. Cf. 1 Corinthians 15.26: "The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death."
7. Kings may pardon crimes, but the King of Kings, Christ, bore the punishment due to our sins.
8. Jacob disguised himself in goatskins to gain from his blind father the blessing belonging to the firstborn son, his brother Esau (Genesis 27.1—36).
9. In Neoplatonic theory, beautiful features are the sign of a compassionate mind, while ugliness signifies the contrary.
That I may rise and stand, o'erthrow me, and bend
Your force to break, blow, burn, and make me new.

I, like an usurped town, to another due,
Labor to admit you, but O, to no end;
Reason, your viceroy\(^1\) in me, me should defend,
But is captived, and proves weak or untrue.
Yet dearly I love you, and would be loved fain,\(^0\) gladly
But am betrothed\(^2\) unto your enemy.
Divorce me, untie or break that knot again;
Take me to you, imprison me, for I,
Except\(^3\) you en thrall me, never shall be free,
Nor ever chaste, except you ravish\(^3\) me.

Since she whom I loved hath paid her last debt\(^4\)
To Nature, and to hers, and my good is dead,
And her soul early into heaven ravished,
Wholly on heavenly things my mind is set.

Here the admiring her my mind did whet
To seek thee, God; so streams do show the head,\(^0\) source
But though I have found thee, and thou my thirst hast fed,
A holy thirsty dropsy\(^6\) melts me yet.
But why should I beg more love, whenas thou
Dost woo my soul, for hers offering all thine:
And dost not only fear lest I allow
My love to saints and angels, things divine,
But in thy tender jealousy dost doubt\(^0\) fear
Lest the world, flesh, yea, devil put thee out.

Show me, dear Christ, thy spouse\(^5\) so bright and clear.
What! is it she which on the other shore
Goes richly painted? or which, robbed and tore,
Laments and mourns in Germany and here?

Sleeps she a thousand, then peeps up one year?
Is she self-truth, and errs? now new, now outwore?
Doth she, and did she, and shall she evermore
On one, on seven, or on no hill appear?

1. The governor in your stead.
2. Humanity's relationship with God has been described in terms of marriage and adultery from the time of the Hebrew prophets.
3. Rape, also overwhelm with wonder. "En thrall": enslave, also enchant.
4. Donne's wife died in 1617 at the age of thirty-three, having just given birth to her twelfth child. This very personal sonnet and the following two survive in a single manuscript discovered only in 1892.
5. The church is commonly called the bride of Christ. Cf. Revelation 19.7—8: "The marriage of the Lamb is come, and his wife hath made herself ready. And to her was granted that she should be arrayed in fine linen, clean and white."
6. I.e., the painted woman (the Church of Rome) or the ravished virgin (the Lutheran and Calvinist churches in Germany and England).
7. The church on one hill is probably Solomon's temple on Mount Moriah; that on seven hills is the Church of Rome; that on no hill is the Presbyterian church of Geneva.
Dwells she with us, or like adventuring knights
First travel we to seek, and then make love?
Betray, kind husband, thy spouse to our sights,
And let mine amorous soul court thy mild dove,
Who is most true and pleasing to thee then
When she is embraced and open to most men. 8

Oh, to vex me, contraries meet in one:
Inconstancy unnaturally hath begot
A constant habit; that when I would not
I change in vows, and in devotion.
5 As humorous is my contrition
As my profane love, and as soon forgot:
As riddlingly distempered, cold and hot,
As praying, as mute, as infinite, as none.
I durst not view heaven yesterday; and today
In prayers, and flattering speeches I court God:
Tomorrow I quake with true fear of his rod.
So my devout fits come and go away
Like a fantastic ague: 1 save that here
Those are my best days, when I shake with fear.

Good Friday, 1613. Riding Westward

Let man's soul be a sphere, and then, in this,
The intelligence that moves, devotion is, 1
And as the other spheres, by being grown
Subject to foreign motions, lose their own,
5 And being by others hurried every day,
Scarce in a year their natural form obey;
Pleasure or business, so, our souls admit
For' their first mover, and are whirled by it.
Hence is't, that I am carried towards the West
10 This day, when my soul's form bends toward the East.
There I should see a Sun 3 by rising, set,
And by that setting endless day beget:

8. The final lines wittily rework, with startling sexual associations, Song of Solomon 5.2: "Open to me, my sister, my love, my dove, my undefiled." That biblical book was often interpreted as the song of love between Christ and the church.
9. Arising from the unbalanced humors, inexplicably changeable.
1. A fever, attended with paroxysms of hot and cold and trembling fits. "Fantastic": capricious, extravagant.
1. As angelic intelligences guide the celestial spheres, so devotion is or should be the guiding principle of the soul.
2. Their true moving principle or intelligence. The orbit of the celestial spheres was thought to be governed by an unmoving outermost sphere, the primus mobile, or first mover (line 8), but sometimes outside influences ("foreign motions," line 4) deflected the spheres from their correct orbits.
3. The "sun" / "Son" pun was an ancient one. Christ the Son of God "set" when he rose on the Cross, and that setting (death) gave rise to the Christian era and the promise of immortality.
But that Christ on this cross did rise and fall,
Sin had eternally benighted all.
Yet dare I almost be glad I do not see
That spectacle, of too much weight for me.
Who sees God's face, that is self-life, must die;¹
What a death were it then to see God die?
It made his own lieutenant,² Nature, shrink;
Could I behold those hands which span the poles,
And tune³ all spheres at once, pierced with those holes?
Could I behold that endless height which is Zenith to us, and t'our antipodes,⁴ Humbled below us? Or that blood which is
The seat⁵ of all our souls, if not of his,
Make dirt of dust, or that flesh which was worn
By God for his apparel, ragg'd and torn?
If on these things I durst not look, durst I
Upon his miserable mother cast mine eye,
Who was God's partner here, and furnished thus
Half of that sacrifice which ransomed us?
Though these things, as I ride, be from⁶ mine eye,
They are present yet unto my memory,
For that looks towards them; and thou look'st towards me,
0 Savior, as thou hang'st upon the tree.
I turn my back to thee but to receive
Corrections,⁷ till thy mercies bid thee leave.⁸
O think me worth thine anger; punish me;
Burn off my rusts and my deformity;
Restore thine image so much, by thy grace,
That thou may' st know me, and I'll turn my face.

A Hymn to Christ, at the Author's Last Going into Germany¹

In what torn ship soever I embark,
That ship shall be my emblem of thy ark;⁹
What sea soever swallow me, that flood
Shall be to me an emblem of thy blood;
Though thou with clouds of anger do disguise
Thy face, yet through that mask I know those eyes,
Which, though they turn away sometimes, they never will despise.

I sacrifice this island¹⁰ unto thee,
And all whom I loved there, and who loved me;

1. Donne went to Germany in 1619 as chaplain to the Earl of Doncaster. The mission was a diplomatic one, to the king and queen of Bohemia, King James's son-in-law and daughter, who at that time were mainstays of the Protestant cause on the Continent.

4. God told Moses, "Thou canst not see my face, for there shall no man see me, and live" (Exodus 33.20).
5. An earthquake and eclipse supposedly accompanied the Crucifixion (Matthew 27.45, 51). Cf. Isaiah 66.1: "Thus saith the Lord, The heaven is my throne, and the earth is my footstool."

HYMN TO GOD MY GOD, IN MY SICKNESS

10 When I have put our seas twixt them and me,
Put thou thy sea\textsuperscript{1} betwixt my sins and thee.
As the tree's sap doth seek the root below
In winter, in my winter now I go
Where none but thee, th' eternal root of true love, I may know.

15 Nor thou nor thy religion dost control\textsuperscript{2} censure, restrain
The amorousness of an harmonious soul,
But thou wouldst have that love thyself; as thou
Art jealous, Lord, so I am jealous now.
Thou lov'st not, till from loving more\textsuperscript{3} thou free

My soul; whoever gives, takes liberty;
Oh, if thou car'st not whom I love, alas, thou lov'st not me.

Seal then this bill of my divorce to all
On whom those fainter beams of love did fall;
Marry those loves which in youth scattered be

On fame, wit, hopes (false mistresses) to thee.

Churches are best for prayer that have least light:
To see God only, I go out of sight,
And to 'scape stormy days, I choose an everlasting night.

Hymn to God My God, in My Sickness\textsuperscript{1}

Since I am coming to that holy room
Where, with thy choir of saints for evermore,
I shall be made thy music; as I come
I tune the instrument here at the door,
And what I must do then, think now before.\textsuperscript{4}

Whilst my physicians by their love are grown
Cosmographers, and I their map, who lie
Flat on this bed, that by them may be shown
That this is my southwest discovery\textsuperscript{5}

I joy, that in these straits, I see my West;
For, though their currents yield return to none,
What shall my West hurt me? As West and East
In all flat maps (and I am one) are one.\textsuperscript{6}

Is the Pacific Sea my home? Or are
The Eastern riches?\textsuperscript{7} Is Jerusalem? Cathay, China

\textsuperscript{1} Though Izaak Walton, Donne's friend and biographer, assigns this poem to the last days of his life, it was probably written during another illness, in December 1623.

\textsuperscript{2} This and the previous poem are less hymns (songs of praise) than meditations preparing (tuning the instrument) for such hymns.

\textsuperscript{3} South is the region of heat, west the region of sunset and death.

\textsuperscript{4} Through the straits of fever, with a pun on straits as sufferings, rigors, and a geographical reference to the Strait of Magellan.

\textsuperscript{5} If a flat map is pasted on a round globe, west and east meet.
A Hymn to God the Father

Wilt thou forgive that sin where I begun,
Which is my sin, though it were done before?
Wilt thou forgive that sin through which I run,
And do run still, though still I do deplore?
When thou hast done, thou hast not done,
For I have more.

Wilt thou forgive that sin by which I have won
Others to sin? and made my sin their door?
Wilt thou forgive that sin which I did shun
A year or two, but wallowed in a score?
When thou hast done, thou hast not done,
For I have more.

I have a sin of fear, that when I have spun
My last thread, I shall perish on the shore;
Swear by thy self, that at my death thy Son
Shall shine as he shines now and heretofore;
And, having done that, thou hast done,
I fear no more.

6. Anian, a strait on the west coast of America, shown on early maps as separating America from Asia.
7. The three sons of Noah by whom the world was repopulated after the Flood (Genesis 10). The descendants of Japhet were thought to inhabit Europe; those of Cham (Ham), Africa; and those of Shem, Asia.
8. Adam and Christ. Legend had it that Christ's cross was erected on the spot, or at least in the region, where the tree forbidden to Adam in Eden had stood.
9. In his blood, also in his kingly robes.
1. This hymn was used as a congregational hymn. Walton tells us that Donne wrote it during his illness of 1623, had it set to music, and was delighted to hear it performed (as it frequently was) by the choir of St. Paul's Cathedral.
2. I.e., he inherits the original sin of Adam and Eve.
3. In the refrains, Donne puns on his own name and may pun on his wife's maiden name, Ann More.
4. Some manuscripts read "have."
From Biathanatos

Beza,² a man as eminent and illustrious in the full glory and noon of learning as others were in the dawning and morning, when any the least sparkle was notorious, confessed of himself that only for the anguish of a scurf,³ which overran his head, he had once drowned himself from the Miller's Bridge in Paris, if his uncle by chance had not then come that way. I have often such a sickly inclination. And whether it be because I had my first breeding and conversation with men of a suppressed and afflicted religion,⁴ and hungry of an imagined martyrdom; or that the common enemy find that door worse locked against him in me;⁵ or that there be a perplexity and flexibility in the doctrine itself; or because my conscience ever assures me that no rebellious grudging at God's gifts, nor other sinful concurrence accompanies these thoughts in me; or that a brave scorn, or that a faint cowardliness beget it, whenever any affliction assails me, methinks I have the keys of my prison in mine own hand, and no remedy presents itself so soon to my heart as mine own sword. Often meditation of this has won me to a charitable interpretation of their action who die so, and provoked me a little to watch and exagitate⁶ their reasons, which pronounce so peremptory judgments upon them.

Meditation 4

Medicusque vocatur.
The physician is sent for.²

It is too little to call man a little world; except God, man is a diminutive to nothing.³ Man consists of more pieces, more parts, than the world; than the world doth, nay, than the world is. And if those pieces were extended and stretched out in man as they are in the world, man would be the giant and the world the dwarf; the world but the map, and the man the world. If all the veins in our bodies were extended to rivers, and all the sinews to veins of mines, and all the muscles that lie upon one another to hills, and all the bones to quarries of stones, and all the other pieces to the proportion of those which correspond to them in the world, the air would be too little for this orb of man to move in, the firmament would be but enough for this star. For as the whole world hath nothing to which something in man doth not answer, so hath man many pieces of which the whole world hath no representation. Enlarge this meditation upon this great world, man, so far as to consider the immensity of the creatures this world produces. Our creatures are our thoughts, creatures that are born giants, that reach from east to west, from earth to heaven, that do not only bestride all the sea and land, but span the sun and firmament at once: my thoughts reach all, comprehend all.

Inexplicable mystery! I their creator am in a close prison, in a sick bed, anywhere, and any one of my creatures, my thoughts, is with the sun, and beyond the sun, overtakes the sun, and overgoes the sun in one pace, one step, everywhere. And then as the other world produces serpents and vipers, malignant and venomous creatures, and worms and caterpillars, that endeavor to devour that world which produces them, and monsters compiled and complicated of divers parents and kinds, so this world, our selves, produces all these in us, in producing diseases and sicknesses of all those sorts; venomous and infectious diseases, feeding and consuming diseases, and manifold and entangled diseases made up of many several ones. And can the other world name so many venomous, so many consuming, so many monstrous creatures, as we can diseases of all these kinds? O miserable abundance, O beggarly riches! How much do we lack of having remedies for every disease, when as yet we have not names for them?

But we have a Hercules against these giants, these monsters: that is the physician. He musters up all the forces of the other world to succor this, all nature to relieve man. We have the physician but we are not the physician. Here we shrink in our proportion, sink in our dignity in respect of very mean creatures who are physicians to themselves. The hart that is pursued and wounded, they say, knows an herb which, being eaten, throws off the arrow: a strange kind of vomit. The dog that pursues it, though he be subject to sickness, even proverbially knows his grass that recovers him. And it may be true that the druggar is as near to man as to other creatures; it may be that obvious and present simples, easy to be had, would cure him; but the apothecary is not so near him, nor the physician so near him, as they two are to other creatures. Man hath not that innate instinct to apply these natural medicines to his present danger, as those inferior creatures have. He is not his own apothecary, his own physician, as they are. Call back therefore thy meditation again, and bring it down. What's become of man's great extent and proportion, when himself shrinks himself and consumes himself to a handful of dust? What's become of his soaring thoughts, his compassing thoughts, when himself brings himself to the ignorance, to the thoughtlessness, of the grave? His diseases are his own, but the physician is not; he hath them at home, but he must send for the physician.

Meditation 17

Nunc lento sonitu dicunt, morieris.

Now this bell tolling softly for another, says to me, Thou must die.

Perchance he for whom this bell tolls may be so ill as that he knows not it tolls for him; and perchance I may think myself so much better than I am, as that they who are about me and see my state may have caused it to toll for me, and I know not that. The church is catholic, universal, so are all her actions; all that she does belongs to all. When she baptizes a child, that action concerns me; for that child is thereby connected to that head which is my head too, and ingrafted into that body whereof I am a member. And when she buries a man, that action concerns me: all mankind is of one author and is one volume; when one man dies, one chapter is not torn out of the book, but translated into a better language; and every chapter must be so translated. God employs several translators; some pieces are translated by age, some by sickness, some by war, some by justice; but God's hand is in every translation, and his hand shall bind up all our scattered leaves again for that library where every book shall lie open to one another. As therefore the bell that rings to a sermon calls not upon the preacher only, but upon the congregation to come, so this bell calls us all; but how much more me, who am brought so near the door by this sickness. There was a contention as far as a suit (in which piety and dignity, religion and estimation, were mingled) which of the religious orders should ring to prayers first in the morning; and it was determined that they should ring first that rose earliest. If we understand aright the dignity of this bell that tolls for our evening prayer, we would be glad to make it ours by rising early, in that application, that it might be ours as well as his whose indeed it is. The bell doth toll for him that thinks it doth; and though it intermit again, yet from that minute that that occasion wrought upon him, he is united to God. Who casts not up his eye to the sun when it rises? But who takes off his eye from a comet when that breaks out? Who bends not his ear to any bell which upon any occasion rings? But who can remove it from that bell which is passing a piece of himself out of this world? No man is an island, entire of itself; every man is a piece of the continent, a part of the main. If a clod be washed away by the sea, Europe is the less, as well as if a promontory were, as well as if a manor of thy friend's or of thine own were. Any man's death diminishes me, because I am involved in mankind; and therefore never send to know for whom the bell tolls; it tolls for thee.

Neither can we call this a begging of misery or a borrowing of misery, as though we were not miserable enough of ourselves but must fetch in more from the next house, in taking upon us the misery of our neighbors. Truly it were an excusable covetousness if we did; for affliction is a treasure, and scarce any man hath enough of it. No man hath affliction enough that is not matured and ripened by it, and made fit for God by that affliction. If a man carry treasure in bullion, or in a wedge of gold, and have none coined into current moneys, his treasure will not defray him as he travels. Tribulation is treasure in the nature of it, but it is not current money in the use of it, except we get nearer and nearer our home, heaven, by it. Another man may be sick too, and sick to death, and this affliction may lie in his bowels as gold in a mine and be of no use to him; but this bell that tells me of his affliction digs out and applies that gold to me, if by this consideration of another’s danger I take mine own into contemplation and so secure myself by making my recourse to my God, who is our only security.

From Ex-postulation 19

[THE LANGUAGE OF GOD]

My God, my God, thou art a direct God, may I not say a literal God, a God that wouldst be understood literally and according to the plain sense of all that thou sayest. But thou art also (Lord, I intend it to thy glory, and let no profane misinterpreter abuse it to thy diminution), thou art a figurative, a metaphorical God too: a God in whose words there is such a height of figures, such voyages, such peregrinations to fetch remote and precious metaphors, such extensions, such spreadings, such curtains of allegories, such third heavens of hyperboles, so harmonious elocutions, so retired and so reserved expressions, so commanding persuasions, so persuading commandments, such sinews even in thy milk and such things in thy words, as all profane⁹ authors seem of the seed of the serpent that creeps; thou art the dove that flies. Oh, what words but thine can express the inexpressible texture and composition of thy word; in which, to one man, that argument that binds his faith to believe that to be the word of God is the reverent simplicity of the word, and to another, the majesty of the word; and in which two men, equally pious, may meet, and one wonder that all should not understand it, and the other as much that any man should. So, Lord, thou givest us the same earth to labor on and to lie in; a house and a grave of the same earth; so, Lord, thou givest us the same word for our satisfaction and for our inquisition,¹ for our instruction and for our admiration too. For there are places that thy servants Jerome and Augustine would scarce believe (when they grew warm by mutual letters) of one another that they understood them, and yet both Jerome and Augustine call upon persons whom they knew to be far weaker than they thought one another (old women and young maids) to read thy Scriptures, without confining them to these or those places.²

Neither art thou thus a figurative, a metaphorical God, in thy word only, but in thy works too. The style of thy works, the phrase of thine actions, is metaphorical. The institution of thy whole worship in the old law was a continual allegory; types and figures³ overspread all, and figures flowed into figures, and poured themselves out into further figures. Circumcision carried a figure of baptism,⁴ and baptism carries a figure of that purity which we shall have in perfection in the New Jerusalem. Neither didst thou speak and work in this language only in the time of the prophets; but since thou spakest in thy son it is so too. How often, how much more often, doth thy son call himself man? How much oftener doth he exhibit a metaphorical Christ than a real, a literal? This hath occasioned thine ancient servants, whose delight it was to write after thy copy, to proceed the same way in their expositions of the Scriptures, and in their composing both of public liturgies and of private prayers to thee, to make their accesses to thee in such a kind of language as thou wast pleased to speak to them, in a figurative, in a metaphorical language; in which manner I am bold to call the comfort which I receive now in this sickness, in the indication of the concoction and maturity thereof, in certain clouds and residences which the physicians observe, a discovering of land from sea after a long and tempestuous voyage. * * *

From Death's Duel

[Donne's last sermon, on Psalm 68.20: "And unto God the Lord belong the issues of Death"—i.e., from death.]

* * * First, then, we consider this exitus mortis, to be liberatio a morte, that with God, the Lord are the issues of death, and therefore in all our deaths, and the deadly calamities of this life, we may justly hope of a good issue from him; and all our periods and transitions in this life, are so many passages from death to death. Our very birth and entrance into this life is exitus a morte, an issue from death, for in our mother's womb we are dead so, as that we do not know we live, not so much as we do in our sleep, neither is there any grave so close, or so putrid a prison, as the womb would be unto us, if we stayed in it beyond our time, or died there before our time. In the grave the worms do not kill us, we breed and feed, and then kill the worms which we ourselves produced. In the womb the dead child kills the mother that conceived it, and is a murderer, nay a parricide, even after it is dead. And if we be not dead so in the womb, so as that being dead, we kill her that gave us our first life, our life of vegetation, yet we are dead so, as David's Idols are dead. In the womb we have eyes and see not, ears and hear not. There in the womb we are fitted for works of darkness, all the while deprived of light: And there in the womb we are taught cruelty, by being fed with blood, and may be damned, though we be never born. * * *

1. The printed version of this sermon (1632) has the subtitle "A Consolation to the Soul, against the dying life, and living death of the body." Donne's friend and executor Henry King (later bishop of Chichester) supplied the further information that the sermon was delivered at Whitehall, before King Charles, that it was delivered only a few days before Donne's death, and that it was fitly styled
"the author's own funeral sermon." Donne was a powerful and popular preacher, and this sermon was especially moving according to the testimony of many auditors, including Izaak Walton (see his account of Donne on his deathbed, p. 1309).
Besides the personal drama of the preacher himself visibly ill and perhaps dying, the audience must have responded to the almost unbearably graphic analysis of the forms of death and decay—a theme that often preoccupied Donne. As in his poems, the language is personal, rich in learning and curious lore, dazzling in verbal ingenuity and metaphor. As in the Devotions, the sentences are long, sinuous, and elaborate. Typically, he uses a numer of Latin phrases, but almost always translates or paraphrases them immediately.

http://englishworld20111.wordpress.com/
But then this exitus a morte is but introitus in mortem, this issue, this deliverance from that death, the death of the womb, is an entrance, a delivering over to another death, the manifold deaths of this world. We have a winding-sheet\(^5\) in our mother’s womb, which grows with us from our conception, and we come into the world wound up in that winding-sheet, for we come to seek a grave. * * *

Now this which is so singularly peculiar to him [Christ], that his flesh should not see corruption, at his second coming, his coming to Judgment, shall extend to all then alive, their flesh shall not see corruption. . . . But for us that die now and sleep in the state of the dead, we must all pass this posthume death, this death after death, nay this death after burial, this dissolution after dissolution, this death of corruption and putrefaction, of vermiculation and incineration, of dissolution and dispersion in and from the grave. When those bodies that have been the children of royal parents, and the parents of royal children, must say with Job, to corruption, thou art my father, and to the worm thou art my mother and my sister.\(^6\) Miserable riddle, when the same worm must be my mother, and my sister, and myself. Miserable incest, when I must be married to my mother and my sister, beget, and bear that worm which is all that miserable penury; when my mouth shall be filled with dust, and the worm shall feed, and feed sweetly upon me,\(^7\) when the ambitious man shall have no satisfaction, if the poorest alive tread upon him, nor the poorest receive any contentment in being made equal to princes, for they shall be equal but in dust. One dies at his full strength, being wholly at ease and in quiet, and another dies in the bitterness of his soul, and never eats with pleasure, but they lie down alike in the dust, and the worm covers them.\(^8\) The worm covers them in Job, and in Isaiah, it covers them and is spread under them, the worm is spread under thee, and the worm covers thee.\(^9\) There’s the mats and the carpets that lie under, and there’s the state and the canopy,\(^1\) that hangs over the greatest of the sons of men. Even those bodies that were the temple of the Holy Ghost, come to this dilapidation, to ruin, to rubbish, to dust: even the Israel of the Lord, and Jacob himself hath no other specification, no other denomination, but that vermis Jacob, thou worm of Jacob.\(^2\) Truly the consideration of this posthume death, this death after burial, that after God (with whom are the issues of death) hath delivered me from the death of the womb, by bringing me into the world, and from the manifold deaths of the world, by laying me in the grave, I must die again in an incineration of this flesh, and in a dispersion of that dust. * * *

There we leave you in that blessed dependency, to hang upon him that hangs upon the Cross, there bathe in his tears, there suck at his wounds, and lie down in peace in his grave, till he vouchsafe you a resurrection, and an ascension into that Kingdom, which he hath purchased for you, with the inestimable price of his incorruptible blood. Amen.
IZAAK WALTON
1593-1683

Walton's Life of Donne, first published in 1640 as a biographical introduction to Donne's collected sermons, was the most artistic and accurate English biography to date. Walton drew on his personal knowledge of and friendship with Donne in his later years, talked with others who knew him, and looked over his poems, letters, and papers; but he enlivens his narrative with anecdotes that are often questionably accurate, and he quotes conversations that he could not have heard. While Walton made an effort to research his facts, his is not a scholarly biography, written in accord with the canons of evidence that have evolved since Walton's time. Rather, it is shaped by the great models of life-writing to which everyone in that age looked: Plutarch's Lives, portraying subjects as examples of virtue and vice; and hagiography or saints' lives exemplified by Augustine's autobiographical Confessions (ca. 400) and by Foxe's Book of Martyrs. The influence of hagiography on Walton is evident as he explicitly reads Donne's life against that of St. Augustine: rakish in youth and saintly in age. It is especially evident in the passage below, on Donne's remarkable preparations for death. It is no accident that this biography, published just as religious tensions were growing acute and civil war loomed on the horizon, represented Donne as a "saint" of Anglicanism. The other lives Walton wrote—of George Herbert, Richard Hooker, Henry Wotton, and Bishop Robert Sanderson—presented them as exemplary Anglicans worthy to the triumphant Anglican church after the Restoration.

A prosperous merchant in the clothing trade, Walton lived for several years in the parish of St. Dunstans in the west, where Donne was vicar. He was a staunch royalist, credited with smuggling one of Prince Charles's jewels out of the country, but his life was otherwise unremarkable, save for his wildly popular book on fishing, The Complete Angler (1653). Written during the Cromwellian ascendancy, this series of dialogues between a fisherman and a hunter (and briefly a falconer) creates for Walton a fascinating surrogate self, Piscator, the angler. Setting the representative values of fishermen—moderation, peacefulness, generosity, thankfulness, contemplation—over against the contrasting values assigned to hunters and falconers, Walton makes "angling" stand in for the ceremonious, peaceful, ordered life of royalist Anglicans, now so violently disrupted. As a stylist Walton writes prose that is easy and colloquial but graceful and polished.

From The Life of Dr. John Donne

[Donne on his deathbed]

It is observed that a desire of glory or commendation is rooted in the very nature of man; and that those of the severest and most mortified lives, though they may become so humble as to banish self-flattery, and such weeds as naturally grow there; yet they have not been able to kill this desire of glory, but that like our radical heat, it will both live and die with us; and many think it should do so; and we want not sacred examples to justify the desire of having our memory to outlive our lives; which I mention, because Dr. Donne, by the persuasion of Dr. Fox, easily yielded at this very time to have a monument made for him; but Dr. Fox undertook not to persuade him how, or what monument it should be; that was left to Dr. Donne himself.

A monument being resolved upon, Dr. Donne sent for a carver to make for him in wood the figure of an urn, giving him directions for the compass and height of it; and to bring with it a board, of the just\(^5\) height of his body. These being got, then without delay a choice painter was got to be in readiness to draw his picture, which was taken as followeth. Several charcoal fires being first made in his large study, he brought with him into that place his winding-sheet in his hand, and having put off all his clothes, had this sheet put on him, and so tied with knots at his head and feet, and his hands so placed, as dead bodies are usually fitted to be shrouded and put into their coffin or grave. Upon this urn he thus stood with his eyes shut and with so much of the sheet turned aside as might show his lean, pale, and deathlike face, which was purposely turned toward the east, from whence he expected the second coming of his and our savior Jesus. In this posture he was drawn at his just height; and when the picture was fully finished, he caused it to be set by his bedside, where it continued and became his hourly object till his death, and was then given to his dearest friend and executor Dr. Henry King,\(^6\) then chief residentiary of St. Paul's, who caused him to be thus carved in one entire piece of white marble, as it now stands in that church;\(^7\) and by Dr. Donne's own appointment, these words were to be affixed to it as his epitaph:

And now, having brought him through the many labyrinths and perplexities of a various life, even to the gates of death and the grave, my desire is he may rest till I have told my reader that I have seen many pictures of him in several habits and at several ages and in several postures; and I now mention this because I have seen one picture of him, drawn by a curious\(^9\) hand, at his age

On the 27th of November 1621, he was invested as dean of this church, and divested by death, the last day of March 1631. Here in the decline of ashes he looks to One whose name is the Rising Sun." 9. of eighteen, with his sword and what other adornments might then suit with the present fashions of youth and the giddy gaieties of that age;¹ and his motto then was—

How much shall I be changed,
Before I am changed!

And if that young and his now dying picture were at this time set together, every beholder might say, "Lord! how much is Dr. Donne already changed, before he is changed!" And the view of them might give my reader occasion to ask himself with some amazement, "Lord! how much may I also, that am now in health, be changed before I am changed; before this vile, this changeable body shall put off mortality!" and therefore to prepare for it. But this is not writ so much for my reader's memento² as to tell him that Dr. Donne would often in his private discourses, and often publicly in his sermons, mention the many changes both of his body and mind; especially of his mind from a vertiginous giddiness; and would as often say, "his great and most blessed change was from a temporal to a spiritual employment"; in which he was so happy, that he accounted the former part of his life to be lost; and the beginning of it to be from his first entering into sacred orders and serving his most merciful God at his altar.

Upon Monday after the drawing this picture, he took his last leave of his beloved study; and being sensible of his hourly decay, retired himself to his bedchamber; and that week sent at several³ times for many of his most considerable friends, with whom he took a solemn and deliberate farewell, commending to their considerations some sentences useful for the regulation of their lives; and then dismissed them, as good Jacob did his sons, with a spiritual benediction. The Sunday following, he appointed his servants, that if there were any business yet undone that concerned him or themselves, it should be prepared against Saturday next; for after that day he would not mix his thoughts with anything that concerned this world; nor ever did; but, as Job, so he "waited for the appointed day of his dissolution."⁴

And now he was so happy as to have nothing to do but to die, to do which he stood in need of no longer time; for he had studied it long and to so happy a perfection that in a former sickness he called God to witness, "he was that minute ready to deliver his soul into his hands, if that minute God would determine his dissolution."⁵ In that sickness he begged of God the constancy to be preserved in that estate forever; and his patient expectation to have his immortal soul disrobed from her garment of mortality makes me confident he now had a modest assurance that his prayers were then heard and his petition granted. He lay fifteen days earnestly expecting his hourly change; and in the last hour of his last day, as his body melted away and vaporized into spirit, his soul having, I verily believe, some revelation of the beatifical vision, he said,
"I were miserable if I might not die"; and after those words, closed many periods of his faint breath by saying often, "Thy kingdom come, thy will be done." His speech, which had long been his ready and faithful servant, left him not till the last minute of his life, and then forsook him, not to serve another master (for who speaks like him), but died before him; for that it was then become useless to him that now conversed with God on earth as angels are said to do in heaven, only by thoughts and looks. Being speechless, and seeing heaven by that illumination by which he saw it, he did, as St. Stephen, "look steadfastly into it, till he saw the Son of Man standing at the right hand of God his Father"; and being satisfied with this blessed sight, as his soul ascended and his last breath departed from him, he closed his own eyes; and then disposed his hands and body into such a posture as required not the least alteration by those that came to shroud him.

Thus variable, thus virtuous was the life; thus excellent, thus exemplary was the death of this memorable man.

He was buried in that place of St. Paul's Church which he had appointed for that use some years before his death; and by which he passed daily to pay his public devotions to almighty God (who was then served twice a day by a public form of prayer and praises in that place): but he was not buried privately, though he desired it; for, beside an unnumbered number of others, many persons of nobility, and of eminency for learning, who did love and honor him in his life, did show it at his death by a voluntary and sad attendance of his body to the grave, where nothing was so remarkable as a public sorrow.

To which place of his burial some mournful friends repaired, and, as Alexander the Great did to the grave of the famous Achilles, so they strewed his with an abundance of curious and costly flowers; which course they (who were never yet known) continued morning and evening for many days, not ceasing till the stones that were taken up in that church to give his body admission into the cold earth (now his bed of rest) were again by the mason's art so leveled and firmed as they had been formerly, and his place of burial undiscoverable to common view.

The next day after his burial, some unknown friend, some one of the many lovers and admirers of his virtue and learning, wrote this epitaph with a coal on the wall over his grave:

Reader! I am to let thee know,
Donne’s body only lies below;
For, could the grave his soul comprise,
Earth would be richer than the skies!

Nor was this all the honor done to his reverend ashes; for, as there be some persons that will not receive a reward for that for which God accounts himself a debtor, persons that dare trust God with their charity and without a witness; so there was by some grateful unknown friend that thought Dr. Donne’s memory ought to be perpetuated, an hundred marks sent to his two faithful friends and executors, towards the making of his monument. It was not for many years known by whom; but after the death of Dr. Fox, it was known that it was he that sent it; and he lived to see as lively a representation of his dead friend as marble can express: a statue indeed so like Dr. Donne, that (as his friend Sir Henry Wotton hath expressed himself) "it seems to breathe faintly, and posterity shall look upon it as a kind of artificial miracle."

8. Henry King and Dr. John Monfort.
He was of stature moderately tall; of a straight and equally proportioned body, to which all his words and actions gave an unexpressible addition of comeliness.

The melancholy and pleasant humor were in him so contempered that each gave advantage to the other, and made his company one of the delights of mankind.

His fancy was unimitably high, equaled only by his great wit, both being made useful by a commanding judgment.

His aspect was cheerful, and such as gave a silent testimony of a clear knowing soul, and of a conscience at peace with itself.

His melting eye showed that he had a soft heart, full of noble compassion; of too brave a soul to offer injuries and too much a Christian not to pardon them in others.

He did much contemplate (especially after he entered into his sacred calling) the mercies of almighty God, the immortality of the soul, and the joys of heaven; and would often say, in a kind of sacred ecstasy, "Blessed be God that he is God, only and divinely like himself."

He was by nature highly passionate, but more apt to relit at the excesses of it. A great lover of the offices of humanity, and of so merciful a spirit that he never beheld the miseries of mankind without pity and relief.

He was earnest and unwearied in the search of knowledge, with which his vigorous soul is now satisfied, and employed in a continual praise of that God that first breathed it into his active body: that body, which once was a temple of the Holy Ghost and is now become a small quantity of Christian dust:

But I shall see it reanimated.

Aemilia Lanyer was the first Englishwoman to publish a substantial volume of original poems and the first to make an overt bid for patronage. She was the daughter to an Italian family of court musicians who came to England in the reign of Henry VIII; they may have been Christianized Jews or, alternatively, Protestants forced to flee Catholic persecution in their native land. Some information about Lanyer's life has come down to us from the notebooks of the astrologer and fortune-teller Simon Forman, whom Lanyer consulted in 1597. Educated in the aristocratic household of the Countess of Kent, in her late teens and early twenties Lanyer was the mistress of Queen Elizabeth's lord chamberlain, Henry Carey, Lord Hunsdon. The wealthy Hunsdon, forty-five years her senior, was a notable patron of the arts—Shakespeare's company performed under his auspices in the 1590s—and he maintained his mistress in luxury. Yet when she became pregnant by Hunsdon at age twenty-three, she was married off to Alfonso Lanyer, one of another family of gentleman musicians attached to the courts of Elizabeth I and James I. Lanyer's fortunes declined after her marriage. Lanyer's poetry suggests that she resided for some time in the bookish and cultivated household of Margaret Clifford, Countess of Cumberland, and Margaret's young daughter Anne. Lanyer reports receiving there encouragement in learning, piety, and poetry, as well as, perhaps, some support in the unusual venture of offering her poems for publication. Yet her efforts to find some niche at the Jacobean court came to nothing.

Lanyer's single volume of poems, Salve Dens Rex Iudaeorum (1611) has a decided feminist thrust. A series of dedicatory poems to former and would-be patronesses praises them as a community of contemporary good women. The title poem, a meditation on Christ's Passion that at times invites comparison with Donne and Crashaw, contrasts the good women in the Passion story with the weak, evil men portrayed there. It also incorporates a defense of Eve and all women. That defense and Lanyer's prose epistle, "To the Virtuous Reader," are spirited contributions to the so-called querelle des femmes, or "debate about women," a massive body of writings in several genres and languages: some examples include Chaucer's Wife of Bath's Prologue and Tale, Shakespeare's Taming of the Shrew, Joseph Swetnam's attack on "lewd, idle, froward, and unconstant women" and Rachel Speght's reply. The final poem in Lanyer's volume, "The Description of Cookham," celebrates in elegiac mode the Crown estate occasionally occupied by the Countess of Cumberland, portraying it as an Edenic paradise of women, now lost. The poem may or may not have been written before Ben Jonson's "To Penshurst"—commonly thought to have inaugurated the "country-house" genre in English literature—but Lanyer's poem can claim priority in publication. The poems' different conceptions of the role of women in the ideal social order make an instructive comparison.

To the Doubtful Reader²

Gentle Reader, if thou desire to be resolved, why I give this title, Salve Deus Rex Iudaeorum, know for certain, that it was delivered unto me in sleep many years before I had any intent to write in this manner, and was quite out of my memory, until I had written the Passion of Christ, when immediately it came into my remembrance, what I had dreamed long before. And thinking it a significant token³ that I was appointed to perform this work, I gave the very same words I received in sleep as the fittest title I could devise for this book.

1. "Hail God, King of the Jews," a variant of the inscription affixed to Christ's cross.
2. Lanyer placed this explanation at the end of her volume, not the beginning, as a further authorizing gesture. Invoking the familiar genre of the dream vision, she lays claim to poetic, even divine, inspiration. "Doubtful": doubting.
4. The first of eight poems addressed to court ladies whom Lanyer sought to attract as patrons; such poems commonly preface literary works by male courtier-poets, though usually not in such numbers. These poems are followed by a prose address to her actual patron, the Countess of Cumberland, and then by the prose epistle included here, "To the Virtuous Reader." This first poem addresses Anne of Denmark, James I's queen, patron of writers such as Ben Jonson and Samuel Daniel, and mother of Prince Henry, Princess Elizabeth, and the future Charles I.
Read it fair queen, though it defective be,
Your excellence can grace both it and me.

Behold, great queen, fair Eve's apology,
Which I have writ in honor of your sex,
And do refer unto your majesty
To judge if it agree not with the text:
And if it do, why are poor women blamed,
Or by more faulty men so much defamed.

My weak distempered brain and feeble spirits,
Which all unlearned have adventured, this
To write of Christ, and of his sacred merits,
Desiring that this book her hands may kiss:
And though I be unworthy of that grace,
Yet let her blessed thoughts this book embrace.

And pardon me, fair queen, though I presume
To do that which so many better can;
Not that I learning to myself assume,
Or that I would compare with any man:
But as they are scholars, and by art do write,
So Nature yields my soul a solemn, serious delight.

And since all arts at first from Nature came,
That goodly creature, mother of perfection
Whom Jove's almighty hand at first did frame,
Taking both her and hers in his protection:
Why should not she now grace my barren muse,
And in a woman all defects excuse.

So peerless princess humbly I desire,
That your great wisdom would vouchsafe t'omit
All faults; and pardon if my spirits retire,
Leaving to aim at what they cannot hit:
To write your worth, which no pen can express,
Were but to eclipse your fame, and make it less.

To the Virtuous Reader

Often have I heard, that it is the property of some women, not only to emulate the virtues and perfections of the rest, but also by all their powers of ill speaking, to eclipse the brightness of their deserved fame: now contrary to their custom, which men I hope unjustly lay to their charge, I have written this small volume, or little book, for the general use of all virtuous ladies and gentlewomen of this kingdom; and in commendation of some particular persons of our own sex, such as for the most part, are so well known to myself, and others, that I dare undertake Fame dares not to call any better. And this have I done, to make known to the world, that all women deserve not to be blamed though some forgetting they are women themselves, and in danger to be condemned by the words of their own mouths, fall into so great an error, as to speak unadvisedly against the rest of their sex; which if it be true, I am persuaded they can show their own imperfection in nothing more: and therefore could wish (for their own ease, modesties, and credit) they would refer such points of folly, to be practiced by evil-disposed men, who forgetting they were born of women, nourished of women, and that if it were not by the means of women, they would be quite extinguished out of the world, and a final end of them all, do like vipers deface the wombs wherein they were bred, only to give way and utterance to their want of discretion and goodness. Such as these, were they that dishonored Christ’s his apostles and prophets, putting them to shameful deaths. Therefore we are not to regard any imputations, that they undeservedly lay upon us, no otherwise than to make use of them to our own benefits, as spur to virtue, making us fly all occasions that may color their unjust speeches to pass current. Especially considering that they have tempted even the patience of God himself, who gave power to wise and virtuous women, to bring down their pride and arrogancy. As was cruel Cesarus by the discreet counsel of noble Deborah, judge and prophetess of Israel: and resolution of Jael wife of Heber the Kenite: wicked Haman, by the divine prayers and prudent proceedings of beautiful Hester: blasphemous Holofernes, by the invincible courage, rare wisdom, and confident carriage of Judith: and the unjust Judges, by the innocency of chaste Susanna: with infinite others, which for brevity sake I will omit. As also in respect it pleased our lord and savior Jesus Christ, without the assistance of man, being free from original and all other sins, from the time of his conception, till the hour of his death, to be begotten of a woman, born of a woman, nourished of a woman, obedient to a woman; and that he healed women, pardoned women, comforted women: yea, even when he was in his greatest agony and bloody sweat, going to be crucified, and also in the last hour of his death, took care to dispose of a woman: after his resurrection, appeared first to a woman, sent a woman to declare his most glorious resurrection to the rest of his disciples. Many other examples I could allege of divers faithful and virtuous women, who have in all ages not only been confessors but also endured most cruel martyrdom for their faith in Jesus Christ. All which is sufficient to enforce all good Christians and honorable-minded men to speak reverently of our sex, and especially of all virtuous and good women. To the modest censures of both which, I refer these my imperfect

Eve's Apology in Defense of Women

Now Pontius Pilate is to judge the cause of faultless Jesus, who before him stands, Who neither hath offended prince, nor laws, Although he now be brought in woful bands.

O noble governor, make thou yet a pause, Do not in innocent blood inbrue thy hands; But hear the words of thy most worthy wife, Who sends to thee, to beg her Savior's life.

Let barbarous cruelty far depart from thee, And in true justice take affliction's part; Open thine eyes, that thou the truth may'st see. Do not the thing that goes against thy heart, Condemn not him that must thy Savior be; But view his holy life, his good desert.

Let not us women glory in men's fall, Who had power given to overrule us all. Till now your indiscretion sets us free. And makes our former fault much less appear; Our mother Eve, who tasted of the tree, Giving to Adam what she held most dear, Was simply good, and had no power to see; The after-coming harm did not appear: The subtle serpent that our sex betrayed Before our fall so sure a plot had laid.

That undiscerning ignorance perceived No guile or craft that was by him intended; For had she known of what we were bereaved, To his request she had not condescended, But she, poor soul, by cunning was deceived;

5. Lanyer supplies the title for this subsection of the Sahe Deus on her title page. Eve is not, however, the speaker; rather, the narrator presents Eve's "Apology" (defense of her actions), which is also a defense of all women. She does so by means of an apostrophe (impassioned address) to Pilate, the Roman official who authorized the crucifixion of Jesus. Lanyer makes Pilate and Adam representatives of the male gender, whereas Eve and Pilate's wife represent womankind.

6. Pilate's wife wrote her husband a letter urging Pilate to spare Jesus, about whom she had a warning dream (Matthew 27.19).

7. The fall of Adam, and the prospective fall of Pilate.
No hurt therein her harmless heart intended:
For she alleged God's word, which he denies, asserted serpent
That they should die, but even as gods be wise.

But surely Adam cannot be excused;
Her fault though great, yet he was most to blame;
What weakness offered, strength might have refused,
Being lord of all, the greater was his shame.
Although the serpent's craft had her abused,
God's holy word ought all his actions frame,
For he was lord and king of all the earth,
Before poor Eve had either life or breath,

Who being framed by God's eternal hand
The perfectest man that ever breathed on earth;
And from God's mouth received that strait command,
The breach whereof he knew was present death;
Yea, having power to rule both sea and land,
Yet with one apple won to lose that breath
Which God had breathed in his beauteous face,
Bringing us all in danger and disgrace.

And then to lay the fault on Patience' back,
That we (poor women) must endure it all.
We know right well he did discretion lack,
Being not persuaded thereunto at all.
If Eve did err, it was for knowledge sake;
The fruit being fair persuaded him to fall.
If he would eat it, who had power to stay him?
Not Eve, whose fault was only too much love,
Which made her give this present to her dear,
That what she tasted he likewise might prove,
Whereby his knowledge might become more clear;
He never sought her weakness to reprove
With those sharp words which he of God did hear;
Yet men will boast of knowledge, which he took
From Eve's fair hand, as from a learned book.

If any evil did in her remain,
Being made of him, he was the ground of all.
If one of many worlds could lay a stain
Upon our sex, and work so great a fall
To wretched man by Satan's subtle train.
What will so foul a fault amongst you all?
Her weakness did the serpent's words obey,
But you in malice God's dear Son betray,
Whom, if unjustly you condemn to die,
Her sin was small to what you do commit;
All mortal sins\(^5\) that do for vengeance cry
Are not to be compared unto it.
If many worlds would altogether try
By all their sins the wrath of God to get,
This sin of yours surmounts them all as far
\[\text{As doth the sun another little star.}^6\]

Then let us have our liberty again,
And challenge\(^7\) to yourselves no sovereignty.
You came not in the world without our pain,
Make that a bar against your cruelty;
Your fault being greater, why should you disdain
Our being your equals, free from tyranny?
If one weak woman simply did offend,
This sin of yours hath no excuse nor end,

To which, poor souls, we never gave consent.
Witness, thy wife, O Pilate, speaks for all,
Who did but dream, and yet a message sent
That thou shouldst have nothing to do at all
With that just man\(^8\) which, if thy heart relent,
Why wilt thou be a reprobate\(^9\) with Saul\(^7\)

To seek the death of him that is so good,
For thy soul's health to shed his dearest blood?

And all delights did harbor in her breast;

8. The poem was written in honor of Margaret Clifford, Countess of Cumberland, and celebrates a royal estate leased to her brother, at which the countess occasionally resided. The poem should be compared with Jonson's "To Penshurst" (p. 1434). Lanyer's poem is based on a familiar classical topic, the "farewell to a place," which had its most famous development in Virgil's Eclogue 1. Lanyer makes extensive use of the common pastoral motif of nature's active sympathy with and response to human emotion—which later came to be called the "pathetic fallacy."

Yet you, great lady, mistress of that place,
From whose desires did spring this work of grace;

As fleeting worldly joys that could not last,
Or, as dim shadows of celestial pleasures,
Which are desired above all earthly treasures.
Oh how, methought, against\(^6\) you thither came,
Each part did seem some new delight to frame!
The house received all ornaments to grace it,

And walks put on their summer liversies,\(^4\)
And all things else did hold like similes:\(^5\)

The crystal streams with silver spangles graced,
While by the glorious sun they were embraced;
The little birds in chirping notes did sing,
To entertain both you and that sweet spring.
And Philomela\(^6\) with her sundry lays,
Both you and that delightful place did praise.
Oh how me thought each plant, each flower, each tree
Set forth their beauties then to welcome thee!
The very hills right humbly did descend,
When you to tread on them did intend.
And as you set your feet, they still did rise,
Glad that they could receive so rich a prize.
The gentle winds did take delight to be Among those woods that were so graced by thee,
And in sad murmur uttered pleasing sound,
That pleasure in that place might more abound.
The swelling banks delivered all their pride
When such a phoenix\(^7\) once they had espied.
Each arbor, bank, each seat, each stately tree,
Thought themselves honored in supporting thee.
The pretty birds would oft come to attend thee,
Yet fly away for fear they should offend thee;
The little creatures in the burrow by
Would come abroad to sport them in your eye,
Yet fearful of the bow in your fair hand,
Would run away when you did make a stand.
Now let me come unto that stately tree,
Wherein such goodly prospects you did see;
That oak that did in height his fellows pass,

5. Behaved in similar fashion.
6. In myth, Philomela was raped by her brother-in-law Tereus, who also tore out her tongue; the gods transformed her into a nightingale. Here the bird's song is joyous but later mournful (line 189), associating her own woes with those of Cookham at the women's departure.
7. Mythical bird that lived alone of its kind for five hundred years, then was consumed in flame and reborn from its own ashes; metaphorically, a person of rare excellence. "All their pride": fish (cf. To Penshurst, lines 31–36).
As much as lofty trees, low growing grass,
Much like a comely cedar straight and tall,
Whose beauteous stature far exceeded all.
How often did you visit this fair tree,
Which seeming joyful in receiving thee,
Would like a palm tree spread his arms abroad,
Desirous that you there should make abode;
Whose fair green leaves much like a comely veil,
Defended Phoebus when he would assail;
Whose pleasing boughs did yield a cool fresh air,
Joying his happiness when you were there.
Where being seated, you might plainly see
Hills, vales, and woods, as if on bended knee
They had appeared, your honor to salute,
Or to prefer some strange unlooked-for suit;
All interlaced with brooks and crystal springs,
A prospect fit to please the eyes of kings.
And thirteen shires appeared all in your sight,
Europe could not afford much more delight.
What was there then but gave you all content,
While you the time in meditation spent
Of their Creator's power, which there you saw,
In all his creatures held a perfect law:
And in their beauties did you plain descry
His beauty, wisdom, grace, love, majesty.
In these sweet woods how often did you walk,
With Christ and his apostles there to talk;
Placing his holy writ in some fair tree
To meditate what you therein did see.
With Moses you did mount his holy hill
To know his pleasure, and perform his will.
With lowly David you did often sing
His holy hymns to heaven's eternal King.
And in sweet music did your soul delight
To sound his praises, morning, noon, and night.
With blessed Joseph you did often feed
Your pined brethren, when they stood in need.
And that sweet lady sprung from Clifford's race,
Of noble Bedford's blood, fair stem of grace,
To honorable Dorset now espoused.
In whose fair breast true virtue then was housed,
Oh what delight did my weak spirits find
In those pure parts of her well framed mind.
And yet it grieves me that I cannot be Near unto her, whose virtues did agree

http://englishworld20111.wordpress.com/
With those fair ornaments of outward beauty,
Which did enforce from all both love and duty.
Unconstant Fortune, thou art most to blame,
Who casts us down into so low a frame
Where our great friends we cannot daily see,
So great a difference is there in degree.
Many are placed in those orbs of state,
Parters in honor, so ordained by Fate.
Nearer in show, yet farther off in love,
In which, the lowest always are above.
But whither am I carried in conceit,
My wit too weak to construe of the great.
Why not? Although we are but born of earth,
We may behold the heavens, despising death;
And loving heaven that is so far above,
May in the end vouchsafe us entire love.
Therefore sweet memory do thou retain
Those pleasures past, which will not turn again:
Remember beauteous Dorset’s former sports,
So far from being touched by ill reports,
Wherein myself did always bear a part,
While reverend love presented my true heart.
Those recreations let me bear in mind,
Which her sweet youth and noble thoughts did find,
Whereof deprived, I evermore must grieve,
Hating blind Fortune, careless to relieve.
And you sweet Cookham, whom these ladies leave,
I now must tell the grief you did conceive
At their departure, when they went away,
How everything retained a sad dismay.
Nay long before, when once an inkling came,
Methought each thing did unto sorrow frame:
The trees that were so glorious in our view,
Forsook both flowers and fruit, when once they knew
Of your depart, their very leaves did wither,
Changing their colors as they grew together.
But when they saw this had no power to stay you,
They often wept, though, speechless, could not pray you,
Letting their tears in your fair bosoms fall,
As if they said, Why will ye leave us all?
This being vain, they cast their leaves away
Hoping that pity would have made you stay:
Their frozen tops, like age's hoary hairs,
Shows their disasters, languishing in fears.
A swarthy rived rind all over spread,
Their dying bodies half alive, half dead.

5. These lines and lines 117—25 probably exaggerate Lanyer's former familiarity with Anne Clifford.
6. Separators, i.e., the various honorific ranks ("orbs of state") act to separate person from person.
7. An egalitarian sentiment playing on the Christian notion that in spiritual things—love and charity—the poor and lowly surpass the great ones.
8. I.e., we (lowly) may also love God and enjoy God's love, and hence are equal to anyone.
9. As was common, Anne Clifford is here referred to by her husband’s title.
But your occasions called you so away
That nothing there had power to make you stay.
Yet did I see a noble grateful mind
150 Requiting each according to their kind,
Forgetting not to turn and take your leave
Of these sad creatures, powerless to receive
Your favor, when with grief you did depart,
Placing their former pleasures in your heart,
155 Giving great charge to noble memory
There to preserve their love continually.
But specially the love of that fair tree,
That first and last you did vouchsafe to see,
In which it pleased you oft to take the air
160 With noble Dorset, then a virgin fair,
Where many a learned book was read and scanned,
To this fair tree, taking me by the hand,
You did repeat the pleasures which had passed,
Seeming to grieve they could no longer last.
165 And with a chaste, yet loving kiss took leave,
Of which sweet kiss I did it soon bereave,
Scorning a senseless creature should possess
So rare a favor, so great happiness.
No other kiss it could receive from me,
175 But of the happiest made it most forlorn,
To show that nothing’s free from Fortune’s scorn,
While all the rest with this most beauteous tree
Made their sad comfort sorrow’s harmony.
180 The flowers that on the banks and walks did grow,
Crept in the ground, the grass did weep for woe.
The winds and waters seemed to chide together
Because you went away they knew not whither;
And those sweet brooks that ran so fair and clear,
185 Those pretty birds that wonted were to sing,
Now neither sing, nor chirp, nor use their wing,
But with their tender feet on some bare spray,
Warble forth sorrow, and their own dismay.
Fair Philomela leaves her mournful ditty,
190 Drowned in deep sleep, yet can procure no pity.
Each arbor, bank, each seat, each stately tree
Looks bare and desolate now for want of thee,
Turning green tresses into frosty gray,
While in cold grief they wither all away.
195 The sun grew weak, his beams no comfort gave,
While all green things did make the earth their grave.

1. After her husband’s death (1605) Margaret Clifford chiefly resided in her dower properties in the north; Anne Clifford was married in 1609.
Each briar, each bramble, when you went away
Caught fast your clothes, thinking to make you stay;
Delightful Echo wonted to reply
To our last words, did now for sorrow die;
The house cast off each garment that might grace it,
Putting on dust and cobwebs to deface it.
All desolation then there did appear,
When you were going whom they held so dear.
This last farewell to Cookham here I give,
When I am dead thy name in this may live,
Wherein I have performed her noble hest
Whose virtues lodge in my unworthy breast,
And ever shall, so long as life remains,
Tying my life to her by those rich chains.

BEN JONSON
1572-1637

In 1616 Ben Jonson published his Works, to the derision of those astounded to see mere plays and poems collected under the same title the king gave to his political treatises. Many of Jonson’s contemporaries shied away from publication, either because, like Donne, they wrote for small coterie audiences or because, like Shakespeare, they wrote for theater companies that preferred not to let go of the scripts. Jonson knew and admired both Donne and Shakespeare and more than any Jacobean belonged to both of their very different worlds, but in publishing his Works he laid claim to an altogether higher literary status. He had risen from very humble beginnings to become England’s unofficial poet laureate, with a pension from the king and honorary degrees from both Oxford and Cambridge. If he was not the first professional author in England, he was the first to invest that role with dignity and respectability. His published Works, over which he labored with painstaking care, testify to an extraordinary feat of self-transformation.

Jonson’s early life was tough and turbulent. The posthumous son of a London clergyman, he was educated at Westminster School under the great antiquarian scholar William Camden. There he developed his love of classical learning, but lacking the resources to continue his education, Jonson was forced to turn to his stepfather’s trade of bricklaying, a life he “could not endure.” He escaped by joining the English forces in Flanders, where, as he later boasted, he killed a man in single combat before the eyes of two armies. Back in London, his attempt to make a living as an actor and playwright almost ended in early disaster. He was imprisoned in 1597 for collaborating with Thomas Nashe on the scandalous play The Isle of Dogs (now lost), and shortly after his release he killed one of his fellow actors in a duel. Jonson escaped the gallows by pleading benefit of clergy (a medieval privilege exempting felons who could read Latin from the death penalty). His learning had saved his life, but he emerged from captivity branded on the thumb, and with another mark against him as well. Under the influence of a priest imprisoned with him, he had converted to Catholicism (around the time that John Donne was abandoning that faith). Jonson was now more than ever a marginal figure, distrusted by the society that he satirized brilliantly in his early plays.
Jonson's fortunes improved with the accession of James I, though not at once. In 1603 he was called before the Privy Council to answer charges of "popery and treason" found in his play Sejanus. Little more than a year later he was in jail again for his part in the play Eastward Ho, which openly mocked the king's Scots accent and propensity for selling knighthoods. Yet Jonson was now on the way to establishing himself at the new court. In 1605 he received the commission to organize the Twelfth Night entertainment; The Masque of Blackness was the first of twenty-four masques he would produce for the court, most of them in collaboration with the architect and scene designer Inigo Jones. In the same years that he was writing the masques he produced his greatest works for the public theater. His first successful play, Every Man in His Humor (1598), had inaugurated the so-called comedy of humors, which ridicules the eccentricities or passions of the characters (thought to be caused by physiological imbalance). He capitalized on this success with the comedies Volpone (1606), Epicene (1609), The Alchemist (1610), and Bartholomew Fair (1614). Jonson preserved the detached, satiric perspective of an outsider, but he was rising in society and making accommodations where necessary. In 1605, when suspicion fell upon him as a Catholic following the exposure of the Gunpowder Plot, he showed his loyalty by agreeing to serve as a spy for the Privy Council. Five years later he would return to the Church of England.

Although he rose to a position of eminent respectability, Jonson seems to have been possessed all his life by a quarrelsome spirit. Much of his best work emerged out of fierce tensions with collaborators and contemporaries. At the turn of the century he became embroiled in the so-called War of the Theaters, in which he satirized and was satirized by his fellow playwrights John Marston and Thomas Dekker. Later, his long partnership with Inigo Jones was marked by ever more bitter rivalry over the relative importance of words and scenery in the masques. Jonson also poured invective on the theater audiences when they failed, in his view, to appreciate his plays. The failure of his play The New Inn elicited his "Ode to Himself" (1629), a disgusted farewell to the "loathed stage." Yet even after a stroke in 1629 left him partially paralyzed and confined to his home, Jonson continued to write for the stage, and was at work on a new play when he died in 1637.

In spite of his antagonistic nature, Jonson had a great capacity for friendship. His friends included Shakespeare, Donne, Francis Bacon, and John Selden. In later years he gathered about himself a group of admiring younger men known as the "Sons of Ben," whose numbers included Robert Herrick, Thomas Carew, and Sir John Suckling. He was a fascinating and inexhaustible conversationalist, as recorded by his friend William Drummond of Hawthornden, who carefully noted down Jonson's remarks on a wide variety of subjects, ranging from his fellow poets to his sexual predilections. Jonson also moved easily among the great of the land. His patrons included Lady Mary Wroth and other members of the Sidney and Herbert families. In "To Penshurst," a celebration of Robert Sidney's country estate, Jonson offers an ideal image of a social order in which a virtuous patriarchal governor offers ready hospitality to guests of all stations, from poets to kings.

"To Penshurst," together with Aemilia Lanyer's "Description of Cookham," inaugurated the small genre of the "country-house poem" in England. Jonson tried his hand, usually with success, at a wide range of poetic genres, including epitaph and epigram, love and funeral elegy, verse satire and verse letter, song and ode. More often than not he looked back to classical precedents. From the Roman poets Horace and Martial he derived not only generic models but an ideal vision of the artist and society against which he measured himself and the court he served. In many poems he adopted the persona of a witty, keenly perceptive, and scrupulously honest judge of men and women. The classical values Jonson most admired are enumerated in "Inviting a Friend to Supper," which describes a dinner party characterized by moderation, civility, graciousness, and pleasure that delights without enslaving—all contrasting sharply with the excess and licentiousness that marked the banquets and entertainments of imperial Rome and Stuart England. Yet the poet who produced this image of moderation was a man of immense appetites, which found expression in his art as well as in his life. His best works seethe with an almost uncontrollable imaginative energy and lust for abundance. Even his profound classical learning manifests this impulse. The notes and references to learned authorities that spill across the margins of his Works can be seen as the literary equivalent of food and drink piled high on the poet’s table. Years of hardship had taught Jonson to seek his feasts in his imagination, and he could make the most mundane object the basis for flights of high fancy. As he told Drummond, he once “consumed a whole night in lying looking to his great toe, about which he had seen Tartars and Turks, Romans and Carthaginians fight in his imagination.” In Drummond’s view, Jonson was “oppressed with fantasy.” Perhaps it was so—but Jonson’s capacity for fantasy also produced a wide variety of plays, masques, and poems, in styles ranging from witty comedy to delicate lyricism.

The Masque of Blackness  After James I and Queen Anne ascended the English throne in 1603, they presided over the development of the court masque as political entertainment, idealizing the Stuart court as the embodiment of all perfections. Blackness established Jonson and Inigo Jones as the chief makers of court masques for more than two decades. Jonson provided the words and Jones the spectacle; over the years their rivalry grew ever more intense. For the first decade the queen took an active role in planning and performing court masques, which were usually performed only once—most often on Twelfth Night, as in this case, or sometimes for a wedding or other special occasion. Blackness also began the tradition of prodigiously expensive masques: the queen’s bills for it came to around £5,000 (more than five hundred times what the young Jonson would have made in a year as an apprentice bricklayer). These entertainments were customarily followed by an elaborate feast and all-night dancing (the revels). On this occasion, as on many that followed, the evening was chaotic. The banquet table was overturned by the crush of diners before the meal began; guests were beaten by the palace guards; light-fingered revelers stole jewels, chains, and purses; and sexual liaisons went on in dark corners.

Court masques differed from performances in the public theater in most respects. Essentially an elaborate dance form, the masque was a multimedia event combining songs, speech, richly ornamented costumes and masks, shifting scene panels depicting elaborate architecture and landscapes, and intricate machines in which gods and goddesses descended from the heavens. They were presented to King James, who occupied the Chair of State, which was placed in the ideal viewing position. While the speaking parts were taken by professionals, the dancers were members of the court, including—to the horror of English Puritans—women. In the reign of Charles I, William Prynne lost his ears for attacking masques and comparing the women who danced in them (including the queen) to whores.

On the surface, Blackness asserts the cultural superiority of the English over non-European peoples and celebrates the patriarchal power of James, the "Sun King" of Britain, who can turn black skin to white. But in this and other queen’s masques a subversive current is evident. Jonson tells us it was "her Majesty's will" that the ladies appear as black African beauties. Their costumes designed by Inigo Jones conjoin exotic beauty and wildness, associating them with the feared and desired "others" discovered (or imagined) by contemporary explorers. The power of the supposed Sun King is undercut by Niger's lengthy praise of black beauty and by the fact that the promised transformation of the ladies’ skin is not staged (though they have become white in the sequel, The Masque of Beauty, performed three years later). Some viewers found the work unsettling, one deeming the ladies' apparel "too light and courtesan-like" and their black faces and hands "a very loathsome sight."

In many later Jacobean masques the glorification of the monarch seems less conflicted. Jonson developed a kind of prologue known as the antimasque, in which wicked, disruptive, or rustic characters played by professional actors invade the court, only to be banished by the aristocratic masquers whose dancing transforms the court into a golden world. They then enact the mixture of the ideal and the real as they unmask, revealing themselves as court personages, and proceed to dance the revels with the other members of the court. Caroline court masques, in which Charles I and Queen Henrietta Maria regularly danced, tended to be longer, more elaborate, more dialogic, more spectacular, and even more hyperbolic. But early to late, many masques contain features that subtly resist the politics of Stuart absolutism.

The Masque of Blackness

Pliny, Solinus, Ptolemy, and of late Leo the African,¹ remember unto us a river in Ethiopia famous by the name of Niger,² of which the people were called Nigritae, now Negroes, and are the blackest nation of the world. This river taketh spring out of a certain lake,³ eastward, and after a long race, falleth into the western ocean. Hence (because it was her Majesty's will to have them blackamoors at first) the invention was derived by me, and presented thus.

First, for the scene, xvas drawn a Landscape⁴ consisting of small woods, and here and there a void place filled with huntins; which falling, an artificial sea was seen to shoot forth, as if it flowed to the land, raised with waves which seemed to move, and in some places the hillow to break,⁵ as imitating that orderly disorder, which is common in nature. In front of this sea were placed six tritons,⁶ in moving and sprightly actions; their upper parts human, save that their hairs were blue, as partaking of the sea color; their desinent parts fish, mounted above their heads, and all varied in disposition. From their backs were borne out certain light pieces of taffeta, as if carried by the wind, and their music made out of wreathed shells. Behind these, a pair of sea maids, for song, were as conspicuously seated; between which two great sea horses, as big as the life, put forth themselves; the one mount-ing aloft, and writhing his head from the other, which seemed to sink forwards; so intended for variation, and that the figure behind might come off better. Upon their backs Oceanus⁸ and Niger were advanced.

Oceanus, presented in a human form, the color of his flesh blue, and shadowed with a robe of sea green; his head gray and horned, as he is described by the ancients; his beard of the like mixed color. He was garlanded with algae or sea-grass, and in his hand a trident.

Niger, inform and color of an Ethiop, his hair and rare beard curled, shadowed with a blue and bright mantle; his front, neck, and wrists adorned with pearl; and crowned with an artificial wreath of cane and paper-rush.

These induced the masquers, which were twelve nymphs, negroes, and the daughters of Niger, attended by so many of the Oceaniae,⁹ which were their light-bearers.

¹ This long introductory note is Jonson’s. Leo wrote the Description of Africa (1526); the other three are classical authorities on geography.
² Some, though not Pliny, identified it as the Nile. “Niger” means “black.”
³ Lake Chad.
⁴ Painted on the front curtain.

⁶ Sea gods.
⁷ Back.
⁹ Sea nymphs, daughters of Oceanus and Tethys.
The masquers were placed in a great concave shell, like mother of pearl, curiously made to move on those waters, and rise with the billow; the top thereof was stuck with a chevron of lights which, indented to the proportion of the shell, struck a glorious beam upon them as they were seated one above another; so that they were all seen, but in an extravagant order.¹

On sides of the shell did swim six huge sea monsters, varied in their shapes and dispositions, bearing on their backs the twelve torchbearers, who were planted there in several greces,² so as the backs of some were seen, some in purfle³ (or side), others in face, and all having their lights burning out of whelks or murex shells.

The attire of the masquers was alike in all, without difference; the colors azure and silver, their hair thick, and curled upright in tresses, like pyramids, but returned on the top with a scroll and antique dressing of feathers, and jewels interlaced with ropes of pearl. And for the front, ear, neck and wrists, the ornament was of the most choice and orient pearl, best setting off from the black.

For the light-bearers, sea green, waved about the skirts with gold and silver; their hair loose and flowing, garlanded with sea grass, and that stuck with branches of coral.

These thus presented, the scene behind seemed a vast sea (and united with this that flowed forth)⁴ from the termination or horizon of which (being the level of the state,⁵ which was placed in the upper end of the hall) was drawn, by the lines of perspective, the whole work, shooting downwards from the eye; which decorum made it more conspicuous, and caught the eye afar off with a wandering beauty.

To which was added an obscure and cloudy night piece,⁶ that made the whole set off. So much for the bodily part, which was of Master Inigo Jones his design and act.

By this, one of the tritons, with the two sea maids, began to sing to the others' loud music, their voices being a tenor and two trebles.

SONG

Sound, sound aloud
The welcome of the orient flood
Into the west;
Fair Niger, son to great Oceanus,
Now honored thus
With all his beauteous race,
Who though but black in face,
Yet are they bright,
And full of life and light,
To prove that beauty best
Which not the color, but the feature
Assures unto the creature.

OCEANUS  Be silent, now the ceremony's done,
And Niger, say, how comes it, lovely son,
That thou, the Ethiop's river, so far east,
Art seen to fall into th'eextremest west
Of me, the king of floods, Oceanus,

And in mine empire's heart salute me thus?
My ceaseless current now amazed stands
To see thy labor through so many lands
Mix thy fresh billow with my brackish stream,
And in thy sweetness, stretch thy diademe
To these far distant and unequaled skies,
This squared circle of celestial bodies.

NIGER Divine Oceanus, 'tis not strange at all
That, since the immortal souls of creatures mortal
Mix with their bodies, yet reserve forever
A power of separation, I should sever
My fresh streams from thy brackish, like things fixed,
Though with thy powerful saltiness thus far mixed.
"Virtue though chained to earth, will still live free;
And hell itself must yield to industry."

OCEANUS But what's the end of thy Herculean labors,
Extended to these calm and blessed shores?

NIGER To do a kind and careful father's part,

In satisfying every pensive heart
Of these my daughters, my most loved birth;
Who, though they were the first formed dames of earth,
And in whose sparkling and refulgent eyes
The glorious sun did still delight to rise,
Though he (the best judge, and most formal cause
Of all dames' beauties) in their firm hues draws
Signs of his fervent'st love, and thereby shows
That in their black the perfect'st beauty grows,
Since the fixed color of their curled hair
(Which is the highest grace of dames most fair)
No cares, no age can change, or there display
The fearful tincture of abhorred gray,
Since Death herself (herself being pale and blue)
Can never alter their most faithful hue;
All which are arguments to prove how far
Their beauties conquer in great beauty's war;
And more, how near divinity they be,
That stand from passion or decay so free.
Yet, since the fabulous voices of some few
Poor brainsick men, styled poets here with you,
Have, with such envy of their graces, sung
The painted beauties other empires sprung,
Letting their loose and winged fictions fly
To infect all climates, yea, our purity;
As of one Phaeton, that fired the world,
And that before his heedless flames were hurled

1. Aristotle’s formal cause produces the form or essence of anything.
About the globe, the Ethiops were as fair
As other dames, now black with black despair,
And in respect of their complexions changed,
Are everywhere, since, for luckless creatures ranged.
Which when my daughters heard (as women are Most jealous of their beauties) fear and care
Possessed them whole; yea, and believing them,
They wept such ceaseless tears into my stream
That it hath thus far overflowed his shore
To seek them patience; who have since e'ermore
As the sun riseth, charged his burning throne
With volleys of revilings, 'cause he shone
On their scorched cheeks with such intemperate fires,
And other dames made queens of all desires.
To frustrate which strange error oft I sought,
Though most in vain against a settled thought
As women's are, till they confirmed at length
By miracle what I wish so much strength
Of argument resisted; else they feigned:
For in the lake where their first spring they gained,
As they sat cooling their soft limbs one night,
Appeared a face all circumfused with light;
(And sure they saw't, for Ethiops never dream)
Wherein they might decipher through the stream
Those words:
That they a land must forthwith seek,
Whose termination (of the Greek)
Sounds -tania; where bright Sol, that heat
Their bloods, doth never rise or set,
But in his journey passeth by,
And leaves that climate of the sky
To comfort of a greater light.
Who forms all beauty with his sight.
In search of this have we three princedoms passed
That speak out -tania in their accents last:
Black Mauritanias first, and secondly
Swarth Lusitanias, next we did descry
Rich Aquitanias, and yet cannot find
The place unto these longing nymphs designed.
Instruct and aid me, great Oceanus:
What land is this that now appears to us?

OCEANUS This land, that lifts into the temperate air
His snowy cliff, is Albion the fair,
So called of Neptune's son, who ruleth here;
For whose dear guard, myself four thousand year,
Since old Deucalion's days, have walked the round

About his empire, proud to see him crowned
Above my waves.

At this, the moon was discovered in the upper part of the house, triumphant in a silver throne, made in figure of a pyramid. Her garments white and silver, the dressing of her head antique, and crowned with a luminary or sphere of light, which striking on the clouds, and heightened with silver, reflected as natural clouds do by the splendor of the moon. The heaven about her was vaulted with blue silk, and set with stars of silver which had in them their several lights burning. The sudden sight of which made Niger to interrupt Oceanus with this present passion.

NIGER —O see, our silver star!
Whose pure auspicious light greets us thus far!
Great /Ethiopia, goddess of our shore,
Since with particular worship we adore
Thy general brightness, let particular grace
Shine on my zealous daughters. Show the place
Which long their longings urged their eyes to see.
Beautify them, which long have deified thee.

AETHIOPIA Niger, be glad; resume thy native cheer.
Thy daughters’ labors have their period here,
And so thy errors. I was that bright face
Reflected by the lake, in which thy race
Read mystic lines (which skill Pythagoras
First taught to men by a reverberate glass).
This blessed isle doth with that-tania end
Which there they saw inscribed, and shall extend Wished satisfaction to their best desires.
Britannia, which the triple world admires,
This isle hath now recovered for her name;
Where reign those beauties that with so much fame
The sacred Muses’ sons have honored,
And from bright Hesperus to Eos spread.
With that great name, Britannia, this blest isle
Hath won her ancient dignity and style,
A world divided from the world, and tried
The abstract of it in his general pride.
For were the world, with all his wealth, a ring,
Britannia (whose new name makes all tongues sing)
Might be a diamond worthy to enchase it,
Ruled by a sun, that to this height doth grace it.
Whose beams shine day and night, and are of force
To blanch an Ethiop and revive a corpse.
His light sciental is and (past mere nature)
Can salve the rude defects of every creature.

Scotland, and Wales united under James. James to the united island.

6. West to east.
7. Britain as a separate world, divided from Europe by the English Channel.
8. Corpse. Both are proverbial impossibilities.
Call forth thy honored daughters, then,
And let them 'fore the Britain men
Indent the land with those pure traces.
They flow with in their native graces.
Invite them boldly to the shore,
Their beauties shall be scorched no more;
This sun is temperate, and refines
All things on which his radiance shines.

Here the tritons sounded, and they danced on shore, every couple as they advanced severally presenting their fans, in one of which were inscribed their mixed names, in the other a mute hieroglyphic, expressing their mixed qualities. Which manner of symbol I rather chose than imprese, as well for strangeness, as relishing of antiquity, and more applying to that original doctrine of sculpture which the Egyptians are said first to have brought from the Ethiopians.

Their own single dance ended, as they were about to make choice of their men, one from the sea was heard to call 'em with this charm, sung by a tenor voice.

SONG

Come away, come away,
We grow jealous of your stay.
If you do not stop your ear,
We shall have more cause to fear
Sirens of the land, than they
To doubt the sirens of the sea.

Here they danced with their men several measures and corantos. All which ended, they were again accited to sea, with a song of two trebles, whose cadences were iterated by a double echo from several parts of the land.

SONG
Daughters of the subtle flood,
Do not let earth longer entertain you;

160 1st ECHO Let earth longer entertain you
2nd ECHO Longer entertain you

Tis to them enough of good
That you give this little hope to gain you.

1st ECHO Give this little hope to gain you.
2nd ECHO Little hope to gain you.

If they love
You shall quickly see;
For when to flight you move,
They'll follow you, the more you flee.

170 1st ECHO Follow you, the more you flee.
2nd ECHO The more you flee.

If not, impute it each to other's matter;
They are but earth—

1st ECHO But earth,
2nd ECHO Earth—

And what you vowed was water.

1st ECHO And what you vowed was water
2nd ECHO You vowed was water.

AETHIOPIA Enough, bright nymphs, the night grows old,
And we are grieved we cannot hold

You longer light; but comfort take.
Your father only to the lake

Shall make return; yourselves, with feasts,
Must here remain the Ocean's guests.
Nor shall this veil the sun hath cast
Above your blood, more summers last.
For which, you shall observe these rites:
Thirteen times thrice, on thirteen nights
(So often as I fill my sphere
With glorious light, throughout the year)
You shall, when all things else do sleep
Save your chaste thoughts, with reverence steep

5. In Greek mythology the sirens lured seafarers to destruction. 6. Slow and fast dances, 7. Summoned.
Your bodies in that purer brine
And wholesome dew, called rosmarine;
Then with that soft and gentler foam,
Of which the ocean yet yields some,
Whereof bright Venus, beauty's queen,
Is said to have begotten been,
You shall your gentler limbs o'ertake,
And for your pains, perfection have.
So that, this night, the year gone round,
You do again salute this ground;
And in the beams of yond' bright sun
Your faces dry, and all is done.

At which, in a dance they returned to the sea, where they took their shell, and with this full song, went out.

Now Dian,° with her burning face,
Declines apace:
By which our waters know
To ebb, that late° did flow.
Back seas, back nymphs, but with a forward grace
Keep still your reverence to the place.
And shout with joy of favor you have won,
In sight of Albion, Neptune's son.

Volpone  This dark satire on human rapacity is set in Venice, but its true target is the city of London, or the city that, Jonson feared, London was about to become.
It is a place devoted to commerce and mired in corruption, populated by greedy fools and conniving rascals. Like Shakespeare, Donne, and Thomas More before him, Jonson was deeply disturbed by the rise of a protocapitalist economic order that seemed to emphasize competition and the acquisition of material goods over reciprocal goodwill and mutual obligation. On the other hand, Jonson was also fascinated by the entrepreneurial potential liberated by the new economic order. His protagonists, Volpone and Mosca, may be morally bankrupt, but they are also the most intelligent, adaptable characters in the play. Moreover, although Jonson was a strong advocate for the educational and morally improving potential of the theater—his theater in particular—the talents of his main characters are essentially those of theatrical performance and improvisation. In fact, as Jonson was well aware, he was himself deeply implicated in what he satirized. The lowborn, unscrupulous, brilliantly inventive Mosca, a flattering aristocratic hanger-on who aspires to high status himself, at times seems to be the author's evil twin. Perhaps his very resemblances to Jonson required Jonson so energetically to repudiate his motives and punish his presumption at the end of the play.

Volpone  combines elements from several sources. The classical satirist Lucian provided the theme of the rich old man playing with moneygrubbing scoundrels who white, but intervening masques prevented its production until 1608.

hope to inherit his wealth. Roman comedy provided prototypes for some characters: the wily parasite, the unscrupulous lawyer, the avaricious dotard, the voluble woman. Some scenes, such as that in which Volpone disguised as a mountebank woos Celia at her window, are drawn from the Italian commedia dell'arte. Jonson draws as well upon ancient and medieval beast fables: stories about the crafty antihero Reynard the fox, as well as a fable about a fox that plays dead in order to catch greedy birds. But Volpone is much more than the sum of its borrowings. It is a work of enormous comic energy, full of black humor, which holds its loathsome characters up for appalled but gleeful inspection.

Volpone was first performed by the King's Men (Shakespeare's company) in the spring of 1606, at the Globe Theater. (See the illustration, in the appendices to this volume, of a contemporary popular theater constructed on similar lines.) The Globe seated some two thousand persons—aristocrats and prosperous citizens in the tiered galleries, lower-class "groundlings" in the pit in the front of the stage. The play was also performed to great applause before learned audiences at Oxford and Cambridge, to whom Jonson dedicated the printed edition of Volpone. It was first published in quarto form in 1607 and republished with a few changes in the 1616 Works, the basis for the present text.

Volpone

or

The Fox

The Persons of the Play

1. Many of the characters have allegorically apt names. "Volpone" is defined in John Florio's 1598 Italian-English dictionary as "an old fox ... a sneaking, lurking, wily deceiver." "Mosca" means "fly." "Nano" means "dwarf." "Voltore" means "vulture." "Corbaccio" means "raven." "Bonario" is derived from bono, meaning "good." "Corvino" means "crow." "Celia" means "heaven." "Politic" means "worldly-wise" or "temporizing." "Peregrine" means "traveler" or "small hawk." In many performances the symbolism of the animal names is reinforced by costuming.
SCENE. Venice

The Argument

Volpone, childless, rich, feigns sick, despairs, is despaired of Offers his state to hopes of several heirs, estate
Lies languishing; his parasite receives
Presents of all, assures, deludes, then weaves
Other cross-plots, which ope themselves, unfold/exposed
Are told.

New tricks for safety are sought; they thrive—when, bold,
Betrayed

Each tempts th’other again, and all are sold.

Prologue

Now, luck yet send us, and a little wit
Will serve to make our play hit
According to the palates of the season.fashionable taste
Here is rhyme not empty of reason.
This we were bid to credit from our poet,
Whose true scope, if you would know it,
In all his poems still hath been this measure,
To mix profit with your pleasure;
And not as some—whose throats their envy failing—
Cry hoarsely, “all he writes is railing,” personal insult
And when his plays come forth think they can flout them
With saying he was a year about them.
To these there needs no lie but this his creature,
Which was, two months since, no feature;
And, though he dares give them five lives to mend it,
’Tis known five weeks fully penned it
From his own hand, without a coadjutor.
Novice, journeyman, or tutor.
Yet thus much I can give you, as a token
Of his play’s worth: no eggs are broken,
Nor quaking custards with fierce teeth affrighted,
Wherewith your rout are so delighted;
Nor hales he in a gull, old ends reciting,
To stop gaps in his loose writing,
With such a deal of monstrous and forced action
As might make Bethlehem a faction.
Nor made he his play for jests stol’n from each table,
Plagiarized/jokes
But makes jests to fit his fable,
And so presents quick comedy, refined
As best critics have designed.
The laws of time, place, persons he observeth;

The Argument

1. Plot summary. Jonson imitates the acrostic “arguments” of the Latin playwright Plautus.
2. Rule, as laid down by Horace, that the poet ought both to please his audience and teach it something useful.
3. Thomas Dekker ridiculed the slow pace at which Jonson produced new work in Satiromastix, or The Untrussing of the Humorous Poet (1602), and John Marston did the same in The Dutch Courtesan (1605).
4. As might win approval from lunatics (who inhabited Bethlehem hospital in London).
5. He observes the unities of time and place and the consistency of character.
From no needful rule he swerveth.
All gall and copperas\(^6\) from his ink he draineth;
Only a little salt\(^7\) remaineth
Wherewith he'll rub your cheeks, till, red with laughter,
They shall look fresh a week after.

Act I

SCENE 1. VOLPONE'S house.

[Enter] VOLPONE [and] MOSCA.\(^1\)

VOLPONE  Good morning to the day, and, next, my gold!
Open the shrine that I may see my saint.

[Mosca reveals the treasure.\(^2\)

Hail the world's soul,\(^8\) and mine! More glad than is
The teeming earth to see the longed-for sun
Peep through the horns of the celestial Ram\(^3\)
Am I to view thy splendor darkening his,\(^6\) outshining the sun's
That, lying here amongst my other hoards,
Show'st like a flame by night, or like the day
Struck out of chaos, when all darkness fled
Unto the center.\(^5\)— O thou son of Sol—
But brighter than thy father—let me kiss
With adoration thee and every relic
Of sacred treasure in this blessed room.
Well did wise poets by thy glorious name
Title that age which they would have the best,\(^5\)
Thou being the best of things, and far transcending
All style of joy in children, parents, friends,
Or any other waking dream on earth.
Thy looks when they to Venus did ascribe,
They should have giv'n her twenty thousand Cupids,\(^6\)
Such are thy beauties and our loves.\(^9\) Dear saint,
Riches, the 'dumb god, that giv'st all men tongues,
That canst do naught and yet mak'st men do all things,
The price of souls; even hell, with thee to boot,\(^9\)
Is made worth heaven! Thou art virtue, fame,
Honor, and all things else. Who\(^8\) can get thee,
He shall be noble, valiant, honest, wise—

MOSCA  And what he will, sir. Riches are in fortune
A greater good than wisdom is in nature.

VOLPONE  True, my beloved Mosca. Yet I glory
More in the cunning purchase\(^6\) of my wealth
Than in the glad possession, since I gain

6. Ferrous sulfate, like gall a corrosive substance used in ink.
7. A traditional metaphor for satiric wit.
8. Alternatively, the play may begin with Volpone rising from his onstage bed.
9. The treasure is probably hidden behind a curtain in the alcove at the back of the stage.
3. Aries, the constellation ascendant in early spring.
4. Alchemists believed gold to have issued from the sun ("Sol"). Volpone blasphemously applies this metaphor to God's creation of the world in Genesis.
5. The mythical Golden Age (when, ironically, gold was not yet in use) was influentially described by Ovid in The Metamorphoses.
6. In Latin poetry, Venus was commonly described as aurea, meaning "golden." The throng of Cupids Volpone imagines around her suggests gold's irresistible, and for him highly sexual, appeal.
No common way. I use no trade, no venture;
I wound no earth with plowshares; fat no beasts
To feed the shambles; have no mills for iron,
Oil, corn, or men, to grind 'em into powder;
I blow no subtle glass; expose no ships
To threat'nings of the furrow-faced sea;
I turn no moneys in the public bank,
Nor usure private—

MOSCA No, sir, nor devour
Soft prodigals. You shall ha' some will swallow
A melting heir as glibly as your Dutch
Will pills of butter, and ne'er purge for't;
Tear forth the fathers of poor families
Out of their beds and coffin them alive
In some kind, clasping prison, where their bones
May be forthcoming when the flesh is rotten.
But your sweet nature doth abhor these courses;
You loathe the widow's or the orphan's tears
Should wash your pavements, or their piteous cries
Ring in your roofs and beat the air for vengeance.

VOLPONE Right, Mosca, I do loathe it.

MOSCA And besides, sir,
You are not like the thresher that doth stand
With a huge flail, watching a heap of corn,
And, hungry, dares not taste the smallest grain,
But feeds on mallows and such bitter herbs;
Nor like the merchant who hath filled his vaults
With Romagnia and rich Candian wines,
Yet drinks the lees of Lombard's vinegar.
You will not lie in straw whilst moths and worms
Feed on your sumptuous hangings and soft beds.
You know the use of riches, and dare give now
From that bright heap to me, your poor observer,
Or to your dwarf, or your hermaphrodite,
Your eunuch, or what other household trifle
Your pleasure allows maint'nance—

VOLPONE [giving money] Hold thee, Mosca,
Take of my hand; thou strik'st on truth in all,
And they are envious term thou parasite.
Call forth my dwarf, my eunuch, and my fool,
And let 'em make me sport.

MOSCA [Exit MOSCA.]

What should I do
But cocker up my genius, and live free
To all delights my fortune calls me to?
I have no wife, no parent, child, ally
To give my substance to, but whom I make
Must be my heir, and this makes men observe me.

7. (1) Delicate; (2) artful. (Venice was and is renowned for its art glass.)
8. Never use a remedy for gastric distress. (The Dutch were notoriously fond of butter.)
9. Romagnia and rich Candian wines are expensive wines from Greece and Crete. The lees of Lombard's vinegar are the dregs of cheap Italian wine.
This draws new clients\(^5\) daily to my house,
Women and men of every sex and age,
That bring me presents, send me plate,\(^6\) coin, jewels,
With hope that when I die—which they expect
Each greedy minute—it shall then return
Tenfold upon them; whilst some, covetous
Above the rest, seek to engross\(^7\) me whole,
And counterwork,\(^8\) the one unto the other,
Contend in gifts as they would seem in love;
All which I suffer, playing with their hopes,
And am content to coin 'em into profit,
And look on that, still bearing them in hand,\(^9\)
Letting the cherry knock against their lips,
And draw it by their mouths and back again.\(^1\)—
How now!

SCENE 2. The scene continues.

[Enter] MOSCA, NANO, ANDROGYNO, [and] CASTRONE.

NANO Now, room for fresh gamesters,\(^a\) who do will you to know
They do bring you neither play nor university show,\(^1\)
And therefore do entreat you that whatsoever they rehearse
May not fare a whit the worse for the false pace of the verse.\(^2\)
If you wonder at this, you will wonder more ere we pass,
For know here [indicating ANDROGYNO] is enclosed the soul of Pythagoras,\(^3\)
That juggler\(^d\) divine, as hereafter shall follow;
Which soul (fast and loose, sir) came first from Apollo,
And was breathed into Aethalides,\(^4\) Mercurius his\(^b\) son,
Where it had the gift to remember all that ever was done.
From thence it fled forth and made quick transmigration
To goldilocked Euphorbus,\(^5\) who was killed in good fashion
At the siege of old Troy, by the cuckold of Sparta.\(^6\)
Hermotimus\(^7\) was next—I find it in my charta\(^c\)——
To whom it did pass, where no sooner it was missing
But with one Pyrrhus of Delos\(^8\) it learned to go a-fishing;
And thence did it enter the Sophist of Greece.\(^9\)
From Pythagore she went into a beautiful piece\(^0\)

\^2. The four-stress meter of the skit Nano, Androgyno, and Castrone here perform was common in medieval drama but old-fashioned by Jonson's time.
\^3. Ancient Greek philosopher, mathematician, and music theorist who believed in the transmigration of souls and in the mystical properties of geometrical relationships (especially triangles [triangles = trigon]). His followers observed strict dietary restrictions and took five-year vows of silence. His thigh was rumored to be made of gold. Jonson adapts much of the career of Pythagoras's soul from The Dialogue of the Cobbler and the Cock, by the Greek satirist Lucian.
\^4. The herald of the Greek Argonauts and son of the god Mercury, who inherited his father's divine gift of memory. Thus, unlike other souls, which forget their previous lives, Aethalides' soul can recall its transmigrations.
\^5. Trojan youth who injured Achilles' beloved friend, Patroclus, in the Iliad.
\^6. Menelaus, the Spartan king whose wife, Helen, was stolen by the Trojan prince Paris.

His musics, his trigon, his golden thigh,
Or his telling how elements shift; but I
Would ask how of late thou hast suffered translation,
And shifted thy coat in these days of reformation?

ANDROGYNO Like one of the reformed, a fool, as you see,
Counting all old doctrine heresy.

NANO But not on thine own forbid meats hast thou ventured?

ANDROGYNO On fish, when first a Carthusian I entered.

NANO Why, then thy dogmatical silence hath left thee?

ANDROGYNO Of that an obstreperous lawyer bereft me.

NANO Oh, wonderful change! When Sir Lawyer forsook thee,
For Pythagore's sake, what body then took thee?

ANDROGYNO A good dull mule.

NANO And how, by that means,
Thou wert brought to allow of the eating of beans?

ANDROGYNO Yes.

NANO But from the mule into whom didst thou pass?

ANDROGYNO Into a very strange beast, by some writers called an
By others a precise, pure, illuminate brother

And will drop you forth a libel or a sanctified lie
Betwixt every spoonful of a Nativity pie.

NANO Now quitt thee, for heaven, of that profane nation,
And gently report thy next transmigration.

ANDROGYNO TO the same that I am."

NANO A creature of delight?

ANDROGYNO Troth, this I am in, even here would I tarry.

NANO 'Cause here the delight of each sex thou canst vary?

ANDROGYNO Alas, those pleasures be stale and forsaken.

NANO No, 'tis your fool wherewith I am so taken,
The only one creature that I can call blessed,
For all other forms I have proved most distressed.

2. A quater is an equilateral triangle the sides of which are evenly divisible by four.
3. The "reformed" are Protestants in general, but more specifically the Puritan wing of the Church of England. Jonson was a Catholic when he wrote Volpone.
4. Pythagoreans abstained from fish, but Carthusians, an order of Catholic monks, ate fish on fast days.
5. Puritan who claimed immediate, visionary knowledge of religious truth. Puritans did not observe the traditional fasting days (hence "devour flesh" in the following line).
NANO  Spoke true, as thou wert in Pythagoras still.
This learned opinion we celebrate will,
Fellow eunuch, as behooves us, with all our wit and art,
To dignify that whereof ourselves are so great and special a part.
folly
VOLPONE  [applauding]  Now, very, very pretty! Mosca, this Was thy invention?
MOSCA  If it please my patron,
Not else.
VOLPONE  It doth, good Mosca.
MOSCA  Then it was, sir.

SONG
NANO and CASTRONE  [sing]
Fools, they are the only nation six
Worth men’s envy or admiration,
Free from care or sorrow-taking,
Themselves and others merry making;
All they speak or do is sterling,
Your fool, he is your great man’s dearing,
And your lady’s sport and pleasure;
Tongue and bauble are his treasure.
E’en his face begetteth laughter,
And he speaks truth free from slaughter.
He’s the grace of every feast,
And sometimes the chiefest guest,
Hath his trencher and his stool,
When wit waits upon the fool.
Oh, who would not be
He, he, he?
One knocks without.
VOLPONE  Who’s that? Away!
[Exeunt NANO and CASTRONE.]
MOSCA  Look, Mosca.
'*Tis Signor Voltore, the advocate;
I know him by his knock.
VOLPONE  Fetch me my gown,
My furs, and nightcaps; say my couch is changing,
And let him entertain himself awhile
Without i’th’gallery.
[Exit MOSCA.]
Now, now, my clients
Begin their visitation! Vulture, kite,
Raven, and gocrow, all my birds of prey
That think me turning carcass, now they come.
I am not for ‘em yet.
[Enter MOSCA.]
How now? The news?
MOSCA  A piece of plate, sir.
VOLPONE  Of what bigness?

7. My bedsheets are being changed.
MOSCA  Huge,
Massy, and antique, with your name inscribed
And arms⁰ engraven.

VOLPONE  Good! And not a fox
Stretched on the earth, with fine delusive sleights⁰
Mocking a gaping crow?⁰ Ha, Mosca?

MOSCA  [laughing]
Sharp, sir.

VOLPONE  Give me my furs. Why dost thou laugh so, man?

MOSCA  I cannot choose, sir, when I apprehend
What thoughts he has, without,⁰ now, as he walks:
That this might be the last gift he should⁰ give;
That this would fetch you;⁰ if you died today
And gave him all, what he should be tomorrow;
What large return would come of all his ventures;
How he should worshipped be and reverenced;
Ride with his furs and footcloths,⁰ waited on
By herds of fools and clients; have clear way
Made for his mule, as lettered⁰ as himself;
Be called the great and learned advocate;
And then concludes there's naught impossible.

VOLPONE  Yes, to be learned, Mosca.

MOSCA  Oh, no, rich
Implies it.⁰ Hood an ass with reverend purple,¹
So you can hide his two ambitious⁰ ears,
And he shall pass for a cathedral doctor.⁰

VOLPONE  My caps, my caps, good Mosca. Fetch him in.

MOSCA  Stay, sir, your ointment for your eyes.

VOLPONE  That's true.
Dispatch, dispatch! I long to have possession
Of my new present.

MOSCA  That, and thousands more
I hope to see you lord of.

VOLPONE  Thanks, land Mosca.

MOSCA  And that, when I am lost in blended dust,
And hundred such as I am in succession—

VOLPONE  Nay, that were too much, Mosca.

MOSCA  —you shall live
Still, to delude these Harpies.²

VOLPONE  Loving Mosca!

[Exit MOSCA. VOLPONE lies down.]

Tis well. My pillow now, and let him enter.

Wherein this three year I have milked their hopes.
He comes, I hear him. [Coughing] Uh, uh, uh, uh! Oh—

SCENE 3. The scene continues.

[Enter] VOLTORE [with a platter, ushered by] MOSCA.
MOSCA [to VOLTORE] YOU still are what you were, sir. Only you,
Of all the rest, are he commands his love;
And you do wisely to preserve it thus
With early visitation and kind notes
Of your good meaning to him, which, I know,
Cannot but come most grateful. [Loudly, to VOLPONE] Patron, sir!
Here's Signor Voltore is come—
VOLPONE [weakly] What say you?
MOSCA Sir, Signor Voltore is come this morning
To visit you.
VOLPONE I thank him.
MOSCA And hath brought
A piece of antique plate bought of Saint Mark,1
With which he here presents you.
VOLPONE He is welcome.
Pray him to come more often.
MOSCA Yes.
VOLPONE [straining to hear] What says he?
MOSCA He thanks you, and desires you see him often.
VOLPONE Mosca.
MOSCA My patron?
VOLPONE [groping] Bring him near. Where is he?
I long to feel his hand.
MOSCA [guiding VOLPONE's hands toward the platter] The plate is here, sir.
VOLTORE HOW fare you, sir?
VOLPONE I thank you, Signor Voltore.
Where is the plate? Mine eyes are bad.
VOLTORE [relinquishing the platter] I'm sorry
To see you still thus weak.
MOSCA [aside] That he is not weaker.
VOLPONE YOU are too munificent.
VOLTORE NO, sir, would to heaven
I could as well give health to you as that plate.
VOLPONE You give, sir, what you can. I thank you. Your love Hath taste in this, and shall not be unanswered. is suggested by
I pray you see me often.
VOLTORE Yes, I shall, sir.
VOLPONE Be not far from me.
MOSCA [aside to VOLTORE] DO you observe that, sir?
VOLPONE Hearken unto me still. It will concern you.
MOSCA [aside to VOLTORE] YOU are a happy man, sir. Know your good.
VOLPONE I cannot now last long—

1. Goldsmiths kept shop in the square of Saint Mark's Basilica.
MOSCA (aside to VOLTORE) You are his heir, sir.

VOLTORE (aside to MOSCA) Am I?

VOLPONE I feel me going, uh, uh, uh, uh!

I am sailing to my port, uh, uh, uh, uh!

And I am glad I am so near my haven.

[He pretends to lapse into unconsciousness.]

MOSCA Alas, kind gentleman! Well, we must all go—

VOLTORE But Mosca—

MOSCA Age will conquer.

VOLTORE Pray thee, hear me.

Am I inscribed his heir for certain?

MOSCA Are you?

I do beseech you, sir, you will vouchsafe

To write me i'your family. All my hopes

Depend upon Your Worship. I am lost

Except the rising sun do shine on me.

VOLTORE It shall both shine and warm thee, Mosca.

MOSCA Sir, I am a man that have not done your love

All the worst offices; here I wear your keys, services

See all your coffers and your caskets locked,

Keep the poor inventory of your jewels,

Your plate, and moneys, am your steward, sir,

Husband your goods here.

VOLTORE But am I sole heir?

MOSCA Without a partner, sir, confirmed this morning;

The wax is warm yet, and the ink scarce dry of the seal

Upon the parchment.

VOLTORE Happy, happy me!

By what good chance, sweet Mosca?

MOSCA Your desert, sir; I know no second cause.

VOLTORE Thy modesty Is loath to know it. Well, we shall requite it.

MOSCA He ever liked your course, sir; that first took him.

I oft have heard him say how he admired

Men of your large profession, that could speak

To every cause, and things mere contraries, utterly contradictory

Till they were hoarse again, yet all be law;

That with most quick agility could turn

And re-turn, make knots and undo them,

Give forked counsel, take provoking gold ambiguous

On either hand, and put it up: these men, obsequiousness

He knew, would thrive with their humility,

And for his part, he thought he should be blessed

To have his heir of such a suffering long-suffering spirit,

So wise, so grave, of so perplexed a tongue, bewildering

3. Expansive, liberal (with the suggestion of "unscrupulous").
4. Take a bribe from each party to a suit and pocket it.

And loud withal, that would not wag nor scarce besides
Lie still without a fee, when every word gold coin
Your Worship but lets fall is a cecchine! Another knocks.
Who’s that? One knocks; I would not have you seen, sir.
And yet—pretend you came and went in haste; only
I’ll fashion an excuse. And, gentle sir, I ha’ not been your worst of clients.

VOLTORE

MOSCA—

When will you have your inventory brought, sir?
Or see a copy of the will? [More knocking.]
I’ll bring em to you, sir. Away, begone, [Exit VOLTORE.]

VOLPONE Excellent, Mosca!
Come hither, let me kiss thee.

MOSCA Keep you still, sir.
Here is Corbaccio.

VOLPONE Set the plate away.
The vulture’s gone, and the old raven’s come.

SCENE 4. The scene continues.

MOSCA [to VOLPONE] Betake you to your silence and your sleep;
[He puts up the plate.]

Stand there and multiply.—Now shall we see beget more booty
A wretch who is indeed more impotent
Than this can feign to be, yet hopes to hop Volpone
Over his grave.

ENTER CORBACCIO.
Signor Corbaccio!

You’re very welcome, sir.

CORBACCIO How does your patron?

MOSCA Troth, as he did, sir: no amends.

CORBACCIO What? Mends he?

MOSCA NO, sir, he is rather worse.

CORBACCIO That’s well. Where is he?

MOSCA Upon his couch, sir, newly fall’n asleep.

CORBACCIO Does he sleep well?

MOSCA NO wink, sir, all this night, dozes fitfully
Nor yesterday, but slumbers.

CORBACCIO Good! He should take
Some counsel of physicians. I have brought him
An opiate here, from mine own doctor—

MOSCA He will not hear of drugs.

CORBACCIO Why, I myself
Stood by while’t was made, saw all th’ingredients,

5. Look as if you were here on business.
And know it cannot but most gently work.
My life for his, 'tis but to make him sleep.

VOLPONE [aside]
Ay, his last sleep, if he would take it.

MOSCA
He has no faith in physic.
Sirs, medicine

CORBACCIO
'Say you? 'Say you?

MOSCA
He has no faith in physic. He does think
Most of your doctors are the greater danger
And worse disease t'escape. I often have Heard him protest that your physician
Should never be his heir.

CORBACCIO
Not I his heir?

MOSCA
Not your physician, sir.

CORBACCIO
Oh, no, no, no.
I do not mean it.

MOSCA
NO, sir, nor their fees
He cannot brook.
He says they flay a man
Before they kill him.

CORBACCIO
Bight, I do conceive you.

MOSCA
And then, they do it by experiment,
For which the law not only doth absolve 'em,
But gives them great reward; and he is loath
To hire his death so.

CORBACCIO
It is true, they kill
With as much license as a judge.

MOSCA
Nay, more:
For he but kills, sir, where the law condemns,
And these can kill him, too.

CORBACCIO
Ay, or me
Or any man. How does his apoplexy?
Is that strong on him still?

MOSCA
Most violent.
His speech is broken and his eyes are set.
His face drawn longer than 'twas wont—

CORBACCIO
HOW? HOW?
Stronger than he was wont?

MOSCA
NO, sir: his face
Drawn longer than 'twas wont.

CORBACCIO
Oh, good.
MOSCA
His mouth
Is ever gaping, and his eyelids hang.

CORBACCIO
Good.

MOSCA
A freezing numbness stiffens all his joints,
And makes the color of his flesh like lead.

CORBACCIO
'Tis good.
MOSCA
His pulse beats slow and dull.

CORBACCIO
Good symptoms still.

1. Not Corbaccio's doctors, but doctors generally.
2. By testing possible remedies on their patients.
3. In the following lines, Mosca attributes to Volpone a wide variety of symptoms that were, even occurring singly, considered sure signs of impending death.
MOSCA  And from his brain—
CORBACCIO  Ha? How? Not from his brain?
MOSCA  Yes, sir, and from his brain—
CORBACCIO  I conceive you, good.
MOSCA —Flows a cold sweat with a continual rheum" mucus discharge
  Forth the resolved corners of his eyes.
CORBACCIO  Is't possible? Yet I am better, ha!
  How does he with the swimming of his head?
MOSCA  Oh, sir, 'tis past the scotomy; he now
  Hath lost his feeling, and hath left to snort;
  You hardly can perceive him that he breathes.
CORBACCIO  Excellent, excellent. Sure I shall outlast him!
  This makes me young again a score of years.
MOSCA  I was a-coming for you, sir,
CORBACCIO  Has he made his will?
MOSCA  NO, sir.
CORBACCIO  Nothing? Ha?
MOSCA  He has not made his will, sir.
CORBACCIO  Oh, oh, oh.
  What then did Voltore, the lawyer, here?
MOSCA  He smelt a carcass, sir, when he but heard
  My master was about his testament—
  As I did urge him to it, for your good—
CORBACCIO  He came unto him, did he? I thought so.
MOSCA  Yes, and presented him this piece of plate.
CORBACCIO  To be his heir?
MOSCA  I do not know, sir.
CORBACCIO  True,
  I know it too.
MOSCA  [aside]  By your own scale, sir.
CORBACCIO  [showing a bag of gold]  Well,
  I shall prevent him yet. See, Mosca, look,
  Here I have brought a bag of bright cecchines,
  Will quite weigh down his plate.
MOSCA  Yea, marry, sir!
  This is true physic, this your sacred medicine;
  No talk of opiates to this great elixir.
CORBACCIO  Tis aurum palpabile, if not potabile.
MOSCA  It shall be ministered to him in his bowl?
CORBACCIO  Ay, do, do, do.
MOSCA  Most blessed cordial!
  This will recover him.
CORBACCIO  Yes, do, do, do.
MOSCA  I think it were not best, sir.
CORBACCIO  What?
MOSCA  TO recover him.

4. Dizziness, accompanied by partial blindness.
5. In alchemy, a liquid thought to be capable of prolonging life indefinitely or changing base metal into gold.
6. It is gold that can be felt, if not drunk. (Latin.)
  Dissolved gold was used as a medicine.
CORBACCIO Oh, no, no, no; by no means.
MOSCA Why, sir, this will work some strange effect, if he but feel it.
CORBACCIO Tis true, therefore forbear, I'll take my venture.
MOSCA [keeping it out of his reach] At no hand. Pardon me, By no means
You shall not do yourself that wrong, sir. I will so advise you, you shall have it all.
CORBACCIO HOW?
MOSCA All, sir, 'tis your right, your own; no man can claim a part. 'Tis yours without a rival, Decreed by destiny.
CORBACCIO HOW? HOW? HOW, good Mosca?
MOSCA I'll tell you, sir. This fit he shall recover—
CORBACCIO I do conceive you.
MOSCA —and, on first advantage of his gained sense, will I re-importune him Unto the making of his testament, And show him this.
CORBACCIO Good, good.
MOSCA 'Tis better yet, If you will hear, sir.
CORBACCIO Yes, with all my heart.
MOSCA NOW, would I counsel you, make home with speed; There frame a will, whereto you shall inscribe My master your sole heir.
CORBACCIO And disinherit My son?
MOSCA Oh, sir, the better, for that color Shall make it much more taking.
CORBACCIO Oh, but color?
MOSCA This will, sir, you shall send it unto me.
Now, when I come to enforce—as I will do— Your cares, your watchings, and your many prayers, Your more than many gifts, your this day's present, And last produce your will, where—without thought Or least regard unto your proper issue,
A son so brave and highly meriting— The stream of your diverted love hath thrown you Upon my master, and made him your heir, He cannot be so stupid or stone dead But out of conscience and mere gratitude—
CORBACCIO He must pronounce me his?
MOSCA 'Tis true.
CORBACCIO This plot Did I think on before.
MOSCA I do believe it.
CORBACCIO DO you not believe it?
MOSCA Yes, sir.
CORBACCIO Mine own project.
MOSCA Which when he hath done, sir—
CORBACCIO Published me his heir?
MOSCA And you so certain to survive him—
CORBACCIO Ay.
MOSCA Being so lusty a man—
CORBACCIO ’Tis true.
MOSCA Yes, sir—
CORBACCIO I thought on that too. See how he° should be... Mosca
The very organ to express my thoughts!
MOSCA YOU have not only done yourself a good—
CORBACCIO But multiplied it on my son?
MOSCA Tis right, sir.
CORBACCIO Still my invention.
MOSCA ’Las, sir, heaven knows,
It hath been all my study, all my care,
(I e’en grow gray withal) how to work things—
CORBACCIO I do conceive, sweet Mosca.
MOSCA YOU are he
For whom I labor here.
CORBACCIO Ay, do, do, do.
I’ll straight about it. [CORRACCIO starts to leave.]
MOSCA Rook go with you,° raven!
CORBACCIO I know thee honest.
MOSCA YOU do lie, sir—
CORBACCIO And—
MOSCA Your knowledge is no better than your ears, sir.
CORBACCIO I do not doubt to be a father to thee.
MOSCA Nor I to gull my brother of his blessing.°
CORBACCIO I may ha’ my youth restored to me, why not?
MOSCA Your Worship is a precious ass—
CORBACCIO What say’st thou?
MOSCA I do desire Your Worship to make haste, sir.
CORBACCIO ’Tis done, ’tis done, I go. [Exit.]
VOLPONE [leaping from the bed] Oh, I shall burst!
Let out my sides,° let out my sides—
MOSCA Contain
Your flux of laughter, sir. You know this hope
Is such a bait it covers any hook.
VOLPONE Oh, but thy working and thy placing it!
I cannot hold;° good rascal, let me kiss thee.
I never knew thee in so rare a humor.°
MOSCA Alas, sir, I but do as I am taught:
Follow your grave instructions, give ’em words,
Pour oil into their ears,° and send them hence.
VOLPONE ’Tis true, ’tis true. What a rare punishment
Is avarice to itself?°
MOSCA  Ay, with our help, sir.

VOLPONE  So many cares, so many maladies,
So many fears attending on old age,
Yea, death so often called on, as no wish invoked
Can be more frequent with 'em, their limbs faint,
Their senses dull, their seeing, hearing, going,
All dead before them; yea, their very teeth,
Their instruments of eating, failing them—
Yet this is reckoned life! Nay, here was one
Is now gone home that wishes to live longer!
Feels not his gout nor palsy, feigns himself
Younger by scores of years, flatters his age
With confident belying it, hopes he may
With charms, like Aeson, have his youth restored,
And with these thoughts so battens, as if fate
Would be as easily cheated on as he,
And all turns air!

Another knocks.

Who's that there, now? A third?

MOSCA  Close, to your couch again. I hear his voice.

It is Corvino, our spruce merchant.

VOLPONE  [lying down again]  Dead.

MOSCA  Another bout, sir, with your eyes.

[He applies ointment.]

SCENE 5. The scene continues.

[Enter]  CORVINO.

Signor Corvino! Come most wished for! Oh, You come
How happy were you if you knew it now!

CORVINO  Why? What? Wherein?

MOSCA  The tardy hour is come, sir.

CORVINO  He is not dead?

MOSCA  Not dead, sir, but as good;
He knows no man.

CORVINO  HOW shall I do, then?

MOSCA  Why, sir?

CORVINO  I have brought him here a pearl.

MOSCA  Perhaps he has
So much remembrance left as to know you, sir;
He still calls on you; nothing but your name
Is in his mouth. Is your pearl orient, sir?

CORVINO  Venice was never owner of the like.

VOLPONE  [weakly]  Signor Corvino—

MOSCA  Hark.

VOLPONE  —Signor Corvino—

MOSCA  He calls you. Step and give it him.—He's here, sir,
And he has brought you a rich pearl.

1. Deceives himself, and attempts to deceive others, about his age by vigorously refusing to admit the truth. 1.5
2. Father of the Greek hero Jason; his youth was restored by Medea, his sorceress daughter-in-law. 2. Father of the Greek hero Jason; his youth was restored by Medea, his sorceress daughter-in-law.

1. Especially brilliant. (The most beautiful pearls came from the Indian Ocean.)
CORVINO [to VOLPONE] HOW do you, sir? [To MOSCA] Tell him it doubles the twelfth carat. [He gives VOLPONE the pearl.]

MOSCA [to CORVINO] Sir, he cannot understand. His hearing’s gone; and yet it comforts him to see you—

CORVINO I have a diamond for him too.

MOSCA Best show’t, sir. Put it into his hand; ’tis only there he apprehends; he has his feeling yet. [CORVINO gives VOLPONE the diamond.]

CORVINO Las, good gentleman! See how he grasps it!

MOSCA Tut, forget, sir. The weeping of an heir should still be laughter Under a Visor.

CORVINO Why, am I his heir?

MOSCA Sir, I am sworn; I may not show the will Till he be dead. But here has been Corbaccio, Here has been Voltoire, here were others too, I cannot number ’em they were so many, All gaping here for legacies; but I, Taking the vantage of his naming you— "Signor Corvino! Signor Corvino!"—look Paper and pen and ink, and there I asked him Whom he would have his heir? "Corvino." Who should be executor? "Corvino." And To any question he was silent to, I still interpreted the nods he made Through weakness for consent, and sent home th’others, Nothing bequeathed them but to cry and curse.

CORVINO Oh, my dear Mosca! (They embrace.) Does he not perceive us?

MOSCA NO more than a blind harper. He knows no man, No face of friend, nor name of any servant, Who ’twas that fed him last or gave him drink; Not those he hath begotten or brought up Can he remember.

CORVINO Has he children?

MOSCA Bastards, Some dozen or more, that he begot on beggars, Gypsies and Jews and blackmoors, when he was drunk. Knew you not that, sir? ’Tis the common fable. The dwarf, the fool, the eunuch are all his; He’s the true father of his family In all save me, but he has given em nothing.

2. In the seventeenth century, a carat was between 1/144 and 1/150 of an ounce. A twenty-four-carat pearl was therefore very large, weighing roughly 1/6 of an ounce. 3. Harp players were often blind. 4. By law, ordinarily barred from the line of inheritance.
CORVINO That’s well, that’s well. Art sure he does not hear us?
MOSCA Sure, sir? Why, look you, credit your own sense.\[Shouting at VOLPONE\] The pox\(s\) approach and add to your diseases
If it would send you hence the sooner, sir.
For your incontinence, it hath deserved it
Throughly\(s\) and throughly, and the plague to boot.\[To CORVINO\] You may come near, sir. \[Shouting at VOLPONE again\]
Would you would once close
Those filthy eyes of yours, that flow with slime
Like two frog-pits,\(s\) and those same hanging cheeks,
Covered with hide instead of skin—nay, help, sir—
That look like frozen dishclouts\(s\) set on end!
CORVINO \[shouting at VOLPONE\] Or like an old smoked wall on which the rain
Ran down in streaks!
MOSCA Excellent, sir! Speak out;
You may be louder yet; a culverin\(s\) firearm
Discharged in his ear would hardly bore it.
CORVINO \[shouting\] His nose is like a common sewer, still\(s\) continually running.
MOSCA Tis good! And what his mouth?
CORVINO \[shouting\] A very draught!\(s\) cesspool
MOSCA Oh, stop it up—
CORVINO By no means.
MOSCA Pray you let me.
Faith, I could stifle him rarely with a pillow
As well as any woman that should keep\(s\) him.
CORVINO DO as you will, but I’ll be gone.
MOSCA DO as you will, but I’ll be gone.
MOSCA Be so;
It is your presence makes him last so long.
CORVINO I pray you, use no violence.
MOSCA No, sir? Why?
Why should you be thus scrupulous? Pray you, sir.
CORVINO Nay, at your discretion.
MOSCA Well, good sir, begone.
CORVINO I will not trouble him now to take my pearl?!
MOSCA Pooh! Nor your diamond. What a needless care
Is this afflicts you? Is not all here yours?
Am not I here, whom you have made your creature?
That owe my being to you?
CORVINO Grateful Mosca!
Thou art my friend, my fellow, my companion,
My partner, and shalt share in all my fortunes.
MOSCA Excepting one.
CORVINO What’s that?
MOSCA Your gallant\(s\) wife, sir.
\[Exit CORVINO.\]
Now is he gone. We had no other means
To shoot him hence but this.
VOLPONE My divine Mosca!
Thou hast today outgone thyself. Another knocks.
Who’s there?
I will be troubled with no more. Prepare
Me music, dances, banquets, all delights.
The Turk is not more sensual in his pleasures
Than will Volpone.                      [Exit MOSCA.]

Let me see, a pearl?
A diamond? Plate? Cecchines? Good morning’s purchase. haul
Why, this is better than rob churches, yet,
Or fat by eating, once a month, a man.” i.e., taking monthly interest

Who is’t?
MOSCA  The beauteous Lady Would-be, sir,
Wife to the English knight, Sir Politic Would-be—
This is the style, sir, is directed me—
Hath sent to know how you have slept tonight, last night
And if you would be visited.

VOLPONE  Not now.

Who is’t?
MOSCA  The beauteous Lady Would-be, sir,
Wife to the English knight, Sir Politic Would-be—
This is the style, sir, is directed me—
Hath sent to know how you have slept tonight, last night
And if you would be visited.

VOLPONE  Not now.

Some three hours hence—
MOSCA  I told the squire so much.

VOLPONE  When I am high with mirth and wine: then, then.
‘Fore heaven, I wonder at the desperate valor
Of the bold English, that they dare let loose
Their wives to all encounters!

MOSCA  Sir, this knight
Had not his name for nothing. He is politic, canny
And knows, howe’er his wife affect strange airs, foreign; bizarre
She hath not yet the face to be dishonest. unchaste
But had she Signor Corvino’s wife’s face—

VOLPONE  Has she so rare a face?

MOSCA  Oh, sir, the wonder,
The blazing star of Italy! A wench
O’the first year! A beauty ripe as harvest! unflawed and in her prime Whose skin is whiter than a swan, all over,
Than silver, snow, or lilies! A soft lip,
Would tempt you to eternity of kissing!
And flesh that melteth in the touch to blood!
Bright as your gold, and lovely as your gold!

VOLPONE  Why had not I known this before?

MOSCA  Alas, sir,
Myself but yesterday discovered it.

VOLPONE  HOW might I see her?

MOSCA  Oh, not possible.

VOLPONE  She's kept as warily as is your gold:
Never does come abroad, never takes air outside
But at a window. All her looks are sweet
As the first grapes or cherries, and are watched of the season
As near as they are.

VOLPONE: I must see her—

MOSCA: Sir,

There is a guard of ten spies thick upon her—
All his whole household—each of which is set
Upon his fellow, and have all their charge
When he goes out; when he comes in, examined.

VOLPONE: I will go see her, though but at her window.

MOSCA: In some disguise, then.

VOLPONE: That is true. I must Maintain mine own shape still the same.

[Exeunt.]

Act 2

SCENE 1. Saint Mark's Square.

[Enter] POLITIC WOULD-BE [and] PEREGRINE.

POLITIC: Sir, to a wise man all the world's his soil.

It is not Italy, nor France, nor Europe
That must bound me if my fates call me forth.
Yet I protest it is no salt desire
Of seeing countries, shifting a religion,
Nor any disaffection to the state
Where I was bred—and unto which I owe
My dearest plots—hath brought me out;
That idle, antique, stale, gray-headed project
Of knowing men's minds and manners with Ulysses;
But a peculiar humor of my wife's
Laid for this height of Venice, to observe,
To quote, to learn the language, and so forth.—
I hope you travel, sir, with license?

PEREGRINE: Yes.

POLITIC: I dare the safer convers. How long, sir,
Since you left England?

PEREGRINE: Seven weeks.

POLITIC: So lately!

You ha' not been with my Lord Ambassador?

PEREGRINE: Not yet, sir.

POLITIC: Pray you, what news, sir, vents our climate?

I heard last night a most strange thing reported
By some of my lord's followers, and I long
To hear how't will be seconded.

PEREGRINE: What was't, sir?

POLITIC: Marry, sir, of a raven that should build
In a ship royal of the King's.

2. Each member of the household spies on all the others; each gets his instructions when Corvino departs and is interrogated when he returns.

2.1 Proverbial, like most of Sir Pol's "original" advice. "Soil": native land.

5. Comes from our part of the world?
PEREGRINE [aside] This fellow, Does he gulF me, trow? Or is gullFed?—Your name, sir? trick / do you suppose?

POLITIC My name is Politic Would-be.

PEREGRINE [aside] Oh, that speaks him.—

A knight, sir?

POLITIC A poor knight, sir.

PEREGRINE Your lady Lies here in Venice for intelligence Of tires and fashions and behavior Among the courtesans? The fine Lady Would-be?

POLITIC Yes, sir, the spider and the bee oftentimes Suck from one flower.

PEREGRINE Good Sir Politic, I cry you mercy! I have heard much of you. 'Tis true, sir, of your raven.

POLITIC On your knowledge?

PEREGRINE Yes, and your lion's whelping in the Tower.

POLITIC Another whelp!

PEREGRINE Another, sir.

POLITIC NOW, heaven! What prodigies be these? The fires at Berwick! And the new star! These things concurring, strange! And full of omen! Saw you those meteors?

PEREGRINE I did, sir.

POLITIC Fearful! Pray you sir, confirm me: Were there three porpoises seen above the bridge, As they give out? Six, and a sturgeon, sir.

POLITIC I am astonished!

PEREGRINE Nay, sir, be not so. I'll tell you a greater prodigy than these—

POLITIC What should these things portend?

PEREGRINE The very day— Let me be sure—that I put forth from London, There was a whale discovered in the river. As high as Woolwich, that had waited there— Few know how many months—for the subversion Of the Stode Fleet.

POLITIC Is't possible? Believe it, 'Twas either sent from Spain or the Archdukes. Spinola's whale, upon my life, my credit! Will they not leave these projects? Worthy sir, Some other news.

6. In the first decade of the 17th century, King James I raised badly needed money by selling knighthoods to many whose birth, attainments, or wealth would not have previously merited a title.
7. Venice was famous for its elegant prostitutes.
9. The fires at Berwick were aurora borealis visible above Berwick, Northumberland, in 1605, said to resemble battling armies. The new star, a supernova, was described by the astronomer Johannes Kepler in 1604.
1. A porpoise was found upstream of London Bridge in the Thames River the January before Volpone was first performed.
2. A town on the Thames, a bit to the east of London.
3. The English merchant adventurers' ships, which were harboring at Stade, in the mouth of the Elbe River.
4. The Archduke Albert of Austria and his wife, Isabella, the Infanta of Spain, ruled the Netherlands in the name of Spain.
5. Ambrosio de Spinola was general of the Spanish army in the Netherlands.
PEREGRINE Faith, Stone the fool is dead; And they do lack a tavern-fool extremely.

POLITIC Is Mas' Stone dead?

PEREGRINE He's dead, sir. Why, I hope You thought him not immortal? [Aside] Oh, this knight, Were he well known, would be a precious thing To fit our English stage. He that should write But such a fellow should be thought to feign Extremely, if not maliciously.

POLITIC Stone dead!

PEREGRINE Dead. Lord, how deeply, sir, you apprehend it! He was no kinsman to you?

POLITIC That I know of. Not that Well, that same fellow was an unknown fool, And yet you knew him, it seems?

POLITIC I did so. Sir, I knew him one of the most dangerous heads Living within the state, and so I held him.

PEREGRINE Indeed, sir?

POLITIC While he lived, in action, He has received weekly intelligence, Upon my knowledge, out of the Low Countries, For all parts of the world, in cabbages, And those dispensed again to ambassadors In oranges, muskmelons, apricots, Lemons, pome-citrons, and suchlike—sometimes In Colchester oysters, and your Selsey cockles.

PEREGRINE YOU make me wonder!

POLITIC Sir, upon my knowledge. Nay, I have observed him at your public ordinary Take his advertisement from a traveler— A concealed statesman—in a trencher of meat, And instantly before the meal was done Convey an answer in a toothpick.

PEREGRINE Strange! How could this be, sir?

POLITIC Why, the meat was cut So like his character, and so laid as he Must easily read the cipher.

PEREGRINE I have heard He could not read, sir.

POLITIC SO 'twas given out, In polity, by those that did employ him. But he could read, and had your languages, And to't as sound a noodle—

6. "Mas'" means "master," a term of address for boys and fools. Stone, King James's outspoken court jester, was a well-known urban character. He was whipped the year before Volpone's first performance for slandering the Lord Admiral. Politic is evidently unaware of the play on words in "Stone dead."

7. The person who said this was not commonly recognized as a spy; he used foolery as his cover.

8. Expensive delicacies, unlikely tavern fare.

9. Presumably by inserting a tiny note into a toothpick hollowed out for espionage use.
That your baboons were spies, and that they were
A kind of subtle nation near to China.

POLITIC  Ay, ay, your Mamuluchi.1 Faith, they had Their hand in a French plot or two, but they Were so extremely given to women as They made discovery of all. Yet I
Had my advices here, on Wednesday last,
From one of their own coat; they were returned,
Made their relations, as the fashion is,
And now stand fair for fresh employment.

PEREGRINE [aside] Heart,
This Sir Pol will be ignorant of nothing.
[To POLITIC] It seems, sir, you know all?

POLITIC  Not all, sir. But I have some general notions; I do love
To note and to observe. Though I live out,3
Free from the active torrent, yet I'd mark
The currents and the passages of things
For mine own private use, and know the ebbs
And flows of state.

PEREGRINE  Believe it, sir, I hold
Myself in no small tie unto my fortunes4
For casting me thus lucidly upon you,
Whose knowledge—if your bounty equal it—
May do me great assistance in instruction
For my behavior and my bearing, which Is yet so rude and raw—

POLITIC  Why, came you forth
Empty of rules for travel?

PEREGRINE  Faith, I had
Some common ones from out that vulgar grammar,2
Which he that cried Italian to me taught me.

POLITIC  Why, this it is that spoils all our brave bloods,0
Trust our hopeful gentry unto pedants,
Fellows of outside and mere bark.3 You seem
To be a gentleman of ingenuous race—
I not profess it, but my fate hath been to be where I have been consulted with
In this high kind, touching some great men's sons,
Persons of blood and honor—

PEREGRINE  Who be these, sir?

SCENE 2. The scene continues.

[Enter] MOSCA [and] NANO [disguised as a mountebank's assistants].

MOSCA  Under that window, there 't must be. The same.

1. Mamluks, a class of warriors originally from Asia
Minor, who ruled Egypt from 1250 to 1517.
2. Modern language textbook, which sometimes included travelers' tips.
POLITIC Fellows to mount a bank! Did your instructor ever discourse to you of the Italian mountebanks?
Peregrine Yes, sir. Why, here shall you see one.
Politic They are quacksalvers, fellows that live by venting oils and drugs. Was that the character he gave you of them?
Peregrine A3 I remember.
Politic Pity his ignorance. They are the only knowing men of Europe! Great general scholars, excellent physicians, most admired statesmen, professed favorites and cabinet counselors to the greatest princes! The only languaged men of all the world! Great general scholars, excellent physicians, most admired statesmen, professed favorites and cabinet counselors to the greatest princes!
Peregrine And I have heard they are most lewd impostors, ignorant made all of terms and shreds, no less beliers of great men's favors than their own vile med'cines, which they will utter upon monstrous oaths, advertise for sale selling that drug for twopence ere they part which they have valued at twelve crowns before. Politic Sir, calumnies are answered best with silence. Yourself shall judge. [To Mosca and Nano] Who is it mounts, my friends? Mosca Scoto of Mantua, sir.
Politic Is't he? [To Peregrine] Nay, then, I'll proudly promise, sir, you shall behold another man than has been fancied to you. presented in imagination I wonder yet that he should mount his bank here in this nook, that has been wont t'appear in face o'P the piazza! here he comes.
[Enter] Volpone [disguised as a mountebank, followed by a crowd.]
Volpone [to Nano] Mount, zany. clown; performer
[Volpone and Nano climb onto the platform.]
Crowd Follow, follow, follow, follow, follow!
Politic See how the people follow him! He's a man may write ten thousand crowns in bank here. note, mark but his gesture. I do use to observe make it my practice the state he keeps, in getting up. stateliness
Peregrine 'Tis worth it, sir.
Volpone Most noble gentlemen and my worthy patrons, it may seem strange that I, your Scoto Mantuano, who was ever wont to fix my bank in face of the public piazza near the shelter of the portico to the procuratia, should now, after eight months' absence from this illustrious city of Venice, humbly retire myself into an obscure nook of the piazza.

POLITIC [to PEREGRINE] Did not I now object the same?°

PEREGRINE Peace, sir.

VOLPONE Let me tell you: I am not, as your Lombard proverb saith, cold on my feet,° or content to part with my commodities at a cheaper rate than I accustomed; look not for it. Nor that the calumnious reports of that impudent detractor and shame to our profession (Alessandro Buttono,° I mean) who gave out in public I was condemned a "sfiorzato" to the galleys for poisoning the Cardinal Bembo's—cook,° hath at all attached,° much less dejected me. No, no, worthy gentlemen. To tell you true, I cannot endure to see the rabble of these ground ciarlatani,° that spread their cloaks on the pavement as if they meant to do feats of activity° and then come in lamely with their moldy tales out of Boccaccio, like stale Tabarine,° the fabulist: some of them discoursing their travels and of their tedious captivity in the Turks' galleys, when indeed, were the truth known, they were the Christians' galleys, where very temperately they ate bread and drunk water as a wholesome penance, enjoined them by their confessors, for base pilferies.

POLITIC [to PEREGRINE] Note but his bearing and contempt of these.

VOLPONE These turdy-facy-nasty-paty-lousy-fartical rogues, with one poor groatsworth° of unprepared antimony,° finely wrapped up in several scaroccios° are able very well to kill their twenty a week, and play;° yet these meager starved spirits, who have half stopped the organs of their minds with earthy oppilations,° want not their favorers among your shriveled, salad-eating artisans, who are overjoyed that they may have their ha'p'orth° of physic; though it purge 'em into another world, 't makes no matter.

POLITIC Excellent! Ha' you heard better language, sir?

VOLPONE Well, let 'em go.° And, gentlemen, honorable gentlemen, know that for this time, our bank, being thus removed from the clamors of the canaglia° shall be the scene of pleasure and delight. For I have nothing to sell, little or nothing to sell.

POLITIC I told you, sir, his end.

PEREGRINE You did so, sir.

VOLPONE I protest, I and my six servants are not able to make of this precious liquor so fast as it is fetched away from my lodging by gentlemen of your city, strangers of the terra firma,° worshipful merchants, ay, and senators too, who ever since my arrival have detained me to their uses by their

For what avails your rich man to have his magazines stuffed with moscadelli, or the purest grape, when his physicians prescribe him (on pain of death) to drink nothing but water cocted with anise seeds? Oh, health, health! The blessing of the rich! The riches of the poor! Who can buy thee at too dear a rate, since there is no enjoying this world without thee? Be not then so sparing of your purses, honorable gentlemen, as to abridge the natural course of life—

PEREGRINE You see his end?

POLITIC Ay, is't not good?

VOLPONE For when a humid flux or catarrh, by the mutability of air, falls from your head into an arm or shoulder or any other part, take you a ducat or your cecchine of gold and apply to the place affected; see what good effect it can work. No, no, 'tis this blessed anguuento, this rare extraction, that hath only power to disperse all malignant humors that proceed either of hot, cold, moist, or windy causes—

PEREGRINE I would he had put in "dry," too.

POLITIC Pray you, observe.

VOLPONE TO fortify the most indigest and crude stomach, ay, were it of one that, through extreme weakness, vomited blood, applying only a warm napkin to the place after the unction and fricace; for the vertigine in the head putting but a drop into your nostrils, likewise behind the ears, a most sovereign and approved remedy; the mal caduco, cramps, convulsions, paralyses, epilepsies, tremor cordia, retired nerves, ill vapors of the spleen, stopping of the liver, the stone, the strangury, hernia ventosa, iliaca passio; stops a dysenteria immediately; caseth the torsion of the small guts; and cures melancholia hypochondriacal being taken and applied according to my printed receipt. (Pointing to his hill and his glass).

For this is the physician, this the medicine; this counsels, this cures; this gives the direction, this works the effect; and in sum, both together may be termed an abstract of the theoretic and practic in the Aesculapian art. Twill cost you eight crowns. And, Zan Frittata, pray thee sing a verse extempore in honor of it.

POLITIC How do you like him, sir?

PEREGRINE Most strangely, I!

POLITIC IS not his language rare?

PEREGRINE But alchemy I never heard the like, or Broughton’s books.

9. Renaissance medicine was based on the theory of the humors, four bodily fluids whose balance within the body determined both physical and mental health. Their qualities, in various combinations, were hot, cold, moist, and dry; hence Peregrine’s comment in the next line.

Volpone’s list of diseases includes "mal caduco," epilepsy; "tremor corda," palpitations; "retired nerves," withered sinews; "ill vapors of the spleen," short temper; "stone," kidney stones; "strangury," painful urination; "hernia ventosa," a hernia containing air; "iliaca passio," intestinal cramps; "dysenteria," diarrhea; "torsion of the small guts," spasmodic bowel pain; and "melancholia hypochondriacal" depression.

VOLPONE [to NANO] No more.—Gentlemen, if I had but time

surnamed oglio del Scoto, with the countless catalogue of those I have cured of th'aforesaid and many more diseases, the patents and privileges of all the princes and common-appeared on my part before the signory of the Sanitd,⁹ ments and mine own excellency in matter of rare and unknown secrets, not only to disperse them publicly in this famous city but in all the territories that happily joy under the government of the most pious and magnificent states of Italy. But may some other gallant fellow say, "Oh, there be divers that make profession⁴ to have as good and as experimented receipts as yours." Indeed, very many have assayed like apes in imitation of that which is really and essentially in me, to make of this oil; bestowed great cost in furnaces, stills, alembics,¹ continual fires, and preparation of the ingredients (as indeed there goes to it six hundred several

PEREGRINE. And that withal,° Sir Pol.

VOLPONE. YOU all know, honorable gentlemen, I never valued this ampulla, or vial, at less than eight crowns, but for this time I am content to be deprived of it for six; six crowns is the price, and less, in courtesy, I know you cannot offer me. Take it or leave it howsoever, both it and I am at your service. I ask you not as the value of the thing, for then I should demand° of you a thousand crowns; so the Cardinals Montalto, Fernese, the great Duke of Tuscany, my gossip,° with divers other princes, have given me. times you have paid me. You shall not give me six crowns, nor five, nor four, nor three, nor two, nor one, nor half a ducat, nor a thousand. Six—pence it will cost you, or six hundred pound—expect no lower price, for by the banner of my front, I will not bate a bagatine that I will have only a pledge of your loves, to carry something from amongst you to show I am not contemned by you. Therefore now, toss your handkerchiefs cheerfully, cheerfully, and be advertised that I will give it a little remembrance of something beside, shall please it better than if I had presented it with a double pistolet.

PEREGRINE Will you be that heroic spark, Sir Pol?

CELIA at the window throws down her handkerchief [with a coin tied inside it].

Oh, see! The window has prevented you.

VOLPONE Lady, I kiss your bounty, and, for this timely grace you have done your poor Scot of Mantua, I will return you, over and above my oil, a secret of that high and inestimable nature shall make you forever enamored on that minute wherein your eye first descended on so mean, yet not altogether to be despised, an object. Here is a powder concealed in this paper of which, if I should speak to the worth, nine thousand volumes were but as one page, that page as a line, that line as a word—so short is this pilgrimage of man, which some call life, to the expressing of it. Would I reflect on the price, why, the whole world were but as an empire, that empire as a province, that province as a bank, that bank as a private purse, to the purchase of it. I will only tell you it is the powder that made Venus a goddess, given her by Apollo, in his capacity as the god of health, that kept her perpetually young, cleared her wrinkles, firmed her gums, filled her skin, colored her hair; from her derived to Helen, and at the sack of Troy unfortunately lost; till now in this our age it was as happily recovered by a studious antiquary out of some ruins of Asia, who sent a moiety of it to the court of France (but much sophisticated) wherewith the ladies there now color their hair. The rest, at this present, remains with me, extracted to a quintessence, so that wherever it but touches, in youth it perpetually preserves, in age restores the complexion; seats your teeth, did they dance like virginal jacks, firm as a wall; makes them white as ivory that were black as---

PEREGRINE What should this mean, Sir Pol?

POLITIC Some trick of state, believe it. I will home.

PEREGRINE It may be some design on you.

POLITIC I know not.

PEREGRINE It is your best, sir.

POLITIC This three weeks, all my advices, all my letters,
They have been intercepted,

SCENE 4. VOLPONE’s house.

[Enter] VOLPONE [and] MOSCA.

VOLPONE Oh, I am wounded!

MOSCA Where, sir?

VOLPONE Not without;° externally
Those blows were nothing; I could bear them ever,
But angry Cupid, bolting° from her° eyes,
Hath shot himself into me like a flame,
Where now he flings about his burning heat,
As in a furnace an ambitious° fire rising
Whose vent is stopped. The fight is all within me.
I cannot live except thou help me, Mosca;
My liver° melts, and I, without the hope
Of some soft air from her refreshing breath,
Am but a heap of cinders.

MOSCA ‘Las, good sir!
Would you had never seen her.

VOLPONE Nay, would thou
Hadst never told me of her.

MOSCA Sir, ’tis true;
I do confess I was unfortunate,
And you unhappy; but I’m bound in conscience
No less than duty to effect my best
To your release of torment, and I will, sir.

1. Corvino imagines the scene in terms of a stock episode from the Italian commedia dell’arte, in which the young lover, conventionally named Flaminio after the famous actor Flaminio Scala, seduces Franciscina, the easygoing serving wench.

2. The pantalone is another stock figure in the commedia dell’arte, a decrepit old man suspicious of his desirable young wife. Di besogniosi is his jocular surname, meaning “descended from poor people.”

1. Supposed to be the seat of lust.
VOLPONE: Dear Mosca, shall I hope?
MOSCA: Sir, more than dear,
    I will not bid you to despair of aught
    Within a human compass.
VOLPONE: Oh, there spoke
    My better angel. Mosca, take my keys.
Gold, plate, and jewels, all’s at thy devotion,
Employ them how thou wilt; nay, coin me too,
    So thou in this but crown my longings. Mosca?
MOSCA: Use but your patience.
VOLPONE: SO I have.
MOSCA: I doubt not
    To bring success to your desires.
VOLPONE: Nay, then,
    I not repent me of my late disguise.
MOSCA: If you can horn him, sir, you need not.
VOLPONE: True; Besides, I never meant him for my heir.
Is not the color o’mym beard and eyebrows
    To make me known?
MOSCA: NO jot.
VOLPONE: I did it well.
MOSCA: SO well, would I could follow you in mine
    With half the happiness!
And yet I would
    Escape your epilogue.
VOLPONE: But were they gull’d
    With a belief that I was Scoto?
MOSCA: Sir,
    Scoto himself could hardly have distinguished!
I have not time to flatter you now. We’ll part,
And, as I prosper, so applaud my art. [Exeunt.]

SCENE 5. CORVINO’S house.

[Enter] CORVINO [and] CELIA.
CORVINO: Death of mine honor, with the city’s fool?
    A juggling, tooth-drawing, prating mountebank?
    And at a public window? Where, whilst he
    With his strained action and his dole of faces
    To his drug lecture draws your itching ears,
    A crew of old, unmarried, noted lechers
    Stood leering up like satyrs; and you smile
    Most graciously! And fan your favors forth
    To give your hot spectators satisfaction!
    What, was your mountebank their call? Their whistle?
    Or were you enamored on his copper rings?

2. Use my coins as well. (But also with the implication “make coins out of me,” i.e., “turn my body into money.”)
3. Punning on the original meaning of “patience,” “enduring blows.”

His saffron jewel with the toadstone in't?
Or his embroidered suit with the cope-stitch.
Made of a hearse-cloth? Or his old tilt-feather?
Or his starched beard? Well! You shall have him, yes.
He shall come home and minister unto you
The fricace for the mother.

I think you'd rather mount? Would you not mount?

Why, if you'll mount, you may; yes truly, you may—
And so you may be seen down to th'foot.

Get you a cittern, Lady Vanity, and be a dealer with the virtuous man;
Make one. I'll but proclaim myself a cuckold
And save your dowry.

I am a Dutchman, I!
For if you thought me an Italian,
You would be damned ere you did this, you whore.
Thou'dst tremble to imagine that the murder
Of father, mother, brother, all thy race,
Should follow as the subject of my justice!

Good sir, have patience!

What couldst thou propose
Less to thyself than, in this heat of wrath
As your punishment
And stung with my dishonor, I should strike
This steel unto thee, with as many stabs
As thou wert gazed upon with goatish eyes?

Alas, sir, be appeased! I could not think
My being at the window should more now
Move your impatience than at other times.

NO? Not to seek and entertain a parley
With a known knave? Before a multitude?
You were an actor with your handkerchief!
Which he most sweetly kissed in the receipt,
And might, no doubt, return it with a letter,
And point the place where you might meet—your sister's,
Your mother's, or your aunt's might serve the turn.

Why, dear sir, when do I make these excuses?
Or ever stir abroad but to the church?
And that, so seldom—

Well, it shall be less;
And thy restraint before was liberty
To what I now decree: and therefore, mark me.
First, I will have this bawdy light dammed up,
And, till't be done, some two or three yards off
I'll chalk a line, o'er which if thou but chance

http://englishworld20111.wordpress.com/
To set thy desp'rate foot, more hell, more horror,
More wild, remorseless rage shall seize on thee
Than on a conjurer that had heedless left
His circle's safety ere his devil was laid.
Then here's a lock which I will hang upon thee.

[He shows a chastity belt.]
And now I think on't, I will keep thee backwards;
Thy lodging shall be backwards, thy walks backwards,
Thy prospect—all be backwards; and no pleasure
That thou shalt know but backwards. Nay, since you force
My honest nature, know it is your own
Being too open makes me use you thus,
Since you will not contain your subtle nostrils
In a sweet room, but they must snuff the air
Of rank and sweaty passengers—

Knock within.

One knocks.

Away, and be not seen, pain of thy life!
Not look toward the window. If thou dost—

[CELIA begins to exit.]

Nay stay, hear this—let me not prosper, whore,
But I will make thee an anatomy,
Dissect thee mine own self, and read a lecture
Upon thee to the city, and in public.

Away!

[Exit CELIA.]

Who's there?

[Enter Servitore [a SERVANT],

SERVANT  'Tis Signor Mosca, sir.

SCENE 6. The scene continues.

CORVINO  Let him come in.

[Exit SERVANT.]

His master's dead! There's yet
Some good to help the bad.

[Enter] MOSCA.

My Mosca, welcome!

MOSCA  I fear you cannot, sir.

CORVINO  Is't not his death?

MOSCA  Rather the contrary.

CORVINO  Not his recovery?

MOSCA  Yes, sir.

CORVINO  I am cursed,
I am bewitched! My crosses meet to vex me!

MOSCA  Why, sir, with Scoto's oil.

Corbaccio and Voltore brought of it
Whilst I was busy in an inner room—

2. Conjurers protected themselves from the devils who served them by staying inside a magical circle.
3. In the back part of the house, lacking a view out onto the piazza; but with the suggestion of anal intercourse, supposedly favored by Italians.
4. Use you for anatomical research. (In the early modern period, physicians obtained the bodies of executed criminals upon which to perform dissections, often before large crowds.)
CORVINO  Death! That damned mountebank! But for the law,
Now, I could kill the rascal. I cannot be
His oil should have that virtue. Ha' not I Known him a common rogue, come fiddling in to th'osteria° with a tumbling whore,
And, when he has done all his forced tricks, been glad
Of a poor spoonful of dead wine with flies in't?
It cannot be. All his ingredients
Are a sheep's gall, a roasted bitch's marrow,
Some few sod° earwigs, pounded caterpillars,
A little capon's grease, and fasting spittle:°
I know 'em to a dram.°
MOSCA I know not, sir,
But some on't there they poured into his ears,
Some in his nostrils, and recovered him,
Applying but the fricace.°
CORVINO Pox o'that fricace!
MOSCA And since, to seem the more officious°
And flatt'ring of his health, there they have had—
At extreme fees—the College of Physicians
Consulting on him how they might restore him;
Where one would have a cataplasm° of spices,
Another a flayed ape clapped to his breast,
A third would ha' it a dog, a fourth an oil
With wildcats' skins. At last, they all resolved
That to preserve him was no other means
But some young woman must be straight sought out,
Lusty and full of juice, to sleep by him;
And to this service—most unhappily
And most unwillingly—am I now employed,
Which here I thought to preacquaint you with,
For your advice, since it concerns you most,
Because I would not do that thing might cross
Your ends,° on whom I have my whole dependence, sir.
Yet if I do it not, they may delate°
My slackness to my patron, work me out
Of his opinion;° and there all your hopes,
Ventures, or whatsoever, are all frustrate.
I do but tell you, sir. Besides, they are all
Now striving who shall first present him. Therefore,
I could entreat you briefly, conclude somewhat;°
Prevent 'em if you can.
CORVINO  Death to my hopes!
This is my villainous fortune! Best to hire
Some common courtesan.
MOSCA  Ay, I thought on that, sir.

SCENE 7. The scene continues.

CORVINO  Where are you, wife? My Celia? Wife?

[Enter] CELIA  [weeping.]

What, blubbering?

Come, dry those tears. I think thou thought'st me in earnest?

Ha! By this light, I talked so but to try thee.

Methinks the lightness of the occasion should ha' confirmed thee.

Come, I am not jealous.

CELIA  No?

CORVINO  Faith, I am not, I, nor never was;

It is a poor, unprofitable humor.

Do not I know if women have a will

They'll do 'gainst all the watches of the world?

And that the fiercest spies are tamed with gold?

Tut, I am confident in thee, thou shalt see't;

And see, I'll give thee cause too, to believe it.

Come, kiss me. Go and make thee ready straight

In all thy best attire, thy choicest jewels;

Put them all on, and, with em thy best looks.

We are invited to a solemn feast

At old Volpone's, where it shall appear

How far I am free from jealousy or fear.

[Exeunt.]

Act 3

SCENE 1. The piazza.

[Enter] MOSCA.

MOSCA  I fear I shall begin to grow in love

With my dear self and my most prosp'rous parts,

They do so spring and burgeon. I can feel

A whimsy in my blood. I know not how,

Success hath made me wanton. I could skip
Out of my skin now like a subtle snake,
I am so limber. Oh, your parasite
Is a most precious thing, dropped from above, sent from heaven
Not bred mongst clods and clodpolls here on earth.
I muse the mystery was not made a science,
It is so liberally professed! Almost
All the wise world is little else in nature
But parasites or subparasites. And yet
I mean not those that have your bare town-art, tell juicy rumors I entice
To know who's fit to feed em; have no house,
No family, no care, and therefore mold
Tales for men's ears, to bait that sense; or get Kitchen-invention, and some stale receipts recipes
To please the belly and the groin; as aphrodisiacs
With their court-dog tricks, that can fawn and fleer, smile insincerely
Make their revenue out of legs and faces,
Echo my lord, and lick away a moth;
But your fine, elegant rascal, that can rise
And stoop almost together, like an arrow,
Shoot through the air as nimbly as a star, meteor
Turn short as doth a swallow, and be here
And there and here and yonder all at once,
Present to any humor, all occasion,
And change a visor swifter than a thought!
This is the creature had the art born with him,
Toils not to learn it, but doth practice it
Out of most excellent nature, and such sparks
Are the true parasites, others but their zanies.

SCENE 2. The scene continues.

[Enter] BONARIO.
The person I was bound on my way to seek.—Fair sir, you are happily met.
BONARIO That cannot be by thee.
MOSCA Why, sir?
BONARIO Nay, pray thee know thy way and leave me
I would be loath to interchange discourse with such a mate as thou art.
MOSCA Courteous sir,
Scorn not my poverty.
BONARIO Not I, by heaven,
But thou shalt give me leave to hate thy baseness.
MOSCA Baseness?
BONARIO Ay. Answer me, is not thy sloth sufficient argument? Thy flattery?

1. I wonder why the craft was not made a subject for academic study, it is so frequently practiced! (Punning on the "liberal professions.")
2. Crude skills of ingratitude, sufficient only for getting free meals in taverns.
3. Make a living from bows and sycophantic looks, repeat anything a nobleman says, and fawn over him, fussing over every detail of his appearance.
4. Ready to respond to any mood or opportunity.
Thy means of feeding?

MOSCA  Heaven, be good to me!
These imputations are too common, sir,
And easily stuck on virtue when she's poor.
You are unequal to me, and howe'er superior; unfair
Your sentence may be righteous, yet you are not, verdict
That, ere you know me, thus proceed in censure.

Saint Mark bear witness 'gainst you, 'tis inhuman. [He weeps.]

I do repent me that I was so harsh.

MOSCA  'Tis true that, swayed by strong necessity,
I am enforced to eat my careful bread
With too much obsequy,° 'tis true, beside, obsequiousness
That I am fain° to spin mine own poor raiment obliged
Out of my mere observance,° being not born deferential service
To a free fortune. But that I have done
Base offices in rending friends asunder,
Dividing families, betraying counsels,
Whispering false lies, or mining° men with praises, undermining Trained° their credulity with perjuries, lured on Corrupted chastity, or am in love
With mine own tender ease, but would not rather undergo Prove° the most rugged and laborious course
That might redeem my present estimation,¹
Let me here perish in all hope of goodness.

BONARIO [aside] This cannot be a personated passion!—
I was to blame, so to mistake thy nature;
Pray thee forgive me, and speak out thy business.

MOSCA  Sir, it concerns you; and though I may seem
At first to make a main° offense in manners great
And in my gratitude unto my master,
Yet for the pure love which I bear all right
And hatred of the wrong, I must reveal it.
This very hour your father is in purpose
To disinherit you—

BONARIO How?

MOSCA  And thrust you forth
As a mere stranger to his blood. 'Tis true, sir.
The work no way engageth° me but as concerns
I claim an interest in the general state
Of goodness and true virtue, which I hear
T'abound in you, and for which mere respect,° for which reason alone
Without a second aim, sir, I have done it.

BONARIO This tale hath lost thee much of the late° trust recent Thou hast with me. It is impossible.
I know not how to lend it any thought° believe that
My father should be so unnatural.

MOSCA  It is a confidence that well becomes

° That might improve your current appraisal of me.
Your piety, and formed, no doubt, it is filial loyalty
From your own simple innocence, which makes
Your wrong more monstrous and abhorred. But, sir,
I now will tell you more. This very minute

60 It is or will be doing; and if you
Shall be but pleased to go with me, I'll bring you,
I dare not say where you shall see, but where
Your ear shall be a witness of the deed:
Hear yourself written bastard, and professed
The common issue of the earth.

65 BONARIO I'm mazed!
MOSCA Sir, if I do it not, draw your just sword
And score your vengeance on my front and face;
Mark me your villain. You have too much wrong,
And I do suffer for you, sir. My heart
Weeps blood in anguish—

70 BONARIO Lead. I follow thee. [Exeunt.]

SCENE 3. VOLPONE'S house.
[Enter] VOLPONE, NANO, ANDROGYNO, [and] CASTRONE.

VOLPONE Mosca stays long, methinks. Bring forth your sports
And help to make the wretched time more sweet.
NANO Dwarf, fool, and eunuch, well met here we be.
A question it were now, whether of us three, which

5 Being all the known delicates of a rich man,
In pleasing him, claim the precedence can?
CASTRONE I claim for myself.
ANDROGYNO And so doth the fool.
NANO 'Tis foolish indeed; let me set you both to school.
First, for your dwarf: he's little and witty,
And everything, as it is little, is pretty;
Else why do men say to a creature of my shape,
So soon as they see him, "It's a pretty little ape"?
And why a pretty ape? But for pleasing imitation
Of greater men's action in a ridiculous fashion.

15 Beside, this feat body of mine doth not crave neat, trim
Half the meat, drink, and cloth one of your bulks will have.
Admit your fool's face be the mother of laughter,
Yet for his brain, it must always come after; he lesser
And though that do feed him, it's a pittiful case, earns his keep
Of greater men's action in a ridiculous fashion.

20 His body is beholding to such a bad face. One knocks. beholden
VOLPONE Who's there? My couch. [He lies down.] Away, look, Nano, see!
Give me my caps, first—go, inquire.

[Exeunt NANO, ANDROGYNO, and CASTRONE.]

Now, Cupid send it be Mosca, and with fair return! grant/good results

2. A bastard was called Jius terra, "son of the earth."
1. With a pun on "container."
NANO It is the beauteous Madam—

VOLPONE Would-be—is it?

NANO The same

VOLPONE NOW, torment on me! Squire her in,
For she will enter or dwell here forever.
Nay, quickly, that my fit were past! [Exit NANO.]
I fear
A second hell, too, that my loathing this
Will quite expel my appetite to the other. Celia
Would she were taking, now, her tedious leave.
Lord, how it threatens me what I am to suffer!

SCENE 4. The scene continues.

[Enter LADY [WOULD-BE and] NANO.]

LADY WOULD-BE [to NANO] I thank you, good sir. Pray you signify Unto your patron I am here. [Regarding herself in a mirror] This band ruff
Shows not my neck enough. I trouble you, sir.
Let me request you, bid one of my women
Come hither to me. [Exit NANO.]
In good faith, I am dressed
Most favorably today!* It is no matter; sarcastic
Tis well enough.
[Enter NANO and FIRST] WOMAN.

Look, see, these petulant things!* her women; her curls
How they have done this!

VOLPONE [aside] I do feel the fever
Ent’ring in at mine ears. Oh, for a charm
To fright it hence!

LADY WOULD-BE [to FIRST WOMAN] Come nearer. Is this curl its
In his right place? Or this? Why is this higher Than all the rest? You ha’ not washed your eyes yet?
Or do they not stand even? [Your head] level
Where’s your fellow? Call her. [Exit FIRST WOMAN.]

NANO [aside] Now Saint Mark
Deliver us! Anon she’ll beat her women
Because her nose is red.

[Enter FIRST and SECOND WOMEN.]

LADY WOULD-BE I pray you, view
This tire, forsooth. Are all things apt or no? headdress
SECOND WOMAN One hair a little here sticks out, forsooth.

LADY WOULD-BE Does’t so, forsooth? [To FIRST WOMAN] And where was your dear sight startled (?); asquint (?)
[To SECOND WOMAN]
And you, too? Pray you both approach and mend it.
[They tend to her.]

Now, by that light, i.e., by heaven
I muse you’re not ashamed!

1. Much of Lady Would-be’s dialogue in the following scene is adapted from Libanius of Antioch’s On Talkative Women.
I, that have preached these things so oft unto you,
Read you the principles, argued all the grounds,
Disputed every fitness, every grace,
Called you to counsel of so frequent dressings—

NANO (aside) More carefully than of your fame or honor.

LADY WOULD-BE Made you acquainted what an ample dowry

The knowledge of these things would be unto you,
Able alone to get you noble husbands
At your return, and you thus to neglect it?
Besides, you seeing what a curious nation
Th’Italians are, what will they say of me?
"The English lady cannot dress herself."
Here’s a fine imputation to our country!
Well, go your ways, and stay i’the next room.
This fucus was too coarse, too; it’s no matter.

[To NANO] Good sir, you’ll give ’em entertainment?

[Exeunt NANO and WOMEN.]

VOLPONE [aside] The storm comes toward me.

LADY WOULD-BE [approaching the bed] How does my Volp?

VOLPONE Troubled with noise. I cannot sleep; I dreamt
That a strange Fury entered now my house,
And with the dreadful tempest of her breath
Did cleave my roof asunder.

LADY WOULD-BE Believe me, and I
Had the most fearful dream, could I remember’t—

VOLPONE [aside] Out on° my fate! I ha’ giv’n her the occasion curses on
How to torment me: she will tell me hers.

LADY WOULD-BE Methought the golden mediocrity,° golden mean
Polite and delicate—

VOLPONE Oh, if you do love me,
No more! I sweat and suffer at the mention
Of any dream. Feel how I tremble yet.

LADY WOULD-BE Alas, good soul! The passion of the heart.°

Seed pearl were good now, boiled with syrup of apples,
Tincture of gold and coral, citron pills,
Your elecampane° root, myrobalans—

VOLPONE [aside] Ay me, I have ta’en a grasshopper by the wing!

VOLPONE [aside] She’s in again.

LADY WOULD-BE Before I feigned diseases; now I have one.

VOLPONE [aside] Another flood of words! A very torrent!

LADY WOULD-BE Shall I, sir, make you a poultice?

2. Dried tropical fruits.
I'm very well; you need prescribe no more.

LADY WOULD-BE  I have a little studied physic, but now
   I'm all for music, save 't he forenoons
   An hour or two for painting. I would have
   A lady indeed 't have all letters and arts,
   Be able to discourse, to write, to paint,
   But principal, as Plato holds, your music
   (And so does wise Pythagoras, I take it)
   Is your true rapture, when there is concent
   In face, in voice, and clothes, and is indeed
   Our sex's chiefest ornament.

VOLPONE  The poet
   Sophocles, in Ajax
   As old in time as Plato, and as knowing,
   Says that your highest female grace is silence.

LADY WOULD-BE  Which o' your poets? Petrarch? Or Tasso? Or Dante?
   Guarini? Ariosto? Aretine?
   Cieco di Hadria? I have read them all.

VOLPONE  [aside]  Is everything a cause to my destruction?

LADY WOULD-BE [searching her garments]  I think I ha' two or three of 'em about me.

VOLPONE  [aside]  The sun, the sea will sooner both stand still Than her eternal tongue! Nothing can scape it.

LADY WOULD-BE  Here's Pastor Fido—

VOLPONE  [aside]  Profess obstinate silence,
   That's now my safest.

LADY WOULD-BE  All our English writers,
   I mean such as are happy in th'Italian,
   Will deign to steal out of this author mainly,
   Almost as much as from Montaignie;
   He has so modern and facile a vein,
   Fitting the time, and catching the court ear.
   Your Petrarch is more passionate, yet he,
   In days of sonneting, trusted em with much.
   Dante is hard, and few can understand him.
   But for a desperate wit, there's Aretine!
   Only his pictures are a little obscene—

VOLPONE  Alas, my mind's perturbed.

LADY WOULD-BE  Why, in such cases we must cure ourselves,
   Make use of our philosophy—

VOLPONE  Ay me!

LADY WOULD-BE  And, as we find our passions do rebel,
   Encounter em with reason, or divert em
   By giving scope unto some other humor
   Of lesser danger—as in politic bodies

3. Lady Would-be juxtaposes major Italian writers with the minor di Hadria and the obscene Aretino.
5. When sonnet writing was popular, gave poets plenty to imitate.
6. The libertine poems of Aretine (Pietro Aretine 1492—1556) were published with pornographic illustrations by Giulio Romano.
There's nothing more doth overwhelm the judgment
And clouds the understanding than too much
Settling and fixing and (as 'twere) subsiding\(^a\), \textit{alchemical jargon}
Upon one object. For the incorporating
Of these same outward things into that part
Which we call mental leaves some certain feces\(^0\), \textit{dregs}
That stop the organs and, as Plato says,
Assassinates our knowledge.

\[\text{VOLPONE [aside]}\]
Now, the spirit
Of patience help me!

\[\text{LADY WOULD-BE}\]
Come, in faith, I must
Visit you more o'days and make you well.
Laugh and be lusty,\(^0\), \textit{merry}

\[\text{VOLPONE [aside]}\]
My good angel save me!

\[\text{LADY WOULD-BE}\]
There was but one sole man in all the world
With whom I e'er could sympathize, and he Would lie you\(^1\) often three, four hours together
To hear me speak, and be sometime so rapt
As he would answer me quite from the purpose,
Like you—and you are like him, just. I'll discourse—
An't\(^1\) be but only, sir, to bring you asleep—
How we did spend our time and loves together
For some six years.

\[\text{VOLPONE}\]
Oh, oh, oh, oh, oh, oh!

\[\text{LADY WOULD-BE}\]
For we were \textit{coaetani}\(^0\) and brought up—\textit{the same age}

\[\text{VOLPONE [aside]}\]
Some power, some fate, some fortune rescue me!

\[\text{SCENE 5. The scene continues.}\]

\[\text{[Enter]}\] \text{MOSCA.}

\[\text{MOSCA}\]
God save you, madam.

\[\text{LADY WOULD-BE}\]
Good sir.

\[\text{VOLPONE [aside to MOSCA]}\]
Mosca? Welcome,
Welcome to my redemption.

\[\text{MOSCA [to VOLPONE]}\]
Why, sir?

\[\text{VOLPONE [aside to MOSCA]}\]
Oh,
Rid me of this my torture quickly, there,
My madam with the everlasting voice!

\[\text{5}\]
The bells in time of pestilence ne'er made
Like noise, or were in that perpetual motion;\(^1\)
The cockpit\(^0\) comes not near it. All my house
But now steamed like a bath with her thick breath.
A lawyer could not have been heard, nor scarce

\[\text{10}\]
Another woman, such a hail of words
She has let fall. For hell's sake, rid her hence.

\[\text{MOSCA [aside to VOLPONE]}\]
Has she presented?\(^4\), \textit{given a gift}

\[\text{VOLPONE [aside to MOSCA]}\]
Oh, I do not care.

\[\text{I'll take her absence upon any price,}\]
With any loss.

\[\text{3.5}\]
1. Church bells marked the deaths of parishioners; in times of plague they therefore rang almost constantly.
MOSCA Madam—
LADY WOULD-BE I ha' brought your patron a toy, a cap here, of mine own work—
   Tis well. I had forgot to tell you, I saw your knight
   Where you'd little think it—
LADY WOULD-BE Where?
MOSCA Marry, Where yet, if you make haste, you may apprehend him,
   Rowing upon the water in a gondole
   With the most cunning courtesan of Venice.
LADY WOULD-BE Is't true?
MOSCA Pursue em, and believe your eyes.
   Leave me to make your gift. [Exit LADY WOULD-BE.]
   I knew 'twould do the trick
   For lightly, they that use themselves most license
   Are Still most jealous.
VOLPONE Mosca, hearty thanks
   For thy quick fiction and delivery of me.
   Now, to my hopes, what say'st thou?
[Enter LADY WOULD-BE.]
LADY WOULD-BE But do you hear, sir?
VOLPONE [aside] Again! I fear a paroxysm.
   Which way
   Rowed they together?
MOSCA Toward the Rialto. [commercial district]
LADY WOULD-BE I pray you, lend me your dwarf.
MOSCA I pray you, take him. [Exit LADY WOULD-BE.]
   Your hopes, sir, are like happy blossoms: fair,
   And promise timely fruit if you will stay
   But the maturing. Keep you at your couch.
   Corbaccio will arrive straight with the will;
   When he is gone I'll tell you more. [Exit.]
VOLPONE My blood,
   My spirits are returned. I am alive;
   And like your wanton gamester at primero,
   Whose thought had whispered to him, not go less,
   Methinks I lie, and draw—for an encounter.
   [He gets into bed and closes the bed curtains.]

SCENE 6. The scene continues.

[Enter MOSCA [and] BONARIO. [MOSCA shows BONARIO to a hiding place.]
MOSCA Sir, here concealed you may hear all. But pray you
   Have patience, sir. (One knocks.) The same's your father knocks.
   I am compelled to leave you.
BONARIO DO SO. Yet

2. A card game.
3. (1) Winning play in primero; (2) sexual act.
Cannot my thought imagine this a truth.
   [He conceals himself.]

SCENE 7. The scene continues.

[Enter] CORVINO [and] CELIA. MOSCA [crosses the stage to intercept them].

MOSCA  Death on me! You are come too soon. What meant you?
   Did not I say I would send?

CORVINO  Yes, but I feared
   You might forget it, and then they prevent us.

MOSCA  [aside] Prevent? Did e'er man haste so for his horns?°
   A courtier would not ply it so for a place.¹
   [To CORVINO] Well, now there’s no helping it, stay here;
   I’ll presently return.  [He crosses the stage to BONARIO.]

CORVINO  Where are you, Celia?
   You know not wherefore I have brought you hither?

CELIA  Not well, except you told me.

CORVINO  Now I will.
   Hark hither.  [CORVINO and CELIA talk apart.]

MOSCA  (to RONARIO) Sir, your father hath sent word
   It will be half an hour ere he come;
   And therefore, if you please to walk the while
   Into that gallery, at the upper end
   There are some books to entertain the time;
   And I’ll take care no man shall come unto you, sir.

BONARIO  Yes, I will stay there, [aside] I do doubt this fellow.
   [He retires.]

MOSCA  There, he is far enough; he can hear nothing.
   And for° his father, I can keep him off.
   [MOSCA joins VOLPONE and opens his bed curtains.]

CORVINO  [to CELIA] Nay, now, there is no starting back, and therefore Resolve upon it; I have so decreed.
   It must be done. Nor would I move°° afore,
   Because I would avoid all shifts°° and tricks
   That might deny me.

CELIA  Sir, let me beseech you,
   Affect° not these strange trials. If you doubt
   My chastity, why, lock me up forever;
   Make me the heir of darkness. Let me live
   Where I may please° your fears, if not your trust.

CORVINO  Believe it, I have no such humor, I.
   All that I speak, I mean; yet I am not mad,
   Not horn-mad,” see you? Go to, show yourself°°
   Obedient, and a wife.

CELIA  O heaven!

CORVINO  I say it,
   Do so.

CELIA  Was this the train?°

3.7
1. Work so hard for a position at court.
CORVINO  I have told you reasons:
    What the physicians have set down; how much
    It may concern me; what my engagements are;
    My means, and the necessity of those means
    For my recovery. Wherefore, if you be Loyal and mine, be won, respect my venture.⁹
CELIA  Before your honor?
CORVINO  Honor? Tut, a breath.
    There’s no such thing in nature; a mere term
    Invented to awe fools. What is my gold
    The worse for touching? Clothes for being looked on?
    Why, this’s no more. An old, decrepit wretch,
    That has no sense,⁰ no sinew; takes his meat
    With others’ fingers; only knows to gape
    When you do scald his gums; a voice, a shadow.
    And what can this man hurt you?
CELIA  Lord! What spirit
    Is this hath entered him?
CORVINO  And for your fame,⁰
    That’s such a jig;⁸ as if I would go tell it,
    Cry⁸ it on the piazza! Who shall know it
    But he that cannot speak it,⁸ and this fellow⁰
    Whose lips are i’my pocket, save yourself?
    If you’ll proclaim’t, you may. I know no other
    Should come to know it.
CELIA  Are heaven and saints then nothing?
    Will they be blind or stupid?
CORVINO  What’s this?
CELIA  Good sir,
    Be jealous still, emulate them, and think
    What hate they burn with toward every sin.
CORVINO  I grant you, if I thought it were a sin
    I would not urge you. Should I offer this
    To some young Frenchman, or hot Tuscan blood
    That had read Aretine, conned⁰ all his prints,
    Knew every quirk within lust’s labyrinth,
    And were professed critic⁰ in lechery,
    And I would look upon him and applaud him,
    This were a sin. But here ‘tis contrary,
    A pious work, mere charity, for physic,
    And honest polity⁰ to assure mine own.
CELIA  O heaven! Canst thou suffer such a change?
VOLPONE  [aside to MOSCA]  Thou art mine honor, Mosca, and my pride,
    My joy, my tickling, my delight! Go, bring ’em.
MOSCA  [to CORVINO]  Please you draw near, sir.
CORVINO  [dragging CELIA toward VOLPONE]  Come on, what—
    You will not be rebellious? By that light—
MOSCA  [to VOLPONE]  Sir, Signor Corvino here is come to see you.
VOLPONE  Oh!
MOSCA  And, hearing of the consultation had
    So lately for your health, is come to offer,
    Or rather, sir, to prostitute—
CORVINO  Thanks, sweet Mosca.

MOSCA  Freely, unasked or unentreated—

CORVINO  Well.

MOSCA  AS the true, fervent instance of his love,
      His own most fair and proper wife, the beauty
      Only of price\textsuperscript{0} in Venice—\textit{beyond comparison}

CORVINO  Tis well urged.

MOSCA  To be your comfortress and to preserve you.

VOLPONE  Alas, I am past already! Pray you, thank him
      For his good care and promptness. But for\textsuperscript{2} that,
      'Tis a vain labor e'en to fight 'gainst heaven,
      Applying fire to a stone (uh! uh! uh! uh!),
      Making a dead leaf grow again. I take
      His wishes gently, though; and you may tell him
      What I have done for him. Marry, my state is hopeless!
      Will him to pray for me, and t' use his fortune
      With reverence when he comes to't.

MOSCA  [to CORVINO] \DO you hear, sir?\Go to him with your wife.

CORVINO  [to CELIA] \Heart of my father!\an oath\Wilt thou persist thus? Come, I pray thee, come.
      Thou see'st 'tis nothing. [\textit{He threatens to strike her.}] Celia! By this hand,
      I shall grow violent. Come, do't, I say.

CELIA  Sir, kill me, rather. I will take down poison,
      Eat burning coals, do anything—

CORVINO  \Be damned!\Heart! I will drag thee hence, home, by the hair,
      Cry thee a strumpet through the streets, rip up
      Thy mouth unto thine ears, and slit thy nose
      Like a raw rochet!\textsuperscript{5}—Do not tempt me. Come,
      Yield! I am loath—\textit{Death!} I will buy some slave
      Whom I will kill,\textsuperscript{3} and bind thee to him alive,
      And at my window hang you forth, devising
      Some monstrous crime, which I in capital letters
      Will eat into thy flesh with \textit{aquafortis}\textsuperscript{6}
      And burning corrosives\textsuperscript{7} on this stubborn breast.
      Now, by the blood thou hast incensed, I'll do t.

CELIA  Sir, what you please, you may; I am your martyr.

CORVINO  \Be not thus obstinate. I ha' not deserved it.
      Think who it is entreats you. Pray thee, sweet!
      Good faith, thou shalt have jewels, gowns, attires,
      What\textsuperscript{4} thou wilt think and ask. Do but go kiss him.
      Or touch him but. For my sake. At my suit.
      This once. No? Not? I shall remember this.
      Will you disgrace me thus? Do you thirst my undoing?

MOSCA  Nay, gentle lady, be advised.

CORVINO  \No, no.\She has watched her time.\textsuperscript{3} \textit{God's precious,} this is scurvy;

\begin{itemize}
  \item In the following lines, Corvino elaborates luridly upon the fate that the notorious rapist Tarquin promised the chaste Roman matron Lucretia if she did not capitulate; unlike Celia, Lucretia yielded to threats.
  \item Waited for her chance (to ruin me).
  \item God's precious blood. (An oath.)
\end{itemize}
Tis very scurvy, and you are—

MOSCA Nay, good, sir.

CORVINO An arrant locust, by heaven, a locust. Whore, Crocodile, that hast thy tears prepared, Expecting how thou'lt bid 'em flow!

MOSCA Nay, pray you, sir, She will consider.

CELIA Would my life would serve To satisfy——

CORVINO 'Sdeath, if she would but speak to him And save my reputation, 'twere somewhat— But spitefully to effect my utter ruin!

MOSCA Ay, now you've put your fortune in her hands. Why, i'faith, it is her modesty; I must quit her. If you were absent she would be more coming, I know it, and dare undertake for her. What woman can before her husband? Pray you, Let us depart and leave her here.

CORVINO Sweet Celia, Thou mayst redeem all yet; I'll say no more. If not, esteem yourself as lost.—Nay, stay there. [Exeunt CORVINO and MOSCA.]

CELIA O God and his good angels! Whither, whither Is shame fled human breasts, that with such ease Men dare put off your honors and their own? God's and the angels' sex and wedlock Is that which ever was a cause of life Now placed beneath the basest circumstance, And modesty an exile made for money? He [VOLPONE] leaps off from his couch.

VOLPONE Ay, in Corvino, and such earth-fed minds That never tasted the true heav'n of love. Assure thee, Celia, he that would sell thee Only for hope of gain, and that uncertain, He would have sold his part of paradise For ready money, had he met a copeman." Why art thou mazed to see me thus revived? Rather applaud thy beauty's miracle; Tis thy great work, that hath, not now alone But sundry times raised me in several shapes, And but this morning like a mountebank To see thee at thy window. Ay, before I would have left my practice for thy love, In varying figures I would have contended With the blue Proteus or the horned flood. Now art thou welcome.

CELIA Sir!

VOLPONE Nay, fly me not,
Nor let thy false imagination
That I was bedrid make thee think I am so.
Thou shalt not find it. I am now as fresh,
As hot, as high, and in as jovial plight
As when—in that so celebrated scene,
At recitation of our comedy
For entertainment of the great Valois
I acted young Antinoius, and attracted
The eyes and ears of all the ladies present,
T'admire each graceful gesture, note, and footing.

SONG
[He sings.] Come, my Celia, let us prove,
While we can, the sports of love.
Time will not be ours forever;
He at length our good will sever.
Spend not then his gifts in vain.
Suns that set may rise again,
But if once we lose this light
Tis with us perpetual night.
Why should we defer our joys?
Fame and rumor are but toys.
Cannot we delude the eyes
Of a few poor household spies?
Or his easier ears beguile,
Thus removed by our wile?
Tis no sin love's fruits to steal,
But the sweet thefts to reveal.
To be taken, to be seen,
These have crimes accounted been.

CELIA Some serene blast me, or dire lightning strike
This my offending face!

VOLPONE Why droops my Celia?
Thou hast in place of a base husband found
A worthy lover. Use thy fortune well,
With secrecy and pleasure. See, behold
What thou art queen of, not in expectation,
As I feed others, but possessed and crowned.

[He reveals his treasures.]
See here a rope of pearl, and each more orient
Than that the brave Egyptian queen caroused;
Dissolve and drink em. See, a carbuncle
May put out both the eyes of our Saint Mark;
A diamond would have bought Lollia Paulina

7. Henry of Valois, Duke of Anjou, and later King Henry III of France (1574—89), was sumptuously entertained at Venice in 1574. His sexual taste for men was widely remarked.
8. The beautiful homosexual favorite of the Roman emperor Hadrian.
9. Try out. (The song is an adaptation of the Roman poet Catullus's fifth ode.)
1. Cleopatra dissolved and drank a pearl during a banquet with her lover, Marcus Antony. "Brave": magnificent.
2. Ruby, thought to emit light.
3. Patron saint of Venice, whose statue stood in the basilica.
4. Third wife of the Roman emperor Caligula.
When she came in like starlight, hid with jewels
That were the spoils of provinces. Take these,
And wear, and lose 'em; yet remains an earring
To purchase them again, and this whole state.
A gem but worth a private patrimony
Is nothing; we will eat such at a meal.
The heads of parrots, tongues of nightingales,
The brains of peacocks and of ostriches
Shall be our food, and, could we get the phoenix,5
Though nature lost her kind,6 she were our dish.

CElia. Good sir, these things might move a mind affected
With such delights; but I, whose innocence
Is all I can think wealthy7 or worth th'enjoying,
And which once lost, I have naught to lose beyond it,
Cannot be taken with these sensual baits.
If you have conscience—

VOlpone. 'Tis the beggar's virtue.
If thou hast wisdom, hear me, Celia.
Thy baths shall be the juice of July flowers,8
Spirit9 of roses, and of violets,
The milk of unicorns, and panthers' breath10
Gathered in bags, and mixed with Cretan wines.
Our drink shall be prepared gold and amber,
Which we will take until my roof whirl round
With the vertigo; and my dwarf shall dance,
My eunuch sing, my fool make up the antic,7
Whilst we, in changed shapes, act Ovid's tales:
Thou like Europa now and I like Jove,
Then I like Mars and thou like Erycine,3
So of the rest, till we have quite run through
And wearied all the fables of the gods.
Then will I have thee in more modern forms,
Attired like some sprightly dame of France,
Brave Tuscan lady, or proud Spanish beauty;
Sometimes unto the Persian Sophy's8 wife,
Or the Grand Signor's mistress; and for change,
To one of our most artful courtesans,
Or some quick Negro, or cold Russian.
And I will meet thee in as many shapes,
Where we may so transfuse9 our wand'ring souls
Out at our lips, and score up sums of pleasures,
[He sings.] That the curious shall not know
How to tell10 them as they flow;
And the envious, when they find
What their number is, be pined.0

5. Mythical bird, of which it was supposed that only one existed at a time; it died in flames and was reborn from its own ashes.
6. Panthers were believed to use their sweet-smelling breath to lure prey.
7. Grotesque dance or pageant.
8. Ovid's Metamorphoses retells the pagan myths of transformation. Jove, king of the gods, became a bull to seduce the lovely Europa. The adulterous couple Mars, god of war, and Erycine (Venus), goddess of sexual love, were caught in a net by Vulcan, her husband.
CELIA If you have ears that will be pierced, or eyes
That can be opened, a heart may be touched,
Or any part that yet sounds man about you;
If you have touch of holy saints or heaven,
Do me the grace to let me scape. If not,
Be bountiful and kill me. You do know
I am a creature hither ill betrayed
By one whose shame I would forget it were.
If you will deign me neither of these graces,
Yet feed your wrath, sir, rather than your lust—
It is a vice comes nearer manliness—
And punish that unhappy crime of nature
Which you miscall my beauty. Flay my face
Or poison it with ointments for seducing
Your blood to this rebellion. Rub these hands
With what may cause an eating leprosy
E’en to my bones and marrow—anything
That may disfavor me, save in my honor—
And I will kneel to you, pray for you, pay down
A thousand hourly vows, sir, for your health,
Report and think you virtuous—

VOLPONE Think me cold,
Frozen, and impotent, and so report me?
That I had Nestor’s hernia, thou wouldst think.
I do degenerate, and abuse my nation
To play with opportunity thus long.
I should have done the act and then have parleyed.
Yield, or I’ll force thee.

CELIA O just God!

VOLPONE [seizing CELIA] In vain—

BONARIO Forbear, foul ravisher, libidinous swine!
Free the forced lady or thou diest, impostor.
But that I am loath to snatch thy punishment
Out of the hand of justice, thou shouldst yet
Be made the timely sacrifice of vengeance
Before this altar and this dross,
Lady, let’s quit the place. It is the den
Of villainy. Fear naught; you have a guard;
And he ere long shall meet his just reward.

[Exeunt BONARIO and CELIA.]

VOLPONE Fall on me, roof, and bury me in ruin!
Become my grave, that wert my shelter! Oh!
I am unmasked, unspirited, undone,
Betrayed to beggary, to infamy—

---

9. That has a hint of manliness.
1. Nestor was the oldest of the Greek leaders in the Trojan War.
2. I fall away from my ancestors’ virtues and abuse the Italian reputation for virility.
SCENE 8. The scene continues.

[Enter] MOSCA [bloody].

MOSCA Where shall I run, most wretched shame of men,
To beat out my unlucky brains?

VOLPONE Here, here.

What! Dost thou bleed?

MOSCA Oh, that his well-driv'n sword
Had been so courteous to have cleft me down
Unto the navel, ere I lived to see
My life, my hopes, my spirits, my patron, all
Thus desperately engaged by my error!

VOLPONE Woe on thy fortune!

MOSCA And my follies, sir.

VOLPONE Th' hast made me miserable.

MOSCA Who would have thought he would have hearkened SO?

VOLPONE What shall we do?

MOSCA I know not. If my heart
Could expiate the mischance, I'd pluck it out.
Will you be pleased to hang me, or cut my throat?
And I'll requite you, sir. Let's die like Romans,
Since we have lived like Grecians.

They knock without.

VOLPONE Hark, who's there?

I hear some footing: officers, the Saffi, arresting officers

Come to apprehend us! I do feel the brand
Hissing already at my forehead; now
Mine ears are boring.

MOSCA To your couch, sir; you
Make that place good, however.

[VOLPONE gets into bed.]

Guilty men

Suspect what they deserve still.[He opens the door.]

Signor Corbaccio!

SCENE 9. The scene continues.

[Enter] CORBACCIO [and converses with] MOSCA;

VOLTORE [enters unnoticed by them].

CORBACCIO Why, how now, Mosca!

MOSCA Oh, undone, amazed, sir.

Your son—I know not by what accident—
Acquainted with your purpose to my patron
Touching your will and making him your heir,
Entered our house with violence, his sword drawn,

3.8
1. Bonario apparently remembered Mosca's invitation, in 3.2.66—68, to punish him if he turns out to be lying: "draw your just sword / And score your vengeance on my front and face; / Mark me your villain."
2. Romans often committed suicide in adversity; Greeks were thought to be pleasure-loving.
3. Branding was a common criminal punishment; ear-boring is described as an Italian torture in Thomas Nashe's Unfortunate Traveler (1594).
Sought for you, called you wretch, unnatural,
Vowed he would kill you.

CORBACCIO  Me?

MOSCA Yes, and my patron.

CORRACCIO This act shall disinherit him indeed.
Here is the will.

MOSCA [taking it from him] Tis well, sir.
CORBACCIO Right and well.

Be you as careful now for me.

MOSCA My life, sir,
Is not more tendered;
I am only yours.

CORBACCIO How does he? Will he die shortly, think’st thou?

MOSCA I fear
He'll outlast May.

CORRACCIO Today?

MOSCA No, last out May, sir.
CORRACCIO Couldst thou not gi’ him a dram?°

MOSCA Oh, by no means, sir.

CORBACCIO Nay, I’ll not bid you.

VOLTORE [aside] This is a knave, I see.

[VAULTORE comes forward to speak privately with MOSCA.]

MOSCA [aside] How, Signor Voltore! Did he hear me?

VOLTORE Parasite!

MOSCA Who’s that? Oh, sir, most timely welcome—

VOLTORE Scarce° only just in time
To the discovery of your tricks, I fear.
You are his only? And mine also? Are you not?

MOSCA Who, I, sir? [They speak out of CORRACCIO S hearing.]

VOLTORE YOU, sir. What device° is this
About a will?

MOSCA A plot for you, sir.

VOLTORE Come,
Put not your foists° upon me. I shall scent ’em.

MOSCA Did you not hear it?

VOLTORE Yes, I hear Corbaccio
Hath made your patron there his heir.

MOSCA ’Tis true,
By my device, drawn to it by my plot,
With hope—

VOLTORE Your patron should reciprocate?
And you have promised?

MOSCA For your good I did, sir.
Nay, more, I told his son, brought, hid him here
Where he might hear his father pass the deed,
Being persuaded to it by this thought, sir,
That the unnaturalness, first, of the act,
And then, his father's oft disclaiming in° him
(Which I did mean t' help on) would sure enrage him
To do some violence upon his parent,
On which the law should take sufficient hold,
And you be stated in a double hope.
Truth be my comfort and my conscience,
My only aim was to dig you a fortune
Out of these two old rotten sepulchres—

VOLTORE  I cry thee mercy, Mosca.

MOSCA  Worth your patience
And your great merit, sir. And see the change!

VOLTORE  Why? What success?
Most hapless! You must help, sir.
Whilst we expected th'old raven, in comes Corvino's wife, sent hither by her husband—

VOLTORE  What, with a present?
No, sir, on visitation—
I'll tell you how, anon—and, staying long,
The youth, he grows impatient, rushes forth,
Seizeth the lady, wounds me, makes her swear—
Or he would murder her, that was his vow—
T'affirm my patron to have done her rape,
Which how unlike it is, you see! And hence,
With that pretext, he's gone t'acuse his father,
Defame my patron, defeat you—

VOLTORE  Where's her husband?
Let him be sent for straight.

MOSCA  Sir, I'll go fetch him.

VOLTORE  Bring him to the Scrutineo.
Sir, I will.

VOLTORE  This must be stopped.

MOSCA  Oh, you do nobly, sir.
Alas, 'twas labored all, sir, for your good;
Nor was there want of counsel in the plot.
But fortune can at any time o'ethrow
The projects of a hundred learned clerks, sir.

CORBACCIO  [striving to hear]  What's that?

VOLTORE  [to CORBACCIO]  Will't please you, sir, to go along?
[Exeunt CORBACCIO and VOLTORE.]

MOSCA  Patron, go in and pray for our success.

VOLPONE  [rising]  Need makes devotion. Heaven your labor bless!

Act 4

Scene 1. The piazza.

[Enter] POLITIC [and] PEREGRINE,

POLITIC  I told you, sir, it was a plot. You see
What observation is! You mentioned me
For some instructions; I will tell you, sir,
Since we are met here, in this height of Venice,
Some few particulars I have set down
Only for this meridian, fit to be known
Of your crude traveler, and they are these.
I will not touch, sir, at your phrase or clothes,
For they are old.¹

PEREGRINE Sir, I have better.

POLITIC Pardon,
I meant as they are themes.⁰ topics for advice
PEREGRINE Oh, sir, proceed.
I'll slander⁰ you no more of wit, good sir. accuse

POLITIC First, for your garb,² it must be grave and serious,
Very reserved and locked;³ not⁰ tell a secret guarded/do not
On any terms, not to your father; scarce
A fable⁴ but with caution. Make sure choice
Both of your company and discourse. Beware
You never speak a truth—

PEREGRINE HOW!

POLITIC Not to strangers,⁶ foreigners
For those be they you must converse with most;
Others⁵ I would not know, sir, but at distance, fellow countrymen
So as I still might be a saver⁴ in em.
You shall have tricks else passed upon you hourly.
And then, for your religion, profess none, But wonder at the diversity of all,
And, for your part, protest, were there no other
But simply the laws o' th'land, you could content you.

Nick Machiavel and Monsieur Bodin both
Were of this mind.⁵ Then must you learn the use
And handling of your silver fork⁶ at meals, an Italian novelty composition
The metal⁰ of your glass—these are main matters
With your Italian—and to know the hour
When you must eat your melons and your figs.

PEREGRINE Is that a point of state,⁶ too? statecraft

POLITIC Here it is.
For your Venetian, if he see a man
Preposterous in the least, he has⁷ him straight; sees through
He has, he strips⁸ him. I'll acquaint you, sir. ridicules; defrauds
I now have lived here—'tis some fourteen months;
Within the first week of my landing here,
All took me for a citizen of Venice,
I knew the forms so well—

PEREGRINE [aside] And nothing else.

POLITIC I had read Contarine,⁶ took me a house,
Dealt with my Jews⁷ to furnish it with movables⁸— household goods
Well, if I could but find one man, one man
To mine own heart, whom I durst trust, I would—

4.¹ I will not discuss those familiar ("old") topics: the language one ought to use or the clothes one ought to wear. In the next line, in an attempt at a joke, Peregrine deliberately misconstrues "your clothes" to refer to his own apparel, but Politic does not get it.
2. As for a traveler's bearing.
3. An apparently trivial story subject to political alle-gerization.
4. So that I might not be imposed upon. ("Be a saver" is a gambling term, meaning "to escape loss.")
5. Political theorists Niccolo Machiavelli (1469-1527) and Jean Bodin (1530-1596) argued that religious zeal was often politically inexpedient or divisive;
as a result both were popularly thought to be atheists.
6. An English translation of Gasparo Contarini's important book, The Commonwealth and Government of Venice, was published in 1599.
7. The usual Jews. (In Venice Jews served as money-lenders and pawnbrokers.)
PEREGRINE  What? What, sir?

POLITIC  Make him rich, make him a fortune.

He should not think again. I would command it.

PEREGRINE  AS how?

POLITIC  With certain projects that I have—entrepreneurial schemes

Which I may not discover.

PEREGRINE  [aside]  If I had

But one to wager with, I would lay odds, now,

He tells me instantly.

POLITIC  One is—and that

I care not greatly who knows—to serve the state

Of Venice with red herrings for three years,

And at a certain rate, from Rotterdam,

Where I have correspondence. [He shows PEREGRINE a paper.]

There's a letter

Sent me from one o'th'States, and to that purpose;

He cannot write his name, but that's his mark.

PEREGRINE  [examining the paper]  He is a chandler?

POLITIC  NO, a cheesemonger.

There are some other too, with whom I treat others/deal

About the same negotiation;

And I will undertake it, for 'tis thus

I'll do't with ease; I've cast it all figured it all out

Carries but three men in her and a boy,

And she shall make me three returns round trips

a year.

So if there come but one of three, I save; break even

If two, I can defalk. But this is, now, pay off loans

If my main project fail.

PEREGRINE  Then you have others?

POLITIC  I should be loath to draw the subtle air breathe

Of such a place without my thousand aims.

I'll not dissemble, sir: where'er I come, analytic

I love to be considerative; and 'tis true

I have at my free hours thought upon

Some certain goods unto the state of Venice, benefits

Which I do call my cautions, and, sir, which precautions

I mean, in hope of pension, to propound financial reward

To the Great Council, then unto the Forty, contacts

So to the Ten. My means are made already—

PEREGRINE  By whom?

POLITIC  Sir, one that though his place b'obscure, contacts

Yet he can sway and they will hear him. He's

A commendatore.

PEREGRINE  What, a common sergeant?

---

8. Venice, on the Adriatic Sea, had little need to import pickled fish from afar.
9. Candlemaker. (Evidently the paper is grease-stained.)
1. Small vessel, not suitable for long voyages. Sir Pol's scheme is thus obviously impractical.
2. The Great Council was a large legislative group made up of wealthy Venetians; the Councils of Forty were much smaller groups that oversaw judicial affairs; the Council of Ten consisted of the elected Doge and his cabinet.
POLITIC Sir, such as they are put it in their mouths
What they should say, sometimes, as well as greater.¹
I think I have my notes to show you—

[He searches in his garments.]

PEREGRINE Good, sir.

POLITIC But you shall swear unto me on your gentry ²
Not to anticipate—

PEREGRINE I, sir?

POLITIC Nor reveal
A circumstance—My paper is not with me.

PEREGRINE Oh, but you can remember, sir.

POLITIC My first is Concerning tinderboxes.³ You must know
No family is here without its box.
Now, sir, it being so portable a thing,
Put case⁴ that you or I were ill affected⁵
Unto the state; sir, with it in our pockets
Might not I go into the Arsenale?⁶
Of you? Come out again? And none the wiser?

PEREGRINE Except yourself, sir.

POLITIC Go to, then. I therefore Advertise to the state how fit it were
That none but such as were known patriots,
Sound lovers of their country, should be suffered T'enjoy them in their houses, and even those Sealed at some office, and at such a bigness
As might not lurk in pockets.

PEREGRINE Admirable!

POLITIC My next is, how 't'inquire and be resolved⁷
By present demonstration whether a ship
Newly arrived from Syria, or from Any suspected part of all the Levant,⁸
Be guilty of the plague. And where they use⁹
To lie out forty, fifty days sometimes
About the Lazaretto,¹⁰ for their trial,
I'll save that charge and loss unto the merchant,
And in an hour clear the doubt.

PEREGRINE Indeed, sir?

POLITIC Or—I will lose my labor.

PEREGRINE My faith, that's much.

POLITIC Nay, sir, conceive¹¹ me. 'Twill cost me in onions¹²
Some thirty livres¹³—

PEREGRINE Which is one pound sterling.

POLITIC Beside my waterworks. For this I do, sir.
First I bring in your ship¹⁴ 'twixt two brick walls—
But those the state shall venture.¹⁵ On the one

3. Common men, as well as those of higher status, may sometimes make suggestions to the government.
4. Shipyard where Venice built and repaired its naval vessels.
5. Quarantine hospital on an outlying island.
6. Onions were popularly supposed to absorb plague infection.
I strain, I stretch. me a fair tarpaulin, and in that
I stick my onions cut in halves; the other
Is full of loopholes out at which I thrust.
The noses of my bellows, and those bellows
I keep with waterworks in perpetual motion—as easy as can be—
Which is the easiest matter of a hundred.
Now, sir, your onion, which doth naturally
Attract th'infection, and your bellows, blowing
The air upon him, will show instantly
By his changed color if there be contagion,
Or else remain as fair as at the first.
Now 'tis known, 'tis nothing.

PEREGRINE  You are right, sir.

POLITIC  I would I had my note.

PEREGRINE  [He searches again in his garments.]

POLITIC  Were I false,
Or would be made so, I could show you reasons
How I could sell this state now to the Turk, Spite of their galleys or their—

PEREGRINE  Pray you, Sir Pol.

POLITIC  That I feared.

PEREGRINE  They are there, sir? [He indicates a hook]

POLITIC  NO, this is my diary,
Wherein I note my actions of the day.

PEREGRINE  Pray you, let's see, sir. What is here? [Reading]

"Notandum
A rat had gnawn my spur leathers; notwithstanding
I put on new and did go forth, but first
I threw three beans over the threshold. Item,
I went and bought two toothpicks, whereof one
I burst immediately in a discourse
With a Dutch merchant, bout ragion' del stato.
From him I went, and paid a moccinigo
For piecing my silk stockings; by the way
I cheapened sprats, and at Saint Mark's I urined."

Faith, these are politic notes!

POLITIC  Sir, I do slip
No action of my life thus but I quote it.

POLITIC  Believe me, it is wise!

PEREGRINE  Nay, sir, read forth.

7. Perpetual-motion machines were popular attractions in early modern England, but Jonson regarded them contemptuously. Since Venice is in flat marsh-land, there are no waterfalls to harness there, as Sir Pol proposes.
8. The Ottoman Turks, southeast of Venice along the Adriatic Sea, were maritime and religious rivals and a long-standing military threat.
9. Many Renaissance travel writers recommended that travelers keep a written record of their journeys.
SCENE 2. The scene continues.

[Enter] LADY [WOULD-BE], NANO, [and the two] WOMEN.

[They do not see POLITIC and PEREGRINE at first.]

LADY WOULD-BE Where should this loose knight be, trow? do you suppose?
Sure he's housed.
NANO Why, then he's fast.
LADY WOULD-BE Why, then he's fast.
I pray you, stay. This heat will do more harm
To my complexion than his heart is worth.
I do not care to hinder, but to take him.
[She rubs her cheeks.]
How it comes off!

LADY WOULD-BE Where?
FIRST WOMAN With a young gentleman.
LADY WOULD-BE That same's the party, in a brothel! [To NANO] Pray you, sir, jog my knight.
I will be tender to his reputation, both fast and loose.
However he demerit.

POLITIC [seeing her] My lady!
PEREGRINE Where?
POLITIC 'Tis she indeed, sir; you shall know her. She is,
Were she not mine, a lady of that merit
For fashion and behavior; and for beauty
I durst compare—
PEREGRINE It seems you are not jealous, deserves blame
That dare commend her.

POLITIC Nay, and for discourse—
PEREGRINE Being your wife, she cannot miss that.

POLITIC [introducing PEREGRINE] Madam,
Here is a gentleman; pray you use him fairly.
He seems a youth, but he is—
LADY WOULD-BE None?

POLITIC Yes, one
Has put his face as soon into the world— who has / so young

LADY WOULD-BE YOU mean, as early? But today

POLITIC How's this!

LADY WOULD-BE Why, in this habit, sir; you apprehend me. apparel / understand
Well, Master Would-be, this doth not become you;
I had thought the odor, sir, of your good name
Had been more precious to you, that you would not Have done this dire massacre on your honor—
One of your gravity and rank besides!
But knights, I see, care little for the oath
They make to ladies, chiefly their own ladies.

POLITIC Now, by my spurs—the symbol of my knighthood—

4.2 Mosca mentioned, in transvestite attire.
1. Lady Would-be believes that Peregrine is the whore 2. Even though I, her husband, say so.
PEREGRINE (aside)  Lord, how his brain is humbled\(^3\) for an oath!
POLITIC  —I reach\(^0\) you not. comprehend  cunning
LADY WOULD-BE  Right, sir, your polity\(^0\)
May bear\(^0\) it through thus.  [To PEREGRINE]  Sir, a word with you.  bluff
I would be loath to contest publicly  bad-tempered
With any gentlewoman, or to seem ill breeding
Froward\(^0\) or violent; as The Courtier\(^4\) says, i.e., Peregrine
It comes too near rusticity\(^5\) in a lady,  ill breeding
Which I would shun by all means. And however
I may deserve from Master Would-be, yet  i.e., Peregrine
T' have one fair gentlewoman\(^6\) thus be made
Th'unkind instrument to wrong another,
And one she knows not, ay, and to persevere,
In my poor judgment is not warranted  impurity
From being a solecism\(^7\) in our sex,
If not in manners.
PEREGRINE  HOW is this?
POLITIC  Sweet madam,
Come nearer to your aim.\(^0\) speak more clearly
LADY WOULD-BE  Marry, and will, sir.  London brothel district
Since you provoke me with your impudence
And laughter of your light land-siren\(^5\) here,
Your Sporus,\(^6\) your hermaphrodite—
PEREGRINE  What's here?
POLITIC  The gentleman, believe it, is of worth, And of our nation.
LADY WOULD-BE  Ay, your Whitefriars\(^8\) nation!
Come, I blush for you, Master Would-be, I,
And am ashamed you should ha' no more forehead\(^9\) shame
Than thus to be the patron, or Saint George,\(^8\)
To a lewd harlot, a base fricatrice,\(^0\) whore
A female devil in a male outside.
POLITIC  [to PEREGRINE]  Nay,
An' you be such a one, I must bid adieu
To your delights. The case appears too liquid.\(^9\) If [POLITIC starts to leave.]
LADY WOULD-BE  Ay, you may carry't clear, with your state-face\(^9\) dignified expression
But for your carnival concupiscence,\(^9\) lecherous strumpet
Who here is fled for liberty of conscience\(^9\) licentious conduct
From furious persecution of the marshal,\(^9\)
Her will I disc'ple.\(^9\) discipline

---

3. Literally, "brought down" to his feet—where spurs, the appurtenances of a knight, are worn.
5. The Sirens were mythical sea creatures who lured sailors to their deaths by sitting on dangerous rocks and singing irresistibly. (Lady Would-be refers to Peregrine.)
6. A eunuch whom the emperor Nero dressed in drag and married.
7. Peregrine notes that even Lady Would-be's tantrums include literary allusions.
9. Obvious. (Politic has become convinced that his wife is right in believing that Peregrine is a transvestite whore.)
1. Official charged with punishing prostitutes. Lady Would-be thinks that Peregrine has dressed as a man to flee prosecution.
PEREGRINE This is fine, 'faith!
And do you use this often? Is this part
Of your wit's exercise, 'gainst you have occasion?
Madam—

LADY WOULD-BE Go to, sir.

PEREGRINE Do you hear me, lady?
Why, if your knight have set you to beg shirts,
Or to invite me home, you might have done it
A nearer way by far.

LADY WOULD-BE This cannot work you out of my snare.

PEREGRINE Why, am I in it, then?
Indeed, your husband told me you were fair,
And so you are; only your nose inclines—
That side that's next the sun—to the queen-apple.

LADY WOULD-BE This cannot be endured by any patience.

SCENE 3. The scene continues.

[Enter] MOSCA.

MOSCA What's the matter, madam?

LADY WOULD-BE Right not my quest in this, I will protest 'em to all the world no aristocracy.

MOSCA What is the injury, lady?

LADY WOULD-BE Why, the callet you told me of, here I have ta'en disguised.

MOSCA Who, this? What means Your Ladyship? The creature I mentioned to you is apprehended now before the Senate. You shall see her—

LADY WOULD-BE Where?

MOSCA I'll bring you to her. This young gentleman, I saw him land this morning at the port.

LADY WOULD-BE Is't possible! How has my judgment wandered!

[Releasing PEREGRINE] Sir, I must, blushing, say to you I have erred, and plead your pardon.

PEREGRINE What, more changes yet?

LADY WOULD-BE I hope you ha' not the malice to remember a gentlewoman's passion. If you stay in Venice here, please you to use me, sir—

MOSCA Will you go, madam?

LADY WOULD-BE Pray you, sir, use me. In faith, the more you see me, the more I shall conceive you have forgot our quarrel.

[Exeunt MOSCA, LADY WOULD-BE, NANO, and WOMEN.]

2. To keep it ready for when it is really needed?
3. Peregrine pretends to believe that Lady Would-be is tearing off his shirt in order to give it to her husband. Probably she is just trying to prevent his leaving.
4. A bright red apple. See 3.4.15—16, where we learn that Lady Would-be is sensitive about her red nose.
4.3 1. Make use of my services. (With a sexual innuendo continued in "The more you see me, the more I shall conceive" [line 18], where "conceive" means both "understand" and "conceive a child.")
PEREGRINE This is rare!
Sir Politic Would-be? No, Sir Politic Bawd,
To bring me thus acquainted with his wife!
Well, wise Sir Pol, since you have practiced thus
Upon my freshmanship, I'll try your salt-head,
What proof it is against a counterplot. [Exit.] how invulnerable

SCENE 4. The Scrutineo, or Court of Law, in the Doge's palace

[Enter] VOLTORE, CORBACCIO, CORVINO, [and] MOSCA.

VOLTORE Well, now you know the carriage of the business, management
Your constancy is all that is required
Unto the safety of it.

MOSCA Is the lie
Safely conveyed amongst us? Is that sure? agreed upon Knows every man his burden? refrain, tune

CORVINO Yes.

MOSCA Then shrink not.

CORVINO [aside to MOSCA] But knows the advocate the truth?
MOSCA [aside to CORVINO] Oh, sir, elaborate
By no means. I devised a formal tale
That salved your reputation. But be valiant, sir.

CORVINO I fear no one but him, Voltore
Should make him stand for a co-heir—

MOSCA Co-halter!¹
Hang him, we will but use his tongue, his noise,
As we do Croaker's, Corbaccio's

CORVINO Ay, what shall he do?

MOSCA When we ha' done, you mean?

CORVINO Yes.

MOSCA Why, we'll think—
Sell him for mummia² he's half dust already.

[Aside to VOLTORE] DO not you smile to see this buffalò,³
How he doth sport it with his head? [To himself] I should, harvest
If all were well and past. [Aside to CORBACCIO] Sir, only you
Are he that shall enjoy the crop of all,
And these not know for whom they toil.

CORBACCIO Ay, peace!

MOSCA [Aside to CORVINO] But you shall eat it. [To himself] Much!⁴ (then to VOLTORE again) Worshipful sir, sure you will!

Mercury sit upon your thund'ring tongue,
Or the French Hercules, and make your language
As conquering as his club,⁵ to beat along,
As with a tempest, flat, our adversaries!

2. Taken advantage of my inexperience. (Peregrine apparently believes that Sir Pol has deliberately involved him in a humiliating setup. “Salt-head,” following, plays on both “salt” meaning “seasoned,” “old,” and “salt” meaning “lecherous.”
4.4
1. Playing on “halter,” a hangman’s noose, to suggest that both Corbaccio and Voltore are being duped.
2. Powdered embalmed corpse, used medicinally.
3. Corbaccio, with his cuckold’s horns.
4. May the god of rhetoric (and thieves).
5. After his tenth labor, according to some legendary accounts, Hercules, aged by now but powerfully eloquent, fathered the Celts in Gaul, or France. He was traditionally pictured with a club.
[Aside to Corvino] But much more yours, sir, your adversaries

Voltores

Here they come. Ha' done.

Mosca

I have another witness if you need, sir, I can produce.

Voltores

Who is it?

Mosca

Sir, I have her.

Scene 5. The scene continues.

[Enter] four Avocatori, Bonario, Celia. Notario [notory], commendatori [and other court officials]. lay court deputies

First Avocatore

The like of this the Senate never heard of.

Second Avocatore

'Twill come most strange to them when we report it.

Fourth Avocatore

The gentlewoman has been ever held

Of unproven name.

Third Avocatore

So, the young man.

Fourth Avocatore

The more unnatural part that of his father.

Second Avocatore

More of the husband.

First Avocatore

I not know to give

His act a name, it is so monstrous!

Fourth Avocatore

But the impostor, he is a thing created

T' exceed precedent

First Avocatore

And all aftertimes!

Second Avocatore

I never heard a true voluptuary

Described but him.

Third Avocatore

Appear yet those were cited?

Notary

All but the old magnifico, Volpone.

First Avocatore

Why is not he here?

Mosca

Please Your Fatherhoods,

Here is his advocate. Himself's so weak,

So feeble—

Fourth Avocatore

What are you?

Bonario

His parasite,

His knave, his pander! I beseech the court

He may be forced to come, that your grave eyes

May bear strong witness of his strange impostures.

Voltores

Upon my faith and credit with your virtues,

He is not able to endure the air.

Second Avocatore

Bring him, however.

Third Avocatore

We will see him.

Fourth Avocatore

Fetch him.

[Exit officers.]

Voltores

Your Fatherhoods' fit pleasures be obeyed,

But sure the sight will rather move your pities

Than indignation. May it please the court,

In the meantime he may be heard in me.

I know this place most void of prejudice,

And therefore crave it, since we have no reason

To fear our truth should hurt our cause.

Third Avocatore

Speak free.

Voltores

Then know, most honored fathers, I must now

Discover to your strangely abused ears reveal
The most prodigious and most frontless piece shameless
Of solid impudence and treachery complete
That ever vicious nature yet brought forth
To shame the state of Venice. [Indicating Cecilia] This lewd woman,
That wants no artificial looks or tears
To help the visor she has now put on,
(weeping) mask
Hath long been known a close adulteress secret; intimate
To that lascivious youth there [indicating Bonario]; not suspected,
I say, but known, and taken in the act
With him; and by this man, the easy husband,
Lenient
Pardoned; whose timeless bounty makes him now unreasonable; endless
Stand here, the most unhappy, innocent person
That ever man's own goodness made accused.¹
For these, not knowing how to owe a gift acknowledge
Of that dear grace but with their shame, being placed other than
So above all powers of their gratitude,²
Began to hate the benefit, and in place
Of thanks devise t'extirp the memory to extirpate, wipe out
Of such an act. Wherein I pray Your Fatherhoods
To observe the malice, yea, the rage of creatures
Discovered in their evils, and what heart such take even from their crimes. But that anon
Will more appear. This gentleman, the father, [indicating Corbaccio]
Hearing of this foul fact, with many others deed
Which daily struck at his too tender ears,
And grieved in nothing more than that he could not evil deeds
Preserve himself a parent—his son's ills²
Growing to that strange flood—at last decreed
To disinherit him.
FIRST AVOCATORE These be strange turns!
SECOND AVOCATORE The young man's fame was ever fair reputation and honest.
VOLTORE So much more full of danger is his vice,
That can beguile so under shade of virtue.
But, as I said, my honored sires, his father
Having this settled purpose, by what means
To him betrayed we know not, and this day give him a better name
Appointed for the deed, that parricide—
I cannot style him better—by confederacy
Preparing this his paramour to be there,
Entered Volpone's house—who was the man,
Your Fatherhoods must understand, designed
For the inheritance—there sought his father.
But with what purpose sought he him, my lords?
I tremble to pronounce it, that a son

¹. That ever had his own goodness turned against him.
². Since the rare value of Corvino's forgiveness was so far beyond their powers of gratitude.
Unto a father, and to such a father,
Should have so foul, felonious intent:
It was to murder him. When, being prevented
By his more happy° absence, what then did he?

Corbaccio's fortunate
Not check his wicked thoughts; no, now new deeds—
An act of horror, fathers! He dragged forth
The aged gentleman, that had there lain bedrid
Three years and more, out of his innocent couch;
Naked upon the floor there left him; wounded
His servant in the face, and with this strumpet,
The stale° to his forged practice,° who was glad to be so active—I shall here desire
Your Fatherhoods to note but my collections° as most remarkable—thought at once to stop
His father's ends,° discredit his free choice
In the old gentleman,° redeem themselves
By laying infamy upon this man°
To whom with blushing they should owe their lives.

FIRST AVOCATORE  What proofs have you of this?
BONARIO  Most honored fathers,
I humbly crave there be no credit given
To this man's mercenary tongue.
SECOND AVOCATORE  Forbear.
BONARIO  His soul moves in his fee.
THIRD AVOCATORE  Oh, sir!
BONARIO  This fellow,
For six sols° more, would plead against his Maker.
FIRST AVOCATORE  You do forget yourself.
VOLTORE  Nay, nay, grave fathers,
Let him have scope. Can any man imagine
That he will spare °° accuser, that would not
Have spared his parent?
FIRST AVOCATORE  Well, produce your proofs.
CELIA  I would I could forget I were a creature!°°
VOLTORE  [calling a witness]  Signor Corbaccio!
FOURTH AVOCATORE  What is he?
VOLTORE  The father.
SECOND AVOCATORE  Has he had an oath?
NOTARY  Yes.
CORBACCIO  What must I do now?
NOTARY  Your testimony's craved.
CORBACCIO  [mis-hearing]  Speak to the knave?
I'll ha' my mouth first stopped with earth! My heart
Abhors his knowledge;°°° I disclaim in°°°° him.
FIRST AVOCATORE  But for what cause?
CORBACCIO  The mere portent of nature.°°°°

3. Wickedness is always persistent.
4. A completely monstrous birth. (A deformed child was often considered to be a portent, or evil omen.)
BONARIO Have they made you to this?
CORBACCIO I will not hear thee,
    Monster of men, swine, goat, wolf, parricide!
    Speak not, thou viper.
BONARIO Sir, I will sit down,
    And rather wish my innocence should suffer
    Than I resist the authority of a father.
VOLTORE [calling a witness] Signor Corvino!
SECOND AVOCATORE This is strange!
FIRST AVOCATORE Who's this?
NOTARY The husband.
FOURTH AVOCATORE Is he sworn?
NOTARY He is.
THIRD AVOCATORE Speak, then.
CORVINO This woman, please Your Fatherhoods, is a whore
    Of most hot exercise, more than a partridge,5
    Upon record— as is well attested as is well attested
FIRST AVOCATORE No more.
CORVINO Neighs like a jennet.6 mare (in heat)
NOTARY Preserve the honor of the court.
CORVINO I shall,
    And modesty of your most reverend ears.
    And yet I hope that I may say these eyes
    Have seen her glued unto that piece of cedar,
    That fine well-timbered gallant;6 and that here
    [Pointing to his forehead] The letters may be read, thorough the horn,7
    That make the story perfect.6  complete
MOSCA [aside to CORVINO] Excellent, sir!
CORVINO [aside to MOSCA] There is no shame in this, now, is there?
MOSCA [aside to CORVINO] None.
CORVINO [to the court] Or if I said I hoped that she were onward0 well on her way
    To her damnation, if there be a hell
    Greater than whore and woman—a good Catholic
    May make the doubt1— may wonder
THIRD AVOCATORE His grief hath made him frantic.
FIRST AVOCATORE Remove him hence.  She [CEILIA] swoons.
SECOND AVOCATORE Look to the woman!
CORVINO [taunting her] Rare!
    Prettily feigned! Again!
FOURTH AVOCATORE Stand from about her.
FIRST AVOCATORE Give her the air.
THIRD AVOCATORE [to MOSCA] What can you say?
MOSCA My wound,
    May't please Your Wisdoms, speaks for me, received
    In aid of my good patron when he" missed
    Bonario

5. A bird capable of numerous consecutive sexual acts and so a byword for lechery.
6. Corvino sarcastically compliments Bonario as a strapping fellow to whom Celia no doubt wishes to cling. The cedars of the Middle East are tall and stately.
7. Children learned to read the alphabet from pages protected by transparent sheets of horn. (With an allusion to the cuckold's horn.)
His sought-for father, when that well-taught dame
Had her cue given her to cry out a rape.

Bonario    Oh, most laid0 impudence! Fathers—

Third Avocatore    Sir, be silent.

You had your hearing free,9 so must they theirs.

Second Avocatore    I do begin to doubt th'imposture here.

Fourth Avocatore    This woman has too many moods.

VoltoRE    Grave fathers,

She is a creature of a most professed
And prostituted lewdness.

Corvino    Most impetuous!

Unsatisfied,9 grave fathers!

VoltoRE    May her feignings

Not take9 Your Wisdoms! But9 this day she baited
A stranger, a grave knight, with her loose eyes
And more lascivious kisses. This man9 saw 'em
Together on the water in a gondola.

Mosca    Here is the lady herself that saw 'em too,
Without,9 who then had in the open streets
Pursued them, but for saving her knight's honor.

First Avocatore    Produce that lady.

Second Avocatore    Let her come.

[Exit Mosca.]

Fourth Avocatore    These things,

They strike with wonder!

Third Avocatore    I am turned a stone!

Scene 6. The scene continues.

Mosca    Be resolute, madam.

Lady Would-be    Ay, this same is she.

[To Celia] Out, thou chameleon9 harlot! Now thine eyes deceitfully changeable Vie tears with the hyena.1 Dar'st thou look Upon my wronged face? [To the Avocatori] I cry9 your pardons. beg
I fear I have forgettingly transgressed
Against the dignity of the court—

Second Avocatore    NO, madam.

Lady Would-be    And been exorbitant9— excessive

Second Avocatore    You have not, lady.

Fourth Avocatore    These proofs are strong.

Lady Would-be    Surely, I had no purpose
To scandalize your honors, or my sex's.

Third Avocatore    We do believe it.

Lady Would-be    Madam, we do.

Second Avocatore    Surely, you may believe it.

Lady Would-be    Indeed, you may. My breeding

Is not so coarse—

Fourth Avocatore    We know it.

4.6
1. A symbol of treachery, the hyena was supposed to be able to change its sex and the color of its eyes at will and to imitate human voices.
LADY WOULD-BE—to offend
With pertinacity—stubborn resolution
THIRD AVOCATORE Lady—
LADY WOULD-BE—such a presence;
No, surely.
FIRST AVOCATORE We well think it.
LADY WOULD-BE YOU may think it.
FIRST AVOCATORE [to the other AVOCATORI] Let her o'ercome." have the last word
[To CELIA and BONARIO] What witnesses have you
To make good your report?
BONARIO Our consciences.
CELIA And heaven, that never fails the innocent.
FOURTH AVOCATORE These are no testimonies.
BONARIO Not in your courts,
Where multitude and clamor overcomes.
FIRST AVOCATORE Nay, then, you do wax insolent.
VOLPONE is brought in [on a litter], as impotent. disabled
[LADY WOULD-BE embraces him.]
VOLTORE Here, here
The testimony comes that will convince
And put to utter dumbness their bold tongues.
See here, grave fathers, here's the ravisher,
The rider on men's wives, the great impostor,
The grand voluptuary! Do you not think
These limbs should affect venery? Or these eyes
Covet a concubine? Pray you, mark these hands:
Are they not fit to stroke a lady's breasts?
Perhaps he doth dissemble?
BONARIO So he does.
VOLTORE Would you ha' him tortured?
BONARIO I would have him proved.
VOLTORE Best try him, then, with goads or burning irons;
Put him to the strappado. I have heard
The rack hath cured the gout; faith, give it him
And help him of a malady; be courteous.
I'll undertake, before these honored fathers,
He shall have yet as many left diseases
As she has known adulterers, or thou strumpets.
O my most equal hearers, if these deeds,
Acts of this bold and most exorbitant strain,
May pass with sufferance, what one citizen
But owes the forfeit of his life, yea, fame
To him that dares traduce him? Which of you
Are safe, my honored fathers? I would ask,
With leave of Your grave Fatherhoods, if their plot

2. Delight in sexual activity.
3. Tested for impotence, a regular court procedure in some divorce and rape cases. (Torture was another method sometimes used to extract confessions.)
4. Torture in which the victim's arms were tied behind his back; he was then hoisted up by the wrists and dropped.
5. Torture instrument that stretched the victim to the point of dislocating his joints.
6. What citizen is there whose life and reputation might not be forfeit to a slanderer?
Have any face or color like to truth?
Or if unto the dullest nostril here
It smell not rank and most abhorred slander?
I crave your care of this good gentleman,
Whose life is much endangered by their fable;
And as for them, I will conclude with this:
That vicious persons, when they are hot, and fleshed in impious acts, their constancy resoluteness abounds.
Damned deeds are done with greatest confidence.

FIRST AVOCATORE  Take 'em to custody, and sever them.
SECOND AVOCATORE  Tis pity two such prodigies should live.
FIRST AVOCATORE  Let the old gentleman be returned with care.
I'm sorry our credulity wronged him.

[Exeunt litter-bearers with VOLPONE.]

FOURTH AVOCATORE  These are two creatures monsters.
THIRD AVOCATORE  I have an earthquake in me!
SECOND AVOCATORE  Their shame, even in their cradles, fled their faces.
FOURTH AVOCATORE  [to VOLTORE] You've done a worthy service to the state, sir,
In their discovery.
FIRST AVOCATORE  You shall hear ere night
What punishment the court decrees upon em.

VOLTORE  We thank Your Fatherhoods.
[Exeunt AVOCATORI, NOTARY, COMMENDATORI.]

[To MOSCA]  HOW like you it?

MOSCA  Rare!
I'd ha' your tongue, sir, tipped with gold for this;
I'd ha' you be the heir to the whole city;
The earth I'd have want men ere you want living. lack income
They're bound to erect your statue in Saint Mark's.—
Signor Corvino, I would have you go
And show yourself, that you have conquered

CORVINO  Yes.
MOSCA  [aside to CORVINO]  It was much better that you should profess
Yourself a cuckold thus, than that the other Should have been proved.

CORVINO  Nay, I considered that.
Now it is her fault.
MOSCA  Then it had been yours.
CORVINO  True. I do doubt this advocate still.
MOSCA  I'faith,
You need not; I dare ease you of that care.
CORVINO  I trust thee, Mosca.
MOSCA  As your own soul, sir.

[Exit CORVINO.]

CORBACCIO  Mosca!
MOSCA  Now for your business, sir.

7. Excited by the taste of blood, like hunting hounds. 8. Appear in public. (To indicate that he is not ashamed of having admitted to being a cuckold.)
9. The attempt to prostitute Celia to Volpone.
CORBACCIO How? Ha' you business?
MOSCA Yes, yours, sir.
CORBACCIO Oh, none else?
MOSCA None else, not I.
CORBACCIO Be careful, then.
MOSCA Best you with both your eyes, sir.
CORBACCIO Dispatch it.
MOSCA Instantly.
CORBACCIO And look that all Whatever be put in: jewels, plate, moneys, Household stuff, bedding, curtains.
MOSCA Curtain rings, sir.
CORBACCIO I'll pay him, now; you'll be too prodigal.
MOSCA Sir, I must tender it.
CORBACCIO TWO cecchines is well?
MOSCA No, six, sir.
CORBACCIO 'Tis too much.
MOSCA He talked a great while, You must consider that, sir.
CORBACCIO [giving money] Well, there's three—
MOSCA I'll give it him.
CORBACCIO DO SO, and [he tips MOSCA] there's for thee.
[Exit CORBACCIO.]
MOSCA [aside] Bountiful bones! What horrid strange offense Did he commit 'gainst nature in his youth Worthy this age?
[VOLTORE] YOU see, sir, how I work to deserve this old age
Unto your ends; take you no notice.
VOLTORE No,
I'll leave you.
MOSCA All is yours,
[Exit VOLTORE.]
[aside] the devil and all, Good advocate! [To LADY WOULD-BE] Madam, I'll bring you home LADY WOULD-BE NO, I'll go see your patron.
MOSCA That you shall not.
LADY WOULD-BE You shall sway me.
[Exeunt.]

Act 5

SCENE 1. VOLPONE'S house.

[Enter] VOLPONE [attended].

VOLPONE Well, I am here, and all this brunt is past.

1. I.e., Hurry to make Volpone's will, since Corbaccio has already delivered on his half of the promise.
I ne’er was in dislike with my disguise
Till this fled° moment; here ’twas good, in private,
But, in your public—cave° whilst I breathe.
Fore God, my left leg ’gan to have the cramp,
And I apprehended straight° some power had struck me
With a dead palsy.° Well, I must be merry
And shake it off. A many of these fears
Would put me into some villainous disease,
Should they come thick upon me. I’ll prevent ’em.
Give me a bowl of lusty wine to fright
This humor from my heart. ’—Hum, hum, hum! He drinks.
’Tis almost gone already; I shall conquer,°
Any device, now, of rare ingenious knavery,
That would possess me with a violent laughter,
Would make me up° again. So, so, so, so. Drinks again.
This heat is life; ’tis blood by this time. [Calling] Mosca!

SCENE 2. The scene continues.

[Enter] MOSCA

MOSCA How now, sir? Does the day look clear again?
Are we recovered and wrought out of error
Into our way, to see our path before us?
Is our trade free once more?

VOLPONE Exquisite Mosca!

MOSCA Was it not carried learnedly?

VOLPONE And stoufly.°

MOSCA It were a folly beyond thought to trust
Any grand act unto a cowardly spirit.
You are not taken with it enough, methinks?

VOLPONE Oh, more than if I had enjoyed the wench!
The pleasure of all womankind’s not like it.

MOSCA Why, now you speak, sir. We must here be fixed;
Here we must rest. This is our masterpiece.
We cannot think to go beyond this.

VOLPONE True,
Th’ hast played thy prize,° my precious Mosca.

MOSCA Nay, sir, To gull° the court—

VOLPONE And quite divert the torrent

MOSCA Upon the innocent.

VOLPONE Yes, and to make
So rare a music out of discords—

MOSCA Right.
That yet to me’s the strangest, how th’ast borne it°
That these,° being so divided ’mongst themselves,
Should not scent° somewhat, or° in me or thee,

5.1 1. Wine was supposed to convert quickly to blood (see
2. To bring harmony out of various discordant eleline 17), thus giving courage to the drinker.
ments was thought to be the highest achievement of art.

Or doubt their own side."

MOSCA    True, they will not see't.

Too much light blinds'em, I think. Each of 'em
Is so possessed and stuffed with his own hopes
That anything unto the contrary,
Never so true or never so apparent,
Never so palpable, they will resist it—

VOLPONE    Like a temptation of the devil.

MOSCA    Bight, sir.

Merchants may talk of trade, and your great signors
Of land that yields well; but if Italy
Have any glebe⁰ more fruitful than these fellows,
I am deceived. Did not your advocate rare⁰ do brilliantly

VOLPONE    Oh!—"My most honored fathers, my grave fathers,
Under correction of Your Fatherhoods,
What face of truth is here? If these strange deeds
May pass, most honored fathers"—I had much ado
To forbear laughing.

MOSCA    'T seemed to me you sweat,⁰ sir.

VOLPONE    In troth, I did a little.

MOSCA    But confess, sir,

Were you not daunted?

VOLPONE    In good faith, I was

A little in a mist,⁰ but not dejected;⁰
Never but still myself.

MOSCA    I think⁰ it, sir.

Now, so truth help me, I must needs say this, sir,
And out of conscience for your advocate:
He's taken pains, in faith, sir, and deserved,
In my poor judgment—I speak it under favor,⁰

with your permission

Not to contrary⁰ you, sir—very richly—contradict

Well—to be cozened.⁰

VOLPONE    Troth, and I think so too,

By that⁰ I heard him° in the latter end.

MOSCA    Oh, but before, sir! Had you heard him first

Draw it to certain heads, then aggravate,³
Then use his vehement figures—¹ I looked still
When he would shift a shirt; and doing this
Out of pure love, no hope of gain—

VOLPONE    Tis right.

I cannot answer⁰ him, Mosca, as I would,

repay

Not yet; but for thy sake, at thy entreaty
I will begin ev'n now to vex 'em all,
This very instant.

MOSCA    Good, sir.

VOLPONE    Call the dwarf

And eunuch forth.

MOSCA [calling]    Castrone, Nano!

---

3. Arrange his material under various headings, then bring charges.
4. Change (because his efforts made him sweat),

Nano here.

Volpone Shall we have a jig, now?

Mosca What you please, sir.

Volpone [to Castrone and Nano] Go, Straight give out about the streets, you two, That I am dead. Do it with constancy,

Sadly, do you hear? Impute it to the grief Of this late slander. [Exeunt Castrone and Nano.]

Mosca What do you mean, sir?

Volpone Oh, I shall have instantly my vulture, crow, Raven come flying hither on the news To peck for carrion, my she-wolf and all, Greedy and full of expectation—

Mosca And then to have it ravished from their mouths?

Volpone 'Tis true. I will ha' thee put on a gown

And take upon thee as thou wert mine heir; Show 'em a will. Open that chest and reach Forth one of those that has the blanks. I'll straight Put in thy name.

Mosca [fetching a blank will] It will be rare, sir.

Volpone Ay, When they e'en gape, and find themselves deluded—

Mosca Yes.

Volpone And thou use them scurvily. Dispatch, Get on thy gown.

[Volpone signs the will Mosca has given him. Mosca puts on a mourning garment.]

Mosca But, what, sir, if they ask After the body?

Volpone Say it was corrupted.

Mosca I'll say it stunk, sir, and was fain* t'have it Coffined up instantly and sent away.

Volpone Anything; what thou wilt. Hold, here's my will. Get thee a cap, a count-book, pen and ink, Papers afore thee; sit as thou wert taking An inventory of parcels. I'll get up Behind the curtain on a stool, and hearken; Sometime peep over, see how they do look, With what degrees their blood doth leave their faces. Oh, 'twill afford me a rare meal of laughter!

Mosca Your advocate will turn stark dull upon it.

Volpone It will take off his oratory's edge.

Mosca But your clarissimo*, old round-back, he Will crump you* like a hog-louse with the touch.

Volpone And what Corvino?

5. This must be the long black gown ordinarily worn by chief mourners, not the clarissimo's (aristocrat's) garment, which Mosca dons later in the scene and which constitutes a different kind of insult to Voltore, Corbaccio, and Corvino.
Oh, sir, look for him
Tomorrow morning with a rope and a dagger⁶
To visit all the streets; he must run mad.
My lady, too, that came into the court
To bear false witness for Your Worship—
And kissed me 'fore the fathers, when my face
Flowed all with oils.⁰

And sweat, sir. Why, your gold
Is such another⁷ med'cine, it dries up so effective a
All those offensive savors! It transforms
The most deformed, and restores 'em lovely,
As 'twere the strange poetical girdle.⁷ Jove
Could not invent 'thimself a shroud more subtle
To pass Acrisius' guards.⁸ It is the thing
Makes all the world her grace, her youth, her beauty.
I think she loves me.
Who? The lady, sir?
She's jealous of you.⁹

There's some already.
Look.
It is the vulture.
He has the quickest scent.
I'll to my place,
Thou to thy posture.⁰
I am set.
But, Mosca,
Play the artificer now; torture 'em rarely.
[Volpone conceals himself]

SCENE 3. The scene continues.

[Enter] VoltoRE.
How now, my Mosca?
[pretending not to notice him, and reading from an inventory]
"Turkey carpets,⁶ nine"—Oriental rugs
Taking an inventory? That is well.
'Two suits of bedding, tissue"—
Where's the will?
[Enter] Corbaccio [on a litter].
[to the litter-heaters] So, set me down
And get you home.

VOLTORE
Is he come now to trouble us?

MOSCA
"Of cloth-of-gold," two more—

CORBACCIO
Is it done, Mosca?

"Of several velvets," eight—

VOLTORE
[aside]
I like his care.

CORBACCIO
[to MOSCA]
Dost thou not hear?

CORVINO
[aside]
Ha! Is the hour come, Mosca?

VOLPONE
peeps from behind a traverse.

VOLPONE
[aside]
Ay, now they muster.

CORVINO
What does the advocate here?

Or this Corbaccio?

CORBACCIO
What do these here?

LADY [WOULD-BE]
Is his thread spun?

MOSCA
"Eight chests of linen"—

VOLPONE
[aside]
Oh, my fine Dame Would-be, too!

CORVINO
Mosca, the will,

That I may show it these, and rid 'em hence.

"Six chests of diaper, four of damask"—there.

[Mosca gives them the will.]

CORBACCIO
Is that the will?

MOSCA
"Ten suits of hangings"—

VOLPONE
[aside]
Ay, i' their garters. Mosca. Now their hopes Are at the gasp.

VOLTORE
Mosca the heir!

CORBACCIO
What's that?

VOLPONE
[aside]
My advocate is dumb. Look to my merchant;

He has heard of some strange storm, a ship is lost,

He faints. My lady will swoon. Old glazen-eyes,

He hath not reached his despair yet.

CORBACCIO
All these Are out of hope; I'm sure the man.

CORVINO
But, Mosca—

"Two cabinets"—

---

2. Cloth made of gold threads.

3. Is he dead? (In Greek mythology, the Fates spin out the thread of a human being's life and cut it at the time of death.)

4. Two kinds of costly textile with interwoven motifs. Diaper was linen with a diamond pattern; damask could be linen or silk with floral or other designs.

5. "Go hang yourself in your own garters" was a common phrase of ridicule.

6. Corbaccio wears spectacles (see also line 63 below).
CORVINO  Is this in earnest?
MOSCA   "One
        Of ebony”—
CORVINO  Or do you but delude me?
MOSCA   "The other, mother-of-pearl”—I am very busy.
        Good faith, it is a fortune thrown upon me—
        "Item, one saltcellar of agate”—not my seeking.
LADY WOULD-BE  Do you hear, sir?
MOSCA   A perfumed box”—pray you, forbear;
        You see I am troubled—"made of an onyx”—busily
LADY WOULD-BE  HOW!
MOSCA   Tomorrow or next day I shall be at leisure
        To talk with you all.
CORVINO  Is this my large hope's issue?
LADY WOULD-BE  Sir, I must have a fairer answer.
MOSCA   Madam!
        Marry, and shall: pray you, fairly positively quit my house.
        Nay, raise no tempest with your looks, but hark you,
        Remember what Your Ladyship offered me implicitly, sexual favors
        To put you in an heir; go to, think on't,
        And what you said c'en your best madams did
        For maintenance, and why not you? Enough.
        Go home and use the poor Sir Pol, your knight, well,
        For fear I tell some riddles. Go, be melancholic.
        [Exit LADY WOULD-BE.]
VOLPONE [aside]  Oh, my fine devil!
CORVINO  Mosca, pray you a word.
MOSCA   Lord! Will not you take your dispatch hence yet?
        Methinks of all you should have been th'example. led the way
        Why should you stay here? With what thought? What promise?
        Hear you, do not you know I know you an ass?
        And that you would most fain have been a wittiness cuckold
        If fortune would have let you? That you are
        A declared cuckold, on good terms? This pearl,
        You'll say, was yours? Bight. This diamond?
        I'll not deny't, but thank you. Much here else?
        It may be so. Why, think that these good works
        May help to hide your bad. I'll not betray you.
        Although you be but extraordinary in name only
        And have it only in title, it sufficeth. the name of cuckold
        Go home. Be melancholic too, or mad. [Exit CORVINO.]
VOLPONE [aside]  Bare, Mosca! How his villainy becomes him!
VOLTORE [aside]  Certain he doth delude all these for me.
CORBACCIO [finally making out the will]  Mosca the heir?
VOLPONE [aside]  Oh, his four eyes have found it!
CORBACCIO  I'm cozened, cheated by a parasite-slave!
        Harlot, th'ast gull'd me.
MOSCA   Yes, sir. Stop your mouth,
        Or I shall draw the only tooth is left.

7. A word used of wicked men as well as women.
Are not you he, that filthy covetous wretch
With the three legs, that here, in hope of prey,
Have, any time this three year, snuffed about
With your most grov'ling nose, and would have hired
Me to the pois'ning of my patron? Sir?
Are not you he that have today in court
Professed the disinheriting of your son?
Perjured yourself? Go home, and die, and stink.
If you but croak a syllable, all comes out.
Away and call your porters. Go, go stink! [Exit Corbaccio.]

VOLPONE aside Excellent varlet! servant; rascal
VOLTORE Now, my faithful Mosca,
I find thy constancy—
MOSCA Sir?
VOLTORE Sincere.
MOSCA "A table
Of porphyry"—I mar I° you'll be thus troublesome.
VOLTORE Nay, leave off now, they are gone.
MOSCA Why, who are you?
VOLTORE Who did send for you? Oh, cry you mercy,°
Reverend sir! Good faith, I am grieved for you,
That any chance of mine should thus defeat
Your—I must needs say—most deserving travails.
But I protest, sir, it was cast upon me,
And I could almost wish to be without it,
But that the will o'th'dead must be observed.
Marry, my joy is that you need it not;
You have a gift, sir—thank your education—
Will never let you want, while there are men
And malice to bleed causes.° Would I had
But half the like, for all my fortune, sir!
If I have any suits—as I do hope,
Things being so easy and direct,° I shall not—
I will make bold with your obstreperous° aid,
Conceive me, for your fee,° sir. In meantime
You, that have so much law, I know, ha' the conscience
Not to be covetous of what is mine.
Good sir, I thank you for my plate;° 'twill help
To set up a young mail." Good faith, you look
As you were costive;° best go home and purge, sir.

VOLPONE [coming from behind the traverse] Bid him eat lettuce° well. My witty mischief,
Let me embrace thee! [He hugs MOSCA.] Oh, that I could now
Transform thee to a Venus!° Mosca, go,
Straight take my habit of clarissimo°
And walk the streets; be seen, torment em more.

8. The situation being so straightforward.
9. It being understood that I will pay you, of course.
1. Aristocrat. (By obeying this order, Mosca violates the sumptuary laws that restricted the wearing of distinctive high-status garments, such as the clarissimo's robe, to persons of the appropriate rank.)
We must pursue as well as plot. Who would have lost this feast? I doubt it will lose them. Oh, my recovery shall recover all. That I could now but think on some disguise to meet ’em in, and ask ’em questions. How I would vex ’em still at every turn!

MOSCA Sir, I can fit you.

VOLPONE Canst thou?

MOSCA Yes, I know one o’the commendatori, sir, so like you,

VOLPONE A rare disguise, and answering thy brain! Oh, I will be a sharp disease unto ’em.

MOSCA Sir, you must look for curses—

VOLPONE Till they burst!

Oh, my recovery shall recover all. That I could now but think on some disguise to meet ’em in, and ask ’em questions. How I would vex ’em still at every turn!

MOSCA I doubt it will lose them. Oh, my recovery shall recover all.

VOLPONE That I could now but think on some disguise to meet ’em in, and ask ’em questions. How I would vex ’em still at every turn!

MOSCA Sir, I can fit you.

VOLPONE Canst thou?

MOSCA Yes, I know one o’the commendatori, sir, so like you,

VOLPONE A rare disguise, and answering thy brain! Oh, I will be a sharp disease unto ’em.

MOSCA Sir, you must look for curses—

VOLPONE Till they burst!

The fox fares ever best when he is curst. [Exeunt.] proverbial wisdom

SCENE 4. The would-bes’ house.

[Enter] Peregrine [in disguise, and] three mercatori [merchants].

Peregrine Am I enough disguised?

First merchant I warrant you.

Peregrine All my ambition is to fright him only.

Second merchant If you could ship him away, ’twere excellent.

Third merchant To Zante, or to Aleppo?

Peregrine Yes, and ha’ his adventures put i’th’book of voyages, and his gulled story registered for truth? Well, gentlemen, when I am in awhile, and that you think us warm in our discourse, know your approaches.

First merchant Trust it to our care. [Exeunt merchants.]

Peregrine knocks. A woman [servant answers the door].

Woman Save you, fair lady. Is Sir Pol within?

Woman I do not know, sir.

Peregrine Pray you, say unto him here is a merchant upon earnest business desires to speak with him.

Woman I will see, sir.

Peregrine Pray you. [Exit woman.]

I see the family is all female here. [Enter woman.]

2. Volpone believes that by “undoing” his death, he will be able to resuscitate his scam.

1. Zante is an island off Greece under Venetian control; Aleppo, a big trading center, is in Syria.

2. An enlarged edition of Richard Hakluyt’s Principal Navigations, Voyages, Traffics, and Discoveries of the English Nation was published in 1598-1600.
WOMAN  He says, sir, he has weighty affairs of state
That now require him whole; some other time
You may possess him.

PEREGRINE  Pray you say again,
If those require him whole, these will exact him
Whereof I bring him tidings.

What might be
His grave affair of state, now? How to make Bolognian sausages here in Venice, sparing
One o’th’ingredients?

[Exit WOMAN.]

WOMAN  Sir, he says he knows
By your word “tidings” that you are no statesman,
And therefore wills you stay.

PEREGRINE  Sweet, pray you return him
I have not read so many proclamations
And studied them for words as he has done,
But—here he deigns to come.
[Enter POLITIC.]

POLITIC  Sir, I must crave
Your courteous pardon. There hath chanced today
Unkind disaster ’twixt my lady and me,
And I was penning my apology
To give her satisfaction, as you came now.

PEREGRINE  Sir, I am grieved I bring you worse disaster.
The gentleman you met at th’port today,
That told you he was newly arrived—

POLITIC  Ay, was a fugitive punk?

PEREGRINE  No, sir, a spy set on you;
And he has made relation to the Senate
That you professed to him to have a plot
To sell the state of Venice to the Turk.

POLITIC  Oh, me!

PEREGRINE  For which warrants are signed by this time
To apprehend you, and to search your study
For papers—

POLITIC  Alas, sir, I have none but notes
Drawn out of playbooks—

PEREGRINE  All the better, sir.

POLITIC  And some essays. What shall I do?

PEREGRINE  Sir, best
Convey yourself into a sugar-chest;
Or, if you could lie round, a frail were rare,
And I could send you aboard.

POLITIC  Sir, I but talked so,
For discourse sake merely.

3. Government agent. (Sir Politic believes that a spy would use the word “intelligence.”)
4. If you could curl up, a fruit basket would be excellent.
PEREGRINE    Hark, they are there!

POLITIC    I am a wretch, a wretch!

PEREGRINE    What will you do, sir?

          Ha' you ne'er a currant-butt° to leap into? casket for currants
          They'll put you to the rack; you must be sudden.

POLITIC    Sir, I have an engine°— contrivance

THIRD MERCHANT [without] Sir Politic Would-be!
SECOND MERCHANT [without] Where is he?

POLITIC    That I have thought upon beforetime.

PEREGRINE    What is it?

POLITIC    I shall ne'er endure the torture!
          Marry, it is, sir, of a tortoiseshell, [producing the shell]
          Fitted for these extremities. Pray you sir, help me.
          Here I have a place, sir, to put back my legs—
          Please you to lay it on, sir—with this cap
          And my black gloves. I'll lie, sir, like a tortoise
          Till they are gone.

PEREGRINE    [laying the shell on POLITIC's back] And call you this an engine?

POLITIC    Mine own device—good sir, bid my wife's women
          To burn my papers. [Exit PEREGRINE.]

          They [the MERCHANTS] rush in.

FIRST MERCHANT    Where's he hid?

THIRD MERCHANT    We must
          And will, sure, find him.

SECOND MERCHANT    Which is his study?
          [Enter PEREGRINE.]

FIRST MERCHANT    What
          Are you, sir?

PEREGRINE    I'm a merchant, that came here
          To look upon this tortoise.

THIRD MERCHANT    How?

FIRST MERCHANT    Saint Mark!
          What beast is this?

PEREGRINE    It is a fish.

SECOND MERCHANT [to POLITIC] Come out here!
PEREGRINE    Nay, you may strike him, sir, and tread upon him.
          He'll bear a cart.

FIRST MERCHANT    What, to run over him?

PEREGRINE    Yes.

THIRD MERCHANT    Let's jump upon him.

SECOND MERCHANT    Can he not go?° walk

PEREGRINE    He creeps, sir.

FIRST MERCHANT [poking POLITIC] Let's see him creep.
PEREGRINE    No, good sir, you will hurt
          him.

SECOND MERCHANT    Heart! I'll see him creep, or prick his guts.

THIRD MERCHANT [to POLITIC] Come out here!

PEREGRINE    [aside to POLITIC] Pray you, sir, creep a little.
          [POLITIC creeps.]

FIRST MERCHANT    Forth!
SECOND MERCHANT Yet further.
Peregrine [aside to Politic] Good sir, creep.
SECOND MERCHANT We'll see his legs. They pull off the shell and discover him.
THIRD MERCHANT Godso, he has garters!
FIRST MERCHANT Ay, and gloves!
SECOND MERCHANT Is this Your fearful tortoise?
Peregrine [revealing himself] Now, Sir Pol, we are even.
For your next project I shall be prepared.
I am sorry for the funeral of your notes, sir. •
FIRST MERCHANT Twere a rare motion to be seen in Fleet Street.5
SECOND MERCHANT Ay, i'the term.
FIRST MERCHANT Or Smithfield, in the fair.6
THIRD MERCHANT Methinks 'tis but a melancholic sight!
Peregrine Farewell, most politic tortoise.

[Exit Peregrine and Merchants.]

[Enter Woman.]

POLITIC Where's my lady?
WOMAN I know not, sir.

POLITIC Inquire.

WOMAN Oh, I shall be the fable of all feasts,6 talk of the town
The freight of the gazetti, ship boys' tale,7
And, which is worst, even talk for ordinaries.8

[Enter Woman.]

WOMAN My lady's come most melancholic home,
And says, sir, she will straight to sea for physic.

POLITIC And I, to shun this place and clime forever,
Creeping with house on back, and think it well
To shrink my poor head in my politic shell. [Exeunt.]

SCENE 5. Volpone's house.

[Enter] Volpone [and] Mosca, the first in the habit of a commendatore, the other, of a clarissimo.6 see 5.3.104-15

VOLPONE Am I then like him?

MOSCA Oh, sir, you are he.

VOLPONE No man can sever9 you.

MOSCA Good.

VOLPONE But what am I?

MOSCA 'Fore heav'n, a brave9 clarissimo; thou becom'st it! splendid Pity thou wert not born one.

MOSCA If I hold

My made one, 'twill be well.

VOLPONE I'll go and see

5. Puppet shows, called "motions," were frequently performed on London's Fleet Street, adjacent to the Inns of Court, where attorneys were trained and cases were argued during the three law terms.
6. Smithfield, just northwest of London, was the site every August of Bartholomew Fair; puppet shows were a prime entertainment there.
7. Topic of the newspapers and the gossip of boys serving on board ships.

http://englishworld20111.wordpress.com/
What news, first, at the court.

MOSCA  Do so.  [Exit VOLPONE.]

My fox
Is out on° his hole,¹ and ere he shall reenter
I'll make him languish in his borrowed case,² disguise
Except he come to composition³ with me,  unless he makes a deal [Calling] Androgyno, Castrone, Nano!
[Enter ANDROGYNO, CASTRONE, and NANO.]
ALL  Here.

MOSCA  Go recreate yourselves abroad,⁴ go sport.

So, now I have the keys, and am possessed.⁵ in possession
Since he will needs be dead afore his time,
I'll bury him or gain by him. I am his heir,
And so will keep me⁶ till he share at least.
Well placed; no man would construe it a sin.
Let his sport pay for't.⁷ This is called the Fox Trap.  [Exit.] for itself

[Enter] CORBACCIO [and] CORVINO.

CORBACCIO  They say the court is set.⁸

CORVINO  We must maintain
Our first tale good, for both our reputations.
CORBACCIO  Why, mine's no tale; my son would there have killed me.
CORVINO  That's true; I had forgot.  [Aside] Mine is, I am sure.—
But for your will, sir.
CORBACCIO  Ay, I'll come upon him
For that hereafter, now his patron's dead.

[Enter] VOLPONE [disguised].

VOLPONE  Signor Corvino! And Corbaccio! Sir,
Much joy unto you.

CORVINO  Of what?

VOLPONE  The sudden good
Dropped down upon you—
CORBACCIO  Where?

VOLPONE  And none knows how—
From old Volpone, sir.

VOLPONE  Out, arrant knave!

CORBACCIO  Let not your too much wealth, sir, make you furious,⁹

VOLPONE  Away, thou varlet!

VOLPONE  Why, sir?

CORBACCIO  Dost thou mock me?

VOLPONE  You mock the world, sir.¹ Did you not change wills?
CORBACCIO  Out, harlot!

VOLPONE  [to CORVINO]  Oh, belike you are the man,

Signor Corvino? Faith, you carry it¹ well;
You grow not mad withal. I love your spirit.

5.5  1. Alluding to the children's game, fox-in-the-hole.
5.6  1. Volpone pretends to believe that Corbaccio is misleading people by refusing to admit to his good fortune.
You are not overleavened with your fortune.
You should ha' some would swell now like a wine-vat
With such an autumn. Did he gi' you all, sir?

CORVINO Avoid, you rascal!

VOLPONE Troth, your wife has shown
Herself a very woman. But you are well;
To bear it out, sir, better by this chance—
Except Corbaccio have a share?

CORBACCIO Hence, varlet!

VOLPONE You will not be aknown; sir; why, 'tis wise.
Thus do all gamesters at all games dissemble.
No man will seem to win.

[Exeunt CORBACCIO and CORVINO.]

Here comes my vulture,
Heaving his beak up i'the air and snuffing.

SCENE 7. The scene continues.

[Enter] VOLTORE.

VOLTORE [to himself] Outstripped thus by a parasite? A slave
Would run on errands, and make legs for crumbs?
Well, what I'll do—

VOLPONE The court stays for Your Worship.
I e'en rejoice, sir, at Your Worship's happiness,
And that it fell into so learned hands
That understand the fingering—

VOLTORE What do you mean?

VOLPONE I mean to be a suitor to Your Worship
For the small tenement, out of reparations—
That at the end of your long row of houses
By the piscaria. It was in Volpone's time, fish market
Your predecessor, ere he grew diseased,
A handsome, pretty, customed bawdy house much-patronized
As any was in Venice—none dispraised—
But fell with him; his body and that house Decayed together.

VOLTORE Come, sir, leave your prating. Why, if Your Worship give me but your hand,
That I may ha' the refusal, I have done. 'Tis a mere toy to you, sir, candle-rents,
As Your learned Worship knows—

VOLPONE Marry, no end of your wealth, sir, God decrease it. Instead of "increase"

VOLTORE Mistaking knave! What, mock'st thou my misfortune?

VOLPONE His blessing on your heart, sir! Would 'twere more. God's

[Exit VOLTORE.]

Now, to my first again, at the next corner.

2. You prefer not to be recognized (as heir).
1. That understand how to handle money.
2. For the rental house in bad repair.
3. Not to disparage the others.
4. (1) Revenue from deteriorating property; (2) "pin money," money for incidentals.
5. The ones I was taunting earlier, Corvino and Corbaccio.
SCENE 8. The scene continues.

[Enter] CORBACCIO [and] CORVINO. [Enter] MOSCA, passant [over the stage in clarissimo's attire, and exit].

CORBACCIO See, in our habit! See the impudent varlet!
CORVINO That I could shoot mine eyes at him, like gunstones!\(^0\) cannonballs
VOLPONE But, is this true, sir, of the parasite?
CORBACCIO Again t'afflict us? Monster!
VOLPONE In good faith, sir, I'm heartily grieved a beard of your grave length\(^0\) so wise an old man
Should be so overreached. I never brooked\(^0\) could stand
That parasite's hair; methought his nose should cozen.\(^0\) he had a cheating nose
There still\(^0\) was somewhat in his look did promise. always
The bane\(^0\) of a clarissimo. ruin
CORBACCIO Knave—-
VOLPONE [to CORVINO] Methinks
Yet you that are so traded\(^0\) i'the world, experienced
A witty merchant, the fine bird Corvino,
That have such moral emblems\(^1\) on your name,
Should not have sung your shame and dropped your cheese,
To let the fox laugh at your emptiness.\(^2\)
CORVINO Sirrah, you think the privilege of the place,\(^3\)
And your red saucy cap, that seems to me
Nailed to your jolt-head with those two cecchines,\(^4\)
Can warrant\(^0\) your abuses. Come you hither. sanction
You shall perceive, sir, I dare beat you. Approach!
VOLPONE No haste, sir, I do know your valor well,
Since you durst publish\(^0\) what you are, sir. make public
[VOLPONE makes as if to leave.]
CORVINO Tarry!
VOLPONE Sir, sir, another time—
CORVINO Nay, now.
VOLPONE Oh, God, sir! I were a wise man
Would stand\(^0\) the fury of a distracted cuckold. to withstand MOSCA [enters and] walks by 'em.
CORBACCIO What! Come again?
VOLPONE [aside to MOSCA] Upon 'em, Mosca; save me.
CORBACCIO The air's infected where he breathes.
CORVINO Let's fly him.
[VOLPONEExcellent basilisk!\(^5\) Turn upon the vulture.

SCENE 9. The scene continues.

[Enter] VOLTORE.

VOLTORE [to Mosca] Well, flesh fly, it is summer with you now;

1. Mottoes accompanying symbolic engravings.
2. As in Aesop's fable; see 1.2.95-97 and note.
3. Violence was forbidden near the court.
4. The commendatore's cap is decorated with gold buttons.
5. A legendary monster whose breath and glance were deadly.
Your winter will come on.

MOSCA   Good advocate,

Pray thee not rail, nor threaten out of place thus;

Thou'lt make a solecism, as madam says.

Get you a biggin more; your brain breaks loose.

VOLTORE   Well, sir.  [Exit MOSCA.]

VOLPONE   Would you ha' me beat the insolent slave?

Throw dirt upon his first good clothes?

VOLTORE   This same the disguised Volpone

Is doubtless some familiar! the disguised Volpone

VOLPONE   Sir, the court,

In troth, stays for you. I am mad a mule

That never read Justinian should get up

And ride an advocate. Had you no quirk

To avoid gullage, sir, by such a creature?

I hope you do but jest; he has not done't.

This's but confederacy to blind the rest.

You are the heir?

VOLTORE   A strange, officious,

Troublesome knave! Thou dost torment me.

VOLPONE   I know—

It cannot be, sir, that you should be cozened;

Tis not within the wit of man to do it.

You are so wise, so prudent, and 'tis fit

That wealth and wisdom still should go together.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE 10. The law court.

[Enter] four AVOCATORI, NOTARIO [NOTARY], COMMEN-

DATORI, BONARIO [and] CELIA [under guard], CORBAC-

CIO, [and] CORVINO.

FIRST AVOCATORE   Are all the parties here?

NOTARY   All but the advocate.

SECOND AVOCATORE   And here he comes.

FIRST AVOCATORE   Then bring 'em forth to sentence.

[Enter] VOLTORE, [and] VOLPONE [still disguised as a commendatore].

VOLTORE   O my most honored fathers, let your mercy

Once win upon your justice, to forgive—

I am distracted—

VOLPONE  (aside)   What will he do now?

VOLTORE   Oh,

I know not which I address myself to first,

Whether Your Fatherhoods or these innocents—

Corvino and Corbaccio

CORVINO  (aside)   Will he betray himself?

VOLTORE   Whom equally

I have abused, out of most covetous ends—
CORVINO [aside to CORBACCIO] The man is mad!
CORBACCIO What's that?
CORVINO He is possessed.

VOLTORE For which, now struck in conscience, here I prostrate Myself at your offended feet for pardon. [He throws himself down.]

FIRST AND SECOND AVOCATORI Arise!

CEelia O heav'n, how just thou art!

VOLPONE [aside] I'm caught
I' mine own noose—

CORVINO [aside to CORBACCIO] Be constant, sir; naught now
Can help but impudence. [VOLTORE rises.]

FIRST AVOCATORE [to VOLTORE] Speak forward. [VOLTORE rises.]

COMMENDATORI [to the courtroom] Silence!

VOLTORE It is not passion in me, reverend fathers,
But only conscience, conscience, my good sires,
That makes me now tell truth. That parasite,
That knave hath been the instrument of all.

SECOND AVOCATORE Where is that knave? Fetch him.

VOLPONE [as commendatore] I go. [Exit.]

CORVINO Grave fathers,
This man's distracted; he confessed it now;
For, hoping to be old Volpone's heir,
Who now is dead—

THIRD AVOCATORE How?

SECOND AVOCATORE Is Volpone dead?

CORVINO Dead since, grave fathers— since his appearance here

BONARIO O sure vengeance!

FIRST AVOCATORE Stay.

Then he was no deceiver?

VOLTORE Oh, no, none.
The parasite, grave fathers.

CORVINO He does speak
Out of mere envy, 'cause the servant's made
The thing he gaped for. Please Your Fatherhoods,
This is the truth; though I'll not justify
The other, but he may be somewhat faulty.

VOLTORE Ay, to your hopes as well as mine, Corvino;
But I'll use modesty. Pleaseseth Your Wisdoms
To view these certain notes, and but confer them.
As I hope favor, they shall speak clear truth.
[He gives documents to the AVOCATORI.]

CORVINO The devil has entered him!

BONARIO Or bides in you.

FOURTH AVOCATORE We have done ill, by a public officer
To send for him, if he be heir.

SECOND AVOCATORE For whom?

FOURTH AVOCATORE Him that they call the parasite.

THIRD AVOCATORE He is a man of great estate now left.

http://englishworld20111.wordpress.com/
FOURTH AVOCATORE [to NOTARY.] Go you and learn his name, and say the court
Entreats his presence here but to the clearing
Of some few doubts. [Exit NOTARY]
SECOND AVOCATORE This same’s a labyrinth!
FIRST AVOCATORE [to CORVINO] Stand you unto° your first report? Do you stand by CORVINO My state,° estate
My life, my fame° — reputation
BONARIO Where is’t? —are at the stake.
FIRST AVOCATORE [to CORBACCIO] Is yours SO too?
CORBACCIO The advocate’s a knave,
And has a forked tongue—
SECOND AVOCATORE Speak to the point.
FIRST AVOCATORE This is confusion.
VOLTORE I do beseech Your Fatherhoods, read but those.
CORVINO And credit nothing the false spirit hath writ.
It cannot be but he is possessed, grave fathers.
[The AVOCATORI examine VOLTORE S papers.]

SCENE 11. A street.’

[Enter] VOLPONE [on a separate part of the stage].

VOLPONE To make a snare for mine own neck! And run
My head into it willfully! With laughter!
When I had newly scaped, was free and clear!
Out of mere wantonness!° Oh, the dull devil
Was in this brain of mine when I devised it,
And Mosca gave it second. He must now
Help to sear up° this vein, or we bleed dead.

[Enter] NANO, ANDROGYNO, [and] CASTRONE.
How now, who let you loose? Whither go you now?
What, to buy gingerbread? Or to drown kitlings?°
NANO Sir, Master Mosca called us out of doors,
And bid us all go play, and took the keys.
ANDROGYNO Yes.
VOLPONE Did Master Mosca take the keys? Why, so!
I am farther in.° These are my fine conceits!°
I must be merry, with a mischief to me!
What a vile wretch was I, that could not bear
My fortune soberly! I must ha’ my crotchets°
And my conundrums! Well, go you and seek him.
His meaning may be truer than my fear.°
Bid him he straight come to me, to the court.
Thither will I, and, if’t be possible,

5.10
1. Implying that Corvino has nothing of worth to lose.
5.11
1. The courtroom characters remain visible onstage, perhaps in silent tableau, while Volpone is understood to be outside.
2. Mosca’s intentions may be truer (more my fear is true (accurate).
Unscrew my advocate upon new hopes. dissuade by means of
When I provoked him, then I lost myself.

[Exeunt Volpone and his entourage.
The Avocatori and parties to the courtroom proceedings remain onstage.]

SCENE 12. 77ZE courtroom.

First Avocatorto [with Voltoire's notes] These things can ne'er be reconciled. He here Professeth that the gentleman was wronged, and that the gentlewoman was brought thither, Forced by her husband, and there left.

Voltoire Most true.

Celia How ready is heav'n to those that pray!

First Avocatorto But that Volpone would have ravished her, he holds Utterly false, knowing his impotence.

Corvino Grave fathers, he is possessed; again I say, Possessed. Nay, if there be possession And obsession, he has both.

Third Avocatorto Here comes our officer.

[Enter Volpone, still disguised.]

Volpone The parasite will straight be here, grave fathers.

Fourth Avocatorto You might invent some other name, sir varlet.

Third Avocatorto Did not the notary meet him?

Volpone Not that I know.

Fourth Avocatorto His coming will clear all.

Second Avocatorto Yet it is misty.

Volpone (+whispers [to] the advocate) Sir, the parasite Willed me to tell you that his master lives, That you are still the man, your hopes the same; And this was only a jest—

Voltoire [aside to Volpone] How?

Volpone [aside to Voltoire] Sir, to try If you were firm, and how you stood affected. how loyal you were Voltoire Art sure he lives?

Volpone Do I live, sir? he's as alive as I am

Voltoire Oh, me!

I was too violent.

Volpone Sir, you may redeem it.

They said you were possessed; fall down, and seem so.

I'll help to make it good.

Voltoire falls.

[Aloud] God bless the man!

[Aside to Voltoire] Stop your wind hard, and swell. [Aloud] See, see, see, see!

5.12 1. The details of Voltoire's dispossession in the following lines resemble the fake exorcisms described in Samuel Harsnett's lively expose, A Discovery of the Fraudulent Practices of John Darrell (1599). "Stop your wind!" hold your breath.
He vomits crooked pins! His eyes are set
Like a dead hare's hung in a poulter's shop!
His mouth's running away! To Corvino, do you see, twitching spasmodically signor?
Now 'tis in his belly.
Corvino Ay, the devil!
Volpone Now in his throat.
Corvino Ay, I perceive it plain.
Volpone Twill out, 'twill out! Stand clear. See where it flies,
In shape of a blue toad with a bat's wings!
To Corbaccio Do you see it, sir?
Corbaccio What? I think I do.
Corvino 'Tis too manifest.
Volpone Look! He comes t' himself!
Volto re Where am I?
Volpone Take good heart; the worst is past, sir.
You are dispossessed.
First Avocatore What accident is this? unforeseen event
Second Avocatore Sudden, and full of wonder!
Third Avocatore If he were Possessed, as it appears, all this is nothing. Voltore's written statement
Corvino He has been often subject to these fits.
First Avocatore Show him that writing. To Voltore do you know it, sir?
Volpone [aside to Voltore] Deny it, sir; forswear it; know it not.
Vol to re Yes, I do know it well, it is my hand;
But all that it contains is false.
Bonario Oh, practice! deception
Second Avocatore What maze is this!
First Avocatore Is he not guilty, then,
Whom you there name the parasite?
Vol to re Grave fathers,
No more than his good patron, old Volpone.
Fourth Avocatore Why, he is dead!
Vol to re He lives—
First Avocatore How! Lives?
Volto re Lives.
Second Avocatore This is subtler yet!
Third Avocatore To Voltore you said he was dead?
Volto re Never.
Third Avocatore To Corvino you said so?
Corvino I heard so.
Fourth Avocatore Here comes the gentleman; make him way.
[Enter Mosca.]
Third Avocatore A stool!
Fourth Avocatore [aside] A proper man! And, were Volpone dead, handsome
A fit match for my daughter.

2. Seller of poultry and small game.
THIRD AVOCATORE Give him way.
VOLPONE [aside to MOSCA] Mosca, I was almost lost; the advocate Had betrayed all; but now it is recovered.
All's o'the hinge\(^3\) again. Say I am living. running smoothly
MOSCA [aloud] What busy\(^9\) knave is this? Most reverend fathers, troublesome
I sooner had attended your grave pleasures,
But that my order for the funeral
Of my dear patron did require me—
VOLPONE [aside] Mosca!
MOSCA Whom I intend to bury like a gentleman.
VOLPONE [aside] Ay, quick,\(^1\) and cozen me of all.\(^3\) alive
SECOND AVOCATORE Still stranger!
More intricate!
FIRST AVOCATORE And come about\(^6\) again! reversing direction
FOURTH AVOCATORE [aside] It is a match; my daughter is bestowed.
MOSCA [aside to VOLPONE] Will you gi' me half?
VOLPONE [aside to MOSCA] First, I'll be hanged.
MOSCA [aside to VOLPONE] I know Your voice is good. Cry not so loud.
FIRST AVOCATORE Demand\(^9\) question
The advocate. [To VOLTORE] Sir, did not you affirm
VOLPONE was alive?
VOLPONE Yes, and he is;
This gent'man told me so. (Aside to MOSCA) Thou shalt have half.
MOSCA Whose drunkard is this same? Speak, some that know him;
I never saw his face. (Aside to VOLPONE) I cannot now
Afford it you so cheap.
VOLPONE (aside to MOSCA) No?
FIRST AVOCATORE [to VOLTORE] What say you?
VOLTORE The officer told me.
VOLPONE I did, grave fathers,
And will maintain he lives with mine own life,
And that this creature\(^6\) told me. (Aside) I was born Mosca
With all good stars my enemies.
MOSCA Most grave fathers,
If such an insolence as this must pass\(^7\) bc permitted
Upon me, I am silent. "Twas not this
For which you sent, I hope.
SECOND AVOCATORE [pointing to VOLPONE] Take him away.
VOLPONE (aside to MOSCA) Mosca!
THIRD AVOCATORE Let him be whipped.
VOLPONE (aside to MOSCA) Wilt thou betray me?
Cozen me?
THIRD AVOCATORE And taught to bear himself Toward a person of his\(^9\) rank. Mosca's
FOURTH AVOCATORE Away! [Officers seize VOLPONE.]

3. Volpone sees that Mosca's pious pretense of burying the "dead" Volpone will mean an end to all of Volpone's hopes; he'll be cheated out of everything.
Volpone 5.10 / 1425

MOSCA  I humbly thank Your Fatherhoods.

Volpone  Soft, soft. [Aside] Whipped?
   And lose all that I have? If I confess,
   It cannot be much more.

Fourth Avocatore [to Mosca] Sir, are you married?

Volpone [aside] They'll be allied⁶ anon; I must be resolute. Linked, by marriage
   The fox shall here uncase.⁰ He puts off his disguise. Reveal himself

Mosca (aside) Patron!

Volpone  Nay, now
   My ruins shall not come alone. Your match
   I'll hinder sure; my substance shall not glue you
   Nor screw you into a family.

Mosca (aside) Why, patron!

Volpone  I am Volpone, and [pointing to Mosca] this is my knave;
   [Pointing to VoltoRE] This his own knave; [pointing to Corbaccio] this,
   avarice's fool;
   [Pointing to Corvino] This, a chimera⁰ of wittol, fool, monstrous combination and knave;
   And, reverend fathers, since we all can hope
   Naught but a sentence, let's not now despair it.⁰ You hear me brief.⁰ That's all I have to say

Corvino  May it please Your Fatherhoods—

Commendatore¹ Silence!

First Avocatore  The knot is now undone by miracle!

Second Avocatore  Nothing can be more clear.

Third Avocatore  Or can more prove
   These innocent.

First Avocatore  Give 'em their liberty.

[Bonario and Celia are released.]

Bonario  Heaven could not long let such gross crimes be hid.

Second Avocatore  If this be held the highway to get riches,
   May I be poor!

Third Avocatore  This's not the gain, but torment.

First Avocatore  These possess wealth as sick men possess fevers,
   Which trulier may be said to possess them.

Second Avocatore  Disrobe that parasite.

[Mosca is stripped of his clarissimo's robe.]

Corvino [and Mosca]  Most honored fathers!

First Avocatore  Can you plead aught to stay the course of justice?
   If you can, speak.

Corvino [and VoltoRE] We beg favor—

Celia  And mercy.

First Avocatore [to Celia] You hurt your innocence, suing⁰ for pleading the guilty.

[To the others] Stand forth; and, first, the parasite. You appear
   T'have been the chiefest minister,⁰ if not plotter, agent
   In all these lewd⁰ impostures, and now, lastly,
   Have with your impudence abused the court vile, obscene

4. Not Volpone, of course, but one of the genuine Commendatori. They are probably the officers who strip Mosca at line 103.
And habit\(^6\) of a gentleman of Venice,
Being a fellow of no birth or blood;
For which our sentence is, first thou be whipped,
Then live perpetual prisoner in our galleys.

VOLPONE I thank you for him.

MOSCA Bane to\(^7\) thy wolfish nature!

FIRST AVOCATORE Deliver him to the saffi.\(^6\) [MOSCA is placed under guard.] Thou, Volpone,
By blood and rank a gentleman, canst not fall
Under like censure;\(^6\) but our judgment on thee
Is that thy substance\(^7\) all be straight confiscate
To the hospital of the Incurabi;\(^6\)
And since the most was gotten by imposture,
By feigning lame, gout, palsy, and such diseases,
Thou art to lie in prison, cramped with irons,
Till thou be'st sick and lame indeed.—Bemove him.

[VOlPONE is placed under guard.]

VOLPONE This is called mortifying\(^8\) of a fox.

FIRST AVOCATORE Thou, Voltore, to take away the scandal
Thou hast giv'n all worthy men of thy profession,
Art banished from their fellowship and our state.\(^5\)

[VOLTORE is placed under guard.]

CORBACCIO Ha! What said he?

COMMENDATORE You shall know anon,\(^6\) sir.

[CORBACCIO is placed under guard.]

FIRST AVOCATORE Be straight embarked from thine own house and rowed Bound about Venice, through the Grand Canal,
Wearing a cap with fair long ass's ears
Instead of horns, and so to mount, a paper
Pinned on thy breast, to the berlino\(^7—\)

CORVINO Yes.

And have mine eyes beat out with stinking fish,
Bruised fruit, and rotten eggs—Tis well. I'm glad
I shall not see my shame yet.

FIRST AVOCATORE And to expiate
Thy wrongs done to thy wife, thou art to send her
Home to her father with her dowry trebled.\(^8\)

And these are all your judgments—

---

5. The Hospital of the Incurables was founded in Venice in 1522 to care for people terminally ill with syphilis.
6. (1) Hanging of meat to make it tender; (2) disciplining spiritually; (3) killing. (Volpone's sentence is almost certain to bring about his death.)
7. Pillory. Versions of such shaming punishments were commonly imposed for sexual and marital infractions. The offender typically had to wear a placard specifying his crimes; hence the paper pinned on Cor-vino's breast.
8. The judges grant Celia "separation from bed and board." Such legal separations could be permitted to the innocent party in a case of adultery or, as here, to a victim of gross spousal abuse. Because legal separation entailed the finding of serious fault, the guilty spouse could also, as here, be forced to pay financial damages. Legal separation did not bring with it, however, the right of remarriage for either party.
To MY BOOK / 1427

ALL

Honored fathers!

FIRST AVOCATORE Which may not be revoked. Now you begin,

When crimes are done and past and to be punished,

To think what your crimes are.—Away with them!

[MOSCA, VOLPONE, VOLTORE, CORBACCIO, and CORVINO retire to the hack of the stage, guarded.]

Let all that see these vices thus rewarded

150 Take heart, and love to study 'em. Mischiefs feed

Like beasts, till they be fat, and then they bleed.

[The AVOCATORI step hack.]

VOLPONE The seasoning of a play is the applause

Now, though the fox be punished by the laws,

He yet doth hope there is no suff'ring due

Nor any fact which he hath done 'gainst you.

If there be, censure him; here he, doubtful, stands.

If not, fare jovially, and clap your hands. [Exeunt.]

FROM EPIGRAMS

To My Book

It will be looked for, book, when some but see

Thy title, Epigrams, and named of me,

Thou should'st be bold, licentious, full of gall,

Wormwood' and sulphur, sharp and toothed' withal, bitter-tasting plant

Become a petulant thing, hurl ink and wit

As madmen stones, not caring whom they hit.

Deceive their malice who could wish it so,

And by thy wiser temper let men know

Thou art not covetous of least self-fame

Much less with lewd, profane, and beastly phrase

To catch the world's loose laughter or vain gaze.

He that departs with his own honesty

For vulgar praise, doth it too dearly buy.

1616

9. Alternatively, the prisoners, and later the Avocatori and the others, could exit, and Volpone could return to speak the epilogue. The advantage of the staging preferred here is that almost all the players are onstage to receive the audience's applause.

1. Epigrams are commonly thought of as brief, witty, incisive poems of personal invective, often with a surprise turn at the end. But Jonson uses the word in a more liberal sense. His "Epigrams," a separate section in his collected Works of 1616, include not only sharp, satiric poems but many complimentary ones to friends and patrons, as well as memorial epitaphs and a verse letter, "Inviting a Friend to Supper."

2. The distinction between toothed (biting) and toothless (general) satires was a commonplace.

3. Here, as often elsewhere, Jonson echoes the greatest Roman epigrammatist, Martial.
On Something, That Walks Somewhere

At court I met it, in clothes brave enough
To be a courtier, and looks grave enough
To seem a statesman: as I near it came,
It made me a great face. I asked the name.

"A lord," it cried, "buried in flesh and blood,
And such from whom let no man hope least good,
For I will do none; and as little ill,
For I will dare none." Good lord, walk dead still.

To William Camden

Camden, most reverend head, to whom I owe
All that I am in arts, all that I know
(How nothing's that!), to whom my country owes
The great renown and name wherewith she goes;

Than thee the age sees not that thing more grave,
More high, more holy, that she more would crave.
What name, what skill, what faith hath thou in things!
What sight in searching the most antique springs!
What weight and what authority in thy speech!

Man scarce can make that doubt, but thou canst teach.
Pardon free truth and let thy modesty,
Which conquers all, be once o'ercome by thee.
Many of thine this better could than I;
But for° their powers, accept my piety.

On My First Daughter

Here lies, to each her parents' ruth,
Mary, the daughter of their youth;
Yet all heaven's gifts being heaven's due,
It makes the father less to rue.

At six months' end she parted hence
With safety of her innocence;
Whose soul heaven's queen, whose name she bears,
In comfort of her mother's tears,
Hath placed amongst her virgin-train:

1. Camden, a distinguished scholar and antiquary, had been Jonson's teacher at Westminster School.
2. Camden's studies of his native land in Britannia (1586) and Remains of a Greater Work Concerning Britain (1605) ran to several editions and were translated abroad.
3. One hardly needs wonder whether.
4. Probably written in the late 1590s, in Jonson's Roman Catholic period (ca. 1598-1610).
To John Donne

Donne, the delight of Phoebus\(^1\) and each Muse, \(god\) \(of\) \(poetry\)
Who, to thy one, all other brains refuse;\(^1\)
Whose every work, of thy most early wit,
Came forth example\(^2\) and remains so yet;
Longer a-knowing than most wits do live,
And which no affection praise enough can give.
To it\(^1\) thy language, letters, arts, best life,
Which might with half mankind maintain a strife.
All which I meant to praise, and yet I would,
But leave, because I cannot as I should.

On Giles and Joan

Who says that Giles and Joan at discord be?
Th' observing neighbors no such mood can see.
Indeed, poor Giles repents he married ever,
But that his Joan doth too. And Giles would never
By his free will be in Joan's company;
No more would Joan he should. Giles riseth early,
And having got him out of doors is glad;
The like is Joan. But turning home is sad,
Harsh sights at home, Giles wisheth he were blind:
All this doth Joan. Or that his long-yearned\(^1\) life
Were quite outspun. The like wish hath his wife.
The children that he keeps Giles swears are none
Of his begetting; and so swears his Joan.
In all affections\(^6\) she concurreth still.
If now, with man and wife, to will and nil\(^P\)
The self-same things a note of concord be,
I know no couple better can agree.

\(^1\) A common sentiment in Latin epitaphs.
\(^2\) I.e., the muses shower their favors exclusively on you.
\(^3\) A pattern for others to imitate.
\(^4\) In addition to your wit.
\(^5\) Spun from long skeins of yarn.
On My First Son

Farewell, thou child of my right hand,' and joy;
My sin was too much hope of thee, loved boy:
Seven years thou wert lent to me, and I thee pay,
Exacted by thy fate, on the just day.

O could I lose all father now! For why
Will man lament the state he should envy,
To have so soon 'scaped world's and flesh's rage,
And, if no other misery, yet age?

Rest in soft peace, and asked, say, "Here doth lie
Ben Jonson his best piece of poetry."²
For whose sake henceforth all his vows be such
As what he loves may never like too much.³

1616

On Lucy, Countess of Bedford¹

This morning, timely rapt with holy fire,
I thought to form unto my zealous muse,
What kind of creature I could most desire,
To honor, serve, and love; as poets use.²

I meant to make her fair, and free, and wise,
Of greatest blood, and yet more good than great;
I meant the day-star° should not brighter rise,
Nor lend like influence from his lucent seat.

I meant she should be courteous, facile, sweet,
Affable, hating that solemn vice of greatness, pride;
I meant each softest virtue, there should meet,
Fit in that softer bosom to reside.

Only a learned, and a manly soul
I purposed her; that should, with even powers,
The rock, the spindle, and the shears⁴ control
Of destiny, and spin her own free hours.

Such when I meant to feign, and wished to see,
My muse bad, Bedford write, and that was she.

1616

1. A literal translation of the Hebrew name "Benjamin," which implies the meaning "dexterous" or "fortunate." The boy was born in 1596 and died on his birthday in 1603.
2. Poet and father, are both "makers," Jonson's favorite term for the poet.
3. The obscure grammar of the last lines allows for various readings; "like" may carry the sense of "please."
4. Dr. is supposed to emit an ethereal fluid, or "influence," that affected the affairs of mortals, for good or ill.
5. Emblem of the three Fates: Clotho spun the thread of life, Lachesis decided its length, and Atropos cut the thread to end life.

To Lucy, Countess of Bedford, with Mr. Donne's Satires

Lucy, you brightness² of our sphere, who are Life of the Muses' day, their morning star!
If works, not th' authors, their own grace should look,
Whose poems would not wish to be your book?
But these, desired by you, the maker's ends
Crown with their own. Rare poems ask rare friends,
Yet satires, since the most of mankind be
Their unavoidable subject, fewest see;
For none e'er took that pleasure in sin's sense,
But these, desired by you, the maker's ends
Crown with their own. Rare poems ask rare friends,
Yet satires, since the most of mankind be
Their unavoidable subject, fewest see;
0 have regard to inevitable experience

15 Lucy, you brightness of our sphere, who are
The Muses' evening, as their morning star.

To Sir Thomas Roe

Thou hast begun well, Roe, which stand° well too,
And I know nothing more thou hast to do.
He that is round within himself, and straight,
Need seek no other strength, no other height;
But these, desired by you, the maker's ends
Crown with their own. Rare poems ask rare friends,
Yet satires, since the most of mankind be
Their unavoidable subject, fewest see;
For none e'er took that pleasure in sin's sense,

1616

And study conscience, more than thou wouldst fame.
Though both be good, the latter yet is worst,
And ever is ill got without the first.

Inviting a Friend to Supper

Tonight, grave sir, both my poor house and I
Do equally desire your company:

1. With this poem, Jonson offered a manuscript collection of Donne's satires (see p. 1284), such as commonly passed from hand to hand in court circles.
2. Lucy's name derives from the Latin lux, meaning "light."
3. I.e., at court.
4. The planet Venus is called Lucifer ("light-bearing") when it appears before sunrise, Hesperus when it appears after sunset.
5. Knighted in 1605, Roe was sent as ambassador to the Great Mogul in 1614. His collection of coins and of Greek and Oriental manuscripts is in the Bodleian Library.
Not that we think us worthy such a guest,
   But that your worth will dignify our feast
   With those that come; whose grace may make that seem Something, which else could hope for no esteem.
   It is the fair acceptance, sir, creates
   The entertainment perfect: not the cates.
Yet shall you have, to rectify your palate,
   An olive, capers, or some better salad
   Ushering the mutton; with a short-legged hen,
   If we can get her, full of eggs, and then
   Lemons and wine for sauce; to these, a coney besides rabbit
   Is not to be despairsed of for our money:
And though fowl now be scarce, yet there are clerks,
   The sky not falling, think we may have larks.
   I'll tell you of more, and lie, so you will come:
   Of partridge, pheasant, woodcock, of which some
   May yet be there; and godwit if we can,
   Knot, rail, and ruff, too. Howse'er, my man servant
   Shall read a piece of Virgil, Tacitus,
   Livy, or of some better book to us,
   Of which we'll speak our minds amidst our meat;
   And I'll profess promise no verses to repeat:
To this, if aught appear which I not know of,
   That will the pastry, not my paper, show of;
   Digestive cheese and fruit there sure will be;
   But that which most doth take my muse and me
   Is a pure cup of rich canary wine,
   Which is the Mermaid's now, but shall be mine;
   Of which, had Horace or Anacreon tasted,
   Their lives, as do their lines, till now had lasted.
   Tobacco, nectar, or the Thespian spring
   Are all but Luther's beer to this I sing.
Of this we will sup free but moderately,
   And we will have no Pooly or Parrot by;
   Nor shall our cups make any guilty men,
   But at our parting we will be as when
   We innocently met. No simple word
That shall be uttered at our mirthful board
   Shall make us sad next morning, or affright
   The liberty that we'll enjoy tonight.

1. All these are edible birds.
2. Paper-lined pans were used to keep pies from sticking; the writing sometimes rubbed off on the piecrust.
3. Horace and Anacreon (one in Latin, the other in Greek) wrote many poems in praise of wine. The Mermaid tavern was a favorite haunt of the poets; sweet wine from the Canary Islands was popular in England.
4. Tobacco was an expensive New World novelty in Jonson's time. Nectar is the drink of the gods. The Thespian spring, on Mount Helicon, is a legendary source of poetic inspiration. Compared with canary, these intoxicants are no better than inferior German beer.
5. Pooly and Parrot were government spies. As a Roman Catholic, Jonson had reason to be wary of undercover agents.
On Gut

Gut eats all day, and lechers all the night,
So all his meat he tasteth over twice;
And striving so to double his delight,
He makes himself a thoroughfare of vice.
Thus in his belly can he change a sin:
Lust it comes out, that gluttony went in.

Epitaph on S. P., a Child of Queen Elizabeth's Chapel

Weep with me, all you that read
This little story;
And know for whom a tear you shed,
Death's self is sorry.
'Twas a child that so did thrive
In grace and feature,
As Heaven and Nature seemed to strive
Which owned the creature.
Years he numbered scarce thirteen
When Fates turned cruel,
Yet three filled zodiacs had he been
The stage's jewel;
And did act (what now we moan)
Old men so duly,
As, sooth, the Parcae thought him one, in truth Fates
He played so truly.
So, by error, to his fate
They all consented;
But, viewing him since (alas, too late),
They have repented,
And have sought (to give new birth)
In baths to steep him;
But, being so much too good for earth,
Heaven vows to keep him.

1. Salomon Pavy, a boy actor in the troupe known as the Children of Queen Elizabeth's Chapel, who had appeared in several of Jonson's plays; he died in 1602.
2. He had been on the stage for three seasons.
3. Perhaps such magic baths as that of Medea, which restored Jason's father to his first youth (Ovid, Metamorphoses 7).
From the Forest

To Penshurst

Thou art not, Penshurst, built to envious show,
Of touch or marble; nor canst boast a row
Of polished pillars, or a roof of gold;
Thou hast no lantern whereof tales are told,
Or stair, or courts; but stand'st an ancient pile,
And, these grudged at, art reverenced the while.
Thou joy'st in better marks, of soil, of air,
Of wood, of water; therein thou art fair.
Thou hast thy walks for health, as well as sport;
Thy mount, to which the dryads do resort,
Where Pan and Bacchus their high feasts have made,
Beneath the broad beech and the chestnut shade;
That taller tree, which of a nut was set
At his great birth where all the Muses met.

There in the writhed bark are cut the names
Of many a sylvan, taken with his flames;
And thence the ruddy satyrs oft provoke
The lighter fauns to reach thy Lady's Oak.

Thy copse thou hast there,
That never fails to serve thee seasoned deer
When thou wouldst feast or exercise thy friends.
The lower land, that to the river bends,
Thy sheep, thy bullocks, kine, and calves do feed;
The middle grounds thy mares and horses breed.
Each bank doth yield thee conies; and the tops,
Fertile of wood, Ashore and Sidney's copse,
To crown thy open table, doth provide
The purpled pheasant with the speckled side;
The painted partridge lies in every field,
And for thy mess is willing to be killed.
And if the high-swollen Medway fail thy dish,
Thou hast thy ponds, that pay thee tribute fish:
Fat aged carps that run into thy net,
And pikes, now weary their own kind to eat,
As loath the second draft or cast to stay,
Officiously at first themselves betray;
Bright eels that emulate them, and leap on land
Before the fisher, or into his hand.

Then hath thy orchard fruit, thy garden flowers,
Fresh as the air, and new as are the hours.
The early cherry, with the later plum,
Fig, grape, and quince, each in his time doth come;
The blushing apricot and woolly peach
Hang on thy walls, that every child may reach.

And though thy walls be of the country stone,
They're reared with no man's ruin, no man's groan;
There's none that dwell about them wish them down;
But all come in, the farmer and the clown, peasant
And no one empty-handed, to salute

Thy lord and lady, though they have no suit. request to make
Some bring a capon, some a rural cake,
Some nuts, some apples; some that think they make
The better cheeses bring them, or else send
By their ripe daughters, whom they would commend
This way to husbands, and whose baskets bear
An emblem of themselves in plum or pear.
But what can this (more than express their love)
Add to thy free provisions, far above
The need of such? whose liberal board doth flow
With all that hospitality doth know;
Where comes no guest but is allowed to eat,
Without his fear, and of thy lord's own meat; food
Where the same beer and bread, and selfsame wine,
That is his lordship's shall be also mine, waits
And I not fain to sit (as some this day counts
At great men's tables), and yet dine away.
Here no man tells my cups; nor, standing by,
A waiter doth my gluttony envy,
But gives me what I call, and lets me eat;

He knows below he shall find plenty of meat. in the servants' quarters
Thy tables hoard not up for the next day;
Nor, when I take my lodging, need I pray
For fire, or lights, or livery; all is there,
As if thou then wert mine, or I reigned here:
There's nothing I can wish, for which I stay. wait
That found King James when, hunting late this way
With his brave son, the Prince, they saw thy fires
Shine bright on every hearth, as the desires
Of thy Penates had been set on flame Roman household gods
To entertain them; or the country came
With all their zeal to warm their welcome here.
What (great I will not say, but) sudden cheer
Didst thou then make 'em! And what praise was heaped
On thy good lady then, who therein reaped

The just reward of her high housewifery;
To have her linen, plate, and all things nigh,
When she was far; and not a room but dressed
As if it had expected such a guest!

1. Different courses might be served to different guests, depending on their social status. The lord would have the best food.
2. Prince Henry, the heir apparent, who died in November 1612.
These, Penshurst, are thy praise, and yet not all.

90 Thy lady's noble, fruitful, chaste withal.
His children thy great lord may call his own,
A fortune in this age but rarely known.
They are, and have been, taught religion; thence
Their gentler spirits have sucked innocence.

95 Each morn and even they are taught to pray,
With the whole household, and may, every day,
Read in their virtuous parents' noble parts
The mysteries of manners, arms, and arts.
Now, Penshurst, they that will proportion thee
With other edifices, when they see
Those proud, ambitious heaps, and nothing else,
May say, their lords have built, but thy lord dwells.

Song: To Celia

Drink to me only with thine eyes,
And I will pledge with mine;
Or leave a kiss but in the cup,
And I'll not look for wine.

5 The thirst that from the soul doth rise
Doth ask a drink divine:
But might I of Jove's nectar sup,
I would not change for thine.

I sent thee late a rosy wreath,
Not so much honoring thee,
As giving it a hope that there
It could not withered be.

But thou thereon didst only breathe,
And sent'st it back to me;
Since when it grows and smells, I swear,
Not of itself, but thee.

To Heaven

Good and great God, can I not think of thee
But it must straight my melancholy be?
Is it interpreted in me disease
That, laden with my sins, I seek for ease?

5 Oh, be thou witness, that the reins dost know
And hearts of all, if I be sad for show,

1. These famous lines translate a patchwork of five separate prose passages by Philostratus, a Greek sophist (3rd century CE). The music that has made it a barroom favorite is by an anonymous 18th-century composer.

1. Literally, kidneys, but also the seat of the affections, with a glance at Psalm 7:9: "the righteous God trieth the hearts and reins."
And judge me after, if I dare pretend
To aught but grace, or aim at other end.
As thou art all, so be thou all to me,
First, midst, and last, converted
My faith, my hope, my love; and in this state,
My judge, my witness, and my advocate.
Where have I been this while exiled from thee,
And whither rapt, now thou but stoop'st to me?
Dwell, dwell here still: Oh, being everywhere,
How can I doubt to find thee ever here?
I know my state, both full of shame and scorn,
Conceived in sin and unto labor born,
Standing with fear, and must with horror fall,
And destined unto judgment after all.
I feel my griefs too, and there scarce is ground
Upon my flesh to inflict another wound.
Yet dare I not complain or wish for death
With holy Paul, lest it be thought the breath
Of discontent; or that these prayers be
For weariness of life, not love of thee.

FROM UNDERWOOD

From A Celebration of Charis in Ten Lyric Pieces

4. Her Triumph

See the chariot at hand here of Love,
Wherein my lady rideth!
Each that draws is a swan or a dove,
And well the car Love guideth.
As she goes, all hearts do duty
Unto her beauty;
And enamored do wish, so they might
But enjoy such a sight,
That they still were to run by her side,
Through swords, through seas, whither she would ride.
Do but look on her eyes, they do light
All that Love's world compriseth!
Do but look on her hair, it is bright
As Love's star when it riseth!

Venus, the morning star

Do but mark, her forehead's smoother

1. Preparing a second edition of his Works (published posthumously in 1640—41), Jonson added a third section of poems, "Underwood," out of the analogy they hold to The Forest in my former book.
2. "Who shall deliver me from the body of this death?" (Romans 7:24).
3. The Greek word charis, from which Jonson's lady takes her name, means "grace" or "loveliness."
4. Following Petrarch, many Renaissance poets used the figure of the triumphal procession to celebrate a person or concept—time, chastity, fame, etc. Metrically, this poem is highly complex.
4. Venus's birds.
Than words that soothe her! And from her arched brows, such a grace Sheds itself through the face, As alone there triumphs to the life
Have you seen but a bright lily grow, Before rude hands have touched it? Have you marked but the fall o' the snow, Before the soil hath smudged it?
Have you felt the wool o' the beaver, Or swan's down ever? Or have smelt o' the bud o' the briar, Or the nard in' the fire? Or have tasted the bag o' the bee?
O so white! O so soft! O so sweet is she!

A Sonnet, to the Noble Lady, the Lady Mary Wroth

I that have been a lover, and could show it, Though not in these, in rhymes not wholly dumb, Since I exscribe your sonnets, am become A better lover, and much better poet. Nor is my muse, or I, ashamed to owe it To those true numerous graces; whereof some But charm the senses, others overcome Both brains and hearts; and mine now best do know it: For in your verse all Cupid's armory, His flames, his shafts, his quiver, and his bow, His very eyes are yours to overthrow. But then his mother's sweets you so apply, Her joys, her smiles, her loves, as readers take For Venus' ceston, every line you make.

My Picture Left in Scotland

I now think Love is rather deaf than blind, For else it could not be

5. The four elements—earth, water, air, fire—were thought to be in perpetual conflict.
6. Spikenard, an aromatic ointment.
1. Mary Wroth, author of the sonnet sequence Pamphilia to Amphilanthus (p. 1456) and the romance The Countess of Montgomery's (Jrunia (p. 1455), was the daughter of Robert Sidney and his wife, Barbara Gamage, of Penshurst, the niece of Sir Philip Sidney and the Countess of Pembroke; she was the wife of Sir Robert Wroth, whose country estate Jonson also praised in "The Forest." The poem exhibits how poems were exchanged within a coterie, though Jonson also writes as a client to a patron. This is Jonson's only sonnet, used here to pay tribute to Wroth's sequence, and notably to its erotic power.
2. Venus's girdle or belt, which had aphrodisiacal powers; it aroused passion in all beholders.
1. After his walking tour of Scotland in 1618-19, Jonson sent a manuscript version of this poem to William Drummond, with whom he had stayed. The woman of the poem may or may not be a real person.
That she
Whom I adore so much should so slight me
And cast my love behind;
I'm sure my language to her was as sweet,
And every close\(^6\) did meet
In sentence\(^6\) of as subtle feet,\(^9\)
As hath the youngest he
That sits in shadow of Apollo's tree.\(^2\)

O, but my conscious fears
That fly my thoughts between,
Tell me that she hath seen
My hundreds of gray hairs,
Told\(^9\) seven and forty years,
Read so much waist\(^3\) as she cannot embrace
My mountain belly and my rocky face;
And all these through her eyes have stopped her ears.

The Ode on Cary and Morison  The ode, originally a classical form, is a lyric poem in an elevated style, celebrating a lofty theme, a noble personage, or a grand occasion. The Greek poet Pindar wrote many odes for winners of the Olympic games, known as "Great Odes" because of their exalted subject and style. Later, the Roman poet Horace wrote more restrained poems that came to be known as "Lesser Odes." Jonson's Cary-Morison ode comes closer than any other in the language to the lofty style and manner of Pindar, while his "To Penshurst" is in the Horatian style, as is, later, Marvell's "Horatian Ode upon Cromwell's Return from Ireland".

Pindar's odes were designed to be sung by a chorus and often followed a three-part scheme: the chorus moved in one direction while chanting the strophe, reversed direction for the antistrophe, and stood still for the epode. Jonson imitates this pattern with his triple division of "turn," "counterturn," and "stand"—the terms more or less literally translated from the original Greek. His turns and counterturns rhyme in couplets, with line lengths varying in all stanzas according to a uniform scheme; the double-line stands follow a more complex but equally strict design. He imitates Pindar also in his moral generalizations and lofty but impersonal praise of the two noble friends. Later in the century, under the influence of Abraham Cowley and under a misapprehension about Pindar's style, odes became more extravagant, more vehement in tone, and more irregular in form.

To the Immortal Memory and Friendship of That Noble Pair,
Sir Lucius Cary and Sir H. Morison

The  Turn
Brave infant of Saguntum,\(^2\) clear\(^0\)
Thy coming forth in that great year

2. Bay laurel, the tree associated with Apollo, god of poetry.
3. With a pun on "waste," meaning "untillable ground."
1. Henry Morison died in 1629 at the age of twenty. His good friend Lucius Cary (son of Elizabeth Cary, the author of Mariam, p. 1536) became the second Viscount Falkland. He was known for his learning, and he died fighting for King Charles in the first years of the civil war.
2. Pliny tells the story of an infant born while Sagunto, in Spain, was being assaulted by Hannibal; he dived back into his mother's womb (setting a record for brevity of life) and was buried there.
When the prodigious Hannibal did crown
His rage, with razing your immortal town.
5   Thou, looking then about
Ere thou wert half got out,
Wise child, didst hastily return
And mad'st thy mother's womb thine urn.
10  How summed a circle didst thou leave mankind
Of deepest lore, could we the center find!

The Counterturn
Did wiser nature draw thee back
From out the horror of that sack,
Where shame, faith, honor, and regard of right
Lay trampled on?—the deeds of death and night
15  Urged, hurried forth, and hurled
Upon th' affrighted world?
Sword, fire, and famine, with fell fury met, fierce
And all on utmost ruin set:
As, could they but life's miseries foresee,
20  No doubt all infants would return like thee.

The Stand
For what is life if measured by the space,
Not by the act?
Or masked man, if valued by his face,
Above his fact? Here's one outlived his peers
25  And told forth fourscore years:
He vexed time, and busied the whole state,
Troubled both foes and friends,
But ever to no ends:
What did this stirrer but die late?
How well at twenty had he fall'n or stood!
20  For three of his four score, he did no good.

The Turn
He entered well, by virtuous parts,
30  Got up and thrived with honest arts:
He purchased friends and fame and honors then,
And had his noble name advanced with men;
But, weary of that flight,
He stooped in all men's sight
To sordid flatteries, acts of strife,
And sunk in that dead sea of life
35  So deep, as he did then death's waters sup;
But that the cork of title buoyed him up.

3. Emblem of perfection. 5. I.e., another man.
4. Punning on "dilate," meaning "talk endlessly."
The Counterturn

Alas, but Morison fell young;—
He never fell, thou fal'st, my tongue.

He stood, a soldier, to the last right end,
A perfect patriot and a noble friend,
But most a virtuous son.
All offices were done
By him, so ample, full, and round

In weight, in measure, number, sound,
As, though his age imperfect might appear,
His life was of humanity the sphere.

The Stand

Go now, and tell out days summed up with fears,
And make them years;

Produce thy mass of miseries on the stage
To swell thine age;
Repeat of things a throng,
To show thou hast been long,
Not lived; for life doth her great actions spell,
By what was done and wrought
In season, and so brought
To light: her measures are, how well
Each syllab'e answered, and was formed how fair;
These make the lines of life, and that's her air.

The Turn

It is not growing like a tree
In bulk, doth make man better be,
Or standing long an oak, three hundred year,
To fall a log at last, dry, bald, and sere:
A lily of a day

Is fairer far in May,
Although it fall and die that night;
It was the plant and flower of light.
In small proportions we just beauties see,
And in short measures life may perfect be.

The Counterturn

Call, noble Lucius, then for wine,
And let thy looks with gladness shine:
Accept this garland, plant it on thy head,
And think, nay, know, thy Morison's not dead.

He leaped the present age,
so
Possessed with holy rage,
To see that bright eternal day,
Of which we priests and poets say
Such truths as we expect for happy men,
And there he lives with memory: and Ben

The Stand

Jonson, who sung this of him ere he went
Himself to rest,
Or taste a part of that full joy he meant
To have expressed
In this bright asterism: constellaton

Where it were friendship's schism
(Were not his Lucius long with us to tarry)
To separate these twi-Lights, the Dioscuri,9
And keep the one half from his Harry.

But fate doth so alternate the design,
Whilst that in heaven, this light on earth must shine.

The Turn

And shine as you exalted are,
Two names of friendship, but one star,
Of hearts the union. And those not by chance
Made, or indentured, or leased out t' advance contracted for
The profits for a time.
No pleasures vain did chime
Of rhymes or riots at your feasts,
Orgies of drink, or feigned protests;

But simple love of greatness and of good
That knits brave minds and manners, more than blood.

The Counterturn

This made you first to know the why
You liked, then after to apply
That liking; and approach so one the tother,
Till either grew a portion of the other;
Each styled by his end,
The copy of his friend.
You lived to be the great surnames
And titles by which all made claims

Unto the virtue: nothing perfect done,
But as a Cary or a Morison.

The Stand

And such a force the fair example had,
As they that saw

9. The mythical Greek twins, Castor and Pollux, the Dioscuri, were said to have exchanged places regularly, after Castor's death, between earth and the underworld. They are the principal stars of the constellation Gemini (the twins).
The good and durst not practice it, were glad

That such a law
Was left yet to mankind;
Where they might read and find
Friendship in deed was written, not in words.
And with the heart, not pen,

Of two so early youthful men,
Whose lives her rolls were, and records,
Who, ere the first down bloomed on the chin
Had sowed these fruits, and got the harvest in.

Slow, Slow, Fresh Fount

Slow, slow, fresh fount, keep time with my salt tears;
Yet slower, yet, O faintly, gentle springs!
List to the heavy part the music bears:
Woe weeps out her division, when she sings.

Droop herbs and flowers;
Fall grief in showers;
Our beauties are not ours.
O, I could still,
Like melting snow upon some craggy hill,
Drop, drop, drop, drop,
Since nature's pride is now a withered daffodil.

Queen and Huntress

Queen and huntress, chaste and fair,
Now the sun is laid to sleep,
Seated in thy silver chair,
State in wonted accustomed manner keep;

Hesperus entreats thy light,
Goddess excellently bright.

Earth, let not thy envious shade
Dare itself to interpose;
Cynthia's shining orb was made
Heaven to clear, when day did close.
Bless us then with wished sight,
Goddess excellently bright.

1. From the play Cynthia's Revels (1.2). This lyric is a lament sung by Echo for Narcissus, who was entra...
Lay thy bow of pearl apart,
And thy crystal-shining quiver;

Give unto the flying hart
Space to breathe, how short soever.

Thou that mak'st a day of night,
Goddess excellently bright.

Still to Be Neat

Still\(^0\) to be neat, still to be dressed
As\(^a\) you were going to a feast,
Still to be powdered, still perfumed;
Lady, it is to be presumed,

Though art's hid causes are not found,
All is not sweet, all is not sound.

Give me a look, give me a face
That makes simplicity a grace;
Robes loosely flowing, hair as free—
Such sweet neglect more taketh me

Than all the adulteries\(^a\) of art.
They strike mine eyes, but not my heart.

1609

To the Memory of My Beloved, The Author,
Mr. William Shakespeare, and What He Hath Left Us

To draw no envy, Shakespeare, on thy name,
Am I thus ample\(^0\) to thy book and fame,

While I confess thy writings to be such
As neither man nor muse can praise too much.

'Tis true, and all men's suffrage.\(^a\) But these ways
Were not the paths I meant unto thy praise;
For silliest\(^i\) ignorance on these may light,
Which, when it sounds at best, but echoes right;
Or blind affection, which doth ne'er advance
The truth, but gropes, and urgeth all by chance;
Or crafty malice might pretend this praise,
And think to ruin where it seemed to raise.

These are\(^a\) some infamous bawd or whore
Should praise a matron. What could hurt her more?

But thou art proof against them, and, indeed,

Above th' ill fortune of them, or the need.

1. Sung in the play Epicene, this song concerns the art of makeup, but also art more generally. Compare Herrick's “Delight in Disorder” (p. 1656).
2. This poem was prefixed to the first folio of Shakespeare's plays (1623).
I therefore will begin. Soul of the age!
The applause! Delight! The wonder of our stage!
My Shakespeare, rise; I will not lodge thee by Chaucer or Spenser, or bid Beaumont lie
A little further to make thee a room;
Thou art a monument without a tomb,
And art alive still while thy book doth live,
And we have wits to read and praise to give.
That I not mix thee so, my brain excuses,
I mean with great, but disproportioned\(^2\) Muses;
For, if I thought my judgment were of years,
I should commit thee surely with thy peers,
And tell how far thou didst our Lyly outshine,
Or sporting Kyd, or Marlowe's mighty line.\(^3\)
And though thou hadst small Latin and less Greek,\(^4\)
From thence to honor thee I would not seek\(^5\)
For names, but call forth thund'ring Aeschylus,
Euripides, and Sophocles to us,
Pacuvius, Accius, him of Cordova dead,\(^5\)
To life again, to hear thy buskin\(^7\) tread
And shake a stage; or, when thy socks\(^8\) were on,
Leave thee alone for the comparison
Of all that insolent Greece or haughty Rome
Sent forth, or since did from their ashes come.
Triumph, my Britain; thou hast one to show
To whom all scenes\(^8\) of Europe homage owe.
He was not of an age, but for all time!
And all the Muses still were in their prime
When like Apollo\(^9\) he came forth to warm
Our ears, or like a Mercury\(^9\) to charm.
Nature herself was proud of his designs,
And joyed to wear the dressing of his lines,
Which were so richly spun, and woven so fit,
As, since, she will vouchsafe\(^3\) no other wit:
The merry Greek, tart Aristophanes,
Neat Terence, witty Plautus\(^8\) now not please,
But antiquated and deserted lie,
As they were not of Nature's family.
Yet must I not give nature all; thy art,
My gentle Shakespeare, must enjoy a part.
For though the poet's matter\(^9\) nature be,
His art doth give the fashion,\(^9\) and that he
Who casts\(^4\) to write a living line must sweat
(Such as thine are) and strike the second heat
Upon the Muses' anvil; turn the same,

2. Chaucer, Spenser, and Francis Beaumont were buried in Westminster Abbey; Shakespeare, in Stratford.
3. John Lyly, Thomas Kyd, and Christopher Marlowe were Elizabethan dramatists contemporary or nearly contemporary with Shakespeare.
4. Shakespeare's Latin was pretty good, but Jonson is judging by the standard of his own remarkable scholarship.
5. Marcus Pacuvius, Lucius Accius (2nd century B.C.E.), and "him of Cordova," Seneca the Younger (1st century B.C.E.), were Latin tragedians. Seneca's tragedies had a large influence on Elizabethan revenge tragedy.
6. Aristophanes, an ancient Greek satirist and writer of comedy; Terence and Plautus (2nd and 3rd centuries B.C.E.), Roman writers of comedy.

For a good poet's made as well as born,
And such wert thou. Look how the father's face
Lives in his issue;° even so the race
Of Shakespeare's mind and manners brightly shines
In his well-turned and true-filed lines,
In each of which he seems to shake a lance,°
As brandished at the eyes of ignorance.
Sweet swan of Avon, what a sight it were
To see thee in our waters yet appear,
And make those flights upon the banks of Thames
That so did take Eliza and our James!  8
But stay; I see thee in the hemisphere
Advanced and made a constellation there!°
Shine forth, thou star of poets, and with rage
Or influence° chide or cheer the drooping stage,
Which, since thy flight from hence, hath mourned like night,
And despairs day, but for thy volume's light.

Ode to Himself°

Come, leave the loathed stage,
And the more loathed age,
Where pride and impudence, in faction knit,
Usurp the chair of wit,
Indicting and arraigning every day
Something they call a play.
Let their fastidious, vain
Commission of the brain
Run on and rage, sweat, censure, and condemn:
They were not made for thee, less thou for them.

Say that thou pour'st them wheat,
And they will acorns eat;
'Twere simple° fury still thyself to waste
On such as have no taste!
To offer them a surfeit of pure bread,
Whose appetites are dead!
No, give them grains their fill,
Husks, draff to drink, and swill:°
If they love lees,° and leave the lusty wine,
Envy them not; their palate's with the swine.

7. Pun on Shake-speare.
8. Queen Elizabeth and King James.
9. Heroes and demigods were typically exalted after death to a place among the stars.
1. "Rage" and "influence" describe the supposed effects of the planets on earthly affairs. "Rage" also implies poetic inspiration.
2. All three items are food for pigs.
ODE TO HIMSELF / 1447

No doubt some moldy tale
Like Pericles,² and stale
As the shrieve's⁵ crusts, and nasty as his fish—sheriff's Scrap, out of every dish
25 Thrown forth and raked into the common tub,⁴
May keep up the play club:
There, sweepings do as well
As the best-ordered meal;
For who the relish of these guests will fit
30 Needs set them but the alms basket of wit.

And much good do t you then:
Brave plush and velvet men
Can feed on orts;⁵ and, safe in your stage clothes,³
Dare quit,⁰ upon your oaths,
35 The stagers and the stage-wrights⁶ too, your peers,

Timber, or Discoveries

Published posthumously in the Works (1640-41), Jonson's observations on literary matters had their origins in a commonplace book that culled extracts from Sir Philip Sidney's Defense of Poesy, from major classical theorists like Aristotle, Cicero, Seneca, Quintilian, and Horace; and from recent Continental critics. Jonson digested all this under various topics, setting it forth in his own voice and intermixing trenchant observations on his own contemporaries. Among his major precepts are that the essence of poetry is its "fiction" or imitation; that natural talent is the major quality needed in a poet, though "art" and practice are also necessary; that one learns to become a poet by first imitating a single model, that good sense should have priority over style; and that the language of poetry should be clear, strong, and succinct. In the tradition of the Renaissance humanists, Jonson insists that the good poet is also the good man, who properly comprehends encyclopedic wisdom in himself, fitting him to be a counselor to rulers. Despite its disjointed form, Timber is the most important English commentary on poetics between Sidney and Thomas Hobbes.

From Timber,¹ or Discoveries

Poetry in this latter age hath proved but a mean mistress to such as have wholly addicted themselves to her, or given their names up to her family. They who have but saluted her on the by, and now and then tendered their visits, she hath done much for, and advanced in the way of their own professions (both the law and the gospel)² beyond all they could have hoped, or done for themselves without her favor. Wherein she doth emulate the judicious but preposterous bounty of the times' grandsées,³ who accumulate all they can upon the parasite or freshman⁴ in their friendship, but think an old client or honest servant bound by his place to write and starve.

Indeed, the multitude commend writers as they do fencers or wrestlers, who, if they come in robustiously and put for it with a deal of violence, are received for the braver fellows; when many times their own rudeness is a cause of their disgrace, and a slight touch of their adversary gives all that boisterous force the foil. But in these things the unskilful are naturally deceived, and judging wholly by the bulk think rude things greater than polished, and scattered more numerous than composed.⁵ Nor think this only to be true in the sordid multitude, but the neater sort of our gallants; for all are the multitude, only they differ in clothes, not in judgment or understanding.

I remember the players have often mentioned it as an honor to Shakespeare that in his writing, whatsoever he penned, he never blotted out a line. My answer hath been, Would he had blotted a thousand: which they thought a malevolent speech. I had not told posterity this, but for their ignorance who choose that circumstance to commend their friend by wherein he most faulted, and to justify mine own candor, for I loved the man and do honor his memory, on this side idolatry, as much as any. He was indeed honest and of an open and free nature, had an excellent fancy, brave notions, and gentle expressions, wherein he flowed with that facility that sometimes it was necessary he should be stopped: Suffiaminandus erat, as Augustus said of Haterius. His wit was in his own power; would the rule of it had been so too. Many times he fell into those things could not escape laughter, as when he said in the person of Caesar, one speaking to him: "Caesar, thou dost me wrong," he replied: "Caesar did never wrong but with just cause," and such like, which were ridiculous. But he redeemed his vices with his virtues. There was ever more in him to be praised than to be pardoned.

For a man to write well, there are required three necessaries: to read the best authors, observe the best speakers, and much exercise of his own style. In style, to consider what ought to be written, and after what manner. He must first think and excogitate his matter, then choose his words and examine the weight of either. Then take care, in placing and ranking both matter and words, that the composition be comely; and to do this with diligence and often. No matter how slow the style be at first, so it be labored and accurate; seek the best, and be not glad of the forward conceits or first words that offer themselves to us; but judge of what we invent, and order what we approve. Repeat often what we have formerly written; which, beside that it helps the consequence and makes the juncture better, it quickens the heat of imagination, that often cools in the time of setting down, and gives it new strength, as if it grew lustier by the going back. As we see in the contention of leaping, they jump farthest that fetch their race largest; or as in throwing a dart or javelin, we force back our arms to make our loose the stronger. Yet if we have a fair gale of wind, I forbid not the steering out of our sail, so the favor of the gale deceive us not. For all that we invent doth please us in the conception or birth, else we would never set it down. But the safest is to return to our judgment and handle over again those things the easiness of which might make them justly suspected. So did the best writers in their beginnings; they imposed upon themselves care and industry. They did nothing rashly. They obtained first to write well, and then custom made it easy and a habit. By little and little their matter showed itself to them more plentifully, their words answered, their composition followed; and all, as in a well-ordered family, presented itself in the place. So that the sum of all is: Ready writing makes not good writing, but good writing brings on ready writing.

Yet when we think we have got the faculty, it is even then good to resist it, as to give a horse a check sometimes with [his] bit, which doth not so much stop his course as stir his mettle. Again, whither a man's genius is best able to reach, thither it should more and more contend, lift, and dilate itself; as men of low stature raise themselves on their toes, and so oftimes get even, if not eminent. Besides, as it is fit for grown and able writers to stand of themselves and work with their own strength, to trust and endeavor by their own faculties; so it is fit for the beginner and learner to study others, and the best. For the mind and memory are more sharply exercised in comprehending another man's things than our own; and such as accustom themselves and are familiar with the best authors shall ever and anon find somewhat of them in themselves; and in the expression of their minds, even when they feel it not, be able to utter something like theirs, which hath an authority above their own. Nay, sometimes it is the reward of a man's study, the praise of quoting another man fitly. And though a man be more prone and able for one kind of writing than another, yet he must exercise all. For as in an instrument, so in style, there must be a harmony and consent of parts.

Custom is the most certain mistress of language, as the public stamp makes the current money. But we must not be too frequent with the mint, every day coining; nor fetch words from the extreme and utmost ages, since the chief virtue of a style is perspicuity, and nothing so vicious in it as to need an interpreter. Words borrowed of antiquity do lend a kind of majesty to style, and are not without their delight sometimes. For they have the authority of years, and out of their intermission do win to themselves a kind of grace-like newness. But the eldest of the present and newest of the past language is the best. For what was the ancient language, which some men so dote upon, but the ancient custom? Yet when I name custom, I understand not the vulgar custom, for that were a precept no less dangerous to language than life, if we should speak or live after the manners of the vulgar. But that I call custom of speech which is the consent of the learned, as custom of life which is the consent of the good. Virgil was most loving of antiquity; yet how rarely doth he insert aquai and pictai? Lucretius is scabrous and rough in these; he seeks them, as some do Chaucerisms with us, which were better expunged and banished. Some words are to be culled out for ornament and color, as we gather flowers to strew houses or make garlands; but they are better when they grow to our style as in a meadow, where, though the mere grass and greenness delights, yet the variety of flowers doth heighten and beautify. Marry, we must not play or riot too much with them, as in paronomasias; nor use too swelling or ill-sounding words, quae per salebras altaque saxa cadunt. It is true, there is no sound but shall find some lovers, as the bitterest confections are grateful to some palates. Our composition must be more accurate in the beginning and end than in the midst, and in the end more than in the beginning; for through the midst the stream bears us. And this is attained by custom more than care or diligence. We must express readily and fully, not profusely. There is difference between a liberal and a prodigal hand. As it is a great point of art, when our matter requires it, to enlarge and veer out all sail, so to take it in and contract it is of no less praise when the argument doth ask it. Either of them hath their fitness in the place. A good man always profits by his endeavor, by his help; yea, when he is absent; nay, when he is dead, by his example and memory. So good authors in their style.

A strict and succinct style is that where you can take away nothing without loss, and that loss to be manifest. The brief style is that which expresseth much in little. The concise style, which expresseth not enough, but leaves somewhat to be understood. The abrupt style, which hath many breaches, and doth not seem to end but fall. The congruent and harmonious fitting of parts in a sentence hath almost the fastening and force of knitting and connection, as in stones well squared, which will rise strong a great way without mortar. Periods are beautiful when they are not too long, for so they have their strength too, as in a pike or javelin. As we must take the care that our words and sense be clear, so if the obscurity happen through the hearer's or reader's want of understanding, I am not to answer for them, no more than for their not listening or marking: I must neither find them ears nor mind. But a man cannot put a word so in sense but something about it will illustrate it, if the writer understand himself. For order helps much to perspicuity, as confusion hurts. Rectitudo lucem adfert; obliquitas et circumductio ofuscat. We should therefore speak what we can the nearest way, so as we keep our gait, not leap; for too short may as well not be let into the memory as too long not kept in. Whatsoever loseth the grace and clearness converts into a riddle; the obscurity is marked, but not the value. That perisheth, and is passed by, like the pearl in the fable. Our style should be like a skein of silk, to be carried and found by the right thread, not raveled and perplexed; then all is a knot, a heap.

Mary Wroth was the most prolific, self-conscious, and impressive female author of the Jacobean era. Her published work (1621) include two firsts for an Englishwoman: a 558-page romance, The Countess of Montgomery's Urania, which includes more than fifty poems, and appended to it a Petrarchan lyric sequence that had circulated some years in manuscript, 103 sonnets and elegant songs titled Pamphilia to Amphilanthus. Wroth left unpublished a very long but unfinished continuation of the Urania and a pastoral drama, Love's Victory, also a first for an Englishwoman. Her achievement was fostered by her strong sense of identity as a Sidney, heir to the literary talent and cultural role of her famous uncle Sir Philip Sidney, her famous aunt Mary Sidney Herbert, Countess of Pembroke, who may have served as mentor to her; and her father Robert Sidney, Viscount Lisle, author of a recently discovered sonnet sequence. But she used that heritage transgressively to replace heroes with heroines in genres employed by the male Sidney authors—notably Philip Sidney's Astrophil and Stella and The Countess of Pembroke's Arcadia—transforming their gender politics and exploring the poetics and situation of women writers.

As Robert Sidney's eldest daughter, she lived and was educated at Penshurst, the Sidney country house celebrated by Ben Jonson, and was often at her aunt's "little college" at Wilton. She danced at court in The Masque of Blackness and perhaps in other masques; she was married (incompatibly) at age seventeen to Sir Robert Wroth of Durrance and Loughton Manor, whose office it was to facilitate the king's hunting; and she was patron to several poets, including Jonson. He celebrated her in two epigrams and in a verse letter honoring her husband, dedicated his great comedy The Alchemist to her, and claimed in his only sonnet (p. 1438) that the artistry and erotic power of her sonnets had made him "a better lover, and much better poet." After her husband's death she carried on a long-standing love affair with her married first cousin, William Herbert, Earl of Pembroke, himself a poet, a powerful courtier, and a patron of the theater and of literature. That relationship produced two children and occasioned some scandal.

The significant names in the title of Wroth's Petrarchan sequence, Pamphilia ("all-loving") to Amphilanthus ("lover of two"), are from characters in her romance who at times shadow Wroth and her lover Pembroke. The Petrarchan lyric sequence had long served as the major genre for analyzing a male lover's passions, frustrations, and fantasies (and sometimes his career anxieties). So although the sonnet sequence was becoming passe by Wroth's time, it was an obvious choice for a woman poet undertaking the construction of subjectivity in a female lover-speaker. Wroth does not, however, simply reverse roles. Pamphilia addresses very few sonnets to Amphilanthus and seldom assumes the Petrarchan lover's position of abject servitude to a cruel beloved. Instead, she proclaims subjection to Cupid, usually identified with the force of her own desire. This radical revision identifies female desire as the source and center of the love relationship and celebrates the woman lover-poet's movement from the bondage of chaotic passion to the freedom of self-chosen constancy.

Wroth's romance, Urania, breaks the romance convention of a plot centered on courtship, portraying instead married heroines and their love relationships, both inside and outside of marriage. It is in part an idealizing fantasy: the principal characters are queens, kings, and emperors, with the power and comparative freedom such positions allow. However, the landscape is not Arcadia or Fairyland but war-torn Europe and Asia. The romance fantasy, with Spenserian symbolic places and knights fighting evil tyrants and monsters, only partially overlays a rigidly patriarchal Jacobean world rife with rape, incest, arranged or forced marriages, jealous husbands, tortured women, and endangered children. Those perils, affecting all women from shepherdesses to queens, are rendered in large part through the numerous stories interpolated in romance fashion within the principal plots. The male heroes are courageous fighters and attractive lovers, but all are flawed by inconstancy. For Wroth, true heroism consists of integrity in love despite social constraints and psychological pressures. A few women are heroic in this sense: Pamphilia, the good queen and pattern of constancy; Urania, the wise counselor who wins self-knowledge and makes wise choices in love; and Veralinda, who weds her true lover after great trials. Almost all Wroth's female characters define themselves through storytelling and making poems. The women compose twice as many of the poems as the men do. Pamphilia, Wroth's surrogate, is singled out as a poet by vocation, both by the number of her poems and by their recognized excellence.

Many contemporaries assumed that the Urania was a scandalous roman a clef, alluding not only to Sidney-Pembroke-Wroth affairs but to notable personages of the Jacobean court. A public outcry from one of them, Lord Edward Denny, elicited a spirited satiric response from Wroth. Although she suggested to the king's minister Buckingham that she withdraw the work from circulation, there is no evidence that she actually did so. The uproar, however, may have discouraged her from publishing part 2 of the romance and her pastoral drama.
From The Countess of Montgomery's Urania

From The First Book

When the spring began to appear like the welcome messenger of summer, one sweet (and in that more sweet) morning, after Aurora, had called all careful eyes to attend the day, forth came the fair shepherdess Urania (fair indeed; yet that far too mean a title for her, who for beauty deserved the highest style could be given by best-knowing judgments). Into the mead she came, where usually she drove her flocks to feed, whose leaping and wantonness showed they were proud of such a guide: but she, whose sad thoughts led her to another manner of spending her time, made her soon leave them, and follow her late-begun custom; which was (while they delighted themselves) to sit under some shade, bewailing her misfortune; while they fed, to feed upon her own sorrow and tears, which at this time she began again to summon, sitting down under the shade of a well-spread beech; the ground (then blest) and the tree, with full and fine-leaved branches, growing proud to bear and shadow such perfections. But she regarding nothing, in comparison of her woe, thus proceeded in her grief: "Alas Urania," said she (the true servant to misfortune),
"of any misery that can befall woman, is not this the most and greatest which thou art fallen into? Can there be any near the unhappiness of being ignorant, and that in the highest kind, not being certain of mine own estate or birth?
Why was I not still continued in the belief I was, as I appear, a shepherdess, and daughter to a shepherd? My ambition then went no higher than this estate, now flies it to a knowledge; then was I contented, now perplexed. O ignorance, can thy dullness yet procure so sharp a pain? and that such a thought as makes me now aspire unto knowledge? How did I joy in this poor life, being quiet!
blessed in the love of those I took for parents, but now by them I know the contrary, and by that knowledge, now to know myself. Miserable Urania, worse art thou now than these thy lambs; for they know their dams, while thou dost live unknown of any." By this were others come into that meadow with their flocks: but she, esteeming her sorrowing thoughts her best and choicest company, left that place, taking a little path which brought her to the further side of the plain, to the foot of the rocks, speaking as she went these lines, her eyes fixed upon the ground, her very soul turned into mourning.

Unseen, unknown, I here alone complain
To rocks, to hills, to meadows, and to springs,
Which can no help return to ease my pain,
But back my sorrows the sad Echo brings.

Thus still increasing are my woes to me,

1. Wroth's title echoes The Countess of Pembroke's Arcadia, the romance written by her uncle Sir Philip Sidney. The countess of Montgomery was Susan (Vere) Herbert, Wroth's close friend and the sister-in-law of her lover, William Herbert. The opening of Urania is meant to be compared to (and contrasted with) the opening of the Arcadia, in which two shepherds lament the absence of their beloved, the mysterious shepherdess Urania.

2. The Greek goddess of the dawn.

3. The name has multiple associations: the Muse of astronomy, the Muse of Christian poetry, a surname for Aphrodite (Venus) designating heavenly beauty. It was also an honorific commonly bestowed on Wroth's aunt, Mary Sidney, Countess of Pembroke. In Wroth's romance, Urania is a foundling adopted by shepherds but actually the daughter of the king of Naples: after losing one lover and gaining another, she marries, becomes a matriarch, and is throughout (as in this episode) a counselor of others.

4. Title.

5. Meadow.

6. In classical mythology Echo was a wood nymph who pined away in unrequited love for the handsome Narcissus until only her voice remained (Ovid, Metamorphoses 3).
Doubly resounded by that moanful voice,
Which seems to second me in misery,
And answer gives like friend of mine own choice.
Thus only she doth my companion prove,
But those that grieve, a grieving note do love;
Pleasures to dying eyes bring but disease:
And such am I, who daily ending live,
Wailing a state which can no comfort give.

In this passion she went on, till she came to the foot of a great rock, she thinking of nothing less than ease, sought how she might ascend it; hoping there to pass away her time more peaceably with loneliness, though not to find least respite from her sorrow, which so dearly she did value, as by no means she would impart it to any. The way was hard, though by some windings making the ascent pleasing. Having attained the top, she saw under some hollow trees the entry into the rock: she fearing nothing but the continuance of her ignorance, went in; where she found a pretty room, as if that stony place had yet in pity, given leave for such perfections to come into the heart as chiefest, and most beloved place, because most loving. The place was not unlike the ancient (or the descriptions of ancient) hermitages, instead of hangings, covered and lined with ivy, disdaining aught else should come there, that being in such perfection. This richness in Nature's plenty made her stay to behold it, and almost grudge the pleasant fulness of content that place might have, if sensible, while she must know to taste of torments. As she was thus in passion mixed with pain, throwing her eyes as wildly as timorous lovers do for fear of discovery, she perceived a little light, and such a one, as a chink doth oft discover to our sights. She curious to see what this was, with her delicate hands put the natural ornament aside, discerning a little door, which she putting from her, passed through it into another room, like the first in all proportion; but in the midst there was a square stone, like to a pretty table, and on it a wax candle burning; and by that a paper, 7 which had suffered itself patiently to receive the discovering of so much of it, as presented this sonnet (as it seemed newly written) to her sight.

Here all alone in silence might I mourn:
But how can silence be where sorrows flow?
Sighs with complaints have poorer pains outworn;
But broken hearts can only true grief show.
Drops of my dearest blood shall let Love know
Such tears for her I shed, yet still do burn,
As no spring can quench least part of my woe,
Till this live earth, again to earth do turn.
Hateful all thought of comfort is to me,
Despised day, let me still night possess;
Let me all torments feel in their excess,
And but this light allow my state to see.
Which still doth waste, and wasting as this light,
Are my sad days unto eternal night.

7. The episode alludes to an episode in Sidney's Old Arcadia in which one of the heroines, Cleophila, enters a darkened cave illuminated by a single candle and finds a poem on top of a stone table.
"Alas Urania!" sighed she. "How well do these words, this place, and all agree with thy fortune? Sure, poor soul, thou wert here appointed to spend thy days, and these rooms ordained to keep thy tortures in; none being assuredly so matchlessly unfortunate."

Turning from the table, she discerned in the room a bed of boughs, and on it a man lying, deprived of outward sense, as she thought, and of life, as she at first did fear, which struck her into a great amazement: yet having a brave spirit, though shadowed under a mean habit, she stepped unto him, whom she found not dead, but laid upon his back, his head a little to her wards, his arms folded on his breast, hair long, and beard disordered, manifesting all care; but care itself had left him: curiousness thus far afforded him, as to be perfectly discerned the most exact piece of misery; apparel he had suitable to the habitation, which was a long gray robe. This grieveful spectacle did much amaze the sweet and tender-hearted shepherdess; especially, when she perceived (as she might by the help of the candle) the tears which distilled from his eyes; who seeming the image of death, yet had this sign of worldly sorrow, the drops falling in that abundance, as if there were a kind strife among them, to rid their master first of that burdensome carriage; or else meaning to make a flood, and so drown their woeful patient in his own sorrow, who yet lay still, but then fetching a deep groan from the profoundest part of his soul, he said:

"Miserable Perissus, canst thou thus live, knowing she that gave thee life is gone? Gone, O me! and with her all my joy departed. Wilt thou (unblessed creature) lie here complaining for her death, and know she died for thee? Let truth and shame make thee do something worthy of such a love, ending thy days like thyself, and one fit to be her servant. But that I must not do: then thus remain and foster storms, still to torment thy wretched soul withall, since all are little, and too too little for such a loss. O dear Limena, loving Limena, worthy Limena, and more rare, constant Limena: perfections delicately feigned to be in women were verified in thee, was such worthiness framed only to be wondered at by the best, but given as a prey to base and unworthy jealousy? When were all worthy parts joined in one, but in thee my best Limena? Yet all these grown subject to a creature ignorant of all but ill; like unto a fool, who in a dark cave, that hath but one way to get out, having a candle, but not the understanding what good it doth him, puts it out: this ignorant wretch not being able to comprehend thy virtues, did so by thee in thy murder, putting out the world's light, and men's admiration: Limena, Limena, O my Limena."

With that he fell from complaining into such a passion, as weeping and crying were never in so woeful a perfection, as now in him; which brought as deserved a compassion from the excellent shepherdess, who already had her heart so tempered with grief, as that it was apt to take any impression that it would come to seal withal. Yet taking a brave courage to her, she stepped unto him, kneeling down by his side, and gently pulling him by the arm, she thus spoke.

"Sir," said she, "having heard some part of your sorrows, they have not only made me truly pity you, but wonder at you; since if you have lost so great a treasure, you should not lie thus leaving her and your love unrevenged, suffering her murderers to live, while you lie here complaining; and if such perfections be dead in her, why make you not the phoenix of your deeds live again, as to new life raised out of the revenge you should take on them? Then were her end satisfied, and you deservedly accounted worthy of her favor, if she were so worthy as you say."

"If she were, O God," cried out Perissus, "what devilish spirit art thou, that thus dost come to torture me? But now I see you are a woman; and therefore not much to be marked, and less resisted: but if you know charity, I pray now practice it, and leave me who am afflicted sufficiently without your company; or if you will stay, discourse not to me."

"Neither of these will I do," said she.

"If you be then," said he, "some Fury of purpose sent to vex me, use your force to the uttermost in martyring me; for never was there a fitter subject, then the heart of poor Perissus is."

"I am no Fury," replied the divine Urania, "nor hither come to trouble you, but by accident lighted on this place; my cruel hap being such, as only the like can give me content, while the solitariness of this like cave might give me quiet, though not ease. Seeking for such a one, I happened hither; and this is the true cause of my being here, though now I would use it to a better end if I might: Wherefore favor me with the knowledge of your grief; which heard, it may be I shall give you some counsel, and comfort in your sorrow."

"Cursed may I be," cried he, "if ever I take comfort, having such cause of mourning: but because you are, or seem to be afflicted, I will not refuse to satisfy your demand, but tell you the saddest story that ever was rehearsed by dying man to living woman, and such a one, as I fear will fasten too much sadness in you; yet should I deny it, I were to blame, being so well known to these senseless places; as were they sensible of sorrow, they would condole, or else amazed at such cruelty stand dumb as they do, to find that man should be so inhuman."

SONG

Love what art thou? A vain thought
In our minds by fancy wrought.
Idle smiles did thee beget,
While fond wishes made the net
5 Which so many fools have caught.

Love what art thou? Light and fair,
Fresh as morning, clear as th’ air.
But too soon thy evening change
Makes thy worth with coldness range;
10 Still thy joy is mixed with care.

Love what art thou? A sweet flower
Once full blown, dead in an hour.

8. This song, one of a group of eclogues that marks the conclusion of Book 1 of the Urania, is sung to a shepherdess by a shepherd, "being, as it seemed, fallen out with Love."
Dust in wind as staid remains
As thy pleasure or our gains,
If thy humor change, to lour.

Love what art thou? Childish, vain,
Firm as bubbles made by rain,
Wantonness thy greatest pride.
These foul faults thy virtues hide—
But babes can no staidness gain.

Love what art thou? Causeless cursed,
Yet alas these not the worst:
Much more of thee may be said.
But thy law I once obeyed,
Therefore say no more at first.

And sleep, death’s image, did my senses hire
From knowledge of myself, then thoughts did move
Swifter than those most swiftness need require.

In sleep, a chariot drawn by winged desire
I saw, where sat bright Venus, Queen of Love,
And at her feet, her son, still adding fire
To burning hearts, which she did hold above.

But one heart flaming more than all the rest
The goddess held, and put it to my breast.
"Dear son, now shut," said she: "thus must we win."
He her obeyed, and martyred my poor heart.
I, waking, hoped as dreams it would depart:
Yet since, O me, a lover I have been.

Am I thus conquered? Have I lost the powers
That to withstand, which joys to ruin me?
Must I be still while it my strength devours,
And captive leads me prisoner, bound, unfree?

1. Pamphilia ("all-loving") is the protagonist of Urania. Her unfaithful beloved’s name means "lover of two." These characters are first cousins, like Mary Wroth and William Herbert; their names adumbrate the main theme of both the romance and the appended sonnet sequence, constancy in the face of unfaithfulness.

Pamphilia to Amphilanthus is broken into several separately numbered series (the first of which includes forty-eight sonnets, with songs inserted after every sixth sonnet except the last). In Josepbine A. Roberts’s edition of Wroth’s poetry, the poems are numbered consecutively throughout the work; we have adopted this convenient renumbering.

2. I.e., shut the burning heart into Pamphilia’s breast.

3. I.e., have I lost the power to withstand love ("That"), which takes pleasure in ruining me?
Love first shall leave men's fancies to them free;
Desire shall quench Love's flames, spring hate sweet showers,
Love shall loose all his darts, have sight, and see
His shame, and wishings hinder happy hours.

Why should we not Love's purblind charms resist?
Must we be servile, doing what he list?
No, seek some host to harbor thee: I fly
Thy babish tricks, and freedom do profess.
But O my hurt makes my lost heart confess
I love, and must: So farewell liberty.

Sweetest love, return again,
Make not too long stay:
Killing mirth and forcing pain,
Sorrow leading way.

Let us not thus parted be:
Love and absence ne'er agree.

But since you must needs depart,
And me hapless leave,
In your journey take my heart,
Which will not deceive.

Yours it is, to you it flies,
Joying in those loved eyes.

So in part we shall not part,
Though we absent be:

Time, nor place, nor greatest smart
Shall my bands make free.
Tied I am, yet think it gain:
In such knots I feel no pain.

But can I live, having lost
Chiefest part of me?
Heart is fled, and sight is crossed,
These my fortunes be.
Yet dear heart go, soon return:
As good there as here to burn.

Take heed mine eyes, how you your looks do cast
Lest they betray my heart's most secret thought,
Be true unto yourselves, for nothing's bought
More dear than doubt which brings a lover's fast.

4. I.e., this and the other impossibilities that follow will occur before I surrender to love.
5. The poem seems to revise one of Donne's songs:
6. Lack of nourishment for love, due to jealousy

"Sweetest love, I do not go," p. 1269
("Doubt")
The pride of your desires; let them be taught
Their faults for shame, they could no truer last.
Then look, and look with joy for conquest won
Of those that searched your hurt in double kind; 7
So you kept safe, let them themselves look blind,
Watch, gaze, and mark till they to madness run,
While you, mine eyes enjoy full sight of love
Contented that such happinesses move.

40
False hope which feeds but to destroy, and spill 8
What it first breeds; unnatural to the birth
Of thine own womb; conceiving but to kill,
And plenty gives to make the greater dearth, 9
So tyrants do who falsely ruling earth
Outwardly grace them, 1 and with profits fill,
Advance those who appointed are to death,
To make their greater fall to please their will.
Thus shadow they their wicked vile intent,
Coloring evil with a show of good
While in fair shows their malice so is spent; 2
Hope kills the heart, and tyrants shed the blood.
For hope deluding brings us to the pride
Of our desires the farther down to slide.

68
My pain, still smothered in my grieved breast,
Seeks for some ease, yet cannot passage find
To be discharged of this unwelcome guest:
When most I strive, most fast his burdens bind,
Like to a ship on Goodwin's 3 cast by wind,
The more she strives, more deep in sand is pressed,
Till she be lost; so am I, in this kind, 0
Sunk, and devoured, and swallowed by unrest,
Lost, shipwrecked, spoiled, debarred of smallest hope,
Nothing of pleasure left; save thoughts have scope,
Which wander may. Go then, my thoughts, and cry
"Hope's perished, love tempest-beaten, joy lost:
Killing despair hath all these blessings crossed."
Yet faith still cries, "love will not falsify."

74
SONG

Love a child is ever crying,
Please him, and he straight is flying:

7. Those who spy and pry with their two eyes, to discover my secret love.
8. Kill. The image is of miscarriage or infanticide.
9. Gives abundance only to make scarcity more painful afterward.
1. i.e., those whom they mean to destroy (see next line).
3. Goodwin Sands, a line of shoals at the entrance to the Strait of Dover.
Give him, he the more is craving,
Never satisfied with having.

5    His desires have no measure,
    Endless folly is his treasure;
    What he promiseth he breaketh:
    Trust not one word that he speaketh.

He vows nothing but false matter,
And to cozen you he'll flatter.
Let him gain the hand, * he'll leave you, the upper hand
And still glory to deceive you.

He will triumph in your wailing,
And yet cause be of your failing:
These his virtues are, and slighter
Are his gifts, his favors lighter.

Feathers are as firm in staying,
Wolves no fiercer in their preying.
As a child then leave him crying,
Nor seek him, so given to flying.

From A Crown of Sonnets Dedicated to Love

In this strange labyrinth how shall I turn?
Ways * are on all sides, while the way I miss:
If to the right hand, there in love I burn;
Let me go forward, therein danger is;
If to the left, suspicion hinders bliss,
Let me turn back, shame cries I ought return,
Nor faint though crosses * with my fortunes kiss;
Stand still is harder, although sure to mourn.
Then let me take the right- or left-hand way;
Go forward, or stand still, or back retire;
I must these doubts endure without allay
Or help, but travail find for my best hire.
Yet that which most my troubled sense doth move
Is to leave all, and take the thread of love.

4. The "crown" is a difficult poetic form (originally Italian and usually known by its Italian name, corona) in which the last line of each poem serves as the first line of the next, until a circle is completed by the last line of the final poem, which is the same as the first line of the first one. The number of poems varies from seven to (as in Wroth's corona) fourteen.

5. Troubles, adversity. "Faint": lose heart.

6. I.e., certain to make me mourn.

7. I.e., I find travail (with a pun on "travel," the spelling in the 1621 edition) is my only reward.

8. Ariadne gave Theseus a thread to follow so as to find his way out of the Labyrinth, after killing the Minotaur at its center.
JOHN WEBSTER / 1461

My muse now happy, lay thyself to rest,
Sleep in the quiet of a faithful love,
Write you no more, but let these fancies move
Some other hearts, wake not to new unrest.

5 But if you study, be those thoughts addressed
To truth, which shall eternal goodness prove;
Enjoying of true joy, the most, and best,
The endless gain which never will remove.

Leave the discourse of Venus and her son
To young beginners, and their brains inspire
With stories of great love, and from that fire
Get heat to write the fortunes they have won.

And thus leave off, what's past shows you can love,
Now let your constancy your honor prove.

Webster's fame rests on two remarkable tragedies, both set in Boman Catholic Italy and both evoking the common Jacobean stereotype of that land as a place of sophisticated corruption. Both have at their center bold and brave heroines who choose for themselves in love and refuse to submit to male authority.

The White Devil, first performed in 1608, is based on events that took place in Italy in 1581—85; in this play Vittoria Corombona boldly defies a courtroom full of corrupt magistrates who convict her of adultery and murder.

The Duchess of Malfi, first performed in 1614 and published in 1623, is based on an Italian novella. In this play, the spirited ruler of Malfi secretly marries her steward for love, defying her brothers, a duke and a cardinal, who demand that she remain a widow. Their dark motives include greed for her fortune, overweening pride in their noble blood, and incestuous desire. The play wedds sublime poetry and gothic horror in the devious machinations set in motion against the duchess by her brothers' melancholy spy Bosola, in the macabre mental and physical torments to which they subject her, in the desperate lunatic ravings of the duke after having her strangled, and in the final scenes in which the stage is littered with the slaughtered bodies of all the principal characters.

Webster's portrayal of the independent spirit and courage of the duchess invites comparison with the royal heroine of Elizabeth Cary's tragedy Mariam, written at about the same date.

Webster was the son of a London tailor and a member of the Merchant Tailors' Company, but we know little else about him. He wrote a tragicomedy, The Devil's Law Case (1621), and collaborated on several plays with contemporary playwrights, among them Thomas Dekker in Westward Ho (1607) and John Marston in The Malcontent (1604). Of all the Stuart dramatists, Webster is the one who comes closest to Shakespeare in his power of tragic utterance and his flashes of poetic brilliance.

SCENE. Amalfi, Rome, Loreto, and Milan

Act I

SCENE 1. Amalfi; a hall in the DUCHESS'S palace.

[Enter ANTONIO and DELIO.]

DELIO You are welcome to your country, dear Antonio;
You have been long in France, and you return
A very formal Frenchman in your habit.¹
How do you like the French court?

ANTONIO I admire it:

5 In seeking to reduce both state and people
To a fixed order, their judicious king
Begins at home; quits² first his royal palace rids
Of flattering sycophants, of dissolute
And infamous persons—which he sweetly terms

10 His Master's masterpiece, the work of heaven²—
Considering duly that a prince's court
Is like a common fountain, whence should flow
Pure silver drops in general, but if't chance
Some cursed example poison't near the head,

15 Death and diseases through the whole land spread.
And what is't makes this blessed governement
But a most provident council, who dare freely

¹. An absolute Frenchman in your dress.
². Alludes to Christ ridding the temple of moneychangers (John 2.13—22).
Inform him the corruption of the times?
Though some o' th' court hold it presumption
To instruct princes what they ought to do,
It is a noble duty to inform them
What they ought to foresee.—Here comes Bosola,
The only court-gall; yet I observe his railing
Is not for simple love of piety.
Indeed, he rails at those things which he wants;
Would be as lecherous, covetous, or proud,
Bloody, or envious, as any man,
If he had means to be so. Here's the cardinal.

[Enter the CARDINAL and BOSOLA.]

BOSOLA I do haunt you still.
CARDINAL So.
BOSOLA I have done you better service than to be slighted thus. Miserable age, where the only reward of doing well is the doing of it!
CARDINAL You enforce your merit too much.
BOSOLA I fell into the galleys in your service; where, for two years together, I wore two towels instead of a shirt, with a knot on the shoulder, after the fashion of a Roman mantle. Slighted thus? I will thrive some way. Blackbirds fatten best in hard weather; why not I in these dog days?
CARDINAL Would you could become honest!
BOSOLA With all your divinity do but direct me the way to it. I have known many travel far for it, and yet return as arrant knaves as they went forth, because they carried themselves always along with them. [Exit CARDINAL.]

ANTONIO He hath denied thee some suit?
BOSOLA He and his brother are like plum trees that grow crooked over standing pools; they are rich and o'erladen with fruit, but none but crows, pies, and caterpillars feed on them. Could I be one of their flattering panders, I would hang on their ears like a horse leech till I were full and then drop off. I pray, leave me. Who would rely upon these miserable dependencies, in expectation to be advanced tomorrow? What creature ever fed worse than hoping Tantalus? Nor ever died any man more fearfully than he that hoped for a pardon. There are rewards for hawks and dogs when they have done us service; but for a soldier that hazards his limbs in a battle, nothing but a kind of geometry is his last supportation.

DELIO Geometry?
BOSOLA Aye, to hang in a fair pair of slings, take his latter swing in the world upon an honorable pair of crutches, from hospital to hospital. Fare ye well, sir: and yet do not you scorn us; for places in the court are but like beds in the hospital, where this man's head lies at that man's foot, and so lower and lower. [Exit.]

DELIO I knew this fellow seven years\(^2\) in the galleys
For a notorious murder; and 'twas thought
The cardinal suborned it. He was released
By the French general, Gaston de Foix,
When he recovered Naples.\(^3\)

ANTONIO 'Tis great pity
He should be thus neglected; I have heard
He's very valiant. This foul melancholy
Will poison all his goodness; for, I'll tell you,
If too immoderate sleep be truly said
To be an inward rust unto the soul,
It then doth follow want of action
Breeds all black malcontents; and their close rearing,
Like moths in cloth, do hurt for want of wearing.\(^4\)

SCENE 2. The scene continues.

[Enter CASTRUCCIO, SILVIO, RODERIGO, and GRISOLAN.]

DELIO The presence\(^0\) gins to fill: you promised me audience hall
To make me the partaker of the natures
Of some of your great courtiers.

ANTONIO The Lord Cardinal's,
And other strangers' that are now in court?
I shall. Here comes the great Calabrian duke.

FERDINAND Who took the ring oftest?\(^1\)

SILVIO Antonio Bologna, my lord.

FERDINAND Our sister duchess' great master of her household? Give him the jewel. When shall we leave this sportive action, and fall to action indeed?

CASTRUCCIO Methinks, my lord, you should not desire to go to war in person.

FERDINAND Now for some gravity. Why, my lord?

CASTRUCCIO It is fitting a soldier arise to be a prince, but not necessary a prince descend to be a captain.

FERDINAND No?

CASTRUCCIO No, my lord, he were far better do it by a deputy.

FERDINAND Why should he not as well sleep or eat by a deputy? This might take idle, offensive, and base office from him, whereas the other deprives him of honor.

CASTRUCCIO Believe my experience, that realm is never long in quiet where the ruler is a soldier.

FERDINAND Thou told'st me thy wife could not endure fighting.

CASTRUCCIO True, my lord.

2. In speaking to the cardinal himself (line 34), Bosola had mentioned only two years.
3. Gaston de Foix, French commander, was active in Italy during the early 1500s; hence, the time of the tragedy is about a hundred years before Webster wrote. Ferdinand and the cardinal are Spaniards established in Italy, like the infamous house of Borgia.
4. I.e., enforced idleness breeds discontent, as moths breed in unused clothing.
1. A common game around court, used in training for tournaments, involved catching a hanging ring on the tip of a lance. But some of Webster's audience would have caught a sexual analogy.
FERDINAND And of a jest she broke of a captain she met full of wounds. I have forgot it.

CASTRUCCIO She told him, my lord, he was a pitiful fellow, to lie, like the children of Israel, all in tents.

FERDINAND Why, there's a wit were able to undo all the chirurgeons o' the city; for although gallants should quarrel and had drawn their weapons and were ready to go to it, yet her persuasions would make them put up.

CASTRUCCIO That she would, my lord.

FERDINAND How do you like my Spanish gennet?

RODERIGO He is all fire.

FERDINAND I am of Pliny's opinion, I think he was begot by the wind; he runs as if he were ballassed with quicksilver.

SILVIO True, my lord, he reels from the tilt often.

RODERIGO and GRISOLAN Ha, ha, ha!

FERDINAND Why do you laugh? Methinks, you that are courtiers should be my touchwood, take fire when I give fire; that is, laugh but when I laugh, were the subject never so witty.

CASTRUCCIO True, my lord, I myself have heard a very good jest, and have scorned to seem to have so silly a wit as to understand it.

FERDINAND But I can laugh at your fool, my lord.

CASTRUCCIO He cannot speak, you know, but he makes faces: my lady cannot abide him.

FERDINAND No?

CASTRUCCIO Nor endure to be in merry company, for she says too much laughing and too much company fills her too full of the wrinkle.

FERDINAND I would, then, have a mathematical instrument made for her face, that she might not laugh out of compass. I shall shortly visit you at Milan, Lord Silvio.

SILVIO Your grace shall arrive most welcome.

FERDINAND You are a good horseman, Antonio. You have excellent riders in France. What do you think of good horsemanship?

ANTONIO Nobly, my lord: as out of the Grecian horse issued many famous princes, so out of brave horsemanship arise the first sparks of growing resolution that raise the mind to noble action.

FERDINAND You have bespoke it worthily.

SILVIO Your brother, the Lord Cardinal, and sister duchess.

[Reenter CARDINAL, with DUCHESS, CARIOLA, and JULIA.]

CARDINAL Are the galleys come about?

GRISOLAN They are, my lord.

DELIO [Aside to ANTONIO] Now, sir, your promise. What's that Cardinal? I mean his temper? They say he's a brave fellow, Will play his five thousand crowns at tennis, dance, Court ladies, and one that hath fought single combats.

ANTONIO Some such flashes superficially hang on him for form; but observe

2. Lint bandages were called "tents."
4. Sometimes "jennet": a small Spanish horse of Arabian stock.
5. Ballasted. Pliny in his Natural History tells about some Spanish horses generated by a swift wind (8.67).
6. Veers away from the target, undesirable in a war horse.
7. Excessively; with a pun on the draftsman's compass.
8. The Trojan horse, in which the Greek warriors hid, to overrun Troy.
his inward character: he is a melancholy churchman; the spring in his face is nothing but the engendering of toads; where he is jealous of any man, he lays worse plots for them than ever was imposed on Hercules, for he strews in his way flatterers, panders, intelligencers, atheists, and a thousand such political monsters. He should have been Pope; but instead of coming to it by the primitive decency of the church, he did bestow bribes so largely and so impudently as if he would have carried it away without heaven's knowledge. Some good he hath done—

75 delio you have given too much of him. What's his brother?

antonio the duke there? A most perverse and turbulent nature.

What appears in him mirth is merely outside;
If he laugh heartily, it is to laugh
All honesty out of fashion.

delio twins?

antonio in quality.

He speaks with others' tongues, and hears men's suits
With others' ears; will seem to sleep o' th' bench
Only to entrap offenders in their answers;
Dooms men to death by information; testimony of spies
Rewards by hearsay.

85 delio then the law to him
Is like a foul black cobweb to a spider:
He makes of it his dwelling and a prison
To entangle those shall feed him.

antonio most true:
He ne'er pays debts unless they be shrewd turns,
And those he will confess that he doth owe.

Last, for his brother there, the Cardinal,
They that do flatter him most say oracles
Hang at his lips; and verily I believe them,
For the devil speaks in them.

95 But for their sister, the right noble duchess,
You never fixed your eye on three fair medals
Cast in one figure, of so different temper.
For her discourse, it is so full of rapture,
You only will begin then to be sorry

When she doth end her speech, and wish, in wonder,
She held it less vainglory to talk much,
Than your penance to hear her: whilst she speaks,
She throws upon a man so sweet a look,
That it were able to raise one to a galliard

gay and lively dance

105 That lay in a dead palsy, and to dote
On that sweet countenance; but in that look
There speaketh so divine a continence
As cuts off all lascivious and vain hope.
Her days are practiced in such noble virtue

That sure her nights, nay, more, her very sleeps,
Are more in heaven than other ladies' shifts.

1. Hercules' uncle, King Eurystheus, sent him on twelve suicide missions to get rid of him, but Her- cules performed all these "labors" successfully,
2. Spies, "political" schemers.

Let all sweet ladies break their flattering glasses,\(^6\) mirrors
And dress themselves in her.

DELIO

Fie, Antonio,
You play the wire-drawer\(^3\) with her commendations.

ANTONIO

I'll case\(^0\) the picture up only thus much;
All her particular worth grows to this sum:
She stains\(^0\) the time past, lights the time to come.

CARDINAL

You must attend my lady in the gallery,
Some half an hour hence.

ANTONIO

I shall. \([\text{Exeunt} \ \text{ANTONIO} \ \text{and} \ \text{DELIO.}]\)

FERDINAND

Sister, I have a suit to you.

DUCHESS

To me, sir?

FERDINAND

A gentleman here, Daniel de Bosola,
One that was in the galleys—\(^4\)

DUCHESS

Yes, I know him.

FERDINAND

A worthy fellow he is. Pray, let me entreat for
The provisorship of your horse.\(^4\)

DUCHESS

Your knowledge of him Commends him and prefers him.

FERDINAND

Call him hither. \([\text{Exit} \ \text{ATTENDANT.}]\)

We are now upon\(^9\) parting. Good Lord Silvio,
Do us commend to all our noble friends
At the leaguer.\(^0\)

SILVIO

Sir, I shall.

DUCHESS

You are for Milan?

SILVIO

I am.

DUCHESS

Bring the caroches. We'll bring you down to the haven.'\(^1\)

\([\text{Exeunt all but} \ \text{FERDINAND and the CARDINAL.}]\)

CARDINAL

Be sure you entertain\(^6\) that Bosola
For your intelligence;\(^6\) I would not be seen in't;
And therefore many times I have slighted him
When he did court our fartherance, as this morning.

FERDINAND

Antonio, the great master of her household,
Had been far fitter.

CARDINAL

You are deceived in him:
His nature is too honest for such business.
He comes: I'll leave you. \([\text{Exit.}]\)

\([\text{Reenter} \ \text{BOSOLA.}]\)

BOSOLA

I was lured to you.

FERDINAND

My brother here the cardinal could never Abide you.

BOSOLA

Never since he was in my debt.

FERDINAND

Maybe some oblique character\(^9\) in your face
Made him suspect you.

BOSOLA

Doth he study physiognomy?
There's no more credit to be given to th' face
Than to a sick man's urine, which some call
The physician's whore, because she cozens\(^0\) him.

---

3. Draw out her praises excessively.
4. Let me beg (for him) the position of supervisor of your horse.
He did suspect me wrongfully.

FERDINAND

For that

You must give great men leave to take their times.

Distrust doth cause us seldom be deceived:

You see, the oft shaking of the cedar tree

Fastens it more at root.

BOSOLA

Yet, take heed;

For to suspect a friend unworthily

Instructs him the next way to suspect you,

And prompts him to deceive you.

FERDINAND [giving him money] There's gold.

BOSOLA

What follows? Never rained such showers as these

Without thunderbolts i' th' tail of them.

Whose throat must I cut?

FERDINAND

Your inclination to shed blood rides post

Before my occasion to use you. I give you that

To live i' th' court here, and observe the duchess;

To note all the particulars of her 'havior,

What suitors do solicit her for marriage,

And whom she best affects. She's a young widow:

I would not have her marry again.

BOSOLA

No, sir?

FERDINAND

Do not you ask the reason, but be satisfied

I say I would not.

BOSOLA

It seems you would create me

One of your familiars.

FERDINAND

Familiar? What's that?

BOSOLA

Why, a very quaint invisible devil in flesh,

An intelligencer.

FERDINAND

Such a land of thriving thing

I would wish thee, and ere long thou may'st arrive

At a higher place by't.

BOSOLA

Take your devils,

Which hell calls angels; these cursed gifts would make

You a corrupter, me an impudent traitor;

And should I take these, they'd take me to hell.

FERDINAND

Sir, I'll take nothing from you that I have given:

There is a place that I procured for you

This morning, the provisorship o' th' horse;

Have you heard on't?

BOSOLA

No.

FERDINAND

Tis yours. Is't not worth thanks?

BOSOLA

I would have you curse yourself now, that your bounty,

Which makes men truly noble, e'er should make me

A villain. Oh, that to avoid ingratitude

For the good deed you have done me, I must do

All the ill man can invent! Thus the devil

Candies all sins o'er; and what heaven terms vile,

6. Gold coins, marked with the image of the archangel Michael.
That names he complimental.

FERDINAND

Be yourself;

Keep your old garb of melancholy; 'twill express
You envy those that stand above your reach,
Yet strive not to come near 'em: this will gain
Access to private lodgings, where yourself
May, like a politic dormouse—

BOSOLA

As I have seen some
Feed in a lord's dish, half asleep, not seeming
To listen to any talk; and yet these rogues
Have cut his throat in a dream. What's my place?
The provisorship o' th' horse? Say, then, my corruption
Grew out of horse dung. I am your creature.

FERDINAND

Away!

BOSOLA

Let good men, for good deeds, covet good fame,
Since place and riches oft are bribes of shame:
Sometimes the devil doth preach.

[Exit.]

SCENE 3. The scene continues.

[Enter DUCHESS, CARDINAL, and CARIOLA.]

CARDINAL

We are to part from you, and your own discretion
Must now be your director.

FERDINAND

You are a widow:
You know already what man is; and therefore
Let not youth, high promotion, eloquence—

CARDINAL NO, nor any thing without the addition, honor,

Sway your high blood.

FERDINAND

Marry! They are most luxurious
Will wed twice.

CARDINAL

Oh, fie!

FERDINAND

Their livers are more spotted Than Laban's sheep.

DUCHESS

Diamonds are of most value,
They say, that have passed through most jewelers’ hands.

FERDINAND

Whores by that rule are precious.

DUCHESS

Will you hear me?

I'll never marry.

CARDINAL

So most widows say;
But commonly that motion's last no longer
Than the turning of an hourglass; the funeral sermon
And it end both together.

FERDINAND

Now hear me:
You live in a rank pasture, here, i' th' court;
There is a kind of honeydew that's deadly;
'Twill poison your fame look to't; be not cunning;
For they whose faces do belie their hearts

1. Dividing his flock with Jacob, Laban took the speckled sheep (Genesis 30.31—33); the liver as seat of the passions was thought to be diseased when discolored.

2. A sweet, sticky substance left on plants by aphids.

http://englishworld20111.wordpress.com/
Are witches ere they arrive at twenty years,
Aye, and give the devil suck.

DUCHESS    This is terrible good counsel.
FERDINAND  Hypocrisy is woven of a fine small thread, Subtler than Vulcan's engine;
yet, believe't,
Your darkest actions, nay, your privatest thoughts,
Will come to light.

CARDINAL YOU may flatter yourself,
And take your own choice; privately be married
Under the eaves of night—

FERDINAND  Think't the best voyage
            That e'er you made; like the irregular crab,
            Which, though't goes backward, thinks that it goes right
Because it goes its own way; but observe,
Such weddings may more properly be said
To be executed than celebrated.

CARDINAL The marriage night
            Is the entrance into some prison.
FERDINAND  And those joys,
            Those lustful pleasures, are like heavy sleeps
            Which do forerun man's mischief.
CARDINAL Fare you well.
            Wisdom begins at the end: remember it.

DUCHESS    I think this speech between you both was studied,
            It came so roundly off.
FERDINAND  You are my sister;
            This was my father's poniard,
            I'd be loath to see't look rusty, 'cause 'twas his.
I would have you to give o'er these chargeable revelations:
A visor and a mask are whispering rooms
That were ne'er built for goodness—fare ye well—
And women like that part which, like the lamprey,
Hath never a bone in't.

DUCHESS    Fie, sir!
FERDINAND  Nay,
            I mean the tongue; variety of courtship.
            What cannot a neat knave with a smooth tale
Make a woman believe? Farewell, lusty widow.

DUCHESS    Shall this move me? If all my royal kindred
            Lay in my way unto this marriage,
            I'd make them my low footsteps; and even now,
            Even in this hate, as men in some great battles,
            By apprehending danger, have achieved
Almost impossible actions (I have heard soldiers say so),
So I through frights and threatenings will assay
This dangerous venture. Let old wives report
I winked and chose a husband. Cariola,

3. The net in which Vulcan, Venus's husband, caught her misbehaving with Mars.
4. A half-mask, worn by ladies at carnivals, theaters, and other dubious resorts.
5. Lamprey eels have a cartilaginous, not a bony, skeleton.
To thy known secrecy I have given up
More than my life—my fame.

CARIOLA
Both shall be safe,
For I'll conceal this secret from the world
As warily as those that trade in poison
Keep poison from their children.

DUCHESS
Thy protestation
Is ingenious\(^0\) and hearty:\(^0\) I believe it.

CARIOLA
He attends you.

DUCHESS
Good dear soul,
Leave me, but place thyself behind the arras,\(^6\)
Where thou mayst overhear us. Wish me good speed,
For I am going into a wilderness
Where I shall find nor path nor friendly clue
To be my guide.

[DUCHESS]
I sent for you: sit down;
Take pen and ink, and write. Are you ready?

ANTONIO
Yes.

DUCHESS
What did I say?

ANTONIO
That I should write somewhat.

DUCHESS
Oh, I remember:
After these triumphs\(^9\) and this large expense,
It's fit, like thrifty husbands,\(^7\) we inquire
What's laid up for tomorrow.

ANTONIO
So please your beauteous excellence.

DUCHESS
Beauteous?

ANTONIO
I'll fetch your grace
The particulars of your revenue and expense.

DUCHESS
Oh, you are an upright treasurer: but you mistook;
For when I said I meant to make inquiry
What's laid up for tomorrow, I did mean
What's laid up yonder for me.

ANTONIO
Where?

DUCHESS
In heaven.

I am making my will (as 'tis fit princes should,
In perfect memory), and I pray sir, tell me,
Were not one better make it smiling thus
Than in deep groans and terrible ghastly looks,
As if the gifts we parted with procured\(^6\)
That violent distraction?

ANTONIO
Oh, much better.

DUCHESS
If I had a husband now, this care were quit:
But I intend to make you overseer.

\(^6\) Tapestries were often hung in Renaissance palaces to moderate the chill of the bare walls.
\(^7\) Though used here in its original sense of one who preserves and safeguards property, the word shows where the duchess's thoughts are tending.
What good deed shall we first remember? Say.

ANTONIO Begin with that first good deed begun i' th' world
After man's creation, the sacrament of marriage:
I'd have you first provide for a good husband;
Give him all.

DUCHESS All?
ANTONIO Yes, your excellent self.

DUCHESS In a winding-sheet?
ANTONIO In a couple.

DUCHESS Saint Winfred, that were a strange will!
ANTONIO 'Twere stranger if there were no will in you
To marry again.

DUCHESS What do you think of marriage?

ANTONIO I take't, as those that deny purgatory;
It locally contains or heaven or hell;
There's no third place in't.

DUCHESS How do you affect it?

ANTONIO My banishment, feeding my melancholy,
Would often reason thus—

DUCHESS Pray, let's hear it.

ANTONIO Say a man never marry, nor have children,
What takes that from him? Only the bare name
Of being a father, or the weak delight
To see the little wanton ride a-cock-horse
Upon a painted stick, or hear him chatter
Like a taught starling.

DUCHESS Fie, fie, what's all this?
One of your eyes is bloodshot; use my ring to't,
They say 'tis very sovereign.
'Twas my wedding ring,
And I did vow never to part with it
But to my second husband.

ANTONIO You have parted with it now.
DUCHESS Yes, to help your eyesight.

ANTONIO You have made me stark blind.

DUCHESS How?

ANTONIO There is a saucy and ambitious devil
Is dancing in this circle.

DUCHESS Remove him.

ANTONIO How?

DUCHESS There needs small conjuration, when your finger
May do it: thus; is it fit? [She puts the ring upon his finger; he kneels.]

ANTONIO What said you?

DUCHESS Sir,
This goodly roof of yours is too low built;
I cannot stand upright in't nor discourse,
Without I raise it higher: raise yourself;

---

8. Saint Winifred, Welsh virgin and martyr, is an odd saint for the Duchess of Malfi to swear on. "In a couple": i.e., of sheets—but with a play on "coupling."
9. Healing, but with an overtone implying royal power.
1. To conjure up a devil, the necromancer first draws a charmed circle on the ground—like the duchess's ring.
Or, if you please, my hand to help you: so. [Raises him.]

ANTONIO

Ambition, madam, is a great man’s madness,

That is not kept in chains and close-pent rooms,
But in fair lightsome lodgings, and is girt
With the wild noise of prattling visitants,
Which makes it lunatic beyond all cure.
Conceive not I am so stupid but I aim
Where your favors tend; but he’s a fool
That, being a-cold, would thrust his hands i’ th’ fire
To warm them.

DUCHESS

So, now the ground’s broke,
You may discover what a wealthy mine
I make you lord of.

ANTONIO

O my unworthiness!

DUCHESS

You were ill to sell yourself: This darkening of your worth is not like that
Which tradesmen use i’ th’ city; their false lights
Are to rid bad wares off: and I must tell you,
If you will know where breathes a complete man
(I speak it without flattery), turn your eyes,
And progress through yourself.

ANTONIO

Were there nor heaven
Nor hell, I should be honest: I have long served virtue,
And ne’er ta’en wages of her.

DUCHESS

Now she pays it. The misery of us that are born great!

We are forced to woo, because none dare woo us;
And as a tyrant doubles with his words
And fearfully equivocates, so we
Are forced to express our violent passions
In riddles and in dreams, and leave the path
Of simple virtue, which was never made
To seem the thing it is not. Go, go brag
You have left me heartless;’ mine is in your bosom:
I hope ’twill multiply love there. You do tremble:
Make not your heart so dead a piece of flesh,
To fear more than to love me. Sir, be confident:
What is’t that distracts you? This is flesh and blood, sir;
’Tis not the figure cut in alabaster
Kneels at your husband’s tomb. Awake, awake, man!
I do here put off all vain ceremony,
And only do appear to you a young widow
That claims you for her husband, and, like a widow,
I use but half a blush in’t.

ANTONIO

Truth speak for me,
I will remain the constant sanctuary
Of your good name.

DUCHESS

I thank you, gentle love:

And ’cause you shall not come to me in debt,

---

3. Tradesmen in the city display their goods in a poor light so the defects won’t be seen.
Being now my steward, here upon your lips
I sign your Quietus est. This you should have begged now;
I have seen children oft eat sweetmeats thus,
As fearful to devour them too soon.

ANTONIO But for your brothers?

DUCHESS Do not think of them.
All discord without this circumference is
Only to be pitied, and not feared;
Yet, should they know it, time will easily
Scatter the tempest.

ANTONIO These words should be mine,
And all the parts you have spoke, if some part of it
Would not have savored flattery.

DUCHESS Kneel.

[CARIOLA comes from behind the arras.]

ANTONIO Ha!

DUCHESS Be not amazed; this woman’s of my counsel:
I have heard lawyers say, a contract in a chamber,
Per verba de presenti is absolute marriage.
[Bless, heaven, this sacred gordian, which let violence knot
Never untwine!]

ANTONIO And may our sweet affections, like the spheres,
Be still in motion!

DUCHESS Quickening, and make
The like soft music!

ANTONIO That we may imitate the loving palms,
Best emblem of a peaceful marriage, that ne’er
Bore fruit, divided!

DUCHESS What can the church force more?

ANTONIO That fortune may not know an accident,
Either of joy or sorrow, to divide
Our fixed wishes!

DUCHESS How can the church bind faster?
We now are man and wife, and ’tis the church
That must but echo this. Maid, stand apart: I now am blind.

ANTONIO What’s your conceit in this?

DUCHESS I would have you lead your fortune by the hand
Unto your marriage bed
(You speak in me this, for we now are one);
We’ll only lie, and talk together, and plot
To appease my humorous kindred; and if you please,
Like the old tale in Alexander and Lodowick,
Lay a naked sword between us, keep us chaste.
Oh, let me shroud my blushes in your bosom,

THE DUCHESS OF MALFI 1.1 / 1475

Since 'tis the treasury of all my secrets!  [Exeunt DUCHESS and ANTONIO.]

CARIOLA Whether the spirit of greatness or of woman
Reign most in her, I know not; but it shows
A fearful madness: I owe her much of pity.       [Exit.]

Act 2

SCENE 1. The scene continues

[Enter BOSOLA and CASTRUCCIO.]

BOSOLA You say you would fain be taken for an eminent courtier?

CASTRUCCIO Tis the very main of my ambition.

BOSOLA Let me see: you have a reasonable good face for it already, and your nightcap expresses your ears sufficient largely. I would have you learn to twirl the strings of your band with a good grace, and in a set speech, at th' end of every sentence, to hum three or four times, or blow your nose till it smart again, to recover your memory. When you come to be a president in criminal causes, if you smile upon a prisoner, hang him, but if you frown upon him and threaten him, let him be sure to 'scape the gallows.

CASTRUCCIO I would be a very merry president.

BOSOLA Do not sup o' nights; 'twill beget you an admirable wit.

CASTRUCCIO Rather it would make me have a good stomach to quarrel; for they say, your roaring boys eat meat seldom, and that makes them so valiant. But how shall I know whether the people take me for an eminent fellow?

BOSOLA I will teach a trick to know it: give out you lie a-dying, and if you hear the common people curse you, be sure you are taken for one of the prime nightcaps.

[Enter an OLD LADY.]

You come from painting now?

OLD LADY From what?

BOSOLA Why, from your scurvy face-physic. To behold thee not painted inclines somewhat near a miracle; these in thy face here were deep ruts and foul sloughs the last progress. There was a lady in France that, having had the smallpox, flayed the skin off her face to make it more level; and whereas before she looked like a nutmeg grater, after she resembled an abortive hedgehog.

OLD LADY Do you call this painting?

BOSOLA No, no, but you call it careening of an old morphewed lady, to make her disemboque again: there's rough-cast phrase to your plastic.

OLD LADY It seems you are well acquainted with my closet.

BOSOLA One would suspect it for a shop of witchcraft, to find in it the fat of serpents, spawn of snakes, Jews' spittle, and their young children's ordure; and all these for the face. I would sooner eat a dead pigeon taken from the soles of the feet of one sick of the plague than kiss one of you fasting.⁸

Here are two of you, whose sin of your youth is the very patrimony of the physician; makes him renew his footcloth with the spring, and change his high-prized courtesan with the fall of the leaf.⁹ I do wonder you do not loathe yourselves. Observe my meditation now:
What thing is in this outward form of man
To be beloved? We account it ominous,
If nature do produce a colt, or lamb,
A fawn, or goat, in any limb resembling
A man, and fly from’t as a prodigy.⁹
Man stands amazed to see his deformity
In any other creature but himself.
But in our own flesh, though we bear diseases
Which have their true names only ta’en from beasts—
As the most ulcerous wolf and swinish measle—
Though we are eaten up of lice and worms,
And though continually we bear about us
A rotten and dead body, we delight
To hide it in rich tissue: all our fear,
Nay, all our terror, is lest our physician
Should put us in the ground to be made sweet—
Your wife’s gone to Rome: you two couple, and get you
To the wells at Lucca to recover your aches.²

[Exeunt CASTRUCCIO and OLD LADY.]
I have other work on foot. I observe our duchess
Is sick a-days: she pukes, her stomach seethes,
The fins of her eyelids look most teeming blue,
She wanes i’ th’ cheek, and waxes fat i’ th’ flank,
And contrary to our Italian fashion,
Wears a loose-bodied gown: there’s somewhat in t.
I have a trick may chance discover it,
A pretty one; I have bought some apricots,
The first our spring yields.

[Enter ANTONIO and DELIO, talking apart.]
DELIO
And so long since married?
You amaze me.

ANTONIO
Let me seal your lips forever:
For, did I think that anything but th’ air
Could carry these words from you, I should wish
You had no breath at all.

[turning to BOSOLA]
Now, sir, in your contemplation? You are studying to become a great wise fellow?

BOSOLA
Oh, sir, the opinion of wisdom is a foul tetter³ that runs all over a man’s body. If simplicity⁴ direct us to have no evil, it directs us to a happy

8. Centuries of traditional invective about women’s cosmetic practices lie behind this speech.
Freshly killed pigeons were applied to the feet of plague victims to draw off the infection; fasting was supposed to cause bad breath.
9. The physician grows rich on those who have outworn their youth; every spring he buys a new harness for his horse and every fall a new mistress for himself.
2. The wells at Lucca are the mineral springs at nearby Montecatini, renowned as a place to “take the cure.” Aches are a symptom of syphilis.

being, for the subtlest folly proceeds from the subtlest wisdom.
Let me be simply honest.

ANTONIO  I do understand your inside.

BOSOLA  Do you so?

ANTONIO  Because you would not seem to appear to th' world
Puffed up with your preferment, you continue
This out-of-fashion melancholy. Leave it, leave it.

BOSOLA  Give me leave to be honest in any phrase, in any compliment whatev er. Shall I confess myself to you? I look no higher than I can reach:
they are the gods that must ride on winged horses. A lawyer's mule of a slow pace will both suit my disposition and business; for, mark me, when a man's mind rides faster than his horse can gallop, they quickly both tire.

ANTONIO  You would look up to heaven, but I think
The devil, that rules i' th' air, stands in your light.

BOSOLA  Oh, sir, you are lord of the ascendant, \(^5\) chief man with the duchess;
a duke was your cousin-german removed. \(^6\) Say you were lineally descended from King Pepin, \(^7\) or he himself, what of this? Search the heads of the greatest rivers in the world, you shall find them but bubbles of water. Some would think the souls of princes were brought forth by some more weighty cause than those of meaner persons: they are deceived, there's the same hand to them; the like passions sway them; the same reason that makes a vicar go to law for a tithe-pig \(^8\) and undo his neighbors, makes them spoil a whole province, and batter down goodly cities with the cannon.

[Enter duchess and ladies.]

DUCHESS  Your arm, Antonio; do I not grow fat?
I am exceeding short-winded. Bosola,
I would have you, sir, provide for me a litter,
Such a one as the Duchess of Florence rode in.

BOSOLA  The duchess used one when she was great with child.

DUCHESS  I think she did. Come hither, mend my ruff;
Here, when? Thou art such a tedious \(^9\) lady, and clumsy
Thy breath smells of lemon peels; \(^9\) would thou hadst done;
Shall I swoon under thy fingers? I am
So troubled with the mother! \(^1\)

BOSOLA  [aside] I fear too much.

DUCHESS  I have heard you say that the French courtiers
Wear their hats on 'fore the king.

ANTONIO  You must pardon me.

DUCHESS  Why should not we bring up that fashion? 'Tis Ceremony more than duty that consists
In the removing of a piece of felt.
Be you the example to the rest o' th' court;
Put on your hat first.

ANTONIO  You must pardon me.

7. Father of Charlemagne, hence source of a great dynasty.
8. A parson was entitled to a tenth ("tithe") of his parishioners' annual profit and was often paid in crops or livestock, but was thought mean if he sued for a petty sum.
9. Lemon peels, chewed to sweeten the breath.
1. Heartburn, but with a second meaning not lost on Bosola.
I have seen, in colder countries than in France, Nobles stand bare to th’ prince, and the distinction Methought showed reverently.

BOSOLA I have a present for your grace.

DUCHESS For me, sir?

BOSOLA Apricots, madam.

DUCHESS O, sir, where are they?

BOSOLA [aside] Good: her color rises.

DUCHESS Indeed, I thank you: they are wondrous fair ones. What an unskilful fellow is our gardener! We shall have none this month.

BOSOLA Will not your grace pare them?

DUCHESS No. They taste of musk, methinks; indeed they do.

BOSOLA I know no: yet I wish your grace had pared em.

DUCHESS Why?

BOSOLA I forgot to tell you, the knave gardener, Only to raise his profit by them the sooner, Did ripen them in horse dung.\(^2\)

DUCHESS O, you jest.

You shall judge: pray taste one.

ANTONIO Indeed, madam, I do not love the fruit.

DUCHESS Sir, you are loath To rob us of our dainties: ’tis a delicate fruit; They say they are restorative.

BOSOLA ’Tis a pretty art, This grafting.

DUCHESS Tis so; a bettering of nature.

BOSOLA To make a pippin grow upon a crab,\(^3\) A damson on a blackthorn. [aside] How greedily she eats them! A whirlwind strike off these bawd farthingales!\(^3\) For, but for that and the loose-bodied gown, I should have discovered apparently\(^6\) The young springgP cutting a caper in her belly.

DUCHESS I thank you, Bosola. They were right good ones, If they do not make me sick.

ANTONIO How now, madam?

DUCHESS This green fruit and my stomach are not friends; How they swell me!

BOSOLA [aside] Nay, you are too much swelled already.

DUCHESS Oh, I am in an extreme cold sweat!

BOSOLA I am very sorry.

DUCHESS Lights to my chamber! O good Antonio, I fear I am undone!

DELIO Lights there, lights! [Exit duchess and ladies..Exit, on the other side, bosola.]

ANTONIO O my most trusty Delio, we are lost!

2. Which grows warm as it decomposes.

3. Early hoopskirts, capable of concealing the figure.
I fear she's fall'n in labor; and there's left
No time for her remove.

DELIO Have you prepared
Those ladies to attend her? And procured
That politic safe conveyance for the midwife
Your duchess plotted?

ANTONIO I have.

DELIO Make use, then, of this forced occasion:
Give out that Bosola hath poisoned her
With these apricots; that will give some color
For her keeping close.

ANTONIO Fie, fie, the physicians
Will then flock to her.

DELIO For that you may pretend
She'll use some prepared antidote of her own,
Lest the physicians should re-poison her.

ANTONIO I am lost in amazement: I know not what to think on't.

SCENE 2. The scene continues.

Enter Bosola.

BOSOLA So, so, there's no question but her tetchiness and most vulturous eating of the apricots are apparent signs of breeding.

[Enter an Old Lady.]

OLD LADY I am in haste, sir.

BOSOLA There was a young waiting woman had a monstrous desire to see the glasshouse—

OLD LADY Nay, pray let me go.

BOSOLA And it was only to know what strange instrument it was should swell up a glass to the fashion of a woman's belly.

OLD LADY I will hear no more of the glasshouse. You are still abusing women!

BOSOLA Who, I? No; only by the way now and then mention your frailties.
The orange tree bears ripe and green fruit and blossoms all together; and some of you give entertainment for pure love, but more for more precious reward. The lusty spring smells well, but drooping autumn tastes well. If we have the same golden showers that rained in the time of Jupiter the thunderer, you have the same Danaes still, to hold up their laps to receive them.

OLD LADY What's that, sir?

BOSOLA Why, to know the trick how to make a many lines meet in one center.
Go, go, give your foster daughters good counsel: tell them that the devil takes delight to hang at a woman's girdle, like a false rusty watch, that she cannot discern how the time passes.

[Exit Old Lady.]

Enter Antonio, Delio, Roderigo, and Grisolan.

---

2.2 1. Irritability.
2. Where bottles were blown, near the theater in Blackfriars.
3. Always.
ANTONIO    Shut up the courtgates.
RODERIGO    Why, sir? What's the danger?
ANTONIO    Shut up the posterns presently, and call
          All the officers o' th' court.
GRISOLAN    I shall instantly.    [Exit.]
ANTONIO    Who keeps the key o' th' park gate?
RODERIGO    Forobasco.
ANTONIO    Let him bring't presently.
          [Reenter GRISOLAN with SERVANTS.]
1 SERVANT    O, gentlemen o' th' court, the foulest treason!
BOSOLA [aside]    If that these apricots should be poisoned now,
                   Without my knowledge!
1 SERVANT    There was taken even now
                   A Switzer in the duchess' bedchamber——
2 SERVANT    A Switzer?
1 SERVANT    With a pistol in his great codpiece.
BOSOLA    Ha, ha, ha!
1 SERVANT    The codpiece was the case for't.
2 SERVANT    There was
                   A cunning traitor: who would have searched his codpiece?
1 SERVANT    True, if he had kept out of the ladies' chambers.
                   And all the molds of his buttons were leaden bullets.
2 SERVANT    O wicked cannibal!
                   A firelock in's codpiece!
1 SERVANT    'Twas a French plot,
                   Upon my life.
2 SERVANT    To see what the devil can do!
ANTONIO    Are all the officers here?
SERVANTS    We are.
ANTONIO    Gentlemen,
          We have lost much plate you know, and but this evening
          Jewels, to the value of four thousand ducats,
          Are missing in the duchess' cabinet.
          Are the gates shut?
SERVANT    Yes.
ANTONIO    'Tis the duchess' pleasure
          Each officer be locked into his chamber
          Till the sun-rising; and to send the keys
          Of all their chests and of their outward doors
          Into her bedchamber. She is very sick.
RODERIGO    At her pleasure.
ANTONIO    She entreats you take't not ill:
          The innocent shall be the more approved by it.
BOSOLA    Gentlemen o' th' wood-yard, where's your Switzer now?
1 SERVANT    By this hand, 'twas credibly reported by one o' th' black guard.
          [Exeunt all except ANTONIO and DELIO.]
DELIO    How fares it with the duchess?

5. At once. "Posterns": outer gates.
6. An outer flap worn on the front of men's trunk hose.
7. Massive gold and silver dishes, a frequent form of wealth in the days before banks.
8. Kitchen scullions. The "wood-yard" is a source of firewood for kitchen and fireplaces.
She's exposed
Unto the worst of torture, pain, and fear.

Speak to her all happy comfort.

How I do play the fool with mine own danger!
You are this night, dear friend, to post to Rome;
My life lies in your service.

Do not doubt me.

Oh, 'tis far from me, and yet fear presents me
Somewhat that looks like danger.

Believe it,

Tis but the shadow of your fear, no more;
How superstitiously we mind our evils!
The throwing down salt, or crossing of a hare,
Bleeding at nose, the stumbling of a horse,
Or singing of a cricket, are of power

I wish you all the joys of a blessed father:
And, for my faith, lay this unto your breast,
Old friends, like old swords, still are trusted best.

Sir, you are the happy father of a son:
Your wife commends him to you.

Blessed comfort!

For heaven's sake tend her well: I'll presently
Go set a figure for's nativity.

The scene continues.

Sure I did hear a woman shriek: list, ha!
And the sound came, if I received it right,
From the duchess' lodgings. There's some stratagem
In the confining all our courtiers
To their several wards: I must have part of it;
My intelligence will freeze else.
It may be 'twas the melancholy bird,
Best friend of silence and of solitariness,
The owl, that screamed so. Ha! Antonio?

Antonio? Put not your face nor body
To such a forced expression of fear.
I am Bosola, your friend.

Bosola! [aside] This mole does undermine me.—Heard you not
A noise even now?

From whence?

Not I. Did you?

Cast his horoscope right away.

All my news will be cold otherwise.
ANTONIO  I did, or else I dreamed.
BOSOLA  Let's walk towards it.
ANTONIO  No, it may be 'twas
But the rising of the wind.
BOSOLA  Very likely.
  Methinks 'tis very cold, and yet you sweat:
  You look wildly.
ANTONIO  I have been setting a figure
  For the duchess' jewels.
BOSOLA  Ah, and how falls your question?
      Do you find it radical?
ANTONIO  What's that to you?
      'Tis rather to be questioned what design,
      When all men were commanded to their lodgings,
      Makes you a nightwalker.
BOSOLA  In sooth, I'll tell you:
      Now all the court's asleep, I thought the devil
      Had least to do here; I came to say my prayers;
      And if it do offend you I do so,
      You are a fine courtier.
ANTONIO  [aside]  This fellow will undo me.
You gave the duchess apricots today:
Pray heaven they were not poisoned!
BOSOLA  Poisoned? A Spanish fig
      For the imputation!
ANTONIO  Traitors are ever confident
      Till they are discovered. There were jewels stolen, too;
      In my conceit, none are to be suspected
      More than yourself.
BOSOLA  You are a false steward.
ANTONIO  Saucy slave, I'll pull thee up by the roots.
BOSOLA  May be the ruin will crush you to pieces.
ANTONIO  You are an impudent snake indeed, sir:
      Are you scarce warm, and do you show your sting?
      You libel well, sir.
BOSOLA  No, sir; copy it out,
      And I will set my hand to't.
One that were superstitious would count
This ominous, when it merely comes by chance:
Two letters, that are wrought here for my name,
Are drowned in blood!
Mere accident.—For you, sir, I'll take order
I' th' morn you shall be safe.  [aside]  'Tis that must color
Her lying-in—Sir, this door you pass not:
I do not hold it fit that you come near
The duchess' lodgings, till you have quit yourself.

2. Establishing the loss involved. But Bosola takes the expression astrologically, as if Antonio were casting a horoscope.
3. An obscene gesture, which Bosola doubtless makes onstage.
4. Bosola denies the charge, not by denying malignancy, but by offering to publish it.
5. Embroidered on the handkerchief.
[aside] The great are like the base, nay, they are the same,
When they seek shameful ways to avoid shame. [Exit.]

BOSOLA Antonio hereabout did drop a paper:
Some of your help, false friend: [opening his lantern] Oh, here it is.
What's here? A child's nativity calculated? [reads]
"The duchess was delivered of a son, 'tween the hours twelve and one in the night, Anno Dom. 1504,"—that's this year—"decimo nono Decem-bris,"—that's this night—"taken according to the meridian of Malfi"—that's our duchess: happy discovery! "The lord of the first house being combust in the ascendant, signifies short life; and Mars being in a human sign, joined to the tail of the Dragon, in the eighth house, doth threaten a violent death.
Caetera non scrutantur."

Why, now 'tis most apparent: this precise fellow
Is the duchess' bawd. I have it to my wish!
This is a parcel of intelligency
Our courtiers were cased up for: it needs must follow
That I must be committed on pretense
Of poisoning her, which I'll endure, and laugh at.
If one could find the father now! But that
Time will discover. Old Castruccio
I' th' morning posts to Rome: by him I'll send
A letter that shall make her brothers' galls
O'erflow their livers. This was a thrifty way.

Though lust do mask in ne'er so strange disguise,
She's oft found witty, but is never wise. [Exit.]

SCENE 4. The palace of the CARDINAL at Rome.

[Enter CARDINAL and JULIA]

CARDINAL Sit. Thou art my best of wishes. Prithée, tell me
What trick didst thou invent to come to Rome
Without thy husband.

JULIA Why, my lord, I told him
I came to visit an old anchorite—
Here for devotion.

CARDINAL Thou art a witty false one—
I mean, to him.

JULIA You have prevailed with me
Beyond my strongest thoughts! I would not now Find you inconstant.

CARDINAL Do not put thyself
To such a voluntary torture, which proceeds
Out of your own guilt.

JULIA How, my lord?

CARDINAL You fear
My constancy, because you have approved
Those giddy and wild turnings in yourself.

JULIA Did you e'er find them?

7. Burnt up, i.e., the ruling planet is close to the sun.
8. "The rest is not examined"—i.e., the horoscope is incomplete. Mars and the Dragon are sinister signs, even separately; fatal together.
CARDINAL
Sooth, generally for women;
A man might strive to make glass malleable,
Ere he should make them fixed.
JULIA
So, my lord.
CARDINAL
We had need go borrow that fantastic glass
Invented by Galileo the Florentine,
To view another spacious world i’ th’ moon,
And look to find a constant woman there.
JULIA
This is very well, my lord.
CARDINAL
Why do you weep?
Are tears your justification? The selfsame tears
Will fall into your husband’s bosom, lady,
With a loud protestation that you love him
Above the world. Come, I’ll love you wisely,
That’s jealously, since I am very certain
You cannot make me cuckold.
JULIA
I’ll go home
To my husband.
CARDINAL
You may thank me, lady,
I have taken you off your melancholy perch,
Bore you upon my fist, and showed you game,
And let you fly at it. I pray thee, kiss me.
When thou wast with thy husband, thou wast watched
Like a tame elephant: still you are to thank me:
Thou hadst only kisses from him and high feeding;
But what delight was that? ’Twas just like one
That hath a little fingering on the lute,
Yet cannot tune it: still you are to thank me.
JULIA
You told me of a piteous wound i’ th’ heart
And a sick liver, when you wooed me first,
And spake like one in physic.
[A knock is heard.]
CARDINAL
Who’s that?

[Enter SERVANT.]
SERVANT
Madam, a gentleman,
That’s come post from Malfi, desires to see you.
CARDINAL
Let him enter. I’ll withdraw.
[Exit.
SERVANT
He says
Your husband, old Castruccio, is come to Rome,
Most pitifully tired with riding post.
[Enter DELIO.]
JULIA
Signor Delio! [aside]—’tis one of my old suitors.
DELIO
I was bold to come and see you.
JULIA
Sir, you are welcome.

2.4
1. In 1594, Galileo’s telescope was more than one hundred years in the future, but the reference was topical for Webster’s audience.
2. The cardinal speaks of himself as a falconer training a bird (Julia).
3. Like a person under a doctor’s care.
4. When riding post, one changed horses at regular intervals without stopping to rest oneself.
DELIO Do you lie here?

JULIA Sure, your own experience
Will satisfy you no: our Roman prelates
Do not keep lodging for ladies.

DELIO Very well.
I have brought you no commendations from your husband,
For I know none by him.

JULIA I hear he's come to Rome.

DELIO I never knew man and beast, of a horse and a knight,
So weary of each other: if he had had a good back,
He would have undertook to have borne his horse,
His breech was so pitifully sore.

JULIA Your laughter
Is my pity.

DELIO Lady, I know not whether
You want money, but I have brought you some.

JULIA From my husband?

DELIO No, from mine own allowance.

JULIA I must hear the condition, ere I be bound to take it.

DELIO Look on't, 'tis gold: hath it not a fine color?

JULIA I have a bird more beautiful.

DELIO Try the sound on't.

JULIA A lute string far exceeds it:
It hath no smell, like cassia or civet;
Nor is it physical, though some fond doctors
Persuade us seethe't in culisses: I'll tell you,
This is a creature bred by—

[Reenter SERVANT.]

SERVANT Your husband's come,
Hath delivered a letter to the Duke of Calabria
That, to my thinking, hath put him out of his wits.

JULIA Sir, you hear:
Pray, let me know your business and your suit
As briefly as can be.

DELIO With good speed: I would wish you,
At such time as you are nonresident
With your husband, my mistress.

JULIA Sir, I'll go ask my husband if I shall,
And straight return your answer.

DELIO Very fine!
Is this her wit, or honesty, that speaks thus?
I heard one say the duke was highly moved
With a letter sent from MalFi. I do fear
Antonio is betrayed: how fearfully
Shows his ambition now! Unfortunate fortune!
They pass through whirlpools, and deep woes do shun,
Who the event weigh ere the action's done.5

SCENE 5. The scene continues.

[Enter CARDINAL, and FERDINAND with a letter.]

FERDINAND I have this night digged up a mandrake.¹
CARDINAL Say you?
FERDINAND And I am grown mad with't.
CARDINAL What's the prodigy?⁰ fearful wonder
FERDINAND Read there—A sister damned: she's loose i' th' hilts;²
Grown a notorious strumpet.
CARDINAL Speak lower.
FERDINAND Lower?
Rogues do not whisper't now, but seek to publish't
(As servants do the bounty of their lords)
Aloud; and with a covetous searching eye,
To mark who note them. O, confusion seize her!
She hath had most cunning bawds to serve her turn,
And more secure conveyances for lust
Than towns of garrison for service.⁹ receiving supplies
CARDINAL Is't possible?
FERDINAND Rhubarb, oh, for rhubarb
To purge this choler!¹³ Here's the cursed day
To prompt my memory, and here't shall stick
Till of her bleeding heart I make a sponge
To wipe it out.
CARDINAL Why do you make yourself
So wild a tempest?
FERDINAND Would I could be one,
That I might toss her palace 'bout her ears,
Root up her goodly forests, blast her meads,⁶ meadows
And lay her general territory as waste
As she hath done her honors.
CARDINAL Shall our blood,
The royal blood of Aragon and Castile,
Be thus attained?
FERDINAND Apply desperate physic.⁷ medicine
We must not now use balsamum,⁸ but fire,⁹ balm/cautery
The smarting cupping glass⁴ for that's the mean
To purge infected blood, such blood as hers.
There is a kind of pity in mine eye,
I'll give it to my handkercher; and now 'tis here,
I'll bequeath this to her bastard.
CARDINAL What to do?
FERDINAND Why, to make soft lint for his mother's wounds,
When I have hewed her to pieces.
CARDINAL Cursed creature!

FERDINAND Foolish men,
That e'er will trust their honor in a bark
Made of so slight weak bulrush as is woman,
Apt every minute to sink it!

CARDINAL Thus ignorance, when it hath purchased honor,
It cannot wield it.

FERDINAND Methinks I see her laughing—
Excellent hyena! Talk to me somewhat, quickly,
Or my imagination will carry me
To see her in the shameful act of sin.

CARDINAL With whom?

FERDINAND Haply\(^6\) with some strong-thighed bargeman, perhaps
Or one o' th' wood-yard that can quoit the sledge\(^7\) throw the hammer
Or toss the bar,\(^8\) or else some lovely squire
That carries coal up to her privy lodgings.

CARDINAL You fly beyond your reason.

FERDINAND Go to, mistress!
Tis not your whore's milk that shall quench my wild fire,
But your whore's blood.

CARDINAL How idly shows this rage, which carries you,
As men conveyed by witches through the air,
On violent whirlwinds! This intemperate noise
Fitly resembles deaf men's shrill discourse,
Who talk aloud,\(^9\) thinking all other men loudly
To have their imperfection.

FERDINAND Have not you
My palsy?

CARDINAL Yes, I can be angry, but Without this rupture: there is not in nature
A thing that makes man so deformed, so beastly,
As doth intemperate anger. Chide yourself.
You have divers men who never yet expressed
Their strong desire of rest but by unrest,
By vexing of themselves. Come, put yourself
In tune.

FERDINAND So; I will only study to seem
The thing I am not. I could kill her now,
In you, or in myself; for I do think
It is some sin in us heaven doth revenge
By her.

CARDINAL Are you stark mad?

FERDINAND I would have their bodies
Burnt in a coal pit with the vantage\(^8\) chimney stopped,
That their cursed smoke might not ascend to heaven;
Or dip the sheets they lie in in pitch or sulphur,

FERDINAND

Act 3

Scene 1. Amalfi.

[Enter ANTONIO and DELIO.]

ANTONIO Our noble friend, my most beloved Delio!
Oh, you have been a stranger long at court;
Came you along with the Lord Ferdinand?
DELIO I did, sir. And how fares your noble duchess?

ANTONIO Right fortunately well: she's an excellent
Feeder of pedigrees; since you last saw her,
She hath had two children more, a son and daughter.
DELIO Methinks 'twas yesterday: let me but wink,
And not behold your face, which to mine eye
Is somewhat leaner, verily I should dream
It were within this half-hour.

ANTONIO You have not been in law, friend Delio,
Nor in prison, nor a suitor at the court,
Nor begged the reversion of some great man's place,
Nor troubled with an old wife, which doth make
Your time so insensibly° hasten.

DELIO Pray, sir, tell me,
Hath not this news arrived yet to the ear
Of the Lord Cardinal?

ANTONIO I fear it hath:
The Lord Ferdinand, that's newly come to court,
Doth bear himself right dangerously.
DELIO Pray, why?

ANTONIO He is so quiet that he seems to sleep
The tempest out, as dormice do in winter.
Those houses that are haunted are most still
Till the devil be up.

DELIO What say the common people?

ANTONIO The common rabble do directly say
She is a strumpet.

The Middle Ages (to ca. 1485)

Scepter, from the Sutton Hoo Treasure, ca. 625 C.E.

Discovered in 1939, among other items (jewelry, pottery, fragments of a helmet and shield), in a funeral ship buried in a mound near the coast of East Anglia, the scepter—probably a symbol of royal authority—consists of a massive ceremonial whetstone carved with faces and attached to a ring of twisted bronze wires mounted by an intricately carved stag. The treasure suggests the one laden on Scyld's funeral ship in Beowulf (lines 26—52; pp. 31—32) and the material world imagined throughout the poem; the scepter evokes the “gold standard / high above [the king's] head.” THE BRITISH MUSEUM, LONDON, UK; BRIDGEMAN ART LIBRARY.
Stories of the Nativity figure prominently both in the mystery plays and in medieval Psalters such as this one. The Latin text on the angels' scrolls is from Luke 2.11, "Natus est nobis hodie salvator qui est Christus Dominus in civitate David" (Unto us is born in the city of David a savior who is Christ the Lord). Herod's scroll gives his instructions to the Magi from Matthew 2.8, "ite et interrogate diligentem de puer" (go and inquire diligently about the child). The caption above each image is in French. THE BRITISH LIBRARY, COTTON NERO C. IV, FOLIO 11.
Noah urging his wife to board the ark, ca. 1290

Noah’s trouble getting his wife to board the ark was a popular subject in medieval drama and art (See Chaucer, The Miller's Tale, lines 430-35; p. 200). In this illustration from a Psalter, Noah admonishes his wife with his left hand and grabs her wrist with the right, urging her to come aboard. Concealed, riding piggyback on the wife, a winged devil comes along as a stowaway. Below, he exits through the hull among drowned bodies on the seafloor. Other manuscripts show the serpent plugging the hole with his tail. THE PIERPONT MORGAN LIBRARY/ART RESOURCE, NY.
Plowing, the Luttrell Psalter, ca. 1330

The Psalter made for Sir Geoffrey Luttrell is sumptuously illustrated with idealized depictions of family, servants, workers, animals, and their activities (plowing, sowing, harvesting, feasting, playing) on the lord's estate; it is also elaborately decorated with foliage and grotesques. The Plowman here is a symbolic figure of order like Chaucer's Plowman (p. 183) and Langland's Piers Plowman (p. 271). The image echoes line 6 of the Psalm above, "Si dicebam motus est pes meus, misericordia tua, domine, adiuvabat me" (If I said: My foot is moved: thy mercy, Lord, helped me); "pes" (foot) anticipates the plow foot that moves the soil. THE BRITISH LIBRARY, FOLIO 170R FROM THE LUTTRELL PSALTER, MS ADDITIONAL 42150.
The Wilton Diptych,
Flemish school, 1395—96

Richard II commissioned this double-panel painting, both pious and political, not long before his deposition. In it he is portrayed as a boy, perhaps ten years old, the age at which he became king. Two English kings, St. Edmund and St. Edward "the Confessor," and John the Baptist, Richard's patron saint, present the young king to the Virgin and Child, who are surrounded by angels. The Christ Child blesses the red-cross standard of St. George (the patron saint of England), about to be given into the kneeling king's open hands. Richard's robe and the angels' sleeves display his personal emblem, a white hart (punning on riche-hart).

NATIONAL GALLERY, LONDON, GREAT BRITAIN/ART RESOURCE, NY.
The Crucifixion, Lapworth Missal, 1398

This late medieval manuscript illumination typically portrays the humanity of Christ: frail, eyes closed, head inclining on his shoulder. At the sides stand the Virgin mother, who swoons in the arms of Mary Magdalene, and St. John the evangelist. The skull signifies Golgotha (place of skulls), the site of the Crucifixion. According to medieval legend, the tree of knowledge had stood on the same site and Adam was buried there: thus the skull is that of Adam, whose original sin is being redeemed by the blood that the angels are collecting. The sun and moon symbolize the New and Old Testaments: as the sun illumines the moon, the light of the New Testament reveals the hidden truths of the Old. Symbols of the four evangelists appear in the corners of the intricately decorated frame.

CORPUS CHRISTI COLLEGE, UNIVERSITY OF OXFORD, MS 594.
Portrait of Chaucer, ca. 1411

In his poem The Regiment of Princes, Hoccleve, a younger disciple of Chaucer, memorializes "My maistir Chaucer, flour of eloquence, / Mirour of fructuous entendement, / O universel fadir in science!" One manuscript preserves a copy of a small portrait that Hoccleve placed in the margin so "That they that han of him lost thought and mynde / By this peynture may ageyn him fynde." Chaucer holds a rosary in his left hand; attached to his gown, a penknife (formerly used for making and mending quill pens) or pen case functions as a symbol of authorship.

THE BRITISH LIBRARY, MS HARLEY 4866, FOLIO 88.

Manuscript illumination of pilgrims leaving Canterbury, ca. 1420

Chaucer’s pilgrims never get to Canterbury, but they do in the prologue to John Lydgate’s The Siege of Thebes. In the prologue, Lydgate, a monk of Bury St. Edmund’s and an enthusiastic follower of Chaucer, tells how on his own pilgrimage to Canterbury he encounters Chaucer’s pilgrims. The Host invites the monk to join the company on their return journey and calls on him to tell the first tale. Lydgate is the middle figure in a monk’s cowl, costumed more soberly than Chaucer’s Monk (pp. 174—75). The cathedral and walls of Canterbury appear in the background. THE BRITISH LIBRARY, MS ROYAL 18 D II, FOLIO 148.
The medieval nobility regarded the hunt as both a sport and an art—a test of the skill and endurance of men, dogs, and quarry. These scenes of hunters stalking the deer, breaking up the carcass, and pursuing the boar correspond to the Gawain poet's elaborate descriptions of the first two hunts (pp. 137ff., 143ff.). The stylized rhetoric describing the hunts both parallels and contrasts with the stylized exchanges between Gawain and the lady in the interspersed bedroom scenes where she is the hunter and he the quarry. St. George and the Dragon (London version), Paolo Uccello, ca. 1455—60

A depiction by the Florentine artist Uccello of the legend that was to inspire Edmund Spenser in Book I of The Faerie Queene (p. 370). Already held on a leash by the elegant lady—as if the struggle's outcome were not in doubt—the dragon submits to the knight's lance (thrust through the nose in a gesture that better recalls the domestication of cattle than the thwarting of an enemy). The desolate cave is strangely conjoined with the formal garden and the lady's elegant court dress: the story is imagined as located at once in the wilderness and at the very center of civilization. NATIONAL GALLERY, LONDON, GREAT BRITAIN/ART SOURCE, NY.
Painted on the eve of More's great conflict with Henry VIII over the validity of the king's marriage to Catherine of Aragon, Holbein's portrait emphasizes both the chancellor's importance and his strength of character. More wears the heavy gold chain and rich dress of high office, which he had satirized a decade earlier in Utopia. In all probability, if early biographies of More can be believed, he also wears a hair shirt under the velvet and fur, a hidden, painful reminder of the vulnerable flesh that he secretly mortified. COPYRIGHT THE FRICK COLLECTION, NEW YORK.

Edward VI and the Pope: An Allegory of the Reformation, English school, ca. 1568—71

The dying Henry VIII hands over the mandate for church reform to his young son and heir, Prince Edward. This is a polemical attempt to depict the religious revolution that had a deep impact on English society and literature. The open book, proclaiming the Protestant emphasis on the Word of God in vernacular translation, crushes the pope and the taglines of Catholic corruption that surround him. The Council of Regency (appointed to guide the king, who was only nine when he ascended the throne) is in attendance; to the left, two monks flee the pope's downfall. In the upper right, a painting (or view from the window?) heralds the collapse of the Old Church and the breaking of its “idols.” Several places in the painting are intended for inscriptions, but for unknown reasons these were never completed. NATIONAL PORTRAIT GALLERY, LONDON, UK/BRIDGEMAN ART LIBRARY.
Accompanying Thomas Hariot's Brief and True Report of the New-found Land of Virginia, John White's watercolors chronicle the most striking images of Algonkian life as seen by the English voyagers. Here, a young girl "of the age of 8 or 10 yeares" carries a European doll, dressed in full Elizabethan costume, that she has clearly been given as a gift by the strange visitors. The presentation of small gifts was a regular part of English practice, frequently alternating with displays of murderous violence. White's drawing manages to convey both the exoticism and the dignity that Hariot and others perceived in the American natives.

疸恤ควม and Daughter of a Chief,
John White, 1585

Portrait of a Melancholy Young Man, Isaac Oliver; ca. 1590-95

Equally fashionable in attitude and dress, Oliver's young man displays the fascination of the English elite with the "melancholy humour." In addition to the sad expression, the black clothes and crossed arms are conventional markers of melancholy. Men in love, like Sidney's Astrophil (p. 451) and Duke Orsino in Twelfth Night (p. 510), found it particularly glamorous to parade their pensive dispositions. The romance of this "disease" figures in the couple just walking into the labyrinth-garden on the right. THE ROYAL COLLECTION © 2003, HER MAJESTY QUEEN ELIZABETH II.
Restless, ambitious Thomas Lee was executed in 1601 for participating in the rebellion against the queen led by the earl of Essex, but in 1594 he was in the midst of his bid for the position of chief negotiator between Ireland and the English Crown. His appearance refers both to his military service in Ireland and to his status at home: Lee sports the bare legs and open shirt of a "kerne," or Irish footsoldier, along with the rich brocade and armor of a wealthy English nobleman. Lee, whose hand had been injured in a skirmish, wishes himself compared with the Roman Gaius Mucius Scaevola, who demonstrated to the enemy Etruscans his resolution and indifference to pain by thrusting his right hand into a fire. Scaevola so impressed the Etruscans that their leader, Porsena, sued for peace. Painted in the tree to Lee's right is a quotation from Livy attributed to Scaevola: "Both to act and to suffer with fortitude is a Roman's part" (trans. Karen Hearn, ed. Dynasties). TATE GALLERY, LONDON/ART RESOURCE, NY.
A masque of musicians and dancers performs for a dinner party of Unton's friends. Theatrical life in this period, which often included music and dancing, was not restricted to the playhouse; it extended into other social settings, such as this one. Theater here is depicted as incidental entertainment: some guests turn their backs on the pageant; the size of the actors is considerably smaller than that of their patrons, an index of relative social importance.

The "Chandos Portrait" of William Shakespeare, anonymous, date unknown

The formal portrait of the playwright that appears in the First Folio edition of his works depicts him stiffly posed in a brocade jacket and a heavily starched collar. Here, in a portrait named after its owner, the duke of Chandos, Shakespeare is presented less formally and more as his friends and colleagues may have known him. The artist is unknown, but some speculate that it may have been Shakespeare's fellow actor Richard Burbage.
Carried on a litter like an image of the Virgin in the religious processions of previous centuries, the gorgeously arrayed Queen Elizabeth is shown here as a time-defying icon of purity and power. When the painting was executed, the queen was sixty-seven years old. Until the end of her life she continued her custom of going on "Progresses" through the realm: surrounded by her courtiers and ladies in waiting, she would venture forth to show herself to her people, many of whom nearly bankrupted themselves to entertain her in style. THE STAPLETON COLLECTION/BRIDGEMAN ART LIBRARY.
Henry Wriothesley, the third earl of Southampton, was nearly executed for his part in the rebellion against Queen Elizabeth led by his friend the earl of Essex in 1601. Though he was eventually pardoned, Southampton was imprisoned for two years in the Tower of London, where he is here depicted along with his favorite cat. Tradition has it that the cat found its way to him in prison and reached him by coming down the chimney. An early patron of Shakespeare, the wealthy earl may be the "Mr. W. H." (his initials reversed) to whom the first edition of the sonnets is dedicated (p. 497). On the eve of the Essex rebellion, Southampton seems to have instigated a performance of Richard II by Shakespeare's company to put the people of London in mind of deposition. The painting was clearly commissioned after his release, the date of which is painted on the tablet, along with the proud inscription "In Vinculis / Invictus" (Though in chains, unconquered). The Early Seventeenth Century
(1603–1660)

The Expulsion from Paradise, Masaccio, ca. 1427–28

This striking fresco shows an agonized Adam and Eve driven from Eden by a sword-wielding angel. Adam is so overcome he buries his face in his hands; Eve's face is a mask of despair. They do not touch: each seems imprisoned in his or her own pain. Milton's representation of the expulsion at the end of Book 12 of Paradise Lost is very different, and the comparison is instructive (see pp. 848ff.). SCALA/ART RESOURCE, NY.
The Three Graces (detail), The Primavera, Sandro Botticelli, ca. 1481

The Graces are a prominent allusive feature of seventeenth-century poetry and masques. At times they carry the allegorical significance suggested in Botticelli’s portrayal of them as extensions of Venus, goddess of love and beauty, and as manifestations of the beauty, joy, and freshness of spring. Milton’s “L’Allegro” (p. 697) is couched as a literary hymn honoring Euphrosyne, the Grace who signifies youthful mirth; her sisters are Aglaia, splendor, and Thalia, abundance or pleasure. Their linked hands and postures are said to symbolize the giving and receiving of joy, bounty, and pleasure. ERICH LESSING/ART RESOURCE, NY.
Sacred and Profane Love, Titian, ca. 1515

This image might almost serve as an emblem for the two kinds of love celebrated and often contrasted in seventeenth-century verse. In Titian's Neoplatonic program, the nude figure bearing the torch is the celestial Venus, the principle of universal and eternal beauty and love; the clothed figure is the earthly Venus, who creates the perishable images of beauty in humans, flowers and trees, gold and gems, and works of art. Cupid is placed between them but somewhat closer to the terrestrial Venus. SCALA/ART RESOURCE, NY.

God Creating the Animals, Tintoretto, 1550—52

A remarkable rendering of the scene, with God the Father depicted as an immense figure, exuding power and energy, actively calling forth many varieties of animals. The conception invites comparison with Milton's rendering of the Genesis creation story in Paradise Lost, Book 7 (p. 801). CAMARAPHOTO/ART RESOURCE, NY.
This portrait presents Donne in the guise of a melancholy lover fond of self-display; the signs are his broad-brimmed black hat, soulful eyes, sensual lips, delicate hands, and untied but expensive lace collar. Parts of Donne's Songs and Sonnets (pp. 603 ff.) date from this period. Melancholy, supposedly caused by an excess of black bile and often associated with the scholarly and artistic temperament, was identified in Robert Burton's massive and very popular Anatomy of Melancholy as a well-nigh universal attribute of the period. It is the temperament of many literary characters, among them Hamlet, Duke Orsino (in Twelfth Night, p. 510), Jacques in As You Like It, and Milton's Il Penseroso (p. 1801). PRIVATE COLLECTION/BRIDGEMAN ART LIBRARY.
This portrait of Barbara (Gamage) Sidney, wife of Sir Robert Sidney of Penshurst, provides an insight into domestic relations in the period, as well as an illuminating comment on Ben Jonson’s poem “To Penshurst” (p. 644). Robert Sidney (brother of Sir Philip Sidney) is absent, serving as governor of the English stronghold in Flushing. Lady Sidney is portrayed as a fruitful, fostering mother. Her hands rest on her two sons—both still in skirts, though the heir wears a sword; the four daughters are arranged in two pairs, the elder of each pair imitating her mother’s nurturing gesture. The eldest daughter will become Lady Mary Wroth, author of Urania and the sonnet sequence Pamphilia to Amphilanthus (pp. 652 ff.). Reproduced by kind permission of Viscount de l’Isle, from his private collection at Penshurst Place.
Lucy, Countess of Bedford, as a Masquer, attributed to John de Critz, ca. 1606

Lucy (Harrington) Russell, countess of Bedford, prominent courtier, favorite of Queen Anne, patron of Donne and Jonson, and frequent planner of and participant in court masques, is shown in masquing costume, for the wedding masque Hymenaei, by Ben Jonson and Inigo Jones. Jonson describes the masquing ladies as "attired richly and alike in the most celestial colors" associated with the rainbow, with elaborate headdresses and shoes, "all full of splendor, sovereignty, and riches." Their masque dances were "fully of subtility and device."

The Garden of Eden with the Fall of Man, Jan Brueghel the Elder and Peter Paul Rubens, ca. 1615

Possibly foreshadowing Milton's portrayal of Eden in Paradise Lost, the painting presents an idyllic scene with cavorting animals in a lush landscape and a graceful human pair—perhaps just enjoying the garden's fruit, but at least intimating the moment of the Fall as a seductive Eve hands Adam an apple and a snake looks on. A favorite painter of Charles I, Rubens designed and painted for the king the splendid ceiling of Whitehall, portraying King James in apotheosis, as a supporter of wisdom, justice, concord, and peace. SCALA/ART RESOURCE, NY.
Charles I on Horseback, Sir Anthony Van Dyck, 1637—38

One of Charles I’s court painters, knighted and pensioned by the king, Van Dyck produced several portraits of the royal family and their circle at court. This magnificent equestrian portrait of the king in armor on a white horse presents him as hero and warrior, in a pose that looks back to portraits and statues of Roman emperors on horseback. It was painted to be hung at the end of the Long Gallery in St. James Palace. National Gallery, London, UK/ Bridgeman Art Library, NY.
The Penitent Magdalen, Georges de la Tour, ca. 1638—43

This remarkable image of a young woman in meditative pose, her face lit by candlelight and her hand touching a skull, can serve as an emblem for the extensive meditative literature of the period—the poetry and prose of Donne, Herbert, Vaughan, and Traherne, among others—on such topics as sickness, human mortality, the transience of life and beauty, and the inevitability of death. The Restoration and the Eighteenth Century (1660–1785)

Landscape with Apollo and the Muses, Claude Lorrain, 1652

Claude's poetic landscapes inspired many British landscape gardens. In this painting, a river god sprawls by the Castalian spring under Mount Parnassus; the white swans are sacred to Apollo. On the terrace to the left, Apollo plays his lyre, surrounded by the nine Muses, while four poets approach through the woods. At the upper left, below a temple, the fountain of Hippocrene pours forth its inspiring waters. The dreamlike distance of the figures in this mysterious, luminous scene is intended to draw the viewer in. Similarly, in landscape gardens visitors were invited to stroll amid temples, inscriptions, swans, and statues, gradually comprehending the master plan. NATIONAL GALLERY OF SCOTLAND, EDINBURGH, SCOTLAND/BRIDGEVIJAN ART LIBRARY.
The fire of London, described by Dryden in Annus Mirabilis and by Pepys in his diary, destroyed most of the central city. In the foreground of this panorama, huddled refugees carry their goods away from the city. Under a pall of smoke across the Thames, St. Paul's Cathedral blazes in the center, with London Bridge on the far left and the Tower on the far right. The fire raged for four days, after which a new city eventually rose from the ashes.

Embarkment for Cythera,
Jean Antoine Watteau, 1717

Cythera is one of the names of Venus, and in this painting elegant pilgrims visit an island of love to pay homage to Venus (whose statue is on the far right). Paired off, these lovers pass through a romantic, erotic dreamscape, related to the visionary landscape of Pope's "Eloisa to Abelard." A ship of love waits on the left to carry the couples away. Are they going or coming to Cythera? In the grip of love, is the prevailing mood one of joy and anticipation, or of melancholy and surfeit? Critics differ; this painting does not reveal all its secrets.

Bristol Docks and Quay, anonymous, early eighteenth century

Bristol, in southwest England, profited enormously from the expansion of the slave trade. From this port, merchants sent trinkets, guns, and rum to West Africa in exchange for slaves, who were transported to North America and the West Indies in exchange for money and sugar. This painting shows a bustling metropolis whose trade makes possible the busy shops at the right and the great houses in the background. Gulliver Taking Leave of the Houyhnhms, Sawrey Gilpin, 1769

In part 4 of Gulliver's Travels (pp. 1069 ff.), Swift cleverly makes use of the eighteenth-century British love of horses. Gulliver's infatuation with the dignity and nobility of the Houyhnhms reflects the feelings of many hunters mounted for the chase or of gentlefolk promenading in the park; some preferred horses to human beings. Commercially, "horse painters" found eager and wealthy buyers, while Sawrey Gilpin tried to elevate horse painting by placing his horses against rich landscapes and in historical settings. Private Collection/Bridgeman Art Library.
The highwayman Macheath, in leg irons, stands at the center, flanked by the women between whom he cannot choose. To the left, Lucy kneels before the jailer Lockit; to the right, Polly kneels before her father, Peachum. In the rear, a group of prisoners waits for its cue. But the setting is not so much a prison as the theater; spectators are seated on each side of the stage. Hogarth connects the audience with the actors just as The Beggar's Opera does, suggesting corruption "through all the employments of life." Behind Peachum, John Gay confers with his producer, John Rich. Below them, seated at the far right, the duke of Bolton (note his Star of the Garter) exchanges a rapt gaze with Polly; a satyr points down at him. On opening night, the duke fell in love with the actor who played Polly, Lavinia Fenton. He returned every night, until she became his mistress—and, two decades later, his wife. TATE GALLERY, LONDON/ART RESOURCE, NY.
Sir Joshua Reynolds specialized in portraits that characterized his subjects by alluding to classical literature and art. Here, the great actor David Garrick is torn between Comedy, on the left, and Tragedy, on the right. The picture parodies a well-known image, Hercules between Virtue and Pleasure, and alludes to Guido Reni (Tragedy) and Correggio (Comedy). Exalted Tragedy urges Garrick to follow her, but darling Comedy drags him away.

Joseph Wright came from the English Midlands, where an intense interest in science helped spark the industrial revolution. The orrery, a mechanism that represents the movements of the planets around the sun, was one of many devices that taught the public to appreciate the wonders and pleasures of science. In this picture, the philosopher at the center bears a striking resemblance to portraits of Sir Isaac Newton, who had cast light on the solar system. Wright specialized in "candlelight pictures." Strong effects of light and shade play over the faces around the lamp, as if to reflect the literal meaning of enlightenment.

History painting—pictures that represent a famous legend or historical event—was the most prestigious genre of eighteenth-century art. West's painting of Wolfe, who fell on the day that he captured Quebec, revolutionized the genre by dressing the figures in contemporary clothes, not classical togas. Twelve years after his death, Wolfe had become an icon; the composition draws on images of mourners around the dead Christ. The poetic shading is also appropriate to Wolfe. The night before he died, he is supposed to have said of Gray's "Elegy" (p. 1332) that he "would rather have been the author of that piece than beat the French tomorrow"; and in his copy of the poem, he marked one passage: "The paths of glory lead but to the grave."

Angelika Kauffmann, born in Switzerland in 1741, was a child prodigy; at eleven she made a name in Italy for her portraits. From 1766 to 1781 she lived in England, where she was admired as a singer as well as a painter. During the eighteenth century the affair of Abelard and Heloise, which Pope depicted as a struggle between God and Eros, softened into a sentimental love story. Rousseau's novel The New Heloise (1761) helped transform the heroine into a saint of love. In an Age of Sensibility, Kauffmann portrays a youthful and feminized Abelard, not a wounded middle-aged scholar, and pathos, not repentance, marks this tender parting.

In 1797, as a birthday gift for his wife, Nancy, the sculptor John Flaxman commissioned Blake to illustrate Gray's poems. These designs, in pen and watercolor, view the art of Gray through Blake's own vision. The charm of Gray's ode depends on picturing Selima both as a cat who tumbles for goldfish and as a "nymph" or "maid" who falls for gold. Blake mixes the two together in a cat and turns the goldfish (or "genii of the stream") into fleeing, finny human forms. Meanwhile, a lurking Fate cuts the thread of Selima's life, reminding us, in this interpretation of Gray, that perverted desires can be deadly. © YALE CENTER FOR BRITISH ART, PAUL MELLON COLLECTION, USA/BRIDGEMAN ART LIBRARY.
DELIO  And your graver heads,
Which would be politic, what censure they?

ANTONIO  They do observe I grow to infinite purchase
The left-hand way, and all suppose the duchess
Would amend it, if she could; for, say they,
Great princes, though they grudge their officers
Should have such large and unconfined means
To get wealth under them, will not complain,
Lest thereby they should make them odious
Unto the people; for other obligation
Of love or marriage between her and me
They never dream of.

DELIO  The Lord Ferdinand is going to bed.
[Enter DUCHESS, FERDINAND, and BOSOLA.]

FERDINAND  I'll instantly to bed,
For I am weary.—I am to bespeak
A husband for you.

DUCHESS  For me, sir? Pray, who is't?
FERDINAND  The great Count Malatesta.

DUCHESS  Fie upon him!
A count? He's a mere stick of sugar candy;
You may look quite through him. When I choose
A husband, I will marry for your honor.

FERDINAND  You shall do well in't.—How is't, worthy Antonio?
DUCHESS  But, sir, I am to have private conference with you
About a scandalous report is spread
Touching mine honor.

FERDINAND  Let me be ever deaf to't:
One of Pasquil's paper bullets, court-calumny,
A pestilent air, which princes' palaces
Are seldom purged of. Yet, say that it were true,
I pour it in your bosom, my fixed love
Would strongly excuse, extenuate, nay, deny Faults, were they apparent in you. Go, be safe
In your own innocency.

DUCHESS  [aside]  O blessed comfort!
This deadly air is purged.

[Exeunt DUCHESS, ANTONIO, and DELIO.]

FERDINAND  Her guilt treads on Hot-burning coulters.
Now, Bosola,
How thrives our intelligence?
BOSOLA  Sir, uncertainly:
'Tis rumored she hath had three bastards, but
By whom, we may go read i' th' stars.

FERDINAND  Why, some
Hold opinion all things are written there.

---

1. I.e., they think I am getting rich dishonestly.
2. Anonymous satires were traditionally pasted on the statue of Pasquillo, or Pasquino, near Piazza Navona in Rome, and attributed to his authorship.
3. Medieval chastity inquests customarily required the questioned lady to walk barefoot over red-hot plowshares ("coulters").
BOSOLA  Yes, if we could find spectacles to read them.
    I do suspect there hath been some sorcery
    Used on the duchess.
FERDINAND Sorcery? To what purpose?
BOSOLA To make her dote on some desertless fellow
    She shames to acknowledge.
FERDINAND Can your faith give way
    To think there's power in potions or in charms,
    To make us love whether we will or no?
BOSOLA Most certainly.
FERDINAND Away! These are mere gulleries, deceits Invented by some cheating mountebanks4
    To abuse us. Do you think that herbs or charms
    Can force the will? Some trials have been made
    In this foolish practice, but the ingredients
    Were lenitive5 poisons, such as are of force slow-working To make the patient mad; and straight the witch
    Swears by equivocation they are in love.
    The witchcraft lies in her rank6 blood. This night wanton I will force confession from her. You told me
    You had got, within these two days, a false7 key unauthorized Into her bedchamber.
BOSOLA I have.
FERDINAND As I would wish.
BOSOLA What do you intend to do?
FERDINAND Can you guess?
BOSOLA No.
FERDINAND Do not ask, then:
    He that can compass8 me, and know my drifts,9 comprehend/purposes May say he hath put a girdle 'bout the world, employed And sounded all her quicksands.
BOSOLA I do not Think so.
FERDINAND What do you think, then, pray?
BOSOLA That you
    Are your own chronicle too much, and grossly
Flatter yourself.
FERDINAND Give me thy hand; I thank thee:
    I ne'er gave pension but to flatterers,
    Till I entertained thee. Farewell.
    That friend a great man's ruin strongly checks,
Who rails into his belief all his defects. [Exeunt.]

SCENE 2. The bedchamber of the DUCHESS.
[Enter DUCHESS, ANTONIO, and CARIOLA.]
DUCHESS Bring me the casket hither, and the glass.
You get no lodging here tonight, my lord.
ANTONIO Indeed, I must persuade one.
DUCHESS Very good:

4. A mixture of street entertainer and patent medicine salesman.
I hope in time 'twill grow into a custom,
That noblemen shall come with cap and knee
To purchase a night's lodging of their wives.

ANTONIO I must lie here.
DUCHESS Must! You are a lord of misrule.\(^1\)
ANTONIO Indeed, my rule is only in the night.
DUCHESS TO what use will you put me?
ANTONIO We'll sleep together.
DUCHESS Alas, what pleasure can two lovers find in sleep?
CARiola My lord, I lie with her often, and I know
She'll much disquiet you.
ANTONIO See, you are complained of.
CARiola For she's the sprawling' st bedfellow.
ANTONIO I shall like her
The better for that.
CARiola Sir, shall I ask you a question?
ANTONIO I pray thee, Cariola.
CARiola Wherefore still,\(^6\) when you lie always with my lady,
Do you rise so early?
ANTONIO Laboring men
Count the clock oftener, Cariola,
Are glad when their task's ended.
DUCHESS I'll stop your mouth. [Kisses him.]
ANTONIO Nay, that's but one; Venus had two soft doves
To draw her chariot; I must have another— [She kisses him again.]
When wilt thou marry, Cariola?
CARiola Never, my lord.
ANTONIO Oh, fie upon this single life! Forgo it.
We read how Daphne, for her peevish flight,
Became a fruitless bay tree; Syrinx turned
To the pale empty reed; Anaxarete
Was frozen into marble: whereas those Which married, or proved kind unto their friends,
Were by a gracious influence trans-shaped
Into the olive, pomegranate, mulberry,
Became flowers, precious stones, or eminent stars.\(^2\)
CARiola This is a vain poetry, but I pray you tell me,
If there were proposed me, wisdom, riches, and beauty,
In three several young men, which should I choose?
ANTONIO Tis a hard question: this was Paris' case,
And he was blind in t, and there was great cause;
For how was't possible he could judge right,
Having three amorous goddesses in view,
And they stark naked? 'Twas a motion\(^3\)
Were able to benight the apprehension

\(1\) The mock-monarch of a carnival festival.
\(2\) The olive was created by Athena; the mulberry gained its color from the blood of Pyramus and Thisbe; the pomegranate seems to have no particular mythological origin. Most of the other stories of ladies being transformed for complying, or not complying, with the solicitations of a god are from Ovid's Metamorphoses.
\(3\) Spectacle. Paris had to choose among Hera, Athena, and Aphrodite, goddesses of regal power, wisdom, and love; his selecting the third led to the Trojan War.
Of the severest counselor of Europe.
Now I look on both your faces so well formed,
It puts me in mind of a question I would ask.

CAROLA What is’t?

ANTONIO I do wonder why hard-favored ladies,
For the most part, keep worse-favored waiting women
To attend them, and cannot endure fair ones.

DUCHESS Oh, that’s soon answered.
Did you ever in your life know an ill painter
Desire to have his dwelling next door to the shop
Of an excellent picture-maker? ‘Twould disgrace
His face-making, and undo him. I prithee,
When were we so merry?—My hair tangles.

ANTONIO Pray thee, Cariola, let’s steal forth the room,
And let her talk to herself: I have divers times
Served her the like, when she hath chafed extremely.
I love to see her angry. Softly, Cariola. [Exeunt ANTONIO and CARIOLA.]

DUCHESS Doth not the color of my hair ’gin to change?
When I wax gray, I shall have all the court
Powder their hair with arras,⁴ to be like me.
You have cause to love me; I entered you into my heart
Before you would vouchsafe to call for the keys.

[Enter FERDINAND behind.]
We shall one day have my brothers take you napping;
Methinks his presence, being now in court,
Should make you keep your own bed; but you’ll say
Love mixed with fear is sweetest. I’ll assure you,
You shall get no more children till my brothers
Consent to be your gossips.⁵ Have you lost your tongue?

[She turns and sees FERDINAND.]
‘Tis welcome:
For know, whether I am doomed to live or die,
I can do both like a prince.

FERDINAND Die, then, quickly! [Giving her a poniard.]
Virtue, where art thou hid? What hideous thing
Is it that doth eclipse thee?

DUCHESS Pray, sir, hear me.

FERDINAND Or is it true thou art but a bare name,
And no essential⁶ thing? [actual]

DUCHESS Sir—

FERDINAND Do not speak.

DUCHESS NO, sir: I will plant my soul in mine ears, to hear you.

FERDINAND O most imperfect light of human reason,
That mak’st us so unhappy to foresee
What we can least prevent! Pursue thy wishes,
And glory in them: there’s in shame no comfort
But to be past all bounds and sense of shame.

DUCHESS I pray, sir, hear me. I am married.

⁴ Orris root, used in powdered form to make hair artificially gray.
⁵ Sponsors in baptism.
FERDINAND

So!

DUCHESS

Haply, not to your liking; but for that,
Alas, your shears do come untimely now
To clip the bird's wings that's already flown!
Will you see my husband?

FERDINAND

Yes, if I could change
Eyes with a basilisk.

DUCHESS

Sure, you came hither
By his confederacy.

FERDINAND

The howling of a wolf
Is music to thee, screech owl: prithee, peace.
Whate'er thou art that hast enjoyed my sister,
For I am sure thou hear'st me, for thine own sake
Let me not know thee. I came hither prepared
To work thy discovery; yet am now persuaded
It would beget such violent effects
As would damn us both. I would not for ten millions
I had beheld thee: therefore use all means
I never may have knowledge of thy name;
Enjoy thy lust still, and a wretched life,
On that condition. And for thee, vile woman,
If thou do wish thy lecher may grow old
In thy embraces, I would have thee build
Such a room for him as our anchorites
To holier use inhabit. Let not the sun
Shine on him till he's dead; let dogs and monkeys
Only converse with him, and such dumb things
To whom nature denies use to sound his name;
Do not keep a paraquito, lest she learn it;
If thou do love him, cut out thine own tongue,
Lest it betray him.

DUCHESS

Why might not I marry?
I have not gone about in this to create
Any new world or custom.

FERDINAND

Thou art undone;
And thou hast ta'en that massy sheet of lead
That hid thy husband's bones, and folded it
About my heart.

DUCHESS

Mine bleeds for't.

FERDINAND

Thine? Thy heart?
What should I name't unless a hollow bullet
Filled with unquenchable wildfire?

DUCHESS

You are in this
Too strict, and were you not my princely brother,
I would say, too willful. My reputation
Is safe.

FERDINAND

Dost thou know what reputation is?
I'll tell thee—to small purpose, since the instruction
Comes now too late.

6. Monster that was fabled to kill with a glance.
Upon a time, Reputation, Love, and Death
Would travel o'er the world; and it was concluded
That they should part, and take three several ways.
Death told them, they should find him in great battles,
Or cities plagued with plagues. Love gives them counsel
To inquire for him 'mongst unambitious shepherds,
Where dowries were not talked of, and sometimes
'Mongst quiet kindred that had nothing left
By their dead parents. "Stay," quoth Reputation,
"Do not forsake me; for it is my nature,
If once I part from any man I meet,
I am never found again.' And so for you:
You have shook hands\(^{6}\) with Reputation,
And made him invisible. So, fare you well.
I will never see you more.

DUCHESS

Why should only I,
Of all the other princes of the world,
Be cased up, like a holy relic? I have youth
And a little beauty.

FERDINAND

So you have some virgins
That are witches. I will never see thee more.\[Exit.\]

DUCHESS

YOU saw this apparition?

ANTONIO\[Yes. We are\]

Betrayed. How came he hither? I should turn
This to thee, for that.\[Pointing the pistol at CARIOLA.\]

CARIOLA

Pray, sir, do; and when
That you have cleft my heart, you shall read there
Mine innocence.\[She shows the poniard.\]

DUCHESS

That gallery gave him entrance.

ANTONIO

I would this terrible thing would come again,
That, standing on my guard, I might relate
My warrantable\(^{7}\) love.

DUCHESS

Ha! What means this?

ANTONIO

He left this with me.

DUCHESS

And it seems did wish
You would use it on yourself.

DUCHESS

His action seemed
To intend so much.

ANTONIO

This hath a handle to't
As well as a point: turn it towards him, and
So fasten the keen edge in his rank gall.\[Knocking within.\]

DUCHESS

As if a mine beneath my feet were ready
To be blown up.

CARIOLA

'Tis Bosola.

DUCHESS

Away!

O misery! Methinks unjust actions

7. Legitimate, defensible.
Should wear these masks and curtains, and not we. You must instantly part hence: I have fashioned it already. [Exit ANTONIO.]

[Enter BOSOLA.]

BOSOLA The duke your brother is ta'en up in a whirlwind, Hath took horse, and’s rid post to Rome.

DUCHESS So late? You were undone.

DUCHESS Indeed, I am very near it.

BOSOLA What’s the matter?

DUCHESS Antonio, the master of our household, Hath dealt so falsely with me in’s accounts:

My brother stood engaged with me for money
Ta’en up of certain Neapolitan Jews,
And Antonio lets the bonds be forfeit.²

BOSOLA Strange!—[aside] This is cunning.

DUCHESS And hereupon
My brother’s bills at Naples are protested
Against.——[Exit BOSOLA and OFFICERS.]

ANTONIO Will your grace hear me?

DUCHESS I have got well by you; you have yielded me
A million of loss: I am like to inherit
The people’s curses for your stewardship.
You had the trick in audit time to be sick,
Till I had signed your quietus;³ and that cured you
Without help of a doctor.—Gentlemen, I would have this man be an example to you all;
So shall you hold my favor; I pray, let him;³ release him
For he’s done that, alas, you would not think of,
And, because I intend to be rid of him,
I mean not to publish. [to ANTONIO] Use your fortune elsewhere.

ANTONIO I am strongly armed to brook my overthrow;
As commonly men bear with a hard year,
I will not blame the cause on’t: but do think

8. I.e., my brother stood security for some money
   I borrowed from Neapolitan moneylenders: now
   Antonio has let them call on the duke for payment.
9. I.e., Duke Ferdinand’s checks have bounced.
1. On the Adriatic coast of Italy, across the peninsula from Amalfi and well to the north.

2. Full sentences. “Enginous”: delicately balanced, as in clockwork. The allusion to Tasso (next line) is literally accurate (Jerusalem Delivered 2.22) but anachronistic, since Tasso’s poem was not published until 1574.
The necessity of my malevolent star
Procures this, not her humor. Oh, the inconstant
And rotten ground of service! You may see,
'Tis even like him that in a winter night
Takes a long slumber o'er a dying fire,
As loath to part from't; yet parts thence as cold
As when he first sat down.

Duchess We do confiscate,
Towards the satisfying of your accounts,
All that you have.

Antonio I am yours, and 'tis very fit
All mine should be so.

Duchess So, sir, you have your pass.⁶ passport

Antonio You may see, gentlemen, what 'tis to serve
A prince with body and soul.

[Exit.]

Bosola Here's an example for extortion: what moisture is drawn out of the sea, when foul weather comes, pours down, and runs into the sea again.

Duchess I would know what are your opinions of this Antonio.

Second officer He could not abide to see a pig's head gaping: I thought your grace would find him a Jew.³

Third officer I would you had been his officer, for your own sake.

Fourth officer You would have had more money.

First officer He stopped his ears with black wool, and to those came to him for money said he was thick of hearing.

Second officer Some said he was an hermaphrodite, for he could not abide a woman.

Fourth officer How scurvy proud he would look when the treasury was full! Well, let him go!

First officer Yes, and the chippings of the buttery fly after him, to scour his gold chain⁴.

Duchess Leave us. [Exeunt officers.] What do you think of these?

Bosola That these are rogues that in's prosperity, but to have waited on his fortune, could have wished his dirty stirrup riveted through their noses, and followed after's mule, like a bear in a ring; would have prostituted their daughters to his lust; made their firstborn intelligencers;⁵ thought none happy but such as were born under his blessed planet, and wore his livery:
and do these lice drop off now? Well, never look to have the like again:⁶ he hath left a sort of flattering rogues behind him; their doom must follow.
Princes pay flatterers in their own money: flatterers dissemble their vices, and they dissemble their lies; that's justice. Alas, poor gentleman!

Duchess Poor? He hath amply filled his coffers.

Bosola Sure, he was too honest. Pluto, the god of riches, when he's sent by Jupiter to any man, he goes limping, to signify that wealth that comes on God's name comes slowly; but when he's sent on the devil's errand, he rides post and comes in by scuttles. Let me show you what a most unvalued'jewel you have in a wanton humor thrown away, to bless the man shall⁸ find him.

3. Jews were identified by their antipathy to pork, but the assumptions here are deliberately ridiculous.
4. A gold chain was the steward's traditional badge of office. Bread crumbs (the 'chippings of the buttery') were used to polish gold and silver plate.
5. Spies.
6. I.e., a servant as good as he was.
7. Invaluable. "By scuttles": in haste.
8. Who shall.
He was an excellent courtier and most faithful; a soldier that thought it as beastly to know his own value too little as devilish to acknowledge it too much. Both his virtue and form deserved a far better fortune: his discourse rather delighted to judge itself than show itself; his breast was filled with all perfection, and yet it seemed a private whispering-room, it made so little noise of’t.

Duchess But he was basely descended.

Bosola Will you make yourself a mercenary herald, rather to examine men’s pedigrees than virtues? You shall want9 him: for know, an honest statesman to a prince is like a cedar planted by a spring; the spring bathes the tree’s root, the grateful tree rewards it with his shadow: you have not done so. I would sooner swim to the Bermoothes1 on two politicians’ rotten bladders, tied together with an intelligencer’s heartstring, than depend on so changeable a prince’s favor. Fare thee well, Antonio! Since the malice of the world would needs down with thee, it cannot be said yet that any ill happened unto thee, considering thy fall was accompanied with virtue.

Duchess Oh, you render me excellent music!

Bosola Say you?

Duchess This good one that you speak of is my husband.

Bosola Do I not dream? Can this ambitious age
Have so much goodness in’t as to prefer
A man merely for worth, without these shadows
Of wealth and painted honors? Possible?

Duchess I have had three children by him.

Bosola Fortunate lady!

For you have made your private nuptial bed
The humble and fair seminary2 of peace.

No question but many an unbefriended scholar?
Shall pray for you for this deed, and rejoice
That some preferment in the world can yet
Arise from merit. The virgins of your land
That have no dowries shall hope your example
Will raise them to rich husbands. Should you want Soldiers, ‘twould make the very Turks and Moors
Turn Christians, and serve you for this act.

Last, the neglected poets of your time,
In honor of this trophy of a man,
Raised by that curious3 engine, your white hand,
Shall thank you, in your grave, for t; and make that
More reverend than all the cabinets
Of living princes.3 For Antonio,
His fame shall likewise flow from many a pen,
When heralds shall want coats to sell to men.4

Duchess As I taste comfort in this friendly speech,
So would I find concealment.

Bosola Oh, the secret of my prince,

9. Miss.
1. The Bermudas, unknown at the time of the action, but very topical a hundred years later, when the play was written.
2. A scholar without an official appointment.
3. She will be more honored in her grave than living princes in their courts. “Cabinets”: council chambers.
4. The Heralds’ College (an English royal corpoation) carried on a brisk trade in coats of arms.
Which I will wear on th' inside of my heart!

DUCHESS    You shall take charge of all my coin and jewels,
And follow him; for he retires himself
To Ancona.

BOSOLA    So.

DUCHESS    Whither, within few days,
I mean to follow thee.

BOSOLA    Let me think:
I would wish your grace to feign a pilgrimage
To our Lady of Loreto, scarce seven leagues
From fair Ancona; so may you depart
Your country with more honor, and your flight
Will seem a princely progress, retaining
Your usual train about you.

DUCHESS    Sir, your direction
Shall lead me by the hand.

CARIOLA    In my opinion,
She were better progress to the baths at Lucca,
Or go visit the Spa in Germany;
For, if you will believe me, I do not like
This jesting with religion, this feigned Pilgrimage.

DUCHESS    Thou art a superstitious fool.
Prepare us instantly for our departure.
Past sorrows, let us moderately lament them;
For those to come, seek wisely to prevent them.

[Exit DUCHESS, with CARIOLA.]

BOSOLA    A politician is the devil's quilted anvil;
He fashions all sins on him, and the blows
Are never heard: he may work in a lady's chamber,
As here for proof. What rests but I reveal
All to my lord? Oh, this base quality
Of intelligencer! Why, every quality
Prefers but gain or commendation:
Now for this act I am certain to be raised,
And men that paint weeds to the life are praised.

[Exit.]

[Enter CARDINAL, FERDINAND, MALATESTE, PESCARA, SILVIO, DELIO.]

CARDINAL    Must we turn soldier, then?

MALATESTE    The Emperor,
Hearing your worth that way, ere you attained
This reverend garment, joins you in commission
With the right fortunate soldier the Marquis of Pescara,
And the famous Lannoy.

CARDINAL    He that had the honor
Of taking the French king prisoner?
MALATESTE  The same.  Here's a plot drawn for a new fortification
At Naples.  [They talk apart.]

FERDINAND  This great Count Malateste, I perceive,
Hath got employment?
DELIO  No employment, my lord;
A marginal note in the muster book, that he is
A voluntary lord.
FERDINAND  He's no soldier?
DELIO  He has worn gunpowder in's hollow tooth for the toothache. ³
SILVIO  He comes to the leaguer ⁴ with a full intent
To eat fresh beef and garlic, means to stay
Till the scent be gone, and straight return to court.
DELIO  He hath read all the late service ⁴ as the city chronicle relates it, and keeps two painters going, only to express battles in model.
SILVIO  Then he'll fight by the book.
DELIO  By the almanac, I think, to choose good days and shun the critical.
That's his mistress' scarf.
SILVIO  Yes, he protests he would do much for that taffeta.
DELIO  I think he would run away from a battle, to save it from taking' prisoner.
SILVIO  He is horribly afraid gunpowder will spoil the perfume on't.
DELIO  I saw a Dutchman break his pate once for calling him pot-gun; ⁶ he made his head have a bore in't like a musket.
SILVIO  I would he had made a touchhole to't. He is indeed a guarded sumpter cloth, ⁷ only for the remove of the court.

[Enter BOSOLA and speaks to FERDINAND and the CARDINAL.]
PESCARA  Bosola arrived? What should be the business?
Some falling out amongst the cardinals.
These factions amongst great men, they are like
Foxes; when their heads are divided,
They carry fire in their tails, and all the country
About them goes to wrack for't. ⁸
SILVIO  What's that Bosola?
DELIO  I know him in Padua—a fantastical scholar, like such who study to know how many knots were in Hercules' club, of what color Achilles' beard was, or whether Hector were not troubled with the toothache. He hath studied himself half blear-eyed to know the true symmetry of Caesar's nose by a shoeing-horn; and this he did to gain the name of a speculative ⁹ man.
PESCARA  Mark Prince Ferdinand:
A very salamander lives in's eye,
To mock the eager violence of fire.'

two decades after the date of the play's supposed action.  "Pescara"; also a commander at Pavia.
3. Saltpeter was sometimes used to relieve a tooth-ache.  "Leaguer" (next line): gathering of the armies.
4. Recent military operations.
5. Being taken.
6. Popgun.
7. Decorated saddlecloth used only when the court is changing its residence; i.e., he's only for show.  "Touchhole": where the match was applied to set off a cannon.
8. Samson once tied some foxes together by the tail and set them afire to burn down the fields of the Philistines (Judges 15).
9. Profound, given to abstruse thoughts. Intense and especially fantastical scholarship was thought to be a cause of melancholy—Bosola's temperament—caused by an imbalance of black bile.
1. The salamander was supposed to be so cold and wet of constitution that it could live in fire.

http://englishworld20111.wordpress.com/
SILVIO That Cardinal hath made more bad faces with his oppression than ever Michelangelo made good ones: he lifts up his nose, like a foul porpoise before a storm.

PESCARA The Lord Ferdinand laughs.

DELIO Like a deadly cannon that lightens ere it smokes.

PESCARA These are your true pangs of death.

The pangs of life, that struggle with great statesmen.

DELIO In such a deformed silence witches whisper their charms.

CARDINAL Doth she make religion her riding hood to keep her from the sun and tempest?

FERDINAND That, that damns her. Methinks her fault and beauty, blended together, show like leprosy. The whiter, the fouler, I make it a question whether her beggarly brats were ever christened.

CARDINAL I will instantly solicit the state of Ancona to have them banished.

FERDINAND You are for Loreto?

I shall not be at your ceremony; fare you well.

Write to the Duke of Malfi, my young nephew she had by her first husband, and acquaint him with s mother's honesty.

BOSOLA I will.

FERDINAND Antonio! A slave that only smelled of ink and counters, and never in's life looked like a gentleman, but in the audit time. Go, go presently. Draw me out an hundred and fifty of our horse, and meet me at the fort-bridge.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE 4. The shrine of Our Lady of Loreto.

[Enter Two Pilgrims.]

FIRST PILGRIM I have not seen a goodlier shrine than this; yet I have visited many.

SECOND PILGRIM The Cardinal of Aragon is this day to resign his cardinal's hat: his sister duchess likewise is arrived to pay her vow of pilgrimage. I expect a noble ceremony.

FIRST PILGRIM No question. They come.

[Here the ceremony of the cardinal's installment in the habit of a soldier: performed in delivering up his cross, hat, robes, and ring at the shrine, and investing him with sword, helmet, shield, and spurs; then Antonio, the Duchess, and their children, having presented themselves at the shrine, are, by a form of banishment in dumb show expressed towards them by the cardinal and the state of Ancona, banished: during

2. Michelangelo Buonarroti (1475-1564), the great Florentine painter and sculptor. Another anachronism.
3. Drawbridge.
Arms and honors deck thy story,
To thy fame's eternal glory!
Adverse fortune ever fly thee;
No disastrous fate come nigh thee!

I alone will sing thy praises,
Whom to honor virtue raises;
And thy study, that divine is,
Bent to martial discipline is.

Lay aside all those robes lie by thee;
Crown thy arts with arms, they'll beautify thee.

O worthy of worthiest name, adorned in this manner,
Lead bravely thy forces on under war's warlike banner!
Oh, mayst thou prove fortunate in all martial courses!
Guide thou still by skill in arts and forces!
Victory attend thee nigh, whilst fame sings loud thy powers;
Triumphant conquest crown thy head, and blessings pour down showers!

[Exeunt all except the TWO PILGRIMS.]

FIRST PILGRIM Here's a strange turn of state! Who would have thought
So great a lady would have matched herself
Unto so mean a person? Yet the cardinal
Bears himself much too cruel.

SECOND PILGRIM They are banished.

FIRST PILGRIM But I would ask what power hath this state
Of Ancona to determine of a free prince?

SECOND PILGRIM They are a free state, sir, and her brother showed How that the pope, fore-hearing of her looseness,
Hath seized into the protection of the church
The dukedom which she held as dowager.\(^2\)

FIRST PILGRIM But by what justice?

SECOND PILGRIM Sure, I think by none,
Only her brother's instigation.

FIRST PILGRIM What was it with such violence he took Off from her finger?

SECOND PILGRIM 'Twas her wedding ring,
Which he vowed shortly he would sacrifice
To his revenge.

FIRST PILGRIM Alas, Antonio!
If that a man be thrust into a well,
No matter who sets hands to't, his own weight
Will bring him sooner to th' bottom. Come, let's hence.
Fortune makes this conclusion general,
All things do help th' unhappy man to fall.

[Exeunt.]

[Enter DUCHESS, ANTONIO, CHILDREN, CARiola, and SERVANTS.]

DUCHESS  Banished Ancona!

ANTONIO  Yes, you see what power
Lightens in great men's breath.  flashes out

DUCHESS  Is all our train
Shrunk to this poor remainder?

ANTONIO  These poor men,
Which have got little in your service, vow
To take your fortune, but your wiser buntings,¹
Now they are fledged, are gone.

DUCHESS  They have done wisely.
This puts me in mind of death: physicians thus,
With their hands full of money, use° to give o'er their patients.

ANTONIO  Right° the fashion of the world:
From decayed fortunes every flatterer shrinks;
Men cease to build where the foundation sinks.

DUCHESS  I had a very strange dream tonight.⁰

ANTONIO  What was't?

DUCHESS  Methought I wore my coronet of state,
And on a sudden all the diamonds
Were changed to pearls.

ANTONIO  My interpretation
Is, you'll weep shortly, for to me the pearls
Do signify your tears.

DUCHESS  The birds that live
I' th' field on the wild benefit of nature
Live happier than we; for they may choose their mates,
And carol their sweet pleasures to the spring.

[Enter BOSOLA with a letter.]

BOSOLA  You are happily o'erta'en.

DUCHESS  From my brother?

BOSOLA  Yes, from the Lord Ferdinand your brother
All love and safety.

DUCHESS  Thou dost blanch° mischief,
Wouldst make it white. See, see, like to calm weather
At sea before a tempest, false hearts speak fair
To those they intend most mischief.
Send Antonio to me; I want his head in a business.

A politic equivocation!
He doth not want your counsel, but your head;
That is, he cannot sleep till you be dead.
And here's another pitfall that's strewed o'er
With roses: mark it, 'tis a cunning one:
"I stand engaged for your husband for several debts at Naples: let not that trouble him; I had rather have his heart than his money."

And I believe so too.

BOSOLA  What do you believe?

3.5

DUCHESS That he so much distrusts my husband's love,
He will by no means believe his heart is with him
Until he see it: the devil is not cunning
Enough to circumvent us in riddles.

BOSOLA Will you reject that noble and free league
Of amity and love which I present you?
DUCHESS Their league is like that of some politic kings,
Only to make themselves of strength and power
To be our after-ruin: tell them so.

BOSOLA And what from you?

ANTONIO Thus tell him: I will not come.

BOSOLA And what of this? [Pointing to the letter.]

ANTONIO My brothers have dispersed
Bloodhounds abroad: which till I hear are muzzled,
No truce, though hatched with ne'er such politic skill,
Is safe, that hangs upon our enemies' will.
I'll not come at them.

BOSOLA This proclaims your breeding:
Every small thing draws a base mind to fear,
As the adamant draws iron. Fare you well, sir;
You shall shortly hear from's.
[Exit.]

DUCHESS I suspect some ambush;
Therefore, by all my love I do conjure you
To take your eldest son, and fly towards Milan.
Let us not venture all this poor remainder
In one unlucky bottom.²

ANTONIO YOU counsel safely.
Best of my life, farewell. Since we must part,
Heaven hath a hand in't, but no otherwise
Than as some curious artist takes in sunder
A clock or watch, when it is out of frame,³
To bring't in better order.

DUCHESS I know not which is best,
To see you dead, or part with you. Farewell, boy:
Thou art happy that thou hast not understanding
To know thy misery: for all our wit
And reading brings us to a truer sense
Of sorrow. In the eternal church,⁴ sir,
I do hope we shall not part thus.

ANTONIO Oh, be of comfort!
Make patience a noble fortitude,
And think not how unkindly we are used:
Man, like to cassia, is proved best being bruised.⁴

DUCHESS Must I, like to a slave-born Russian,
Account it praise to suffer tyranny?
And yet, O heaven, thy heavy hand is in't!
I have seen my little boy oft scourge his top,⁵
And compared myself to't: naught made me e'er

² The metaphor is mercantile: let's not load all our cargo in one ship ("bottom").
³ Not working. "Curious artist": clever craftsman.
⁴ Cinnamon bark ("cassia") is most aromatic ("vir-tuous") when pressed.
⁵ Children used to make tops spin by whipping them.
Go right but heaven's scourge stick.

ANTONIO Do not weep:
Heaven fashioned us of nothing, and we strive
To bring ourselves to nothing. Farewell, Cariola,
And thy sweet armful. If I do never see thee more,
Be a good mother to your little ones,
And save them from the tiger. Fare you well.

DUCHESS Let me look upon you once more, for that speech
Came from a dying father. Your kiss is colder
Than that I have seen an holy anchorite\(^6\)
Give to a dead man's skull.

ANTONIO My heart is turned to a heavy lump of lead,
With which I sound\(^6\) my danger. Fare you well.

DUCHESS [Exeunt ANTONIO and his son.]

DUCHESS My laurel is all withered.

CARIOLA Look, madam, what a troop of armed men
Make toward us.

DUCHESS Oh, they are very welcome:
When Fortune's wheel\(^7\) is overcharged with princes,
The weight makes it move swift: I would have my ruin
Be sudden.

[Enter BOSOLA vizarded, \(^8\) with a guard.]

BOSOLA I am your adventure,\(^8\) am I not?

DUCHESS You are. You must see your husband no more.

BOSOLA What devil art thou that counterfeits heaven's thunder?

DUCHESS Is that terrible? I would have you tell me whether
Is that note worse that frights the silly birds
Out of the corn,\(^9\) or that which doth allure them to the nets? You have hearkened to the last too much.

DUCHESS Oh, misery! Like to a rusty o'ercharged cannon,
Shall I never fly in pieces?—Come, to what prison?

BOSOLA To none.

DUCHESS Whither, then?

BOSOLA To your palace.

DUCHESS I have heard
That Charon's boat serves to convey all o'er
The dismal lake,\(^9\) but brings none back again.

BOSOLA Your brothers mean you safety and pity.

DUCHESS Pity!
With such a pity men preserve alive
Pheasants and quails, when they are not fat enough to be eaten.

BOSOLA These are your children?

DUCHESS Yes.

BOSOLA Can they prattle?

DUCHESS No.

But I intend, since they were born accursed,

---

\(^6\) Plumb the depths of.

\(^7\) The wheel of fortune is an ancient emblem of mutability; people have their fixed positions on it and rise or fall as it turns.

\(^8\) The object of your journey.

\(^9\) In classical mythology, Charon transports the souls of the dead across the river Styx to Hades.
Curses shall be their first language.

BOSOLA
Fie, madam!

DUCHESS
Were I a man,
I'd beat that counterfeit face into thy other.

BOSOLA
One of no birth.

DUCHESS
Say that he was born mean,
Man is most happy when's own actions
Be arguments and examples of his virtue.

BOSOLA
A barren, beggarly virtue!

DUCHESS
I prithee, who is greatest? Can you tell?
Sad tales befit my woe: I'll tell you one.
A salmon, as she swam unto the sea,
Met with a dogfish, who encounters her
With this rough language: "Why art thou so bold
To mix thyself with our high state of floods,
Being no eminent courtier, but one
That for the calmest and fresh time o' th' year
Dost live in shallow rivers, rank'st thyself
With silly smelts and shrimps? And darest thou Pass by our dog-ship without reverence?"
"Oh!" quoth the salmon, 'sister, be at peace:
Thank Jupiter we both have passed the net!
Our value never can be truly known,
Till in the fisher's basket we be shown:
I' th' market then my price may be the higher,
Even when I am nearest to the cook and fire.'
So to great men the moral may be stretched:
Men oft are valued high, when they're most wretched.
But come, whither you please. I am armed 'gainst misery;
Bent to all sways of the oppressor's will:
There's no deep valley but near some great hill.

ACT 4

SCENE 1. Amalfi.

[Enter FERDINAND and BOSOLA.]

FERDINAND
How doth our sister duchess bear herself
In her imprisonment?

BOSOLA
Nobly. I'll describe her.
She's sad as one long used to't, and she seems Rather to welcome the end of misery
Than shun it; a behavior so noble
As gives a majesty to adversity:
You may discern the shape of loveliness
More perfect in her tears than in her smiles;
She will muse four hours together; and her silence,
Methinks, expresseth more than if she spake.

1. Of low rank by birth.
FERDINAND  Her melancholy seems to be fortified
With a strange disdain.

BOSOLA  'Tis so; and this restraint,
Like English mastiffs that grow fierce with tying,
Makes her too passionately apprehend
Those pleasures she's kept from.

FERDINAND  Curse upon her!
I will no longer study in the book
Of another's heart. Inform her what I told you.  [Exit.]

BOSOLA  All comfort to your grace!

DUCHESS  I will have none.

BOSOLA  Your elder brother, the Lord Ferdinand,
Is come to visit you, and sends you word,
'Cause once he rashly made a solemn vow
Never to see you more, he comes i' th' night,
And prays you gently neither torch nor taper
Shine in your chamber. He will kiss your hand
And reconcile himself, but for his vow
He dares not see you.

DUCHESS  At his pleasure.
Take hence the lights: he's come.

[Enter FERDINAND.]

FERDINAND  Where are you?

DUCHESS  Here, sir.

FERDINAND  This darkness suits you well.

DUCHESS  I would ask your pardon.

FERDINAND  You have it;
For I account it the honorabl'st revenge,
Where I may kill, to pardon. Where are your cubs?

DUCHESS  Whom?

FERDINAND  Call them your children;
For though our national law distinguish bastards
From true legitimate issue, compassionate nature
Makes them all equal.

DUCHESS  DO you visit me for this?
You violate a sacrament o' th' church
Shall make you howl in hell for't.

FERDINAND  It had been well
Could you have lived thus always; for, indeed,
You were too much i' th' light'—but no more—
I come to seal my peace with you. Here's a hand

[Give her a dead man's hand.]

To which you have vowed much love; the ring upon t
You gave.

DUCHESS  I affectionately kiss it.

FERDINAND  Pray, do, and bury the print of it in your heart.

4.1 1. Punning on "light," wanton.
I will leave this ring with you for a lovetoken,
And the hand as sure as the ring; and do not doubt
But you shall have the heart, too. When you need a friend,
Send it to him that owed it; you shall see whether he can aid you.

DUCHESS  You are very cold;
1 fear you are not well after your travel.
FERDINAND  Let her have lights enough. [Exit.]

For I do play a part in't 'gainst my will.

BOSOLA Come, be of comfort; I will save your life.

DUCHESS

Indeed, I have not leisure to tend so small a business.

BOSOLA Now, by my life, I pity you.

DUCHESS Thou art a fool, then,

To waste thy pity on a thing so wretched
As cannot pity itself. I am full of daggers.
Puff, let me blow these vipers from me.

[Enter SERVANT.]

What are you?

SERVANT One that wishes you long life.

DUCHESS I would thou wert hanged for the horrible curse
Thou hast given me. I shall shortly grow one
Of the miracles of pity. I'll go pray—
No, I'll go curse.

BOSOLA Oh, fie!

DUCHESS I could curse the stars—

BOSOLA Oh, fearful!

DUCHESS And those three smiling seasons of the year
Into a Russian winter,7 nay, the world
To its first chaos.

BOSOLA Look you, the stars shine still.

DUCHESS Oh, but you must

Remember, my curse hath a great way to go.

Plagues, that make lanes through largest families,

Consumes them!

BOSOLA Fie, lady!

DUCHESS Let them, like tyrants,

Never be remembered but for the ill they have done;

Let all the zealous prayers of mortified
Churchmen forget them!

BOSOLA Oh, uncharitable!

DUCHESS Let Heaven a little while cease crowning martyrs
To punish them!

Go, howl them this, and say, I long to bleed:

It is some mercy when men kill with speed.

[Exeunt DUCHESS and SERVANT.]

FERDINAND Excellent, as I would wish; she's plagued in art:°

by a cunning device

These presentations are but framed in wax

By the curious master in that quality,

Vincentio Lauriola,8 and she takes them

For true substantial bodies.

BOSOLA Why do you do this?

FERDINAND To bring her to despair.

BOSOLA 'Faith, end here,

7. A Russian winter would last all year long.
8. The art of wax modeling was common enough, but the name of the artist seems to be imaginary.
And go no farther in your cruelty.
Send her a penitential garment to put on Next to her delicate skin, and furnish her
With beads and prayer books.

FERDINAND

Damn her! That body of hers,
While that my blood ran pure in't, was more worth
Than that which thou wouldst comfort, called a soul.
I will send her masques of common courtesans,
Have her meat served up by bawds and ruffians,
And, 'cause she'll needs be mad, I am resolved to remove forth the common hospital
Asylum. All the mad-folk, and place them near her lodging;
There let them practice together, sing and dance,
And act their gambols to the full o' th' moon:
If she can sleep the better for it, let her.

Your work is almost ended.

BOSOLA Must I see her again:

FERDINAND Yes.

BOSOLA Never.

FERDINAND You must.

BOSOLA Never in mine own shape;
That's forfeited by my intelligence
And this last cruel lie. When you send me next,
The business shall be comfort.

FERDINAND Very likely.
Thy pity is nothing of kin to thee. Antonio
Lurks about Milan: thou shalt shortly thither
To feed a fire as great as my revenge,
Which ne'er will slack till it have spent his fuel.

Intemperate agues' make physicians cruel.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE 2

[Enter DUCHESS and CARIOLA.]

DUCHESS What hideous noise was that?

CARIOLA Tis the wild consort
Of madmen, lady, which your tyrant brother
Hath placed about your lodging. This tyranny,
I think, was never practiced till this hour.

DUCHESS Indeed, I thank him. Nothing but noise and folly
Can keep me in my right wits, whereas reason
And silence make me stark mad. Sit down;
Discourse to me some dismal tragedy.

CARIOLA Oh, 'twill increase your melancholy.

DUCHESS Thou art deceived:

To hear of greater grief would lessen mine.

This is a prison?

CARIOLA Yes, but you shall live
To shake this durance off.

9. I.e., pity doesn't suit you very well. 1. Fevers that cannot be controlled.
DUCHESS  Thou art a fool:
The robin redbreast and the nightingale
Never live long in cages.

CAR I OLA  Pray, dry your eyes.
What think you of, madam?

DUCHESS  Of nothing:
When I muse thus, I sleep.

CAR I OLA  Like a madman, with your eyes open?

DUCHESS  Dost thou think we shall know one another in th' other world?

CAR I OLA  Yes, out of question.

DUCHESS  Oh that it were possible we might
But hold some two days’ conference with the dead!
From them I should learn somewhat, I am sure,
I never shall know here. I’ll tell thee a miracle;
I am not mad yet, to my cause of sorrow:
Th’ heaven o’er my head seems made of molten brass,
The earth of flaming sulphur, yet I am not mad.
I am acquainted with sad misery
As the tanned galley slave is with his oar;
Necessity makes me suffer constantly,
And custom makes it easy. Who do I look like now?

CAR I OLA  Like to your picture in the gallery,
A deal of life in show, but none in practice;
Or rather like some reverend monument
Whose ruins are even pitied.

DUCHESS  Very proper.
And Fortune seems only to have her eyesight
To behold my tragedy.

[Enter SERVANT.]

SERVANT  I am come to tell you
Your brother hath intended you some sport.
A great physician, when the pope was sick
Of a deep melancholy, presented him
With several sorts of madmen, which wild object
Being full of change and sport, forced him to laugh,
And so the imposthume\(^1\) broke. The selfsame cure
The duke intends on you.

DUCHESS  Let them come in.

SERVANT  There’s a mad lawyer; and a secular priest;\(^1\)
A doctor that hath forfeited his wits
By jealousy; an astrologian
That in his works said such a day o’ the’ month
Should be the day of doom, and, failing of’t,
Ran mad; an English tailor crazed i’ th’ brain

DUCHESS  With the study of new fashions; a gentleman-usher\(^1\)
Quite beside himself with care to keep in mind
The number of his lady’s salutations
Or “How do you’s” she employed him in each morning;

---

1. One serving a parish, not a member of an order.
A farmer, too, an excellent knave in grain,
Mad 'cause he was hindered transportation:
And let one broker that's mad loose to these,
You'd think the devil were among them.

DUCHESS  Sit, Cariola. Let them loose when you please,
For I am chained to endure all your tyranny.

[Enter MADMEN.]

[Here by a MADMAN this song is sung to a dismal kind of music.]

Oh, let us howl some heavy note,
Some deadly dogged howl,
Sounding as from the threatening throat
Of beasts and fatal fowl!
As ravens, screech owls, bulls, and bears,
We'll bell and bawl our parts,
Till irksome noise have cloyed your ears
And corrosived your hearts.
At last, whenas our choir wants breath,
Our bodies being blest,
We'll sing, like swans, to welcome death,
And die in love and rest.

FIRST MADMAN  Doomsday not come yet? I'll draw it nearer by a perspective, or make a glass that shall set all the world on fire upon an instant. I cannot sleep; my pillow is stuffed with a litter of porcupines.

SECOND MADMAN  Hell is a mere glasshouse, where the devils are continually blowing up women's souls on hollow irons, and the fire never goes out.

THIRD MADMAN  I will lie with every woman in my parish the tenth night; I will tithe them over like haycocks.

FOURTH MADMAN  Shall my pothecary outgo me because I am a cuckold? I have found out his roguery; he makes alum of his wife's urine, and sells it to puritans that have sore throats with overstraining.

FIRST MADMAN  I have skill in heraldry.
SECOND MADMAN  Hast?
FIRST MADMAN  You do give for your crest a woodcock's head with the brains picked out on it; you are a very ancient gentleman.

THIRD MADMAN  Greek is turned Turk: we are only to be saved by the Helvetian translation.

FIRST MADMAN  Come on, sir, I will lay the law to you.
SECOND MADMAN  Oh, rather lay a corrosive: the law will eat to the bone.
THIRD MADMAN  He that drinks but to satisfy nature is damned.
FOURTH MADMAN  If I had my glass here, I would show a sight should make all the women here call me mad doctor.

FIRST MADMAN  What's he? A rope maker?
SECOND MADMAN  No, no, no, a snuffling knave that, while he shows the tombs, will have his hand in a wench's placket.
THIRD MADMAN  Woe to the caroche that brought home my wife from the masque at three o'clock in the morning! It had a large featherbed in it.

2. Forbidden to export.
3. Telescope.
4. As a priest takes his tenth ("tithe") of his parishioners' crops. "Haycocks": haystacks.
5. In long prayers and sermons.
6. A proverbially stupid bird.
7. The Geneva Bible, a jibe at English Puritans who used that translation.
8. Looking glass.

---

http://englishworld20111.wordpress.com/
FOURTH MADMAN  I have pared the devil’s nails forty times, roasted them in raven’s eggs, and cured agues with them.

THIRD MADMAN  Get me three hundred milchbats, to make possets’ to procure sleep.

FOURTH MADMAN  All the college may throw their caps at me: I have made a soap boiler costive; it was my masterpiece.

[Here the dance, consisting of eight MADMEN, with music answerable thereunto; after which BOSOLA, like an old man, enters.]

DUCHESS  Is he mad too?

SERVANT  Pray, question him. I’ll leave you.

[Exeunt SERVANT and MADMEN.]

BOSOLA  I am come to make thy tomb.

DUCHESS  Ha! My tomb?

Thou speak’st as if I lay upon my deathbed,
Gasping for breath. Dost thou perceive me sick?

BOSOLA  Yes, and the more dangerously, since thy sickness is insensible.

DUCHESS  Thou art not mad, sure. Dost know me?

BOSOLA  Yes.

DUCHESS  Who am I?

BOSOLA  Thou art a box of worm-seed, at best but a salvatory of green mummy.
What’s this flesh? A little curdled milk, fantastical puff paste. Our bodies are weaker than those paper prisons boys use to keep flies in, more contemptible, since ours is to preserve earthworms. Didst thou ever see a lark in a cage? Such is the soul in the body: this world is like her little turf of grass, and the heaven o’er our heads, like her looking glass, only gives us a miserable knowledge of the small compass of our prison.

DUCHESS  Am not I thy duchess?

BOSOLA  Thou art some great woman, sure, for riot begins to sit on thy forehead, clad in gray hairs, twenty years sooner than on a merry milkmaid’s. Thou sleep’st worse than if a mouse should be forced to take up her lodging in a cat’s ear: a little infant that breeds its teeth, should it lie with thee, would cry out, as if thou wert the more unquiet bedfellow.

DUCHESS  Thou art very plain.

BOSOLA  My trade is to flatter the dead, not the living; I am a tombmaker.

DUCHESS  And thou com’st to make my tomb?

BOSOLA  Yes.

DUCHESS  Let me be a little merry. Of what stuff wilt thou make it?

BOSOLA  Nay, resolve me first, of what fashion?

DUCHESS  Why, do we grow fantastical in our deathbed? Do we affect fashion in the grave?

1. Sedative drafts, here made of bat’s milk.
2. Despair of emulating.
3. Constipated.
4. Imperceptible.
5. Curdled. “Worm-seed” is a matter whose ultimate end is the generation of worms. A salvatory of green mummy: the substance of mummified bodies was considered medicinal. The living body is a box (“salvatory”) of such medicine, only not yet ready for use.
6. Debauchery.
7. A teething infant.
BOSOLA   Most ambitiously. Princes’ images on their tombs do not lie, as they were wont, seeming to pray up to heaven, but with their hands under their cheeks, as if they died of the toothache. They are not carved with their eyes fixed upon the stars, but as their minds were wholly bent upon the world, the selfsame way they seem to turn their faces.

DUCHESS   Let me know fully therefore the effect Of this thy dismal preparation, This talk fit for a charnel.※

BOSOLA   Now I shall.

[Enter EXECUTIONERS, with a coffin, cords, and a bell.]

Here is a present from your princely brothers; And may it arrive welcome, for it brings Last benefit, last sorrow.

DUCHESS   Let me see it: I have so much obedience in my blood, I wish it in their veins to do them good.

BOSOLA   This is your last presence chamber.※

CARiola   O my sweet lady!

DUCHESS   Peace, it affrights not me.

BOSOLA   I am the common bellman, That usually is sent to condemned persons by custom The night before they suffer.

DUCHESS   Even now thou say’st Thou wast a tomb-maker.

BOSOLA   ’Twas to bring you By degrees to mortification.¹ Listen, [rings the bell]

Hark, now everything is still The screech owl and the whistler² shrill Call upon our dame aloud,

And bid her quickly don her shroud!

Much you had of land and rent: Your length in clay’s now competent.⁰

A long war disturbed your mind: Here your perfect peace is signed.

Of what is’t fools make such vain keeping? Sin their conception, their birth weeping, Their life a general mist of error, Their death a hideous storm of terror. Strew your hair with powders sweet,

Don clean linen, bathe your feet, And (the foul fiend more to check) A crucifix let bless your neck: ’Tis now full tide ’tween night and day; End your groan, and come away.

※ A storage place for bones reserved from old graves in the digging of new ones.
※ A noble person’s reception room.

¹ Repentance, also death and decomposition.
² A bird premonitory of death.
Hence, villains, tyrants, murderers! Alas!
What will you do with my lady? Call for help.

To whom? To our next neighbors? They are mad-folks.

Remove that noise.

Farewell, Cariola.

In my last will I have not much to give:

A many hungry guests have fed upon me;
Thine will be a poor reversion.

I will die with her.

I pray thee, look thou giv'st my little boy
Some syrup for his cold, and let the girl
Say her prayers ere she sleep, [CARIOLA is forced out by the EXECUTIONERS.]

Now what you please.

Strangling: here are your executioners.

I forgive them:
The apoplexy, catarrh, or cough o' th' lungs
Would do as much as they do.

Doth not death fright you?

Who would be afraid on't,
Knowing to meet such excellent company
In th' other world?

Yet, methinks,
The manner of your death should much afflict you:
This cord should terrify you.

Not a whit.
What would it pleasure me to have my throat cut
With diamonds? Or to be smothered
With cassia? Or so be shot to death with pearls?
I know death hath ten thousand several doors
For men to take their exits, and 'tis found
They go on such strange geometrical hinges,
You may open them both ways.—Any way, for heaven sake,
So I were out of your whispering. Tell my brothers
That I perceive death, now I am well awake,
Best gift is they can give or I can take.
I would fain put off my last woman's fault,
I'd not be tedious to you.

Dispose my breath how please you, but my body
Bestow upon my women, will you?

Yes.

Pull, and pull strongly, for your able strength
Must pull down heaven upon me—
Yet stay; heaven gates are not so high arched
As princes' palaces; they that enter there
Must go upon their knees, [knee!] Come, violent death.
Serve for mandragora to make me sleep!
Go tell my brothers, when I am laid out.

3. The word is used loosely for a stupefying drug.
They then may feed in quiet. [They strangle her.]

BOSOLA Where’s the waiting woman? Fetch her. Some other strangle the children. [Exeunt EXECUTIONERS, some of whom return with CARIOLA.]

Look you, there sleeps your mistress.

CARIOLA Oh, you are damned Perpetually for this! My turn is next. Is’t not so ordered?

BOSOLA Yes, and I am glad You are so well prepared for’t.

CARIOLA You are deceived, sir, I am not prepared for’t, I will not die; I will first come to my answer, and know How I have offended.

BOSOLA Come, dispatch her. You kept her counsel; now you shall keep ours.

EXECUTIONER Here’s your wedding ring. [showing the noose]
CARIOLA Let me but speak with the duke; I’ll discover treason to his person.

BOSOLA Delays! Throttle her.
EXECUTIONER She bites and scratches.
CARIOLA If you kill me now, I am damned; I have not been at confession this two years.

BOSOLA [to EXECUTIONERS] When! CARIOLA I am quick with child.

BOSOLA Your credit’s saved. 4 Bear her into th’ next room; [Exeunt the EXECUTIONERS with the body of CARIOLA.]

4. Your reputation will now be safe.

[Enter FERDINAND.]

FERDINAND Is she dead?

BOSOLA She is what You’d have her. But here begin your pity. [Swoos the children strangled.] Alas, how have these offended?

FERDINAND The death Of young wolves is never to be pitied.

BOSOLA Fix Your eye here.

FERDINAND Constantly.

BOSOLA Do you not weep? Other sins only speak; murder shrieks out: The element of water moistens the earth, But blood flies upwards and bedews the heavens.

FERDINAND Cover her face; mine eyes dazzle; she died young.

BOSOLA I think not so; her infelicity seemed to have years too many.

FERDINAND 4. Your reputation will now be safe.
FERDINAND She and I were twins;
And should I die this instant, I had lived
Her time to a minute.
BOSOLA It seems she was born first:
You have bloodily approved the ancient truth,
That kindred commonly do worse agree
Than remote strangers.
FERDINAND Let me see her face again.
Why didst not thou pity her? What an excellent Honest man mightst thou have been,
If thou hadst borne her to some sanctuary!
Or, bold in a good cause, opposed thyself,
With thy advanced sword above thy head,
Between her innocence and my revenge!
I bade thee, when I was distracted of my wits,
Go kill my dearest friend, and thou hast done't.
For let me but examine well the cause:
What was the meanness of her match to me?
Only I must confess I had a hope,
Had she continued widow, to have gained
An infinite mass of treasure by her death:
And that was the main cause, her marriage,
That drew a stream of gall quite through my heart.
For thee, as we observe in tragedies
That a good actor many times is cursed
For playing a villain's part, I hate thee for t,
And, for my sake, say thou hast done much ill well.
BOSOLA Let me quicken your memory, for I perceive
You are falling into ingratitude: I challenge
The reward due to my service.
FERDINAND I'll tell thee
What I'll give thee.
BOSOLA DO.
FERDINAND I'll give thee a pardon
For this murder.
BOSOLA Ha!
FERDINAND Yes, and 'tis
The largest bounty I can study to do thee.
By what authority didst thou execute
This bloody sentence?
BOSOLA By yours.
FERDINAND Mine! Was I her judge?
Did any ceremonial form of law
Doom her to not-being? Did a complete jury
Deliver her conviction up i' th' court?
Where shalt thou find this judgment registered,
Unless in hell? See, like a bloody fool,
Thou'rt forfeited thy life, and thou shalt die for't.
BOSOLA The office of justice is perverted quite
When one thief hangs another. Who shall dare
To reveal this?
FERDINAND
Oh, I'll tell thee;
The wolf shall find her grave, and scrape it up,
Not to devour the corpse, but to discover
The horrid murder.

BOSOLA  You, not I, shall quake for't.
FERDINAND  Leave me.
BOSOLA  I will first receive my pension.
FERDINAND  You are a villain.

When your ingratitude
Is judge, I am so.
FERDINAND  Oh, horror!
That not the fear of Him which binds the devils
Can prescribe man obedience!
Never look upon me more.

BOSOLA  Why, fare thee well.
Your brother and your self are worthy men:
You have a pair of hearts are rotten graves,
Rotten, and rotting others; and your vengeance,
Like two chained bullets, still goes arm in arm.
You may be brothers, for treason, like the plague,
Doth take much in a blood.
I stand like one
That long hath ta'en a sweet and golden dream.
I am angry with myself, now that I wake.
FERDINAND  Get thee into some unknown part o' th' world,
That I may never see thee.
BOSOLA  Let me know
Wherefore I should be thus neglected. Sir,
I served your tyranny, and rather strove
To satisfy yourself than all the world,
And though I loathed the evil, yet I loved
You that did counsel it; and rather sought
To appear a true servant than an honest man.
FERDINAND  I'll go hunt the badger by owl-light:
[Exit.]
BOSOLA  He's much distracted. Off, my painted honor!
While with vain hopes our faculties we tire,
What would I do, were this to do again?
I would not change my peace of conscience
For all the wealth of Europe.—She stirs; here's life.
Return, fair soul, from darkness, and lead mine
Out of this sensible hell.—She's warm, she breathes.
Upon thy pale lips I will melt my heart,
To store them with fresh color.—Who's there!
Some cordial drink!—Alas! I dare not call:
So pity would destroy pity.—Her eye opes,
And heaven in it seems to ope, that late was shut,
To take me up to mercy.

DUCHESS  Antonio!

5. Treason and plague run in certain families.
BOSOLA    Yes, madam, he is living;
The dead bodies you saw were but feigned statues:
He's reconciled to your brothers: the pope hath wrought
The atonement.

DUCHESS    Mercy! [She dies.]

BOSOLA    Oh, she's gone again! There the cords of life broke.
Oh, sacred innocence, that sweetly sleeps
On turtles' feathers, whilst a guilty conscience
Is a black register wherein is writ
All our good deeds and bad, a perspective
That shows us hell! That we cannot be suffered
To do good when we have a mind to it!
This is manly sorrow:
These tears, I am very certain, never grew
In my mother's milk. My estate is sunk
Below the degree of fear. Where were
These penitent fountains while she was living?
Oh, they were frozen up! Here is a sight
As direful to my soul as is the sword
Unto a wretch hath slain his father. Come,
I'll bear thee hence,
And execute thy last will; that's deliver
Thy body to the reverend dispose
Of some good women: that the cruel tyrant
Shall not deny me. Then I'll post to Milan,
Where somewhat I will speedily enact
Worth my dejection. [Exit with the body.]

Act 5

SCENE 1. A public place in Milan.

[Enter ANTONIO and DELIO.]

ANTONIO    What think you of my hope of reconcilement
To the Aragonian brethren?

DELIO    I misdoubt it;
For though they have sent their letters of safe conduct
For your repair to Milan, they appear
But nets to entrap you. The Marquis of Pescara,
Under whom you hold certain land in cheat,
Much 'gainst his noble nature hath been moved
To seize those lands, and some of his dependents
Are at this instant making it their suit
To be invested in your revenues.
I cannot think they mean well to your life
That do deprive you of your means of life,
Your living.

ANTONIO    YOU are still an heretic
To any safety I can shape myself.

6. Turtledoves, emblems of a loving couple.
5.1  conditions.
1. Escheat, i.e., subject to forfeiture under certain

http://englishworld20111.wordpress.com/
DELIO Here comes the marquis. I will make myself a Petitioner for some part of your land, To know whither it is flying.

ANTONIO I pray do. [Withdraws.]

DELIO Sir, I have a suit to you.

PESCARA To me?

DELIO An easy one. There is the citadel of Saint Bennet, With some demesnes, of late in the possession Of Antonio Bologna; please you bestow them on me.

PESCARA You are my friend, but this is such a suit, Nor fit for me to give, nor you to take.

DELIO NO, sir?

PESCARA I will give you ample reason for’t Soon in private.—Here’s the cardinal’s mistress. [Enter JULIA.]

JULIA My lord, I am grown your poor petitioner, And should be an ill beggar, had I not A great man’s letter here, the cardinal’s, To court you in my favor. [Gives a letter.]

PESCARA He entreats for you the citadel of Saint Bennet, that belonged To the banished Bologna.

JULIA Yes.

PESCARA I could not Have thought of a friend I could rather pleasure with it; ’Tis yours.

JULIA Sir, I thank you; and he shall know How doubly I am engaged both in your gift, And speediness of giving, which makes your grant The greater. [Exit.]

ANTONIO [aside] How they fortify themselves With my ruin!

DELIO Sir, I am little bound to you.

PESCARA Why?

DELIO Because you denied this suit to me, and gave’t To such a creature.

PESCARA Do you know what it was? It was Antonio’s land, not forfeited By course of law, but ravished from his throat By the cardinal’s entreaty. It were not fit I should bestow so main a piece of wrong Upon my friend; ’tis a gratification Only due to a strumpet, for it is injustice. Shall I sprinkle the pure blood of innocents To make those followers I call my friends Look ruddier upon me? I am glad This land, ta’en from the owner by such wrong.

3. Associated estates. "Saint Bennet": St. Benedic diet. 4. More agreeably, literally with a healthier (ruddy) complexion.
Returns again unto so foul an use
As salary for his lust. Learn, good Delio,
To ask noble things of me, and you shall find
I'll be a noble giver.

DELIO

YOU instruct me well.

55

ANTONIO [aside] Why, here's a man now would fright impudence
From sauciest beggars.

PESCARA

Prince Ferdinand's come to Milan,
Sick, as they give out, of an apoplexy.0
But some say 'tis a frenzy.5 I am going
To visit him. [Exit.]

ANTONIO  'Tis a noble old fellow.

60

DELIO What course do you mean to take, Antonio?

ANTONIO This night I mean to venture all my fortune,
Which is no more than a poor lingering life,
To the cardinal's worst of malice. I have got Private access to his chamber, and intend
65 To visit him about the mid of night,
As once his brother did our noble duchess.
It may be that the sudden apprehension
Of danger—for I'll go in mine own shape—
When he shall see it fraught with love and duty,
70 May draw the poison out of him, and work
A friendly reconcilement. If it fail,
Yet it shall rid me of this infamous calling,
For better fall once than be ever falling.

DELIO I'll second you in all danger, and, howe'er,
75 My life keeps rank with yours.

ANTONIO You are still my loved and best friend. [Exeunt.]

SCENE 2. The scene continues.

[Enter PESCARA and DOCTOR.]

PESCARA  Now, doctor, may I visit your patient?

DOCTOR  If't please your lordship: but he's instantly very shortly
To take the air here in the gallery
By my direction.

PESCARA  Pray thee, what's his disease?

DOCTOR  A very pestilent disease, my lord,
They call lycanthropia.

PESCARA  What's that?

DOCTOR  I'll tell you.
In those that are possessed with't there o'erflows
Such melancholy humor, they imagine
10 Themselves to be transformed into wolves;
Steal forth to churchyards in the dead of night,
And dig dead bodies up: as two nights since
One met the duke bout midnight in a lane
Behind Saint Mark's Church, with the leg of a man
15 Upon his shoulder; and he howled fearfully;
Said he was a wolf, only the difference
Was, a wolf’s skin was hairy on the outside,
His on the inside; bade them take their swords,
Rip up his flesh, and try. Straight² I was sent for, immediately
And, having ministered to him, found his grace
Very well recovered.

PESCARA I’m glad on’t.

DOCTOR Yet not without some fear
Of a relapse. If he grow to his fit again,
I’ll go a nearer way to work with him
Than ever Paracelsus¹ dreamed of: if They’ll give me leave, I’ll buffet his madness
Out of him. Stand aside; he comes.

[Ferdinand, Malatesta, Cardinal, and Bosola apart.]
FERDINAND Leave me.
MALATESTA Why doth your lordship love this solitariness?
FERDINAND Eagles commonly fly alone: they are crows, daws, and starlings that flock together. Look, what’s that follows me?
MALATESTA Nothing, my lord.
FERDINAND Yes.
MALATESTA ’Tis your shadow.
FERDINAND Stay it; let it not haunt me.
MALATESTA Impossible, if you move, and the sun shine.
FERDINAND I will throttle it. [Throws himself on the ground.]
MALATESTA O, my lord, you are angry with nothing.
FERDINAND You are a fool: how is’t possible I should catch my shadow, unless
I fall upon’t? When I go to hell, I mean to carry a bribe; for, look you, good gifts evermore make way for the worst persons.

PESCARA Rise, good my lord.
FERDINAND I am studying the art of patience.

PESCARA ’Tis a noble virtue.
FERDINAND To drive six snails before me from this town to Moscow; neither use goad nor whip to them, but let them take their own time—the patient’s man i’ th’ world match me for an experiment—and I’ll crawl after like a sheep-biter.²

CARDINAL Force him up. [They raise him.]
FERDINAND Use me well, you were best. What I have done, I have done:
I’ll confess nothing.

DOCTOR Now let me come to him. Are you mad, my lord? Are you out of your princely wits?
FERDINAND What’s he?
PESCARA Your doctor.
FERDINAND Let me have his beard sawed off, and his eyebrows filed more civil.

DOCTOR I must do mad tricks with him, for that’s the only way on’t.³ I have brought your grace a salamander’s skin to keep you from sunburning.
FERDINAND I have cruel sore eyes.

² A sheepdog.
³ I.e., to cure him.
DOCTOR. The white of a cockatrix’s egg is present remedy.

FERDINAND. Let it be a new-laid one, you were best. Hide me from him: physicians are like kings—they brook no contradiction.

DOCTOR. Now he begins to fear me: now let me alone with him.

CARDINAL. How now? Put off your gown?

DOCTOR. Let me have some forty urinals filled with rosewater: he and I’ll go pelt one another with them. Now he begins to fear me. Can you fetch a frisk, sir? Let him go, let him go, upon my peril: I find by his eye he stands in awe of me; I’ll make him as tame as a dormouse.

FERDINAND. Can you fetch your frisks, sir? I will stamp him into a cullis, flay off his skin, to cover one of the anatomies this rogue hath set i’ th’ cold yonder in Barber-Surgeons’ Hall. Hence, hence! You are all of you like beasts for sacrifice: there’s nothing left of you but tongue and belly, flattery and lechery.

[Exit.]

PESCARA. Doctor, he did not fear you thoroughly.

DOCTOR. True; I was somewhat too forward.

BOSOLA. [aside] Mercy upon me, what a fatal judgment hath fall’n upon this Ferdinand!

PESCARA. Knows your grace what accident hath brought unto the prince this strange distraction?

CARDINAL. [aside] I must feign somewhat.—Thus they say it grew:

You have heard it rumored, for these many years
None of our family dies but there is seen
The shape of an old woman, which is given
By tradition to us to have been murdered
By her nephews for her riches. Such a figure
One night, as the prince sat up late at’ s book,
Appeared to him; when, crying out for help,
The gentlemen of’ s chamber found his grace
All on a cold sweat, altered much in face
And language: since which apparition,
He hath grown worse and worse, and I much fear
He cannot live.

BOSOLA. Sir, I would speak with you.

PESCARA. We’ll leave your grace,
Wishing to the sick prince, our noble lord,
All health of mind and body.

CARDINAL. You are most welcome.

[Exeunt PESCARA, MALATESTE, and DOCTOR.]

Are you come? So. [Aside] This fellow must not know
By any means I had intelligence was accessory
In our duchess’ death; for, though I counseled it,
The full of all th’ engagement seemed to grow
From Ferdinand.—Now, sir, how fares our sister?
I do not think but sorrow makes her look
Like to an oft-dyed garment: she shall now

4. A fabulous, and deadly poisonous, serpent, supposed to be hatched of a cock’s egg.
5. Cut a caper, dance a jig.
7. Anatomical skeletons hung up in the surgeon’s college, which Ferdinand proposes to cover with the doctor’s flayed skin.
Taste comfort from me. Why do you look so wildly?
Oh, the fortune of your master here the prince
Dejects you, but be you of happy comfort:
If you'll do one thing for me I'll entreat,
Though he had a cold tombstone o'er his bones,
I'll make you what you would be.

BOSOLA

Give it me in a breath, and let me fly to't:
They that think long, small expedition win,
For musing much o’ th’ end cannot begin.

[Enter JULIA.]

JULIA
Sir, will you come in to supper?

CARDINAL
I am busy;
Leave me.

JULIA [aside]
What an excellent shape hath that fellow!

[Exit.]

CARDINAL
'Tis thus. Antonio lurks here in Milan:
Inquire him out, and kill him. While he lives,
Our sister cannot marry, and I have thought
Of an excellent match for her. Do this, and style me
Thy advancement.

BOSOLA
But by what means shall I find him out?

CARDINAL
There is a gentleman called Delio
Here in the camp, that hath been long approved
His loyal friend. Set eye upon that fellow;
Follow him to Mass; maybe Antonio,
Although he do account religion
But a school-name,\(^8\) for fashion of the world
May accompany him; or else go inquire out
Delio’s confessor, and see if you can bribe
Him to reveal it. There are a thousand ways
A man might find to trace him; as to know
What fellows haunt the Jews for taking up
Great sums of money, for sure he’s in want;
Or else to go to th’ picture-makers, and learn
Who bought her picture lately. Some of these Haply may take.

BOSOLA
Well, I'll not freeze i' th' business:\(^9\) delay
I would see that wretched thing, Antonio,
Above all sights i’ th’ world.

CARDINAL
DO, and be happy. \([Exit.\)]

BOSOLA
This fellow doth breed basilisks in’s eyes,
He’s nothing else but murder; yet he seems
Not to have notice of the duchess’ death.
Tis his cunning: I must follow his example;
There cannot be a surer way to trace
Than that of an old fox.

[Reenter JULIA, with a pistol.]

JULIA
So, sir, you are well met.

BOSOLA
HOW now?

8. Call me your means of promotion.
JULIA Nay, the doors are fast enough.
   Now, sir, I will make you confess your treachery.
BOSOLA Treachery?
JULIA Yes, confess to me
   Which of my women 'twas, you hired to put Love-powder into my drink?
BOSOLA Love powder?
JULIA Yes, when I was at Malfi.
   Why should I fall in love with such a face else?
   I have already suffered for thee so much pain,
   The only remedy to do me good
   Is to kill my longing.
BOSOLA Sure, your pistol holds
   Nothing but perfumes or kissing-comfits.
   Excellent lady! You have a pretty way on 't
   To discover your longing. Come, come, I'll disarm you,
   And arm you thus:  yet this is wondrous strange.
JULIA Compare thy form and my eyes together, you'll find
   My love no such great miracle. Now you'll say
   I am wanton: this nice modesty in ladies
   Is but a troublesome familiar that haunts them.
BOSOLA Know you me, I am a blunt soldier.
JULIA The better:
   Sure, there wants fire where there are no lively sparks
   Of roughness.
BOSOLA And I want compliment.
JULIA Why, ignorance
   In courtship cannot make you do amiss,
   If you have a heart to do well.
BOSOLA You are very fair.
JULIA Nay, if you lay beauty to my charge,
   I must plead unguilty.
BOSOLA Your bright eyes
   Carry a quiver of darts in them, sharper
   Than sunbeams.
JULIA You will mar me with commendation,
   Put yourself to the charge of courting me,
   Whereas now I woo you.
BOSOLA [aside] I have it, I will work upon this creature.—-
   Let us grow most amorously familiar.
   If the great cardinal now should see me thus,
   Would he not count me a villain?
JULIA No, he might count me a wanton,
   Not lay a scruple of offense on you;
   For if I see and steal a diamond,
   The fault is not i' th' stone, but in me the thief
   That purloins it. I am sudden with you.

9. Candies to sweeten the breath.
1. Disarm (by taking away her pistol); arm (by embracing her).
2. Attendant spirit or demon.
3. I don't have the gift of flattery.
We that are great women of pleasure, use to cut off
These uncertain wishes and unquiet longings,
And in an instant join the sweet delight
And the pretty excuse together. Had you been i' th' street,
Under my chamber window, even there
I should have courted you.

BOSOLA  Oh, you are an excellent lady!

JULIA  Bid me do somewhat for you presently right away
To express I love you.

BOSOLA  I will, and if you love me,
Fail not to effect it.
The cardinal is grown wondrous melancholy;
Demand the cause, let him not put you off
With feigned excuse; discover the main ground on t.

JULIA  Why would you know this?

BOSOLA  I have depended on him,
And I hear he is fallen in some disgrace
With the emperor: if he be, like the mice
That forsake falling houses, I would shift
To other dependence.

JULIA  You shall not need follow the wars;
I'll be your maintenance.

BOSOLA  And I your loyal servant;
But I cannot leave my calling.

JULIA  Not leave
An ungrateful general for the love of a sweet lady?
You are like some cannot sleep in featherbeds,
But must have blocks for their pillows.

BOSOLA  Will you do this?

JULIA  Cunningly.

BOSOLA  Tomorrow I'll expect th' intelligence.

JULIA  Tomorrow? Get you into my cabinet, inner chamber
You shall have it with you. Do not delay me,
No more than I do you. I am like one
That is condemned: I have my pardon promised,
But I would see it sealed. Go, get you in;
You shall see me wind my tongue about his heart
Like a skein of silk. [Exit BOSOLA.]

[Reenter CARDINAL.]

CARDINAL  Where are you?

[Enter SERVANTS.]

SERVANTS  Here.

CARDINAL  Let none, upon your lives,
Have conference with the Prince Ferdinand,
Unless I know it. [Aside] In this distraction
He may reveal the murder.
Yond's my lingering consumption:
I am weary of her, and by any means
Would be quit of.

JULIA  How now, my lord?
What ails you?
CARDINAL Nothing.

JULIA Oh, you are much altered: come, I must be your secretary, and remove this lead from off your bosom. What's the matter?

CARDINAL I may not tell you.

JULIA Are you so far in love with sorrow you cannot part with part of it? Or think you I cannot love your grace when you are sad as well as merry? Or do you suspect I, that have been a secret to your heart these many winters, cannot be the same unto your tongue?

CARDINAL Satisfy thy longing—

The only way to make thee keep my counsel is not to tell thee.

JULIA Tell your echo this,

Or flatterers, that like echoes still report what they hear though most imperfect, and not me; for if that you be true unto yourself, I'll know.

CARDINAL Will you rack\(^a\) me?

JULIA No, judgment shall draw it from you: it is an equal fault, to tell one's secrets unto all or none.

CARDINAL The first argues folly.

JULIA But the last, tyranny.

CARDINAL Very well. Why, imagine I have committed some secret deed which I desire the world may never hear of.

JULIA Therefore may not I know it? You have concealed for me as great a sin as adultery, sir, never was occasion for perfect trial of my constancy till now: sir, I beseech you—

CARDINAL You'll repent it.

JULIA Never.

CARDINAL It hurries thee to ruin: I'll not tell thee. Be well advised, and think what danger 'tis to receive a prince's secrets: they that do, had need have their breasts hooped with adamant\(^a\) to contain them. I pray thee, yet be satisfied; examine thine own frailty: 'tis more easy to tie knots than unloose them: 'tis a secret that, like a lingering poison, may chance lie spread in thy veins, and kill thee seven year hence.

JULIA Now you dally with me.

CARDINAL No more; thou shalt know it.

By my appointment the great Duchess of Malfi and two of her young children, four nights since,

---

4. Secretaries opened letters addressed to their masters by removing the heavy lead seals.
Were strangled.

Julia  O Heaven! Sir, what have you done?
Cardinal  How now? How settles this? Think you your bosom
Will be a grave dark and obscure enough
For such a secret?
Julia  You have undone yourself, sir.
Cardinal  Why?
Julia  It lies not in me to conceal it.
Cardinal  No?

Come, I will swear you to't upon this book.
Julia  Most religiously.
Cardinal  Kiss it.  [She kisses the book.]
Now you shall
Never utter it; thy curiosity
Hath undone thee: thou’rt poisoned with that book.
Because I knew thou couldst not keep my counsel,
I have bound thee to’t by death.

[Reenter Bosola.]

Bosola  For pity sake,
Hold!
Cardinal  Ha! Bosola?
Julia  I forgive you
This equal piece of justice you have done;
For I betrayed your counsel to that fellow:
He overheard it; that was the cause I said
It lay not in me to conceal it.

Bosola  O foolish woman,
Couldst not thou have poisoned him?
Julia  Tis weakness,
Too much to think what should have been done. I go
I know not whither.

[Dies.]

Cardinal  Wherefore com’st thou hither?
Bosola  That I might find a great man like yourself,
Not out of his wits as the Lord Ferdinand,
To remember my service.
Cardinal  I’ll have thee hewed in pieces.
Bosola  Make not yourself such a promise of that life
Which is not yours to dispose of.
Cardinal  Who placed thee here?
Bosola  Her lust, as she intended.
Cardinal  Very well.
Now you know me for your fellow murderer.
Bosola  And wherefore should you lay fair marble colors
Upon your rotten purposes to me?5
Unless you imitate some that do plot great treasons,
And when they have done, go hide themselves i’ th’ graves
Of those were actors in it?
Cardinal  No more; there is
A fortune attends thee.

5. Plaster was often painted to look like marble.
BOSOLA Shall I go sue to Fortune any longer? 'Tis the fool's pilgrimage.
CARDINAL I have honors in store for thee.
BOSOLA There are a many ways that conduct to seeming Honor, and some of them very dirty ones.
CARDINAL Throw to the devil Thy melancholy; the fire burns well, What need we keep a stirring of t, and make A greater smother? Thou wilt kill Antonio?
BOSOLA Yes.
CARDINAL Take up that body.
BOSOLA I think I shall Shortly grow the common bier for churchyards!
CARDINAL I will allow thee some dozen of attendants To aid thee in the murder.
BOSOLA Oh, by no means. Physicians that apply horse leeches to any rank swelling use to cut off their tails, that the blood may run through them the faster. Let me have no train6 when I go to shed blood, lest it make me have a greater when I ride to the gallows.2
CARDINAL Come to me after midnight, to help to remove that body to her own lodging. I'll give out she died of the plague; 'twill breed the less inquiry after her death.
BOSOLA Where's Castruccio her husband?
CARDINAL He's rode to Naples to take possession of Antonio's citadel.
BOSOLA Believe me, you have done a very happy turn.
CARDINAL Fail not to come. There is the master key of our lodgings, and by that you may conceive what trust I plant in you.
BOSOLA YOU shall find me ready. [Exit Cardinal.]
Oh poor Antonio, though nothing be so needful To thy estate as pity, yet I find Nothing so dangerous. I must look to my footing; In such slippery ice-pavements men had need To be frost-nailed well;4 they may break their necks else; The precedent's here afore me. How this man Bears up in blood! Seems fearless! Why, 'tis well: Security some men call the suburbs of hell, Only a dead2 wall between. Well, good Antonio, I'll seek thee out, and all my care shall be To put thee into safety from the reach Of these most cruel biters that have got Some of thy blood already. It may be, I'll join with thee in a most just revenge: The weakest arm is strong enough that strikes With the sword of justice. Still methinks the duchess Haunts me. There, there, 'tis nothing but my melancholy. O Penitence, let me truly taste thy cup, That throws men down only to raise them up! [Exit.]

6. Followers, hanged at Tyburn, were followed by crowds.
7. Criminals, carted through the streets to be beheaded, were followed by crowds.
8. To wear hobnailed boots.
SCENE 3. A fortification at Milan.

[Enter ANTONIO and DELIO. Echo from the DUCHESS's grave.]

DELIO Yond's the cardinal's window. This fortification
Grew from the ruins of an ancient abbey;
And to yond side o' th' river lies a wall,
Piece of a cloister, which in my opinion
Gives the best echo that you ever heard,
So hollow and so dismal, and withal
So plain in the distinction of our words,
That many have supposed it is a spirit
That answers.

ANTONIO I do love these ancient ruins.
We never tread upon them but we set
Our foot upon some reverend history:
And, questionless, here in this open court,
Which now lies naked to the injuries
Of stormy weather, some men lie interred
Loved the church so well, and gave so largely to t,
They thought it should have canopied their bones
Till doomsday; but all things have their end:
Churches and cities, which have diseases like to men,
Must have like death that we have.

ECHO "Like death that we have."

DELIO Now the echo hath caught you.

ANTONIO It groaned, methought, and gave
A very deadly accent.

ECHO "Deadly accent."

DELIO I told you 'twas a pretty one: you may make it
A huntsman, or a falconer, a musician,
Or a thing of sorrow.

ECHO "A thing of sorrow."

ANTONIO Aye, sure, that suits it best.

ECHO "That suits it best."

ANTONIO Tis very like my wife's voice.

ECHO "Aye, wife's voice."

DELIO Come, let's walk further from't. I would not have you Go to th' cardinal's tonight: do not.

ECHO "Do not."

DELIO Wisdom doth not more moderate wasting sorrow
Than time: take time for't: be mindful of thy safety.

ECHO "Be mindful of thy safety."

ANTONIO Necessity compels me:
Make scrutiny throughout the passes
Of your own life, you'll find it impossible
To fly your fate.

ECHO "Oh, fly your fate."

DELIO Hark! The dead stones seem to have pity on you,
And give you good counsel.

ANTONIO Echo, I will not talk with thee,
For thou art a dead thing.

ANTONIO
My duchess is asleep now, And her little ones, I hope sweetly: O heaven, Shall I never see her more?

ECHO
"Never see her more."

ANTONIO
I marked not one repetition of the echo attended to But that, and on the sudden a clear light Presented me a face folded in sorrow.

DELIO
Your fancy merely.

ANTONIO
Come, I'll be out of this ague, fever For to live thus is not indeed to live; It is a mockery and abuse of life. I will not henceforth save myself by halves; Lose all, or nothing.

DELIO
Your own virtue save you! I'll fetch your eldest son, and second you back you up It may be that the sight of his own blood Spread in so sweet a figure may beget face The more compassion.

ANTONIO
However, fare you well. Though in our miseries Fortune have a part, Yet in our noble sufferings she hath none: Contempt of pain, that we may call our own. [Exeunt.]

SCENE 4. A room in the CARDINAL'S palace.

[Enter CARDINAL, PESCARA, MALATESTE, RODERIGO, and GRISOLAN.]

CARDINAL
You shall not watch tonight by the sick prince; His grace is very well recovered.

MALATESTE
Good my lord, suffer us.

CARDINAL
Oh, by no means; The noise and change of object in his eye Doth more distract him. I pray, all to bed; And though you hear him in his violent fit, Do not rise, I entreat you.

PESCARA
So, sir; we shall not.

CARDINAL
Nay, I must have you promise upon your honors, For I was enjoined to by himself; and he seemed To urge it sensibly. with strong feeling

PESCARA
Let our honors bind This trifle.

CARDINAL
Nor any of your followers.

MALATESTE
Neither.

CARDINAL
It may be, to make trial of your promise, When he's asleep, myself will rise and feign Some of his mad tricks, and cry out for help, And feign myself in danger.

MALATESTE
If your throat were cutting, I'd not come at you, now I have protested against it.
CARDINAL Why, I thank you. [Withdraws.]

GRISOLAN 'Twas a foul storm tonight.

RODERIGO The Lord Ferdinand's chamber shook like an osier. a willow wand

MALATESTE Twas nothing but pure kindness in the devil, To rock his own child. [Exeunt all except the CARDINAL.]

CARDINAL The reason why I would not suffer[1] these allow About my brother is because at midnight I may with better privacy convey Julia's body to her own lodging. Oh, my conscience! I would pray now, but the devil takes away my heart For having any confidence in prayer. About this hour I appointed Bosola To fetch the body: when he hath served my turn, He dies. [Exit.]

[Enter BOSOLA.]

BOSOLA Ha! 'Twas the cardinal's voice; I heard him name Bosola and my death. Listen! I hear One's footing. [Enter FERDINAND.]

FERDINAND Strangling is a very quiet death.

BOSOLA [aside] Nay, then, I see I must stand upon my guard.

FERDINAND What say to that? Whisper softly; do you agree to't? So; it must be done i' th' dark: the cardinal would not for a thousand pounds the doctor should see it. [Exit.]

BOSOLA My death is plotted; here's the consequence of murder. We value not desert nor Christian breath, When we know black deeds must be cured with death. [Enter ANTONIO and SERVANT.]

SERVANT Here stay, sir, and be confident, I pray: I'll fetch you a dark lantern. [Exit.]

ANTONIO Could I take him at his prayers, There were hope of pardon.

BOSOLA Fall right, my sword! [Stabs him.] I'll not give thee so much leisure as to pray.

ANTONIO Oh, I am gone! Thou hast ended a long suit[1] In a minute.

BOSOLA What art thou?

ANTONIO A most wretched thing, That only have thy benefit in death, To appear myself. [Reenter SERVANT with a lantern.]

SERVANT Where are you, sir?

ANTONIO Very near my home. Bosola?

SERVANT Oh, misfortune!

BOSOLA Smother thy pity; thou art dead else. Antonio? otherwise The man I would have saved 'bove mine own life!

5.4 Antonio thinks it is the cardinal, to whom he came to address a plea ('suit'), who has stabbed him.
We are merely the stars’ tennis balls, struck and bandied
Which way please them. O good Antonio,
I'll whisper one thing in thy dying ear
Shall make thy heart break quickly! Thy fair duchess
And two sweet children—
ANTONIO Their very names
Kindle a little life in me.
BOSOLA Are murdered.
ANTONIO Some men have wished to die
At the hearing of sad tidings; I am glad
That I shall do’t in sadness: I would not now
Wish my wounds balmed nor healed, for I have no use
To put my life to. In all our quest of greatness,
Like wanton boys, whose pastime is their care,
We follow after bubbles blown in th’ air.

Pleasure of life, what is’t? Only the good hours
Of an ague; merely a preparative to rest,
To endure vexation. I do not ask
The process of my death; only commend me reason, circumstances
To Delio.
BOSOLA Break, heart!
ANTONIO And let my son fly the courts of princes. [Dies.]
BOSOLA Thou seem’st to have loved Antonio?
SERVANT I brought him hither
To have reconciled him to the cardinal.
BOSOLA I do not ask thee that.
Take him up, if thou tender thine own life,
And bear him where the lady Julia
Was wont to lodge. Oh, my fate moves swift;
I have this cardinal in the forge already;
Now I’ll bring him to th’ hammer. Oh direful misprision! I will not imitate things glorious,
No more than base; I’ll be mine own example.
On, on, and look thou represent, for silence,
The thing thou bear’st. [Exeunt.]

SCENE 5. The scene continues.

[Enter CARDINAL, with a book.]
CARDINAL I am puzzled in a question about hell:
He says, in hell there’s one material fire,
And yet it shall not burn all men alike.
Lay him by. How tedious is a guilty conscience!
When I look into the fish ponds in my garden,
Methinks I see a thing armed with a rake,
That seems to strike at me.

[Enter BOSOLA, and SERVANT hearing ANTONIO’s body.]
BOSOLA Now, art thou come?
SERVANT Thou look’st ghastly:

2. The power of the stars over people’s lives was a Renaissance commonplace.
3. The corpse.
There sits in thy face some great determination
Mixed with some fear.

BOSOLA  Thus it lightens into action:
         ignites
         I am come to kill thee.

CARDINAL  Ha! Help! Our guard!

BOSOLA  Thou art deceived; they are out of thy howling.

CARDINAL  Hold; and I will faithfully divide
         Revenues with thee.

BOSOLA  Thy prayers and proffers
         Are both unseasonable.

CARDINAL  Raise the watch!

BOSOLA  I have confined your flight:
         cut off your escape
         I'll suffer your retreat to Julia's chamber,
         But no further.

CARDINAL  Help! We are betrayed!

[Enter, above,
PESCARA, MALATESTE, RODERIGO, and GRISOLAN.]

MALATESTE  Listen.

CARDINAL  My dukedom for rescue!

RODERIGO  Fie upon his counterfeiting!

MALATESTE  Why, 'tis not the cardinal.

RODERIGO  Yes, yes, 'tis he,
         But I'll see him hanged ere I'll go down to him.

CARDINAL  Here's a plot upon me. I am assaulted! I am lost,
         Unless some rescue.

GRISOLAN  He doth this pretty well,
         But it will not serve to laugh me out of my honor.

CARDINAL  The sword's at my throat!

RODERIGO  You would not bawl so loud then.

MALATESTE  Come, come, let's go to bed. He told us thus much aforehand.

PESCARA  He wished you should not come at him; but, believe't,
         The accent of the voice sounds not in jest:
         I'll down to him, howsoever, and with engines.
         [Exit above.]  battering rams
         Force ope the doors
         [Exit above.]  at a distance

RODERIGO  Let's follow him aloof,
         But note how the cardinal will laugh at him.

[Exit, above, MALATESTE, RODERIGO, and GRISOLAN.]

BOSOLA  There's for you first,
         [He kills the SERVANT.]
         'Cause you shall not unbarricade the door
         To let in rescue.

CARDINAL  What cause hast thou to pursue my life?

BOSOLA  Look there.

CARDINAL  Antonio?

BOSOLA  Slain by my hand unwittingly.
         Pray, and be sudden: when thou killed'st thy sister,
         Thou took'st from justice her most equal balance,
         And left her naught but her sword.

CARDINAL  Oh, mercy!

BOSOLA  Now it seems thy greatness was only outward;
         For thou fall'st faster of thyself than calamity
         Can drive thee. I'll not waste longer time: there!
         [Stafes him.]
CARDINAL  Thou hast hurt me.
BOSOLA    Again!  [Stabs him again.]
CARDINAL  Shall I die like a leveret, 1
          Without any resistance? Help, help, help!
          I am slain!
          [Enter FERDINAND.]
FERDINAND  Th’alarum? Give me a fresh horse;
          Rally the vaunt-guard, or the day is lost.
          Yield, yield! I give you the honor of arms,
          Shake my sword over you; will you yield? 2
CARDINAL  Help me; I am your brother!
FERDINAND  The devil!
          My brother fight upon the adverse party?
          [He wounds the CARDINAL, and, in the scuffle, gives BOSOLA his death wound.]
          There flies your ransom.
CARDINAL  O justice!
          I suffer now for what hath former 0 been:
          Sorrow is held the eldest child of sin.
